

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

Gov 5078. 87.5

Harvard College Library

FROM

Clarence A. Bunker

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA
OF PLEADING AND PRACTICE,

Under the Codes and Practice Acts, at Common Law, in Equity and in Criminal Cases.

Compiled Under the Editorial Supervision of

WILLIAM M. MCKINNEY.

Is a Companion Work of the
AMERICAN AND ENGLISH
ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF LAW.

I t covers the entire field of Pleading and Practice, and is applicable to all the States.

EDWARD THOMPSON CO., Publishers,
Northport, Long Island, N. Y.

THE
AMERICAN AND ENGLISH
ENCYCLOPÆDIA
OF LAW.

COMPILED UNDER THE EDITORIAL SUPERVISION OF CHARLES F. WILLIAMS, ASSISTED BY DAVID S. GARLAND.

VOLUME XXIX.

NORTHPORT, LONG ISLAND, N. Y.
EDWARD THOMPSON COMPANY, LAW PUBLISHERS.
1895.

Gov 5078.87.5
✓

Clarence A. Bunker

COPYRIGHT 1895,
BY EDWARD THOMPSON CO.
All Rights Reserved.

MADE BY THE WERNER COMPANY,
AKRON, OHIO.
11-31-'95.

962
-31

PARTIAL LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS, VOL. XXIX.

Waterworks and Water Companies,	AMBROSE TIGHE, of the St. Paul Bar, and EDMUND RANDOLPH WILLIAMS of the Baltimore Bar.
Wharves; Wharfage; Wharfingers,	EDMUND A. WHITMAN, of the Boston Bar.
Wills,	HOWARD W. PAGE, of the Philadelphia Bar.
Witnesses,	W. H. MICHAEL, of the Editorial Staff of the Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law.
Working Contracts,	E. T. BOGGS, of the Atlanta Bar.

TABLE OF TITLES AND DEFINITIONS.

WATERWORKS AND WATER COMPANIES, 1	Withdraw, 519
Water Mark, 24	Withhold, 520
Way Bills, 27	Within, 521
Way-Going Crops, 28	Without, 525
WAYS, 28	Without Prejudice, 527
Weapon, 33	Without Recourse, 528
Wear and Tear, 37	WITNESSES, 530
Wearing Apparel, 38	Wittingly, 846
Week, 43	Woman, 847
Weekly, 44	Won, 847
WEEKLY PAYMENT LAWS, 45	Wood—Woods, 847
Weighage, 48	WOOL. See Manufacture.
WEIGHTS AND MEASURES, 49	Words, 849
Weir, 58	Work—Works, etc., 850
Well, 58	WORKING CONTRACTS, 854
Welsh Mortgage, 59	Workman, 989
WHAIVES; WHARFAGE; WHARFINGERS, 60	Workmanlike Manner, 989
When, 103	WORLDLY LABOR, ETC. See Sunday.
Whenever, 104	Worn, 990
Whisky, 104	Worrying, 990
Whistling, 105	Worship, 990
White, 105	Wound, 991
White Person, 105	WRECK, 993
Whoever, 107	Writ, 996
Wholesale, 107	Write—Writing, 996
Wholly Destroyed, 109	WRITING OBLIGATORY. See Obligation.
Widow, 110	WRITTEN INSTRUMENTS. See the various cross-references.
Wife, 112	Wrong, 1000
Willful, 113	Wrongfully, 1000
WILLS, 118	Yard, 1000
Wind, 516	Year, 1001
Windmill, 516	Yearling, 1001
Window, 516	YEAS AND NAYS. See Statutes.
Wine, 516	Yield, 1002
Winner, 517	Yielding and Paying, 1002
Wish, 518	Yoke, 1002
With, 518	Youth, 1002

THE AMERICAN AND ENGLISH ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF LAW.

WATERWORKS AND WATER COMPANIES.—(See also EMINENT DOMAIN, vol. 6, p. 526; GAS COMPANIES, vol. 8, p. 1268; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, vol. 15, pp. 1115, 1128; TAXATION, vol. 25, p. 5; WATERCOURSES, vol. 28, p. 943.)

- | | |
|---|--|
| I. Municipal Ownership and Control of Waterworks, 1. 1. Power to Erect and Operate, 1. 2. Taking of Private Property, 4.  a. In General, 4.  b. Water and Water Rights, 5. 3. Liability of Municipalities, 6.  a. For Failure to Supply Water, 6.  b. For Injuries from Negligent Construction and Operation, 8. 4. Water Rents and Charges, 10. II. Water Companies Operated and Controlled by Private Individuals, 11. 1. Organization and Character, 11. 2. Exclusive Franchise, 12.  a. Power to Grant, 12.  b. Construction and Nature of Grant, 13. | 3. Exercise of Right of Eminent Domain, 15.  a. In General, 15.  b. Use of Streets, 16.  (1) Not Additional Servitude, 16.  (2) Subject to City's Right to Repair, etc., 16. 4. Contracts with Municipalities, 17. 5. Power to Make Rules and Regulations, 18. 6. Duties, 19.  a. Must Not Discriminate, 19.  b. As to Quality and Quantity of Water, 20. 7. Liabilities, 21.  a. For Fire Losses Resulting from Inadequate Water Supply, 21.  b. For Death Resulting from Impure Water, 23. 8. Taxation, 23. 9. Mechanics' Liens, 23. 10. Forfeiture of Franchises, 24. |
|---|--|

I. MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP AND CONTROL OF WATERWORKS—1. Power to Erect and Operate.—Unless the power is conferred by legislative authority, a municipal corporation has no right to incur expenditures for public waterworks, for, as a creature of purely statutory existence, it can exercise no powers or rights other than those conferred by statute, either expressly or by fair implication.¹ Waterworks for the supplying of cities and towns with water, are undoubtedly for public and municipal purposes, and the legislature may confer authority upon municipalities to erect and operate such works, or to purchase works already established, and to that end incur expenditures, levy taxes, issue bonds, and exercise the right of eminent domain.² This power has been held to be implied from the grant to a municipal corporation of the power to make all contracts which may be deemed necessary for the general welfare.³

1. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATION, vol. 15, p. 1039.

In Pedrick v. Ripon, 73 Wis. 622, it was held that a court of equity would not interfere to prevent the enforcement of a resolution to contract for waterworks, although wholly unauthorized, where nothing further had been done than the adoption of the resolution.

2. Wayland v. Middlesex County, 4 Gray (Mass.) 500; Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa 402; Atty. Gen'l v. Eau Claire, 37 Wis. 400; State v. Babcock, 19 Neb. 230; Reddall v. Bryan, 14 Md. 444; 74 Am. Dec. 550.

In State v. Newark (N. J. 1891), 40 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 33, under an act authorizing a city to purchase waterworks, it was held that the purchase might be made by the city before the completion of the work for which it provides.

The power conferred must be exercised within the limits as prescribed by the act conferring it. In Quincy v. Boston, 148 Mass. 389, the statute authorizing the city of Boston to procure and distribute a supply of water, was held not to confer the right upon the city to convey water to Long Island, a small island situated three miles out in Boston Harbor.

Power of Committee to Introduce New and Expensive Works.—In Nashville v. Hagan, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 495, it was held that the power to make a contract for the introduction of a new and expensive improvement in a system of waterworks, being equivalent to the power to levy, collect, and disburse taxes, must be exercised in the same manner and by the same authority, that is, by a corporate act; and, in the absence of a general law or ordinance modifying this rule, a waterworks committee has no power to bind the corporation by a contract of this character.

Contract for Construction of Works Without Ordinance.—In National Tube-Works Co. v. Chamberlain, 5 Dakota 54, it was held that where the city had power to construct a system of waterworks, it was not necessary that its council, before entering into a contract with reference to it, should pass an ordinance authorizing the works to be constructed, or the contract to be made, when the charter did not require it.

Limitation of Time in Which Purchase May Be Made.—In Ziegler v. Chapin, 126 N. Y. 342, it was held that the power of a city to purchase the franchise and property of a waterworks company was limited to the same time allowed for its acquirement by condemnation, by a statute which authorized the city to purchase it, and at such price as might be agreed upon; and, in case of disagreement, conferred the express power to proceed within two years to acquire the property by condemnation proceedings.

Municipality Operating Waterworks as a Private Company.—In Wolverhampton v. Bilston (1891), 1 Ch. 315, where the undertaking of a waterworks company was transferred by statute to a borough, and the profits of the waterworks were, under a subsequent statute, to be transferred to the borough improvement fund, or, at the option of the corporation, to be applied in the reducing of prices to consumers, it was held that the corporation was a water company supplying water for its own profit.

3. In Rome v. Cabot, 28 Ga. 50, under such a general authority to make contracts, it was held that a city had the right to make contracts for the construction of waterworks.

In Livingston v. Pippin, 31 Ala. 542, it was held that a city council, having power to provide for the ordinary expenses of the town, had power to procure a supply of water in a public square, and were themselves the judges of the mode best calculated to accomplish that object, on the ground that nothing was more important as a sanitary and police regulation than an abundant supply of water.

Under authority to provide for a supply of water, a city may contract with a company for that purpose.¹ But an act authorizing a municipal corporation to enter into a contract with a party to supply the city, does not authorize the municipal authorities to erect works to be owned by the city.² A general statute conferring the power upon "all cities and incorporated towns" to construct waterworks, has been held to apply to cities acting under special charters, as well as to those under the general incorporation law.³

The proposition, whether or not the city shall erect a system of waterworks, may be left to the voters of the community.⁴ And where the legislature delegates to a municipal corporation the power "without limitation" to supply itself with water, the power rests in the discretion of the voters in respect to the amount to be expended therefor, if exercised in good faith and for proper municipal purposes.⁵

In Hardy v. Waltham, 3 Met. (Mass.) 163, it was held that towns having, in their corporate capacity, power to provide for the purchase and maintenance of fire engines for the extinguishment of fires, must have the incidental power to make provision by reservoirs or other means for the supply of water, without which the engines would be useless. But in National Foundry, etc., Works v. Oconto Water Co., 52 Fed. Rep. 33, although the charter of the city conferred powers belonging to municipal corporations at common law and contained a general welfare clause, it was held that the city had no power to confer a franchise for owning and operating waterworks. Jenkins, J., said: "It may be that, by virtue of its duty to care for the public health and safety, a city has the power to contract for a supply of water; but it cannot, without express legislative authority, construct, maintain, or operate waterworks."

1. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, vol. 15, pp. 1115, 1128.

2. Green v. McClintock, 45 Cal. 11.

3. Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa 404.

4. Where it is provided that for the erection of a waterworks company by a city, the proposition must be approved "by a majority of the voters of the city," it is not necessary that the proposition shall be approved by a majority of all the voters of the city, but only by a majority of the votes cast. Taylor v. McFadden, 84 Iowa 262; Wheaton v. Wiant, 48 Ill. 263; People v. Warfield, 20 Ill. 160; Sanford v. Prentice, 28 Wis. 358. See also TAXATION, vol. 25, p. 600.

Where, upon the approval of the voters of the city, authority was conferred upon the city to erect waterworks in order to supply the city with water, when provision should be made for raising the sum required for defraying the expenses, it was held that this latter provision was an essential prerequisite, and that the work could not be carried on merely upon the consent of the voters. Hornby v. Beverly, 48 N. J. L. 110.

In Yesler v. Seattle, 1 Wash. 308, where the charter of a city granted the power to erect and maintain waterworks, provided a majority of the voters at a general election of the city should vote upon the same, but where subsequently a general law was passed authorizing the cities to extend their indebtedness and construct, purchase, and maintain waterworks, etc., upon the approval of the majority of the voters at a special election held for that purpose, it was held that although the provision of the charter referred to was not repealed, authority could be exercised upon compliance with the general law, that is, upon the approval of the voters at a special election.

5. Lucia v. Montpelier, 60 Vt. 537.

In accordance with the fundamental principle that an agent employed to sell cannot himself be the purchaser, and vice versa, it has been held that an ordinance of a city council providing for the purchase of the plant of a water company, and the issuance of bonds in payment thereof, was illegal and void where it appeared that several members of the council were stockholders in the water company.¹

Authority given to a city to erect waterworks impliedly confers the power to levy a tax for that purpose.² A city ordinance providing for the establishment of a system of waterworks, and appropriating a specified sum of money for sinking an artesian well, is not invalid on the ground that the system adopted may prove a failure, or that the cost cannot be ascertained in advance.³

2. Taking of Private Property—a. IN GENERAL.—The supplying of water to a large number of the inhabitants in a city or town is as we have seen, clearly a public purpose, to accomplish which the legislature may confer upon a city, or a company organized for that purpose, the right to condemn private property.⁴ To

1. State v. Consumers Water Co. (N. J. 1894), 45 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 655. See also People v. Overysse Tp. Board, 11 Mich. 222; Smith v. Albany, 61 N. Y. 444.

2. Taylor v. McFadden, 84 Iowa 262. See also Quincy v. Jackson, 113 U. S. 332; Ralls County Ct. v. U. S., 105 U. S. 733; Parkerburg v. Brown, 106 U. S. 489. As was said in U. S. v. New Orleans, 98 U. S. 381, the general principle is that "when authority to borrow money or incur an obligation, in order to execute a public work, is conferred upon a municipal corporation, the power to levy a tax for its payment, or the discharge of the obligation, accompanies it, and this, too, without any special mention that such power is granted. This arises from the fact that such corporations seldom possess—so seldom, indeed, as to be exceptional—any means to discharge their pecuniary obligation except by taxation."

3. Taylor v. McFadden, 84 Iowa 262.

4. Lumbard v. Stearns, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 60; Wayland v. Middlesex County, 4 Gray (Mass.) 500; Tyler v. Hudson, 147 Mass. 609; Reddall v. Bryan, 14 Md. 444; 74 Am. Dec. 550; Kane v. Baltimore, 15 Md. 240; Graff v. Baltimore, 10 Md. 544; Stein v. Burden, 24 Ala. 130; 60 Am. Dec. 453; Thorn v. Sweeney, 12 Nev. 251; Tide Water Co. v. Coster, 18 N. J. L. 518; 90 Am. Dec. 634; David v. Portland Water Committee, 14 Oregon 98; Atty.

Gen'l v. Eau Claire, 37 Wis. 425; State v. Newark, 54 N. J. L. 62.

The fact that the water supply is not for the benefit of the state, does not prevent it being a public use. It is sufficient if it benefit a large portion of the inhabitants of a particular community. In Wayland v. Middlesex, 4 Gray (Mass.) 500, Thomas, J., said: "The petitioners seek to take the case out of the rule, contending that in this case the appropriation of property cannot be held to be for public uses; its benefits being confined to one city alone and not shared by the whole public. . . . But we think this is too narrow a view of the objects and purposes of the act. Many public works would perhaps be found to be peculiarly beneficial to the city or town in which they are located, though the benefits are not restricted and confined to such town or city. In the present case, the benefits are shared by a large portion of the public directly, and indirectly by the whole commonwealth. It would be difficult, we think, to find any class of cases in which the right of eminent domain is more justly or wisely exercised than in provisions to supply our crowded towns and cities with pure water, provisions equally necessary to the health and safety of the people."

Measure of Damages.—In Alloway v. Nashville, 88 Tenn. 510; 29 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 372, it was held that, subserve such a purpose, it has been held that the legislature may authorize the erection of a dam in a navigable river, provided such dam does not materially obstruct navigation therein.¹

b. WATER AND WATER RIGHTS.—Not only may a city, when authorized to exercise the power of eminent domain, condemn lands, but in order to furnish its supply of water, it may take water from public streams or ponds, provided compensation is made to the riparian owners.² The fact that the municipality authorized to take the water of a stream is a riparian owner, will in proceedings by a city to condemn lands for a reservoir site, while the adaptability of lands for such a site must be considered by the jury, the value for such a purpose exclusively cannot be shown and made the sole basis of a recovery, especially when the property possesses other capabilities which are also shown by the evidence.

1. State v. Eau Claire, 40 Wis. 533; Pumpelly v. Green Bay, etc., Canal Co., 13 Wall. (U. S.) 166.

2. Santa Cruz v. Enright, 95 Cal. 105; Burden v. Stein, 27 Ala. 104; 62 Am. Dec. 758; Watuppa Reservoir Co. v. Fall River, 147 Mass. 548; 134 Mass. 267; Tileston v. Brookline, 134 Mass. 438; Tyler v. Hudson, 147 Mass. 609.

In Springville v. Fullmer, 7 Utah 450, a statute authorizing a city to provide the city with water and so on, and providing that the city council should have power to make such ordinances as it might deem necessary, was held to give the city power to acquire all water rights necessary to supply the inhabitants of the city with water.

The rights of riparian owners cannot be interfered with without the payment of damages; but it was held that if an owner of a water power stands by, and, not objecting, permits a city, without first assessing and paying him damages, to erect works for a water supply, by drawing water from the stream and thus diminishing his power, he creates an equitable estoppel so that he will not be protected by injunction, but will be left to assert his rights at law. Logansport v. Uhl, 99 Ind. 531; 49 Am. Rep. 109.

In State v. Morris Aqueduct, 46 N. J. L. 495, it was said that the diversion of the waters of a stream or spring should not be allowed, unless clearly necessary for the public good, and the question of necessity should be controlled by the court, and there should be satisfactory evidence of the need.

Where an act authorized the trustees of a village to supply the village with water by means of conduits, and, for that purpose, to enter on the lands of other persons, make reservoirs, etc., and provide compensation for the owners of such land, and also for the owner of the land on which the spring or source from which the water was to be conducted was situated, but made no provision for indemnifying the owners of lands through which the stream flowed, though such spring had run from time immemorial, for the injury suffered by diverting the course of the stream from their farms, it was held that an injunction might be granted to prevent any proceeding to divert the stream until provision was made for compensation to those injured thereby. Gardner v. Newburgh, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 162; 7 Am. Dec. 526. See also Smith v. Rochester, 92 N. Y. 463; 44 Am. Rep. 393.

What Constitutes Taking.—Under a statute authorizing a town to take the waters of a certain pond for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants thereof with water, the town accepted the act and took land on the shore of the pond, and there dug a water gallery and pumping well and made connection by pipes between the well and pond, but did not use these pipes, all the water coming into the well, either by percolation from the pond or from underground streams; it was held that there had been a taking of the waters within the meaning of the act. Bailey v. Woburn, 126 Mass. 416.

Pollution of Public Supply.—After the taking of the waters of a stream for the purpose of supplying a city with pure water, a presumptive right to pollute the stream cannot be acquired. Martin v. Gleason, 139 Mass. 183.

not relieve it of the liability in damages to other riparian owners injured by the taking, for such use of the waters of a stream cannot be made by any riparian owner.¹

Although the water taken must be for a public purpose, the fact that, as an incident to the securing of a public supply of water by the city, more water is obtained than is needed for present public uses, and the city disposes of the surplus for an outside use, does not divest the condemnation of land for the water supply of its public character.²

3. Liability of Municipalities—a. FOR FAILURE TO SUPPLY WATER.—A city has undoubtedly the right to cut off the water from premises for the non-payment of charges, or for non-compliance with its reasonable rules and regulations provided for the operation of the waterworks, and may keep the supply shut off until payment or compliance with such rules.³ But it has been held that where a householder has made payment in advance for a year's supply, the water may not be cut off from his premises during the year for the reason that his predecessor in title did not pay the rent for the year preceding.⁴ And the continuance of a refusal to supply water to premises, on the ground that the tenant

1. Aetna Mills v. Waltham, 126 Mass. 422. See also WATERCOURSES, vol. 28, p. 943.

2. In State v. Newark (N. J. 1891), 40 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 33, it was objected that because some of the water obtained by the condemnation proceedings was disposed of for other than for public purposes, the proceedings were illegal. Dixon, J., said: "It would, of course, be absurd for the city to construct waterworks adequate only for its present wants, and the prosecutor does not assert that the works now contemplated are unreasonably large, in view of the city's prospective growth, or that more land is to be taken than is necessary for their construction and maintenance. Under these circumstances it is not apparent how the prosecutor can have any legal concern with the quantity of water drawn through the aqueduct, or with the use made of so much of it as the public does not need. But, at any rate, the mere fact that, as a natural incident to the securing of public water supply, more water is obtained than is now requisite for public purposes, and that the city disposes of the surplus for an outside use, does not deprive the condemnation of its public character. The power to construct and maintain the works still rests on the municipal public use, not on the disposition of the accidental excess."

3. Atlanta v. Burton, 90 Ga. 486; Girard L. Ins. Co. v. Philadelphia, 88 Pa. St. 393; Com. v. Philadelphia, 132 Pa. St. 288.

In State v. Jersey City, 45 N. J. L. 246, it was held that a failure to comply with a regulation providing that the consumers should put on their premises expensive meters at their own cost, did not justify cutting off the water.

4. Merrimack River Sav. Bank v. Lowell, 152 Mass. 556.

In Stock v. Boston, 149 Mass. 410, the city was held liable in tort for injuries caused by the negligence of the city employees in uncovering pipes conducting water to the premises of the plaintiff, thereby causing the water to freeze in the pipes, and his supply to be cut off. But it was assumed, both by the counsel and the court, that the city, having complied with the request of an applicant to deliver water at his premises, was under a contract to continue the delivery. And this view was sustained in Merrimack River Sav. Bank v. Lowell, 152 Mass. 556. But in Smith v. Philadelphia, 81 Pa. St. 38; 22 Am. Rep. 731, where the water froze in the mains owing to the negligent laying of the same, it was held that the city was not liable for the damages resulting from the failure to obtain a water supply, but that the recovery could be for the back water rents only, on the ground that the city was under no contract, the of the premises was in arrears for water furnished him while occupying premises owned by another landlord, has been enjoined.¹

A city authorized to furnish supply of water for the extinguishment of fires, and which has undertaken to provide such supply, is nevertheless not liable to its citizens, whose property is destroyed by fire, for failure to provide an adequate supply of water even though an annual tax is levied for that purpose. This power to provide for a supply of water is in its nature legislative and governmental, requiring the exercise of judgment and discretion, and is not merely a ministerial duty.² Nor is the city liable on the ground of contract arising from the acceptance of a statute granting the power and the building of its works thereunder, as it enters into no contract thereby with the owners of premises to furnish them with water for the extinguishment of introduction of water by the city into private houses being but a license which was paid for.

Contract for Street Sprinkling.—In McKnight v. New Orleans, 24 La. Ann. 412, it was held that one who had exclusive privilege from the city, of using water from the hydrants for the purpose of sprinkling the streets, could not complain if the privilege were taken from him and given to another, who paid more for the water than he had paid, because it was within the power of the city through its administrators to withhold altogether, and from all persons, the use of the water from the hydrants for the purpose of street sprinkling.

1. Dayton v. Quigley, 29 N. J. Eq. 77.

2. Wright v. Augusta, 78 Ga. 241; Heller v. Sedalia, 53 Mo. 159; 14 Am. Rep. 444; Wheeler v. Cincinnati, 19 Ohio St. 19; 2 Am. Rep. 368; Vanhorn v. Des Moines, 63 Iowa 447; 50 Am. Rep. 750; Brinkmeyer v. Evansville, 29 Ind. 187; Grant v. Erie, 69 Pa. St. 420; 8 Am. Rep. 272; Mendel v. Wheeling, 28 W. Va. 233; 57 Am. Rep. 665; Foster v. Lookout Water Co., 3 Lea (Tenn.) 42.

In Wheeler v. Cincinnati, 19 Ohio St. 19; 2 Am. Rep. 368, where the plaintiff's house was destroyed by a fire, and he sued the corporation for damages on the ground that they had failed to provide necessary cisterns, etc., for extinguishing the fire, a demurrer by the corporation was sustained. In reference to the power conferred to make provision for the extinguishment of fires, the court said: "The powers thus conferred are, in their nature, legislative and governmental; the extent and manner of their exercise, within the sphere prescribed by statute, are necessarily to be determined by the judgment and discretion of the proper municipal authorities, and for any defect in the execution of such powers, the corporation cannot be held liable to individuals.

The power of the city over the subject is that of a delegated quasi-sovereignty, which excludes responsibility to individuals, for the neglect or nonfeasance of an officer or agent charged with the performance of duties. The case differs from that where the corporation is charged by law with the performance of a duty purely ministerial in its character." And in Brinkmeyer v. Evansville, 29 Ind. 187, in speaking of the exercise of these powers, Elliott, J., said: "They are legislative or judicial in their nature, depending upon the wisdom and judgment of the common council, and cannot be the subject of legal liability to individuals."

In Grant v. Erie, 69 Pa. St. 420; 8 Am. Rep. 272, the owner of property destroyed by fire claimed damages against the city on the ground of negligence, the city council having suffered a reservoir near by to become so dilapidated as not to hold water. It was held that the city was not liable, the construction and maintenance of the city reservoir being merely discretionary with the city.

In Patch v. Covington, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 722; 66 Am. Dec. 186, the city was held not liable on the ground that the proximate cause of the loss was not fires.¹ There are many cases where actions have been brought to recover damages against a city for failure to supply water in case of fire, but none have been found in which any recovery has been had.

b. FOR INJURIES FROM NEGLIGENT CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.—A municipal corporation operating a system of waterworks is, quoad hoc, to be regarded as a private corporation, and consequently is liable for injuries resulting from the negligent construction and operation of such works by its officers and agents.² But the municipality does not insure its citizens against the insufficient supply of water, but was the fire which was communicated to the plaintiff's building from one adjoining.

1. Tainter v. Worcester, 123 Mass. 311; 25 Am. Rep. 90; Vanhorn v. Des Moines, 63 Iowa 447; 50 Am. Rep. 750.

In State v. Columbia, 16 S. Car. 412; 45 Am. Rep. 785, it was held that a city was not liable for the destruction of the plaintiff's property by fire, owing to an inadequate supply of water, although he was taxed for water, and there was an understanding that there should always be an adequate supply of water for the extinguishment of fires.

2. Scott v. Manchester, 1 H. & N. 59; White v. Hindley Local Board, L. R., 10 Q. B. 219; McAvoy v. New York, 54 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 245; Bailey v. New York, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 531; 38 Am. Dec. 669; 2 Den. (N. Y.) 433; Levy v. Salt Lake City, 3 Utah 63; Wilson v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 261; 11 Am. Rep. 352; Mendel v. Wheeling, 28 W. Va. 233; 57 Am. Rep. 665.

In New York v. Bailey, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 433, a leading case on the subject of the liability of municipal corporations, and frequently cited in this connection, the city of New York was held liable for damages inflicted through the management of the Croton dam, which was, under the laws of the state, under the management of commissioners appointed by the governor and the senate of the state. In the lower court, in the case of Bailey v. New York, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 531, Nelson, C. J., said: "The powers conferred by the several acts of the legislature authorizing the execution of this great work are not, strictly and legally speaking, conferred for the benefit of the public. The grant is a special, private franchise, made as well for the private emolument and advantage of the city, as for the public good. The state, in its sovereign character, has no interest in it. It owns no part of the work. The whole investment under the law, and the revenue and profits to be derived therefrom, are a part of the private property of the city as much as the lands and houses belonging to it situate within its corporate limits." In reference to the liability of the corporation, on the ground that it was operating the waterworks at a private advantage and emolument, and consequently was liable as a private corporation, the judge continued: "The distinction is quite clear and well settled, and the process of separation practicable. To this end regard should be had, not so much to the nature and character of the various powers conferred as to the object and purpose of the legislature in conferring them. If granted for public purposes exclusively, they belong to the corporate body in its public, political, or municipal character. But if the grant was for the purposes of private advantage and emolument, though the public may derive a common benefit therefrom, the corporation quoad hoc is to be regarded as a private company."

In Stock v. Boston, 149 Mass. 410, where the owner of a greenhouse was deprived of his water supply on account of the negligence of the employees of the city in leaving the pipe connected with the greenhouse exposed, so that the water therein froze and the owner suffered considerable damage, the city was held liable therefor.

Liability for Injury Caused by Fire Department.—The operation by a city of its waterworks in connection with a fire department, is the exercise of a governmental and discretionary power, and the liability in this connection is not the same as in the case of its ordinary operation and management. In Fisher v. Boston, 104 Mass. 87, it was held that the city was not liable for personal injury resulting from the bursting of a hose attached to a fire engine while the department was extinguishing a fire, although in part caused by the negligence of the officers and members of the department in performing their duties, and notwithstanding the department was established under a special statute, and was accepted by the city council. And in Edgerly v. Concord, 62 N. H. 8; 13 Am. St. Rep. 533; a municipal corporation, owning and operating a system of waterworks for supplying water for extinguishing fires, was not liable for an injury to a person traveling upon the street, caused by his horse taking fright at a stream of water thrown from a hydrant by firemen who were testing the hydrant by request of the corporation. See supra, this title, For Failure to Supply Water.

damage from the construction and operation of its works, and liability can only arise from a failure to exercise reasonable care and vigilance.¹

A city has been held liable for injuries to travelers resulting from its negligence in laying and maintaining its pipes in streets and highways.²

Injury Arising from Sudden Flood.—In Moore v. Los Angeles, 72 Cal. 287, it was held that the city of Los Angeles, although the owner of the bed of the Los Angeles river, and having the right to divert its waters and sell them to its citizens, was not liable for damages caused to private property situated within its corporate limits, through a sudden overflow of the waters of the river.

1. Ring v. Cohoes, 77 N. Y. 83; 33 Am. Rep. 574; Hunt v. New York, 109 N. Y. 134; Jenney v. Brooklyn, 120 N. Y. 164.

2. In Hand v. Brookline, 126 Mass. 324, the town was held liable for injuries sustained by a traveler on a street which had been undermined by water escaping from the mains laid therein. The court, by Gray, C. J., said: "For neglect in the manner of constructing such works by which injury is caused to person or property, a town is just as liable as a private corporation or an individual. . . . If the water escaping from the aqueduct, by reason of its negligent and imperfect construction, had injured buildings or crops, there could be no doubt of the right of the owner to recover damages against the town."

In Scranton v. Catterson, 94 Pa. St. 202, a city which was bound by its charter to keep its streets in repair was held liable for injury caused by a water plug which had projected above the street and was placed there before the incorporation of the city.

Where a village which owns an aqueduct for the supply of water to its inhabitants, permits a water-box to project beyond the surface of the highway, it is liable to a person injured thereby while driving along the highway, as for an injury caused by its failure to properly maintain its aqueduct, even though the water-box was properly constructed originally, and the obstruction was caused by the earth wearing down or washing away around it. Wilkins v. Rutland, 61 Vt. 336; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 49.

In Kent v. Worthing Local Board, 10 Q. B. Div. 118, where an iron cover of a valve connected with a water main was properly fixed in the highway, but in consequence of the ordinary wearing of the highway projected an inch above it, and the plaintiff's horse stumbled over the valve, and was hurt, it was held that it was the duty of the defendants to make such arrangements that their works under proper care should not become a nuisance, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

If due diligence, however, is used in laying and maintaining the pipes, no one can be held liable for injuries resulting from their breaking. Terry v. New York, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 504.

In Aldrich v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 141; 23 Am. Rep. 434, which was an action against a city for damages resulting from an unsafe highway, the damage being caused by a stream of water thrown from a city hydrant across the highway, by an employee of the water commissioner, it was held that the city was liable, the water commissioners and their employees being servants of the city.

4. Water Rents and Charges.—Water rents are not imposed or collected in the exercise of the taxing power, but the obligation to pay for the use of water rests upon an implied contract on the part of the consumer to make compensation for water which he has applied for and received on the terms and conditions made public.¹

Though resting upon an implied contract, the legislature may declare water rents to be a lien upon the premises supplied, and that such lien shall be paramount to any subsequent alienation or incumbrance thereon.²

The city may make discrimination in its rates and charges, pro-

1. Provident Sav. Inst. v. Jersey City, 113 U. S. 514; Vreeland v. O'Neil, 36 N. J. Eq. 399; 37 N. J. Eq. 574; Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 139.

In Baker v. Gartside, 86 Pa. St. 408, under a statute authorizing a municipality to erect waterworks and lay in water pipes, the cost of which was to be borne by the property owners in front of whose property the pipes were laid, and who applied for the use of the water, it was held that the owner of a corner lot, who applied for the use of the water, and paid for the pipe laid along one front of his property, could not be compelled to pay for pipe subsequently laid along the other front of his premises, and the right to maintain an action against him depended upon the contract; and as he had only applied for the water on one front, his contract could not be made to include the other front.

In Vreeland v. Jersey City, 43 N. J. L. 135, a statute providing that the board of public works should regulate the distribution of water, and prices to be paid for the use of the same, required the board to fix a sum to be annually assessed upon vacant lots abutting upon streets upon which water mains were laid, and lots with buildings thereon in which water was not taken. It was held that under the statute, no liability could rest upon any property owners, except those using the water, to pay the rents imposed, as the rates imposed upon other property could not be sustained either as special assessments or general taxes, upon the ground that as special assessments, there was no limitation by which the imposition of the board was restricted to an amount representing the actual benefits to the lots; nor was it valid as a general tax, as the imposition was not uniform upon all the property within the jurisdiction of the city. See also In re Union College, 129 N. Y. 308.

Secret Use of Water.—In St. Louis v. Arnot, 94 Mo. 275, in an action by the city for the value of water used through a secret pipe not connected with a meter, the city was entitled to ascertain the amount used, and to recover the same. Evidence of what the defendant said with reference to such pipe could be shown by anyone who had heard it.

Water for "Private Residences."—Under a schedule of rates fixing the maximum charge for a "residence occupied by one family for domestic purposes" and further specifying a tariff for a bath, etc., and water basins, and providing that special rates should be made for supplies not enumerated, it was held that the tariff fixed for private residences did not include or warrant the use of water for the other purposes enumerated, for which special charge was to be made. Allen v. Duluth, Gas, etc., Co., 46 Minn. 290.

2. Provident Sav. Inst. v. Jersey City, 113 U. S. 506.

Such a lien for water has priority over mortgages on the premises supplied, made after the passage of the act, whether the water was introduced on the lot mortgaged before or after the giving of the mortgage. Vreeland v. O'Neil, 36 N. J. Eq. 399.

In Hennessey v. Volkening (Super. Ct.), 22 N. Y. Supp. 528, it was held that a statutory provision authorizing unpaid water rent to be carried into the tax of the following year, and its payment enforced by lien and sale like ordinary taxes and assessments, was constitutional, though no notice was required to be given to the landowner, as the water rates were published and an opportunity given to have any overcharge corrected.

vided they are not manifestly unjust or unreasonable.¹ But it cannot make unwarranted discrimination in particular cases, nor arbitrary charges with the penalty of forfeiture of the right to use the water.²

II. WATER COMPANIES OPERATED AND CONTROLLED BY PRIVATE INDIVIDUALS—1. Organization and Character.—Water companies differ from many other corporations, whether private or quasi public, in this particular; while they may be brought into existence, like other corporations, by complying with the provisions of general laws, or in whatever other legal way is prescribed for the purpose, they cannot, in general, become active, or exercise the functions contemplated by their organization in any particular locality, except after special and direct authority to that end has been conferred on them by the sovereign. The legislature may delegate the functions of supplying water for any particular locality to an individual or corporation, unless forbidden by the constitution; it may confer the right to so delegate it to the extent of its own territory upon a municipality, or it may delegate it to an individual or corporation subject to confirmatory action on the part of the municipality in which the individual or corporation proposes to operate. But a water company, however organized and whether possessed of the right of eminent domain or not, has no right to tear up the public streets or roads of a municipality to lay water pipes or mains therein, or to do business as such water company in any particular locality, except by express permission either from the legislature or from the municipality properly empowered to grant such permission.³

Water companies, when actually engaged in the performance of

1. Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 139.

2. Parker v. Boston, 1 Allen (Mass.) 361.

So in State v. Jersey City, 45 N. J. L. 246, it was held that the board of public works could not charge a certain water consumer with an expensive meter, put in by them to regulate the supply and rent to be paid, without the consent of the person charged; nor impose the penalty of cutting off the water for non-payment of the price of the meter.

In Holman v. Pleasant Grove City, 8 Utah 78, it was held that a city could not, after it had taken charge of the water supply, and for many years had made a pro rata distribution, divide the inhabitants into two classes and restrict the right of one class in the supply, when the supply was not sufficient for all.

In Young v. Boston, 104 Mass. 95, it was held that a person occupying a suite of rooms with his family in a building also occupied by other families, who had separate water attachments connected with a pipe which supplied the whole building, and on which pipe a meter was fixed, could restrain the company, by injunction, from cutting off his supply, because he insisted upon paying for water used by himself, rather than have the owner of the building pay therefor under a regulation of the water board.

Payment Under Compulsion.—The payment of a water license under threat of turning off the water in case of continued refusal, is payment under compulsion; and if the charge is excessive, the excess may be recovered, and that without tendering the amount really due. Westlake v. St. Louis, 77 Mo. 47; 3 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 581.

3. Andrews v. National Foundry, etc., Works, 61 Fed. Rep. 782; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Rivers, 115 U. S. 674.

their corporate functions, are necessarily the beneficiaries of valuable privileges from the state and subserve a public purpose. They are to be classed as quasi public corporations, and are subject in their operation to the limitations and regulations which the law imposes upon such bodies, in order that the public interest may not suffer.¹

The field of general operation of a water company is not necessarily confined to the territorial limits of the state in which it is organized, but it may own and exercise franchises in other states, although not expressly authorized so to do by the laws of the state of its incorporation.²

2. Exclusive Franchise—a. POWER TO GRANT.—Unless restrained by the constitution, the legislature may grant to a private corporation the exclusive right to lay pipes and mains through the streets of a municipality, and to supply it and its inhabitants with water for general use and for fire protection.³

In one instance the constitutional inhibition against the creation of "perpetuities and monopolies" was held to forbid the grant of such an exclusive privilege, even for a term of years;⁴ in another, however, the contrary was held.⁵

A municipal corporation has no power to grant an exclusive right of this character, unless authorized to do so in express terms

The principles governing this branch of the subject have been fully treated elsewhere. See GAS COMPANIES, vol. 8, p. 1276; STREET RAILWAYS, vol. 23, p. 946; TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONES, vol. 25, p. 752.

1. Haugen v. Albina Light, etc., Co., 21 Oregon 411; Olmsted v. Morris Aqueduct, 47 N. J. L. 333, disapproving Paterson Gaslight Co. v. Brady, 27 N. J. L. 245; Price v. Riverside Land, etc., Co., 56 Cal. 431. See also FRANCHISES, vol. 8, p. 614.

2. Dodge v. Council Bluffs, 57 Iowa 560. See also CORPORATIONS, vol. 4, p. 206; FOREIGN CORPORATIONS, vol. 8, p. 330.

3. New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Rivers, 115 U. S. 674; St. Tammany Waterworks Co. v. New Orleans Waterworks Co., 120 U. S. 64; Atlantic City Waterworks Co. v. Atlantic City, 39 N. J. Eq. 367; Atlantic City Waterworks Co. v. Consumers Water Co., 44 N. J. Eq. 427. In this last case, however, the statute granting the right was declared void, as being in conflict with the provision of the constitution prohibiting the legislature from passing any local or special laws conferring exclusive corporate franchises.

4. Brenham v. Brenham Water Co.,

67 Tex. 542. Here, it was said that in order to constitute a monopoly, the right to exercise the exclusive privilege need not extend to all places; the monopoly exists if it operates in and to the hurt of one community; and that it need not continue indefinitely so as to amount to a perpetuity, the monopoly exists if the privilege is exclusive for a term of years. See also Davenport v. Kleinschmidt, 6 Mont. 502, where it was held that the grant by the common council of the exclusive right of selling to the city all the water required by it for sewerage and fire purposes for the period of twenty years, at a minimum rate fixed in the contract, was a monopoly, and this, notwithstanding the grant did not prevent other people from selling water to private citizens.

5. Memphis v. Memphis Water Co., 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 495. Here it was held that the grant of the privilege, formerly enjoyed by a city, by legislative enactment, to a private corporation, for its exclusive use, for a term of years, of supplying the city with water by means of waterworks, was not in conflict with section 22, article 1, of the constitution of Tennessee declaring that "perpetuities and monopolies are by the legislature.¹ But it is held that the validity of an ordinance conferring such a right may not be contested by a mere taxpayer, but only by some other company or individual afterward claiming a similar right.²

b. CONSTRUCTION AND NATURE OF GRANT.—It is a well settled principle of construction, applicable alike to direct legislative grants and to those made through the agency of municipal corporations, that exclusive rights of the character in question are not favored, and a statute which thus has the effect to impair the power of the legislature for future action should be construed most strongly in favor of the state. If there is any ambiguity or reasonable doubt arising from the terms employed by the granting body as to whether an exclusive privilege has been conferred, or authorized to be conferred, the doubt is to be resolved against the corporation or individual claiming such a grant.³ But when the right has been once granted, and accepted and acted upon by the grantee, it constitutes a contract protected by the federal constitution against impairment by state legislation.⁴ contrary to the genius of a free state and shall not be allowed."

1. Brenham v. Brenham Water Co., 67 Tex. 542; Altgelt v. San Antonio, 81 Tex. 436; Long v. Duluth, 49 Minn. 280; Syracuse Water Co. v. Syracuse, 116 N. Y. 167.

In Davenport v. Kleinschmidt, 6 Mont. 502, after holding that the grant of an exclusive privilege of the kind under consideration, constituted a monopoly, it was further held that the city council had no authority to grant to any person a monopoly, even when no express prohibition was found in the charter or other acts of the legislature.

Chapter 78, Iowa Laws 1872, empowering cities to construct waterworks, or to procure individuals to construct and maintain them, applies as well to cities acting under special charters as to those under the general incorporation law. Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa 396. See also MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, vol. 15, p. 1055.

2. Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa 396; Dodge v. Council Bluffs, 57 Iowa 560.

3. Long v. Duluth, 49 Minn. 280. Here it was held that legislative authority to a city to provide a system of waterworks, to grant the right to a private corporation to establish such a system, and to supply the city with water, and to contract therefor, did not give the municipality authority to grant an exclusive franchise so as to disable the municipal corporation for the period of thirty years, from itself establishing waterworks and a system of supply.

In Lehigh Water Co.'s Appeal, 102 Pa. St. 515, the facts were as follows: The company was incorporated in 1860 to supply the borough of Easton with water. In 1867, the borough was authorized to construct waterworks and to buy the works of any existing company. This authority, however, did not become effectual until 1881, when it was approved by popular vote. Meanwhile the water company, as it was authorized to do, had availed itself, by acceptance, of the benefits of an act of 1874, providing for the incorporation of water companies, and which declared that "the right to have and enjoy the franchises and privileges of such incorporation within the district or locality covered by its charter shall be an exclusive one, and no other company shall be incorporated for that purpose," until the corporation should have realized profits to a specified amount. It was held that the franchise was exclusive only so far as other companies were concerned, and that the borough was not prohibited from supplying water by works constructed by itself, even though that might impair the value of the franchise of the water company. Followed in Freeport Water Works Co. v. Prague, 129 Pa. St. 605. Compare Memphis v. Memphis Water Co., 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 495.

4. New Orleans Water Works Co. v. Rivers, 115 U. S. 674; St. Tammany

An exclusive franchise conferred upon a corporation to supply water to the inhabitants of a city by means of pipes and mains laid through the public streets, is violated by a grant to an individual in the city of the right to supply his premises with water by means of a pipe or pipes so laid.¹ But the grant of the sole privilege of supplying the municipality with water from a designated source for a term of years, is not impaired, within the meaning of the contract clause of the constitution, by a grant to another party of a privilege to supply it with water from a different source.²

And, of course, when the state by act of incorporation grants no exclusive privileges to one company, it impairs no contract by incorporating a second company with powers and privileges which necessarily operate injuriously to the first.³

Water Works Co. v. New Orleans Water Works Co., 120 U. S. 64; Rockland Water Co. v. Camden, etc., Water Co., 80 Me. 544.

In Citizens Water Co. v. Bridgeport Hydraulic Co., 55 Conn. 1, the common council of the city of Bridgeport accepted the proposition of A to supply the city with water, and granted him, with the right of assignment, the sole right to lay pipes in the streets, so long as a full supply of pure water should be furnished. Subsequently, the Bridgeport Hydraulic Company was incorporated with power to acquire, and which did acquire, all the rights of A under the vote of the city, and became charged with all his duties, and the company soon after expended a large sum of money in acquiring property and establishing its plant. It was held that so long as this company supplied the city with an abundance of pure water, the legislature had no power to grant to another corporation the right to lay its pipes in the streets of the city for the purpose of supplying the city with water; that if the common council had no power to grant the exclusive use of the streets, yet, as the charter of the defendant company recognized and confirmed the grant by the city, it became as effective as if the city had the power to make it in the first instance, and as if the legislature had made it in the most direct and explicit terms. By a clause in the charter of the defendant company the legislature reserved the power to recall the franchise at its pleasure. It was held that this provision did not authorize the legislature to set aside or impair the contract which the city had entered into for the sole use of its streets by the defendant company, so long as the latter should supply the city with water, and which the charter had recognized and confirmed.

Exclusive Franchise—Effect of Annexation of Town Upon Existing Contract.—Under New York Laws of 1873, ch. 737, providing that whenever a certain number of persons propose to organize a company to furnish a town or village with water, they shall present to certain officers of the town or village an application containing a request that they consider the application to supply the said town or village, or the inhabitants thereof, with water, and that if the application is granted by the said officers the persons named therein may proceed to organize the company, every company organized under such statute exists by virtue of a contract with the town or village and possesses an exclusive franchise, for which compensation must be made if it is condemned for public uses. And, further, the rights of such water company are not affected by the fact that the town to which it supplies water is annexed to an adjoining city. In re Long Island Water Supply (Supreme Ct.), 24 N. Y. Supp. 807. See also Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids Hydraulic Co., 66 Mich. 606.

1. New Orleans Water Works Co. v. Rivers, 115 U. S. 674; followed in St. Tammany Water Works v. New Orleans Water Works, 120 U. S. 64.

2. Stein v. Bienville Water Supply Co., 141 U. S. 67.

3. Rockland Water Co. v. Camden, etc., Water Co., 80 Me. 544; Syra-

3. Exercise of Right of Eminent Domain—(See also EMINENT DOMAIN, vol. 6, p. 509; STREETS AND SIDEWALKS, vol. 24, p. 1)—a. IN GENERAL.—The supplying of a municipality and its inhabitants with water for the extinguishment of fires, and for domestic, sanitary and other purposes, is a measure of public utility, for which there may be an appropriation of private property under the power of eminent domain.¹

As the right of eminent domain is restricted to the taking of private property for public uses, it may not be exercised in favor of the owners of mining claims to enable them to obtain water for their own use in working such claims, though their intention may also be to supply water to others for mining and irrigating purposes.²

And where the company's charter authorizes it to take private waters "for the extinguishment of fires, and for domestic, sanitary and other purposes," it may not use the waters of a private stream for private manufacturing purposes against the objection of mill owners upon such stream who would be injured thereby.³

A water company having contracts to furnish a city and a railway company with water for its own profit has no greater power, as a riparian proprietor, to take water from an unnavigable stream than a private individual has.⁴

And a water company, by the mere purchase of land upon which a spring issues, creating a stream which flows in a natural channel and through the land of others, does not acquire a right to divert the water of such spring into another channel without case Water Co. v. Syracuse, 116 N. Y. 167.

1. Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 464; 15 Am. Rep. 39; Opinion of Justices, 150 Mass. 596; Ingraham v. Camden, etc., Water Co., 82 Me. 335; Riche v. Bar Harbor Water Co., 75 Me. 91; Burden v. Stein, 27 Ala. 104; 62 Am. Dec. 758; Cummings v. Peters, 56 Cal. 593; St. Helena Water Co. v. Forbes, 62 Cal. 182; Thorn v. Sweeney, 12 Nev. 251; Olmsted v. Morris Aqueduct, 46 N. J. L. 495; 47 N. J. L. 311; Stamford Water Co. v. Stanley, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 424; Matter of New Rochelle Water Co., 46 Hun (N. Y.) 525; Witcher v. Holland Water Works Co., 66 Hun (N. Y.) 619.

In Lumbard v. Stearns, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 60, it was held that an act of the legislature by which certain persons were incorporated as an aqueduct company for the purpose of furnishing a village with pure water, with authority to take springs, lands, and rights subject to the payment of damages therefor, as provided by law in the case of land taken for highways, was not unconstitutional, on the alleged ground that it authorized the taking of private rights of property for a use which was not public, although it contained no express provision requiring the corporation to supply, on reasonable terms, all persons applying for water.

A corporation, organized and existing under the laws of California for the purpose of furnishing the inhabitants of an incorporated town with pure fresh water, may exercise the right of eminent domain for the acquisition of land needed as a reservoir in connection with the purpose of its creation. Lake Pleasanton Water Co. v. Contra Costa Water Co., 67 Cal. 659.

2. Lorenz v. Jacob, 63 Cal. 73.

3. In re Barre Water Co., 62 Vt. 27. Here the court said that the words "other purposes" must be construed to mean other public purposes of the same character.

4. Saunders v. Bluefield Water Works, etc., Co., 58 Fed. Rep. 133.

first paying or securing compensation to lower riparian owners. The rights of the company in such a case are those of a riparian owner; neither more nor less.¹

b. USE OF STREETS—(1) Not Additional Servitude.—The use of the streets of a city, under legislative or municipal sanction, for the purpose of laying water pipes and mains therein, does not constitute an additional burden for which the abutting owner is entitled to compensation. This use of streets stands upon the same principle as their use for gas pipes and sewers.² But it seems that the laying of pipes in a country highway, where the fee is in the adjoining proprietor, entitles him to compensation.³

The erection of a water tank in the center of the street, occupying one-half of the width thereof, and the erection and operation of a steam engine in connection therewith, even for the purpose of supplying the city and its inhabitants with water, is not a use to which the street can appropriately be put; and the owner of a lot adjoining may maintain an action to recover for any damages occasioned thereby.⁴

(2) Subject to City's Right to Repair, etc.—A water company laying its pipes in the public streets, under a contract with the municipality, does so subject to the right of the city to construct sewers and repair the streets, whenever and wherever the public interest demands, and if, by reason of the exercise of this right, the company is compelled to relay its pipes, it can maintain no claim therefor against the city, unless the latter's action is unreasonable or malicious.⁵

A water company authorized by legislative enactment to use the soil under the public roads for the purpose of constructing its works, having laid its pipes across the street of a city,

1. Lord v. Meadville Water Co., 135 Pa. St. 122; 20 Am. St. Rep. 864.

2. Wood v. National Water Works Co., 33 Kan. 590; Crooke v. Flatbush Water Works Co., 27 Hun (N. Y.) 72; 29 Hun (N. Y.) 245; Quincy v. Bull, 106 Ill. 337. See also STREETS AND SIDEWALKS, vol. 24, p. 1; DRAINS AND SEWERS, vol. 6, p. 2; GAS COMPANIES, vol. 8, p. 1268.

3. Johnson v. Jaqui, 27 N. J. Eq. 552; Lewis on Eminent Domain, § 129.

4. Morrison v. Hinkson, 87 Ill. 587. In West v. Bancroft, 32 Vt. 366, it was held that the proper public authorities of the town or village have a right to place a reservoir in the highway for the purpose of retaining water with which to sprinkle the highway and the owner of the fee of the land may not maintain an action against such authorities for so doing.

5. National Water Works Co. v. Kansas City, 28 Fed. Rep. 921. Here, it was further held that an allegation that the sewer might have occupied other space in the street, is not equivalent to an allegation that the city acted unreasonably or maliciously.

In Rockland Water Co. v. Rockland, 83 Me. 267, where the water company had a right under its charter to lay its pipes through the streets of the city "in such manner as not to obstruct or impede travel thereon," it was held that the city retained the right to repair its streets in the ordinary manner, although in so doing the pipes of the company might thereby become exposed and the company compelled to sink them deeper to protect them from frost and other dangers; it not appearing that the repairs of its streets by the municipality were made in an improper or unusual manner. See also Montgomery v. Capital City Water Co., 92 Ala. 361; New Haven v. New Haven Water Co., 44 Conn. 105.

will be compelled to lower them so as to conform to a new grade established by municipal authority.¹

Where a water company is given the right by its charter to open streets for the purpose of laying pipes, etc., therein, and the only limitation annexed thereto is that the streets after being opened shall be repaired by the company at its own expense as soon as practicable, and subject to the approval of the city authorities, the company is not bound by an ordinance of the city providing that no person shall open the streets, etc., without previous permission from the mayor, and depositing with the city treasurer such a sum as the committee on streets should deem sufficient to repair the street, under a penalty.²

4. Contracts with Municipalities.—The power of municipalities to contract for water supplies, the nature of the obligations under such contracts, and kindred topics, have already been fully treated.³

1. Jersey City v. Hudson, 13 N. J. Eq. 420.

2. Wheat v. Alexandria, 88 Va. 742. In this case, Lewis, P., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The principles underlying the case are few and simple. It is familiar law that full and paramount authority over highways, including streets, belongs to the legislature, unless restrained by the constitution. The right, therefore, to dig up the streets of a city for the purpose of laying water or gas pipes therein, is a franchise which can be granted only by the legislature, or by the city under legislative authority. This right in the present case has been granted to the water company, and in very comprehensive terms. The seventh section of the charter grants it unconditionally—the only express limitation annexed to the right being that the streets, after being opened, shall be repaired by the company at its own expense, as soon as practicable, and subject to the approval of the city authorities. The ordinance, however, not only assumes to regulate the repair of the streets, after the pipes have been laid, but it goes further, and, in effect, makes the statutory right to open the streets dependent upon the will of the mayor and street committee. This is ultra vires. It conflicts with the seventh section of the company's charter, and is, therefore, not a valid exercise of the general power conferred by the charter of the city to keep its streets in order; for there is no conflict between the two charters. The provisions of both can easily stand together. It is not doubted that the city council may prescribe regulations, touching as well the opening as the repair of the streets by the water company, which are not inconsistent with the essential rights granted by the company's charter. Thus it may require the company, in opening streets, to take due precautions against accidents to persons and property, as by providing suitable safeguards for that purpose, including lights, when necessary, at night; that it give reasonable notice to the proper city authorities before digging up the streets, etc. But the ordinance complained of goes beyond this. It is not a reasonable regulation, but is rather an illegal restraint, and therefore void. Indeed, if sustained, it might amount to an absolute prohibition; for should the mayor in any case arbitrarily refuse permission to the company to prosecute its work in the streets, such refusal would not only impair the unconditional right conferred by the legislature, but would virtually destroy it. We cannot think that an ordinance which is capable of leading to such results can be sustained consistently with any fair construction of the company's charter. If rights and privileges have been conferred upon the water company which are, or may become, injurious to the public health or the public safety, it is competent for the legislature to alter the charter. We can only construe it as it is."

3. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, vol. 15, pp. 1115, 1128. See also the following cases, wherein particular con-

5. Power to Make Rules and Regulations.—Water companies may make reasonable rules for the government of their customers in the use of the water supply, and enforce the same by stopping their supply as a penalty for violation thereof. In such cases, the company is not limited to an action for damages.¹ A water company has also the right to stop the consumers' supply for non-payment of charges for the water consumed.²

A regulation that bills shall be paid quarterly, and in case of default in payment for ten days a penalty of five per cent. shall be added, and that the water shall be shut off from the premises after a default for fifteen days, is reasonable and valid.³ But a regulation that consumers shall be liable to pay rent for the whole year, whether they actually use the water for that length of time or not, and shall make payment yearly in advance, without special agreement, is unreasonable.⁴

tracts are construed: National Water Works Co. v. School Dist. No. 7, 4 McCrary (U. S.) 108; U. S. v. American Water Works Co., 37 Fed. Rep. 747; Los Angeles Water Co. v. Los Angeles, 55 Cal. 178; Spring Valley Water Works v. San Francisco, 52 Cal. 112; Montgomery v. Capital City Water Co., 92 Ala. 361; Stillwater Water Co. v. Stillwater, 50 Minn. 498.

1. Shiras v. Ewing, 48 Kan. 170; Sheward v. Citizens Water Co., 90 Cal. 635; Thomas v. Peterson (Tex. Civ. App. 1894), 24 S. W. Rep. 1125.

2. Sheward v. Citizens Water Co., 90 Cal. 635; Brumm's Appeal (Pa. 1888), 12 Atl. Rep. 855.

Where a water company makes a legal extra charge for water wasted, it is not restricted to an action at law for the non-payment thereof, but may shut off the water. McDaniel v. Springfield Waterworks Co., 48 Mo. App. 273.

3. Tacoma Hotel Co. v. Tacoma Light, etc., Co., 3 Wash. 316.

4. Rockland Water Co. v. Adams, 84 Me. 472. In this case, it was further adjudged that one could not be held to have made a special contract to pay according to such regulation merely by showing that he had knowledge of the regulation, but the company must show that he expressly assented to it and agreed to be bound by it.

Unreasonable Rules.—By a local waterworks act, passed in 1858, it was provided that, for the purpose of preventing waste of the water, all persons supplied with water by the waterworks company should provide "proper ball or stop-cocks or other necessary apparatus for regulating such supply," and that in case any such person neglected to provide such apparatus after being required to do so, the company might cut off the water from his premises. At the date of that act the supply of water provided by the company was intermittent. By another act, passed in 1888, the company were required to provide a constant supply of water. It then, for the first time, became necessary, for the prevention of waste, that a system should be adopted of inserting in each communication pipe an apparatus, called a screw-down valve, whereby the water could be shut off from any premises in which there were indications of the water being permitted to run to waste. It was held that such a screw-down valve was not an apparatus for regulating the supply within the meaning of the former act, and that the company could not justify cutting off the water from the premises of a person who neglected to comply with the notice requiring him to insert such a valve in his communication pipe. Ward v. Folkestone Waterworks Co., 24 Q. B. Div. 334. In Franke v. Paducah Water Supply, 88 Ky. 467, the water company had a contract with the municipality by which it was authorized to maintain waterworks and to lay down pipes and mains through all the streets and alleys of the city, for the purpose of furnishing water for domestic and other purposes; but those taking water for private use were required to construct and keep in repair, at their own expense, the pipes and fixtures on their premises connecting with the pipes in the street.

6. Duties—a. MUST NOT DISCRIMINATE—WATER RATES.—

The acceptance by a water company of its franchises carries with it the duty of supplying all persons along the lines of its mains, without discrimination, with the commodity which it was organized to furnish.¹ All persons are entitled to have the same service on equal terms and at uniform rates.²

To undertake capriciously and oppressively to enhance the value of certain estates by furnishing them with a supply of water, and to depreciate that of others by refusing it to them, would be a plain abuse of its franchise.³ Nor does it make any difference that the pipe from which a supply is refused was laid for a particular individual who paid for it himself.⁴

Mandamus is the proper remedy for enforcing the duty of supplying water to all those who come within the class or community for whose alleged benefit the company was created.⁵

In general, in the absence of any provision of the company's charter vesting in it authority over these matters, the price at which water may be sold is a thing within the power of the proper authorities to determine.⁶ But a company may be protected by the terms of its franchise against legislative control in the matter of its rates.⁷

And where this is not so, or even where the statutes give the municipality the absolute right to readjust the rates to be charged by a water company from time to time, this power is not a power of confiscation, nor a power to be exercised arbitrarily, and where rates are fixed so low that the water cannot be furnished without loss, the courts will interfere and declare such action void.⁸

It was held that the water company had no power to prevent a plumber from laying connecting pipes on private premises at the instance of the owners, nor to require a bond for the payment of any damages occasioned by the negligence of the plumber in his work.

1. Haugen v. Albina Light, etc., Co., 21 Oregon 411; Olmsted v. Morris Aqueduct, 47 N. J. L. 311; Spring Valley Waterworks v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347.

2. Price v. Riverside Land, etc., Co., 56 Cal. 431; McCrary v. Beaudry, 67 Cal. 120.

3. Lumbard v. Stearns, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 61.

4. Haugen v. Albina Light, etc., Co., 21 Oregon 411.

5. Haugen v. Albina Light, etc., Co., 21 Oregon 411; Price v. Riverside Land, etc., Co., 56 Cal. 431.

6. Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 82 Cal. 286; 16 Am. St. Rep. 116; Spring Valley Waterworks v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347.

7. Santa Ana Water Co. v. San Buen- aventura, 56 Fed. Rep. 339. In this case it was held that art. 14, § 1, California Const. (1879), providing that thereafter the rates for water should be fixed annually by the governing board of the city or town in which it was furnished, and the legislation enacted for the purpose of carrying it into operation, was null and void as to a contract, made before the adoption of the constitution, which conferred on the water company the sole right to fix the rates and charges, as they impair the obligation of the contract. In Spring Valley Waterworks v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347, it was held that laws requiring gas companies, water companies, and other corporations of like character, to furnish their customers at prices fixed by the municipal authorities of the locality, are within the scope of legislative power, unless prohibited by constitutional limitations or valid contract obligation.

8. Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 82 Cal. 286; 16 Am. St. Rep. 116; Spring Valley Waterworks v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347. See also Dow

b. AS TO QUALITY AND QUANTITY OF WATER.—Where a water company contracts to supply a city and its inhabitants with "well settled and wholesome water," the city is not bound to accept and pay for the water furnished for public purposes, unless it is of the quality called for by the contract. And the mere fact of occasional use by the city of the water actually furnished, does not necessarily constitute an acceptance; there must be a fair opportunity for examination and rejection before an acceptance can be inferred.¹

And when such a contract exists, it is not only the right of the municipality in its corporate capacity, but it is its duty, to enforce the terms of the contract as to the quality of the water to

v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Dey, 35 Fed. Rep. 866; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418.

1. Winfield Water Co. v. Winfield, 51 Kan. 104. Here it was further held that where a water company agrees with a municipality to supply it and its inhabitants with well settled and wholesome water for domestic purposes, and, also, for the extinguishment of fires and for other public purposes, and the city, in consideration thereof, engages to pay rentals for the use of certain hydrants for the extinguishment of fires, flushing of gutters, and other city purposes, in an action brought to recover the contract price for furnishing water to the city at the hydrants, where no claim to recover as upon a quantum meruit is made by the plaintiff, he must prove substantial compliance with the contract, not only with reference to the quantity of water furnished, but the quality as well, before he can recover at all. See also Adrian Water Works v. Adrian, 64 Mich. 584.

Effect of Resolution of Common Council as Estoppel.—In Galesburg v. Galesburg Water Co., 34 Fed. Rep. 675; affirmed in Farmers L. & T. Co. v. Galesburg, 133 U. S. 156, it was held that a municipality that has granted a party the privilege, for a specified time, to construct waterworks and furnish it with water for public and private purposes, is not estopped, by a resolution of the common council reciting that the waterworks stood the test required by the ordinance, from maintaining an action to rescind the contract, the works proving inadequate and the water supplied deficient, both in quality and quantity, against a corporation, to whom the contract had been assigned, and holders of bonds issued by such corporation who had purchased after the passage of the resolution; but the bondholders are entitled to a fair return for the water actually furnished and used.

When Defense Comes too Late.—In Burlington Water Works Co. v. Burlington, 43 Kan. 725, it was held that where a water company, under a contract with a city, furnishes water to the city and its inhabitants, and to the city the use of certain hydrants, and the water appears to be good, and is believed to be good, and is received by the city and its inhabitants without objection for nearly a year, when the city is sued for the rent of the hydrants, it cannot then set up, as a full, complete, and absolute defense to the plaintiff's entire action, and refuse to pay anything, that the water furnished by the company was not good.

Filtered Water—Specific Performance.—In Burlington v. Burlington Water Co., 86 Iowa 266, a contract between the plaintiff and the defendant stipulated that all the water admitted into the company's mains should be properly filtered, except when used for the purpose of extinguishing fires. Under the contract, the defendant held an exclusive franchise, had established its works, had laid its pipes in the streets of the city of the plaintiff, and private consumers had, at considerable expense, conducted the water into their dwellings for domestic purposes. The company having failed to furnish the city with filtered water according to the terms of the contract, it was held that equity could decree the specific performance of the contract, as an action for damages would not afford adequate relief, and a degree of forfeiture of the franchise would also be futile, as it be supplied, not only to the municipality for public purposes, but, also, to private consumers.¹

It has been held that the word "pure," in a statute requiring water companies to supply "pure water," should be construed to mean wholesome or ordinarily pure, and not pure in a chemical or abstract sense.²

A stipulation for artesian well water is not satisfied by supplying water from other sources, although equally good, or better.³

7. Liabilities—a. FOR FIRE LOSSES RESULTING FROM INADEQUATE WATER SUPPLY.—The owner of property which is destroyed by fire may not maintain an action for damages, for its loss, against a water company, on the ground that the loss was occasioned by the failure of the company to supply water as required by the terms of its contract with the city, as there is no privity of contract between the parties to the action.⁴

would involve the erection of new works.

1. Winfield v. Winfield Water Co., 51 Kan. 70. The action in this case was brought by the city to have canceled the contract between the city and the water company. It was not shown that any notice or demand was ever served by the municipal authorities, on the defendant, requiring it to so perfect its system as to be able to afford a supply of well settled and wholesome water, as provided by the contract, within a reasonable time, or informing it of any purpose on the part of the city to amend the contract. It was held that before a court of equity will cancel such a contract after the erection and use, for a long time, of a system of waterworks, it must appear that the defendant has been fairly notified of the defects in the system and the demands of the city for the improvement thereof, and a reasonable time must have been given the company to comply with its contract. See also Kankakee v. Kankakee Water Co., 38 Ill. App. 620; Wilson v. Charlotte, 110 N. Car. 449.

2. Com. v. Towanda Water Works Co. (Pa. 1888), 15 Atl. Rep. 440.

3. Foster v. Joliet, 27 Fed. Rep. 899.

4. Davis v. Clinton Water Works Co., 54 Iowa 59; Britton v. Green Bay, etc., Water Works Co., 81 Wis. 48; Ferris v. Carson Water Co., 16 Nev. 44; Beck v. Kittanning Water Co. (Pa. 1887), 11 Atl. Rep. 300; Nickerson v. Bridgeport Hydraulic Co., 46 Conn. 24; Fowler v. Athens City Water Works Co., 83 Ga. 219. See also At- kinson v. Newcastle, etc., Water Works Co., 2 Exch. Div. 441.

In Foster v. Lookout Water Co., 3 Lea (Tenn.) 42, the plaintiff sued the city and the water company for the loss of his house by fire, averring in his declaration that the company owned the waterworks, pipes, etc., and the city controlled a fire department, and was in duty bound to use all means at command to put out fires; that by contract with the city the company engaged to furnish water to put out fires; that a fire occurred near the plaintiff's house and extended to and consumed it; that the defendants at the time had allowed the pipes to get out of repair and become full of mud and gravel, whereby the plaintiff's house was destroyed by fire. It was held, upon demurrer, that the declaration showed no cause of action against either the municipality or the water company.

In Eaton v. Fairbury Water Works Co., 37 Neb. 546, the ordinance granting a franchise to supply water to the city, provided, among other things, that "the grantee shall constantly, day and night (except in case of an unavoidable accident), keep all fire hydrants supplied with water for instant service, and shall keep them in good order and efficiency." It was held that this did not confer upon the owner of property destroyed by fire a right of action against the company, by reason of its failure to supply water as stipulated, although thereby the loss by such fire would have been obviated; under such circumstances the company was not liable by reason of assuming the func-

And this is true, even though a special fund has been raised by the city by taxation to pay for a sufficient water supply for use in case of fire, and the owner has contributed thereto. The fact that the city levies and collects a tax to be paid to the company creates no privity of interest between the latter and the taxpayer.¹

An insurance company that has been compelled to pay a fire loss on a policy issued on the property destroyed, has no greater rights against the water company than the assured.² Nor has the municipality any cause of action in such cases. The right of taxation vested in it does not create an interest in the property, but only an expectation depending upon contingencies, which is altogether too remote to be the foundation of a right of action.³

In several instances it has been held that the statutes authorizing municipalities to contract for the erection and operation of waterworks by private corporations, conferred no power upon the municipality to contract with them to indemnify citizens and taxpayers for loss by fire, sustained by reason of the failure to supply tions which might properly belong to the municipality, for the reason that under the facts stated the municipality in performing the same functions would not be liable.

A similar conclusion upon a similar state of facts was arrived at in Fitch v. Seymour Water Co. (Ind. 1894), 37 N. E. Rep. 982.

In Paducah Lumber Co. v. Paducah Water Supply Co., 89 Ky. 340, a contrary view was taken of the liability of water companies. There it was held that where a water company has contracted with a city to furnish, at all times, a supply of water sufficient for the protection of the inhabitants and property of the city against fire, the company must answer in damages for loss by fire resulting from its failure or refusal to perform its contract. In an action to recover for such loss, the inquiry is whether, considering the purpose, character, and capacity of the waterworks, and all the attending circumstances and agencies, the fire which destroyed the plaintiff's property could and would have been prevented or extinguished before doing damage, if the defendant had performed its contract. Referring to this decision, the court, in Howsmen v. Trenton Water Co., 119 Mo. 315, said: "Authority for this proposition is not therein cited, and the reasoning upon which the position is rested does not seem to us entirely satisfactory." And in Fitch v. Seymour Water Co. (Ind. 1894), 37 N. E. Rep. 982, Howard, J., for the court, said, in referring to the same decision: "While the opinion of the court is a very well-considered one, yet we do not feel that its reasonings are sufficient to overcome the strong current of reason and authority in favor of the view which we have taken."

1. Becker v. Keokuk Waterworks, 79 Iowa 419; Mott v. Cherryvale Water, etc., Co., 48 Kan. 12; Howsmen v. Trenton Water Co., 119 Mo. 304.

2. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Trenton Water Co., 42 Mo. App. 119.

3. The above was held where the owner of the property destroyed, upon an assignment of the supposed demand and right of action of the city, sought to recover damages upon the ground that the municipality had such an interest in the property as to give it a right of action. Ferris v. Carson Water Co., 16 Nev. 45.

In Montgomery v. Montgomery Water Works Co., 79 Ala. 233, it was held, in a suit against a municipality by a water company for water furnished at an agreed price, that the defendant could not set off or recoup damages sustained by private persons, citizens, and property owners, on account of property destroyed by fires, by reason of the insufficiency of the water supplied by the plaintiff to extinguish fires.

water as provided in the contract, so as to enable a citizen to maintain an action therefor in his own name.¹

Where the plaintiff had a contract with a water company for a supply of water for use about his brewery, and the property was destroyed by fire, due, as the plaintiff claimed, to a deficiency of water, it was held that the company was not liable for the loss, as under the contract it owed him no duty in the case of fires.²

6. FOR DEATH RESULTING FROM IMPURE WATER.—A water company is not liable for death resulting from contaminated water supplied to its patrons, in the absence of negligence on its part.³

8. Taxation.—The subject of taxation of water companies has been treated elsewhere in this work.⁴

9. Mechanics' Liens.—(See also MECHANICS' LIENS, vol. 15, p. 1).—In some of the states, on account of the quasi public character of the enterprise and its intimate connection with the public convenience and welfare, the property of water companies necessary for carrying on their operations, is held to be exempt from the general lien laws.⁵ In other states, a contrary policy

1. Becker v. Keokuk Waterworks, 79 Iowa 419; Howsmon v. Trenton Water Co., 119 Mo. 304.

In Mott v. Cherryvale Water, etc., Co., 48 Kan. 12, by the terms of the city ordinance, which the water company accepted, the company agreed "that it will pay all damages that may accrue to any citizen of the city, by reason of a failure on the part of the company to supply a sufficient amount of water, or a failure to supply the same at the proper time, or by reason of any negligence of the water company." It was held that this did not create such privity of contract between a citizen or resident and the water company as would entitle him to maintain an action against it for injury or destruction of his property by fire, caused by the failure of the company to fulfill its contract.

2. Beck v. Kittanning Water Co. (Pa. 1887), 11 Atl. Rep. 300.

3. Buckingham v. Plymouth Water Co., 142 Pa. St. 221. And here it was held further, that an offer to show that prior to the sickness of the plaintiff's children there were cases of typhoid fever near the banks of small streams flowing into a river some distance above the point from which the company drew a part of its water supply, did not tend to establish negligence on the part of the defendant.

4. See TAXATION, vol. 25, p. 157 (as to presumption of liability to taxation); p. 104 (as to the character of the property of water companies for purposes of taxation); p. 156 (as to the power of the legislature to grant exemptions); p. 606 (as to the power of municipalities to grant exemptions); pp. 157 and 162 (as to the construction of exemption statutes and ordinances). See also TAXATION (CORPORATE), vol. 25, p. 624; CORPORATIONS, vol. 4, p. 272a.

5. Foster v. Fowler, 60 Pa. St. 27; Guest v. Merion Water Co., 142 Pa. St. 610. In the latter case it was further held that the rule in Pennsylvania was not affected by the provisions of section 1, Act of April 7th, 1870, Pamphlet Laws 58, of that state, authorizing the personal, mixed, or real property, franchise and rights of any corporation to be sold on a fieri facias, such process being in lieu of, and on the footing of, a sequestration for the benefit of all the corporate creditors. McNeil Pipe, etc., Co. v. Bullock, 38 Fed. Rep. 565 (construing the Alabama statute).

A water company incorporated under 1 Revised Statutes of Indiana (1876), p. 329, is not a manufacturing company under 1 Revised Statutes (1876), p. 619, of that state, and its buildings, etc., are not subject to the enforcement of a mechanic's lien for materials furnished in constructing its pipes, mains, etc. Kentucky Lead, etc., Co. v. New Albany Water Works, 62 Ind. 63.

prevails, and the lien laws are held to comprehend water companies.¹

10. Forfeiture of Franchises.—As in the case of other corporations, the rights and privileges conferred upon water companies are dependent upon their continued compliance with the duties and obligations imposed, and are subject to forfeiture for nonuser or misuser.²

The principles governing the subject of forfeiture of corporate franchises,³ as well as the modes of enforcing the same, have been fully treated in other parts of this work.⁴

WATER MARK.—The term “water mark” means the place where the water ordinarily flows to at high or low tide.⁵

1. National Foundry, etc., Works v. Oconto Water Co., 52 Fed. Rep. 43 (construing the Wisconsin statute); McNeal Pipe, etc., Co. v. Howland, 111 N. Car. 615.

2. See Farmers L. & T. Co. v. Galesburg, 133 U. S. 156, affirming Galesburg v. Galesburg Water Works Co., 34 Fed. Rep. 675; Winfield v. Winfield Water Co., 51 Kan. 70; Foster v. Joliet, 27 Fed. Rep. 899. In this last case, it was held that a contract by which A agreed with a city to construct and operate waterworks, and which contained the provision that “in case of failure of the party of the first part to construct or maintain said waterworks as herein agreed, the rights and franchises hereby granted to him shall cease and determine,” was not rescinded by ex parte action of the city; for example, by a resolution of the common council, without judicial proceedings. And, further, that where A and his assignees erected and put into operation waterworks, not complying with the contract, and the non-performance of the contract was due largely to the acts of both parties, and in part to unsuccessful experiments authorized by the city, under the forfeiture clause above stated, A and his assignees were entitled, before being liable to a forfeiture of their rights, to a reasonable time in which to perform the contract; and that an injunction would lie to restrain the city from interfering with the pipes laid, or to be laid, during the extension of time granted them.

3. See CORPORATIONS (PRIVATE), vol. 4, p. 184; FORFEITURE, vol. 8, p. 443; FRANCHISES, vol. 8, p. 584; INFORMATION (CRIMINAL), vol. 10, p. 702; QUO WARRANTO, vol. 19, p. 660; ULTRA VIRES, vol. 27, p. 413.

4. See CORPORATIONS (PRIVATE), vol. 4, pp. 291, 302; FORFEITURE, vol. 8, p. 445; INFORMATION (CRIMINAL), vol. 10, p. 709 et seq.; QUO WARRANTO, vol. 19, p. 660; SCIRE FACIAS, vol. 21, p. 879, et seq.

5. Gerrish v. Union Wharf Co., 26 Me. 395; 46 Am. Dec. 568. In this case the court, by Shepley, J., said: “The counsel for the plaintiffs further contend that the jury were erroneously instructed, if they ‘should find the part of the wharf, where the plaintiffs’ western line struck it, to be below the ordinary line of low water, they should find their verdict for the defendants.’ These instructions in effect declared, that the plaintiffs’ title to the flats extended by the ordinance only to the ordinary low water mark, and not to the place to which the tide ebbed, when from natural causes it ebbed the lowest. The ordinance declares that the proprietors of lands ‘shall have propriety to the low water mark.’ It evidently contemplates and refers to a mark which could be readily ascertained and established; and that to which the tide on its ebb usually flows out, would be of that description. That place, to which the tide might ebb under an extraordinary combination of influences and of favoring winds, a few times during one generation, could not form such a known boundary as would enable the owner of flats to ascertain satisfactorily the extent, to which he could build upon them. Much less would other persons, employed in the business of commerce and navigation, be able to ascertain, with ease and accuracy, whether they were encroaching upon private rights or not, by sinking a pier or placing a monument. It would seem to be reasonable that high and low water marks should be ascertained by the same rule. The place to which tides ordinarily flow at high water, becomes thereby a well defined line or mark, which at all times can be ascertained without difficulty. If the title of the owner of the adjoining land were to be regarded as extending, without the aid of the ordinance, to the place to which the lowest neap tides flowed, there would be found no certain mark or boundary by which its extent could be determined. The result would be the same, if his title were to be limited to the place to which the highest spring tides might be found to flow. It is still necessary to ascertain his boundary at high water mark, in all those places where the tide ebbs and flows more than one hundred rods, for the purpose of ascertaining the extent of his title toward low water mark. It is only by considering the ordinance as having reference to the ordinary high and low water marks, that a line of boundary at low water mark becomes known, which can be satisfactorily proved, and which, having been once ascertained, will remain permanently established. Sir Matthew Hale, in his treatise de Jure Maris, ch. 4, says: 'The shore is that ground that is between the ordinary high and low water mark.' He remarks also: 'It is certain that, that which the sea overflows, either at high spring tides or extraordinary low tides, comes not as to this purpose, under the denomination of litus Maris and consequently the king's title is not of that large extent, but only to land that is usually overflowed at ordinary tides.' This treatise has been received by judicial tribunals and by distinguished jurists, both during the earlier and later days of law, with unqualified approbation and commendation. Vide the note to the case of Ex p. Jennings, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 536. The rule as therein stated, appears to have been received with approbation in the cases of Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 435, and Com. v. Charlestown, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 180; 11 Am. Dec. 161. In the case of Sparhawk v. Bullard, 1 Met. (Mass.) 95, low water mark was considered to be at that place to which the tide ebbed, when from natural causes it ebbed the lowest. No authority is there cited, or reason stated, for this difference of opinion. The former conclusions appear to be more in accordance with reason and authority. The instructions on this point must be regarded as correct; but if they could be otherwise regarded, the plaintiffs do not appear to have been aggrieved by them; for the jury found that the defendants did not occupy the flats 'which were above low water mark, when the tide ebbs the lowest by natural causes.'

High Water Mark.—The conveyance of a mill and mill privilege, "the high-water mark of the dam or pond" being designated, "with the right of flowing" the grantor's "meadows above," does not convey the right to raise the dam to the designated mark; and the dam must be so maintained that the water will not rise above the mark in an ordinary state of the stream, though that state is a swollen one, caused by the letting down of water from a reservoir above; but the conveyance does not abridge the grantee's right under Massachusetts Gen. Stat., ch. 149, to raise the dam, and the grantor's remedy in such case is under the statute, and not at common law. Brady v. Blackinton, 113 Mass. 245. In this case, the court, by Morton, J., said: "The 'high water mark' means the highest point to which the dam will raise the water in the ordinary state of the stream. Winkley v. Salisbury Mfg. Co., 14 Gray (Mass.) 443."

In Howard v. Ingersoll, 13 How. (U. S.) 423, the court, by Nelson, J., said: "The term high water, when applied to the sea, or to a river where the tide ebbs and flows, has a definite meaning. The line is marked by the periodical flow of the tide, excluding the advance of waters above this line, in the one case by winds and storms, and in the other by freshets or floods. But in respect to freshwater rivers, the term is altogether indefinite, and the line marked uncertain. It has no fixed meaning in the sense of high-water mark when applied to a river where the tide ebbs and flows, and should never be adopted as a boundary in the case of freshwater rivers, by intendment or construction, whether between states or individuals. It may mean any stage of the water above its ordinary height, and the line will fluctuate with every varying freshet or flood that may happen."

High-water mark, as the line between the riparian proprietor and the public, is coordinate with the limit of the river bed, and that only is to be regarded as river bed which the river occupies long enough to wrest it from vegetation, so as to destroy its value for agricultural purposes. Houghton v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 47 Iowa 370. The court, in this case, said: "The court instructed the jury in these words: 'The Mississippi river periodically rises and falls, and these rises, as shown by the undisputed evidence, occur usually in June, September, and sometimes October. These rises are characterized as high water, and you are instructed that the highest point to which the river ordinarily rises at these times of high water is high-water-mark.' The giving of this instruction is assigned as error. It is insisted that it does not contain the true definition of high-water mark, within the meaning of the law which makes that line the boundary between the property which belongs to the riparian proprietor and that which belongs to the public. No definition of high water mark has, we think, ever been given by this court. In Musser v. Hershey, 42 Iowa 361, Day, J., said: 'It is the settled doctrine of this court that a riparian proprietor upon a navigable stream owns only to high water mark, that is, only to the edge of the bank.' This is undoubtedly correct, and there only remains to be determined what, precisely, is the bank. The ordinary idea of a river bank is that portion of the earth which confines the water in its channel. It adjoins the bed of the river, and belongs to the riparian proprietor. The bed, if the stream is navigable, belongs to the public. While the banks are supposed to confine the water in its channel, they are sometimes in freshets overflowed. But they are not the less defined because they are sometimes overflowed. In determining the boundary line between the bank and bed of a stream, freshets are not accounted. Upon this point there has been an express adjudication. In Howard v. Ingersoll, 13 How. (U. S.) 381, a question arose as to where the boundary line was between Alabama and Georgia. It had been established upon the western bank of the Chattahoochee river, but the parties were not agreed as to what constituted the bank. It was held that Georgia did not include land on the Alabama side of the river which was covered with water only in time of freshets. The correctness of the decision is entirely obvious."

Definition.

Low Water Mark.—The definition of "low water mark" in Pennsylvania is to be decided by the law of that state, and not by that of Great Britain or of the sister states. Stover v. Jack, 60 Pa. St. 339; 100 Am. Dec. 566. In this case the court, by Agnew, J., said: "The deed is not before us, but it seems the title of the plaintiff extended to low water mark, and on this ground he claimed the ownership of the locus in quo of the alleged trespass. The defendant alleged it to be an island surrounded by water, except at very low stages. The court held that low water, as contradistinguished from high water, does not mean the lowest water the stream may exhibit under special and extraordinary circumstances; and that the locus in quo is an island if the water of the river flows around it at its ordinary stage, unaffected by floods or drought. This is assigned for error, and it brings up for decision what is meant by low water mark as a terminus or boundary. I have found no case defining low water mark, though many refer to it as fixing boundary of the title on navigable streams. Its definition, however, seems to grow out of the principles recognized as establishing the character of these streams, and the rights of riparian owners. The question is one to be decided by the law of this state, and not by that of Great Britain, or even some of the sister states. At the common law those streams only are considered navigable in which the tide ebbs and flows. High or low water mark was, therefore, easily determined, the ocean maintaining a common level, and the ordinary flow and ebb of tide being regular in their extent, and marking the limits of high and low water with great uniformity. But in this state its large navigable streams rise and flow hundreds of miles above tide, and are affected by floods and droughts to extremes that surprise the unaccustomed eye, sometimes filling the valleys far beyond the banks of the stream, and at others shrinking within the pebbly bed until a thin thread only marks the flow. The common law being inapplicable to the circumstances, has, therefore, not been adopted. For this reason neither the control of the waters of navigable rivers, nor of the soil beneath, has been parted with by the commonwealth; and the far-seeing wisdom of our ancestors has been, in this respect, amply vindicated by the results. This was soon perceived when the state began to improve the navigation of her rivers by artificial means. Had it been otherwise, many noble works designed to enrich and benefit her citizens must have failed in an encounter with private interests. The importance of the rights thus reserved will be seen in the following cases—others might be added: Shrunk v. Schuylkill Nav. Co., 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 79; Com. v. Fisher, 1 P. & W. (Pa.) 462; Zimmerman v. Union Canal Co., 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 346; McKeen v. Delaware Div. Canal Co., 49 Pa. St. 424. Owing to this right of control and title to the soil itself it has always been held that the grants of the state, of lands bordering on navigable streams, even when calling for the river as a boundary, do not extend beyond low water mark. Hart v. Hill, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 137; Ball v. Slack, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 508; 30 Am. Dec. 278; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Trone, 28 Pa. St. 206; Jones v. Janney, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 436; 13 Am. Dec. 309. And even to this extent the grant of title is not absolute, except to high water mark. As to the intervening space between high and low water mark, the title of the private owner is qualified. The right of passage over it in high water remains in the public. The state may use it for purposes connected with the navigation of the stream without compensation, and may protect it also from an unauthorized use of it even by the owner of the land to low water mark. Shrunk v. Schuylkill Nav. Co., 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 79; Com. v. Fisher, 1 P. & W. (Pa.) 462; Zimmerman v. Union Canal Co., 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 346, ubi supra; Bailey v. Miltenberger, 31 Pa. St. 43; Flanagan v. Philadelphia, 42 Pa. St. 219. Another consequence of the Pennsylvania doctrine as to navigable streams is that the islands in them belong to the state, and have always been considered as excepted from the general laws for the sale and settlement of the vacant lands of the commonwealth. They have always been granted under laws of special application to islands. It is also a well-known fact that in the seasons of extreme low water many of the islands of the principal rivers are not entirely surrounded with water, but may be reached from the shore dry-shod. All these considerations show that to adopt any other rule than ordinary low water mark, unaffected by drought, as the limit of title, would carry the rights of riparian owners far beyond boundaries consistent with the interests and policy of the state, and would confer title where heretofore none has been supposed to exist. No one has ever thought that an island cut off from the mainland by the stream in ordinary stages of low water could be added to the land of an adjacent proprietor, merely because in the very dry season of the year the stream had almost disappeared, and no water flowed over the intervening dry and sandy, or pebbly bed. The doctrine that low water mark is the extremest verge to which a long drought may reduce the stream would lead to such results. Ordinary high water and ordinary low water each has its reasonably well defined marks, so nearly certain that there is not much difficulty in ascertaining it. The ordinary rise and fall of the stream usually finds nearly the same limits. But to bound title by a mark which is set by an extraordinary flood, or an extreme drought, would do injustice and contravene the common understanding of the people. We are of opinion, therefore, that the plaintiff's title was bounded by ordinary low water mark, where that was properly submitted to the jury."

WATER MARK.Definition.

WAYBILL—(See also BILL OF LADING, vol. 2, p. 223; CARRIERS OF GOODS, vol. 2, p. 770; CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS, vol. 2, p. 738; EXPRESS COMPANIES, vol. 7, p. 539; FREIGHT, vol. 8, p. 900; RAILROADS, vol. 19, p. 775).—A waybill is a list of the names of passengers who are carried in a public conveyance, or the description of goods sent with a common carrier by land.¹ When the goods are transported by water route, such list is usually called a bill of lading.²

1. Century Dict.

2. Webster's Dict.

Waybill as Evidence.—In Coupland v. Housatonic R. Co., 61 Conn. 531, the plaintiff shipped a mare and colt over the defendant's line from B. to D. During the course of transportation the plaintiff's agent informed the conductor that the mare was becoming frightened and in danger of being killed by further transportation, and requested him to have the car set on a side track at the next stopping place. The defendant offered in evidence a waybill, in the ordinary form, describing the property carried, its destination and value, the names of the shipper

WAY-GOING CROPS—(See also CROPS, vol. 4, p. 887; LANDLORD AND TENANT, vol. 12, p. 658).—A phrase formed by elision from “away-going crop,” and meaning such crops as the tenant has the right to cut and carry away with him, after the end of his term.¹

WAYS.—(See also the following titles—each title indicates the

and consignee, and the rate of charge. It was for the convenience of the company only, and had not been brought to the plaintiff's knowledge. This was held to be admissible as containing matter to be considered by the conductor in determining whether to interrupt the transportation as requested, as it showed the value of the freight, and how much further it was to be carried, and was, so far as appeared, his only source of information concerning the property.

A carrier, who acts as the forwarding agent of the owner of goods in giving directions by waybills or otherwise to the successive lines of transportation over which they are to be carried beyond the termination of his own route, is responsible, as such forwarding agent, only for the want of reasonable care and diligence. Northern R. Co. v. Fitchburg R. Co., 6 Allen (Mass.) 254. In this case a waybill of iron rails, to be transported over several successive lines of railroad, was made out by the agents of the first line in this form: “Waybill of merchandise transported by the F. R. R. from C. to B. November 27, 1852. (Consignees) Ogdensburg R. R. (Description of article) Rails part lot.” This was held to be sufficient to show to the intermediate carriers that the rails were to be carried and delivered to the Ogdensburg Railroad at B., and to exonerate the first carrier from liability, although the rails were detained and used by one of the intermediate companies which at the same time was receiving other similar rails over the same route for its own use.

In Barter v. Wheeler, 49 N. H. 9, flour was brought to Ogdensburg by the N. T. Company, consigned to the plaintiffs at Concord, and to go over the road of the N. R. R. Co., and was deposited in a storehouse under the control of the N. T. Company, and, according to the course of business for six or seven years, a clerk of that company forwarded to the plaintiffs a waybill marked “duplicate” and headed “N. R. R. Co.,” and dated “Ogdensburg Depot,” but not signed by any one, reciting that the said company had received the flour and promising to deliver it to the consignees, subject to the charges as specified; and, at the same time, sent a duplicated waybill to the N. R. R. Co., which was entered by that company in its books. The N. T. Company also drew upon the consignees for freight to Ogdensburg, after which communications were had between the agents of the N. R. R. Co. and the consignees, without reference being had to the N. T. Co. After this the flour was destroyed by fire, and the defendants, who were trustees of the railroad company, did not deny the receipt of the flour until after the suit had been brought. It was held: 1. That if the waybills were sent to the consignees with the knowledge of the defendants and with the intention on their part that they should be received and acted upon by the plaintiffs, as the representations and undertakings of the defendants, and they were so received and acted upon by the plaintiffs, who were induced thereby to make the claim and bring the suit, the defendants would be estopped to deny that they had so received the flour. 2. That upon this evidence it was competent for the jury to find all the facts necessary to constitute such estoppel. 3. That while the flour was held at Ogdensburg, awaiting the means to forward it, the defendants held it as common carriers and not as warehousemen.

See Livingston v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 76 N. Y. 631, where, upon the facts in the case, the sending of waybills from one railway company to another was held to raise a question for the jury as to whether the second carrier had become charged with the duty of a common carrier in relation to the goods described in the waybills, and the responsibility of taking charge of the goods and of seeing that they were forwarded, and whether there had been unreasonable delay in the matter.

1. Abbott's L. Dict.

standpoint from which the subject of Ways is treated therein: ABANDONMENT, vol. 1, p. 1; ADVERSE POSSESSION, vol. 1, p. 297; BOUNDARIES, vol. 2, p. 507; BRIDGES, vol. 2, p. 540; COUNTIES, vol. 4, p. 365; COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, vol. 4, p. 385 et seq.; CROSSINGS, vol. 4, p. 906; DEDICATION, vol. 5, p. 395; EASEMENTS, vol. 6, p. 139; EMINENT DOMAIN, vol. 6, p. 509; EVIDENCE, vol. 7, p. 98; FERRIES, vol. 7, p. 941; GRADE, vol. 8, p. 1410; GRANTS, vol. 9, p. 48 et seq.; HEREDITAMENTS, vol. 9, p. 359; HIGHWAY, vol. 9, p. 362; IMPROVEMENTS, vol. 10, p. 242; INGRESS, vol. 10, p. 770; LAKES AND PONDS, vol. 12, p. 610; LANDLORD AND TENANT, vol. 12, p. 658; LAW OF THE ROAD, vol. 12, p. 957; LEASE, vol. 12, p. 974; MILLS, vol. 15, p. 492 et seq.; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, vol. 15, p. 949; NAVIGABLE WATERS, vol. 16, p. 259 et seq.; NONUSER, vol. 16, p. 750; NUISANCES, vol. 16, p. 922; PARKS AND PUBLIC SQUARES, vol. 17, p. 407; PRESCRIPTION, vol. 19, p. 25 et seq.; PRESUMPTIONS, vol. 19, p. 41 et seq.; PRIVATE WAYS, vol. 19, p. 95; PROPERTY, vol. 19, p. 283; RAILROADS, vol. 19, p. 841 et seq.; REAL COVENANTS, vol. 19, pp. 1001, 1004; RIGHT OF WAY, vol. 21, p. 405; ROAD, vol. 21, p. 412; STREET RAILWAYS, vol. 23, p. 940; STREETS AND SIDEWALKS, vol. 24, p. 1; SURVEYS, vol. 24, p. 1017 et seq.; TAXATION, vol. 25, p. 507 et seq.; TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES, vol. 25, p. 752 et seq.; TOWNS AND TOWNSHIPS, vol. 26, p. 98; TURNPIKES, vol. 27, p. 324; USER, vol. 27, p. 908.)

The term way, in its popular sense, signifies a passage, path, road, or street; in a technical sense, a right of passing through or over land belonging to another.¹ This sense of the word, importing a right to use a road or path, instead of the road or path itself, is derived from the civil law.

1. 2 Bl. Com. 35; 3 Kent's Com. (13th ed.) 419.

A right of way means a right to pass over another's land more or less frequently, according to the nature of the use to be made of the easement. Bodfish v. Bodfish, 105 Mass. 319. The privilege which one person or particular description of persons may have of passing over the land of another in some particular line. It denotes an interest or right possessed by certain persons only, as distinguished from the public generally. Kripp v. Curtis, 71 Cal. 63.

Mr. Angell says: "The word 'way' is derived from the Saxon, and means a right of use for passengers. It may be private or public. By the term 'right of way' is generally meant a private way which is an incorporeal hereditament of that class of easements in which a particular person, or particular description of persons, have an interest and a right, though another person is the owner of the fee of the land in which it is claimed." Angell on Highways 1, 2. Adopted by the court in Wild v. Deig, 43 Ind. 458; 13 Am. Rep. 399.

Ways have been divided as follows: foot-ways; foot- and horse-ways; foot-, horse-, and carriage-ways; and drift-ways. Co. Litt. 56a; Woolrych on Ways 1.

Way—Road.—In Wood v. Truckee Turnpike Co., 24 Cal. 474, the terms "road" and "way" were declared to be synonymous, it being held that ejectment would not lie to try the right to a road or right of way—a road or right of way is an incorporeal hereditament, and ejectment is maintainable only for corporeal hereditaments. The court said: "Road is a legal term, and strictly synonymous with the term 'way,' and in the complaint, and throughout all the title papers of the Definition.

WAYS.

Definition.

A way, ex vi termini, imports a right of passing in a particular line.¹

A way, in the most general sense, includes public ways as well as private ways.²

A right of way, public or private, is an incorporeal hereditament.³

plaintiffs, their identity is fully recognized. A way is an easement, and consists in the right of passing over another man's ground. Washburn on Easements 161. It is an incorporeal hereditament, a servitude imposed upon corporeal property, and not a part of it. . . . The authoritative definition which we have given of the term 'way' shows that neither land, nor rents of land, nor profits of land, nor any possessory rights in land, are included in its meaning. If the plaintiffs then took anything by force of the term 'road,' they took nothing but a right of way."

But in Chollar-Potosi Min. Co. v. Kennedy, 3 Nev. 361; 93 Am. Dec. 409, the court, after quoting from the case just cited, and referring thereto, said: "The main point here is that the word 'road' is exactly synonymous with 'way.' This proposition we conceive to be utterly untenable. It is true that the term 'way' is sometimes used in the same sense as road. Sometimes we call a road, a street, a lane, etc., a way—though this is, perhaps, an improper use of the term 'way.' But Mr. Washburn, when defining 'way' as an easement, uses the word in its strictly legal sense. 'Way,' in its legal, technical sense, means nearly the same thing as 'right of way.' Or, in other words, the right of one person, or of several persons, or of the community at large, to pass over the land of another. Webster, among other definitions of a road, says it is the 'ground appropriated for travel, forming a communication,' etc. Bouvier defines a road as 'passage through the country for the use of the people.' He also says: 'The public have the use of roads; but the owners of the land through which they are made, or which bounds upon the roads, have prima facie a fee in such highway.' Or, in plain English, the public does not usually own the soil over which the roads are constructed, but only a perpetual right to use that soil for some particular purpose. We cannot find that the word 'road' is anywhere used or defined, save in the opinion just quoted, as being synonymous with right of way. In fact, we feel certain that it is never so used in common conversation, in ordinary writing, nor in legal works. Road means any piece of land used or appropriated for travel. It may be so appropriated by an individual, a corporation, or the public. Where roads are constructed by turnpike and railroad companies, sometimes they acquire a complete title to the land over which their road is built, and sometimes only the right of way. So the public may, if it chooses, buy the land over which the public way is to be established if the individual owner is willing to sell it, or may, which is more usual, only purchase, or procure by the proper proceedings the right of way for such road. The road, however, is one thing, the right of way is another, and very different."

1. Jones v. Percival, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 485; 16 Am. Dec. 415; Nichols v. Luce, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 104; 35 Am. Dec. 302; Chase v. Perry, 132 Mass. 582; Starkie v. Richmond, 155 Mass. 196; Jennison v. Walker, 11 Gray (Mass.) 426.

2. Co. Litt. 56a.

Public ways, as applied to ways by land, are usually termed highways or public roads, and are such ways as every citizen has a right to use. Kripp v. Curtis, 71 Cal. 64.

3. Gidney v. Earl, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 98; Kripp v. Curtis, 71 Cal. 62.

A way, whether public or private, whether styled a road or a street, leading through a town or country, is an incorporeal hereditament. Conner v. New Albany, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 45.

In Willoughby v. Jenks, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 99, the court, by Cowen, J., said: "Whether a public way be an hereditament in every sense or not, it is certainly a quasi hereditament: it is an incumbrance on land which seriously affects the title to the soil; it is in itself real estate, a right to occupy land subject to a control in the owner very much reduced, and, indeed, destroyed for all purposes of cultivation."

The grantee of a way is restricted to the route and to the specific use set forth in his grant.¹

But the grant or reservation of a way, without limitation or restriction, is understood to mean a general way for any purpose to which the land may reasonably and naturally be devoted.²

What is a reasonable use of a way, where the purposes are not defined in the grant or reservation, is a question of fact to be determined upon the evidence.³

The obstruction of a private way is a disturbance; the obstruction of a public way is a nuisance.⁴

In the notes will be found cases construing the term "ways," as used in the "Employers' Liability Acts," extending and regulating the liability of employers to make compensation for personal injuries suffered by employees, "by reason of any defect in

1. French v. Marstin, 24 N. H. 440; 57 Am. Dec. 294; Abbott v. Butler, 59 N. H. 317. See also Noyes v. Hemp-hill, 58 N. H. 537.

But while the terms of the grant cannot be enlarged beyond their natural meaning, they will not be so narrowed as to prevent the beneficial use by the grantee of what is granted, in the manner and for the purposes fairly indicated by the grant. Abbott v. Butler, 59 N. H. 317; Senhouse v. Christian, 1 T. R. 560; Russell v. Jackson, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 577; Walker v. Pierce, 38 Vt. 94.

A carriage-way will comprehend a foot-way, Davies v. Stephens, 7 C. & P. 570; 32 E. C. L. 634, and a horse-way, but not a drift-way. Heath, J., in Ballard v. Dyson, 1 Taunt. 284.

A drift-way is a common way for driving cattle, and the reservation of such a way has been held to intend a way for the passage of teams. Smith v. Ladd, 41 Me. 320.

In Kaler v. Beaman, 49 Me. 207, the grant of a right of way from the high-way to a mill privilege was held to carry the right to the free and unobstructed use of the road as a way for the accommodation of the grantee's mill privilege, but not the right to deposit lumber and other materials on the sides of the way.

In Jackson v. Stacey, Holt N. P. 455, the grant of a way for agricultural purposes was held not to include the right to carry lime from a quarry. And in Bradburn v. Morris, 3 Ch. Div. 812, it was held not to embrace a right of way for mineral purposes generally. And in Cowling v. Higginson, 4 M. & W. 245, it was held not to include the right to convey coals over the way.

A "way on foot, or for horses, oxen, cattle and sheep," has been held not to include the right to carry manure in a wheelbarrow. Brunton v. Hall, 1 Ad. & El. 792; 41 E. C. L. 779.

A right "to fetch water from a river" will not sustain a plea for a right "to fetch both water and goods." Knight v. Moore, 3 Bing. N. Cas. 3; 32 E. C. L. 11. And a right to cart timber will not sustain a plea of a general right of way on foot and with horses, carts, wagons, and other carriages. Higham v. Rabbett, 5 Bing. N. Cas. 622; 35 E. C. L. 253.

A right of way to repair a race and dam must be confined to such use, and cannot be extended to mean a right of way for ordinary purposes. McTavish v. Carroll, 7 Md. 352; 61 Am. Dec. 353.

A way over another's estate, used for the purpose of taking away wood only, cannot be extended to other purposes when the dominant estate is occupied by dwellings and cultivated. It must be limited to the use for which it is shown by the evidence to have been originally designed. Atwater v. Bodfish, 11 Gray (Mass.) 150.

2. Abbott v. Butler, 59 N. H. 317; Rowell v. Doggett, 143 Mass. 487. See also Whittier v. Winkley, 62 N. H. 341.

3. Rowell v. Doggett, 143 Mass. 487.

4. Sweet's Law Dict.

Disturbance of Ways.—This occurs where a person who has a right of way over another's land, by prescription or grant, is obstructed by inclosures or other obstacles, or by plowing across it, by which means he cannot enjoy his right of way, or, at least, in so commodious a manner as he might have done. 3 Bl. Com. 241; Black's L. Dict.

the condition of the ways, works, or machinery connected with, or used in, the business of the employer."¹

1. Employers' Liability Acts—Ownership of Ways Not Necessary—But Control of Them Is.—In Coffee v. New York, etc., R. Co., 155 Mass. 21, the court said: "The want of ownership by the defendant is not of much significance. By the term, 'ways, works or machinery connected with or used in the business of the employer,' we understand something in the place, or means, appliances, or instrumentalities provided by the employer for doing or carrying on the work which is to be done. The use of other words may not make the meaning clearer, but it would seem that there must be a defect in something which can in some sense be said to be provided by the employer." Here it was held that if a freight car, which is hauled empty by a railroad company to the terminus of its road, for transfer to another line where it belongs, while being shifted there to another train upon a connecting line, occasions an injury to a brakeman employed by such company by reason of a defect in the brake wheel, such car is not part of the 'ways, works, or machinery connected with or used in the business of the employer,' such as will give a right of action against the company under the statute.

In Trask v. Old Colony R. Co., 156 Mass. 298, it was said that it may not be necessary, in order to render an employer liable for an injury occurring to an employee through a "defect in the ways, works, or machinery," within the meaning of the Massachusetts Statute (1887) ch. 270, that they should belong to him, but it should at least appear that he has the control of them, and that they are used in his business by his authority, express or implied.

In Regan v. Donovan, 159 Mass. 1, the plaintiff, while in the employ of the defendants, was ordered by them to carry a bar of iron down a flight of movable stairs leading into, and intended to furnish permanent means of access to, a cellar, in which the defendants were making some alterations for the owner of the building. There was nothing to show that the steps were not suitable to be placed as they were, or reasonably expected to be in such position, or that the defendants had reason to suppose that they were inse-curely fastened. As the plaintiff stepped upon the stairs, they slipped from under him and he was injured. It was held that the defendants did not adopt the stairs as a way used in their business, within the meaning of the term in the statute.

A track in the yard of A, owned, maintained, and repaired by him, and used by a railroad under a contract with him for the delivery of freight in the yard, is no part of the railroad's ways, within the meaning of the statute, and if an employee of the railroad is killed by a defect in it, an action will not lie against the railroad on that statute. Knowlton, J., dissenting. Engel v. New York, etc., R. Co., 160 Mass. 260.

Ways Must Be of a Permanent Character.—The statute has reference to ways and works of a permanent character; such as are connected with or used in the business of an employer. Thus, the liability of a bank of earth, upon which laborers employed by a person are at work, to fall when undermined, if not shored up, is not a defect in the condition of the ways, works, etc., when the work on the bank is simply the leveling of it for the purpose of grading the land of a third person. Lynch v. Allyn, 160 Mass. 248.

And in Howe v. Finch, 17 Q. B. Div. 187, it was held that the statute did not apply to ways or works in process of construction.

In Willets v. Watt (1892), 2 Q. B. Div. 92, where a workman was injured by falling into a catch-pit in the floor of a workshop, which was generally kept covered, but the cover of which was off at the time of the accident for a temporary purpose, it was held by the court of appeal that there could not be said to be a defect in the condition of the way, and Lord Justice Fry said that the language of this section pointed to a defect of a chronic character. All the members of the court concurred in saying that there was no defect in the condition of the way, but merely a negligent user of it by allowing the way to be used when the lid was off without giving warning. So it has been held that rubbish of an accidental or temporary character, on the floor of a room where an employee is at work, cannot be said to be a defect in the condition of the ways, etc.

WEAPON.—(See also ASSAULT, vol. 1, pp. 813, 816; CONCEALED WEAPONS, vol. 3, p. 408.)

This term occurs in a number of phrases used in criminal law, as in the statutory provisions against "carrying concealed weapons," against assaults with "deadly" or "dangerous weapons," etc. Numerous examples of the meaning of these expressions will be found in the cross references given above, and further illustrations are given in the notes below.¹

O'Connor v. Neal, 153 Mass. 281; May v. Whittier Mach. Co., 154 Mass. 29.

Again, in Burns v. Washburn, 160 Mass. 457, a temporary staging, put up by masons in the employ of a contractor, for the purpose of erecting a building on the land of a third person, was held to be not a part of the employer's ways or works.

In McGiffin v. Palmer's Shipbuilding, etc., Co., 10 Q. B. Div. 5, a workman was employed in the defendant's iron works, and part of his duty was to take iron in balls, by means of a two-wheeled car, along a road-way of iron plates. While he was so engaged, the car struck against a piece of a substance used for lining the furnaces, which had been negligently placed projecting into the road-way, and a ball fell on him, causing personal injuries which resulted in his death. In an action against the employers, it was held that the obstruction caused by the substance projecting into the road-way was not a defect in the condition of the way, within the meaning of the act, and the defendants were not liable. Compare Brannigan v. Robinson (1892), 1 Q. B. Div. 344.

A staging fifteen feet high, twenty feet long, and five feet wide, erected in the front of a sawmill, by the side of a wood-pile, for the purpose of enabling the workmen to pile the wood higher, and which is taken down and put up from time to time in different places, and intended to be used from four days to a week at a time in each place where it is erected, has been held to constitute a part of the "ways, works, or machinery" of the mill. Prendible v. Connecticut River Mfg. Co., 160 Mass. 131.

A pipe projecting from a water-tank, whereby a brakeman is knocked off a railroad train and killed, has been held to be a part of the ways, works, machinery, etc., of a railroad company, within the meaning of the Alabama

Code, § 2590. East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Thompson, 94 Ala. 636.

In U. S. Rolling Stock Co. v. Weir, 96 Ala. 396, the complaint alleged that a plank upon which the deceased was required to walk, in the discharge of his duties as a watchman at the defendant's works, was eight inches broad, was laid upon rafters three feet apart and about thirty feet from the floor of a building, and that this was "an unsafe and dangerous appliance for the purpose." It was held that the complaint alleged a defect in the condition of the ways connected with or used in the business of the employer, within the meaning of section 2590 of the Alabama Code.

See generally, upon this subject, FELLOW-SERVANTS, vol. 7, p. 856.

1. Offensive Weapon.—A stick has been held to be an "offensive weapon" within a statute against assault. Rex v. Johnson, 1 R. & R. 492. See also Reg. v. Williams, 14 Cox C. C. 59.

Deadly Weapon.—(See also ASSAULT, vol. 1, pp. 813, 816; HOMICIDE, vol. 9, pp. 545-548, 587, 588, 599.)

The trial court in effect instructed the jury that a deadly weapon was any weapon or instrument by which death might be produced, or would be likely to be produced, when used in the manner in which it was used in the affray; that the jury were the judges as to whether the weapon was or was not a deadly weapon. And on appeal the instruction was sustained. People v. Rodrigo, 69 Cal. 601. See also Doering v. State, 49 Ind. 56; 19 Am. Rep. 669, where it was held that the question whether a particular weapon is or is not dangerous is one of fact, and not of law, and should be submitted to the jury for ascertainment.

In State v. Roberts, 39 Mo. App. 48, the court said: "A pistol is a deadly weapon only when carried for use, and all that can be said is that, prima facie, the fact of its being carried is evidence that it is carried for use; but the defendant is at liberty to rebut this inference, by showing that he carried it as a mere article of merchandise, or, as in this case, as a mere messenger for transmission to a third party, without any intention to use it as a weapon."

A Club Is a Deadly Weapon.—In State v. Phillips, 104 N. Car. 786, the court said: "It being admitted that the indictment was found within six months after the offense was committed, the defendants insist that the superior court did not have jurisdiction, because, in the first count, the description of the instrument used is not such that the court can determine that it was a deadly weapon, and the nature of the injury is not set forth in the second count. If the court can neither conclude, upon the face of the indictment, that the weapon described in the first count was one that would probably produce death when used offensively, nor that the injury, as charged in the second count, was of a serious nature, then there was a want of jurisdiction. State v. Russell, 91 N. Car. 624; State v. Porter, 101 N. Car. 713. In the latter case, the court say: 'The present indictment manifestly falls short of this requirement, for, while called a deadly weapon, it is designated simply as a stick, with no description of its size, weight, or other qualities or proportions, from which it can be seen to be a deadly or dangerous implement, calculated in its use to put in peril life or inflict great physical injury upon the assailed.' This indictment is defective, upon the same reasoning, unless the word club, ex vi termini, can be declared such an instrument as would probably produce death or great bodily harm when used to strike a blow. Worcester defines a club as 'a heavy staff or stick, fit to be used in the hand as a weapon; a bludgeon.' Bludgeon, according to the same lexicographer, is 'a short stick with one end loaded, used as an offensive weapon.' The definition of club given by Webster is 'a heavy staff or piece of wood.' So that the court can declare that a blow stricken with such an implement would endanger life. In State v. West, 6 Jones (N. Car.) 509, Judge Ruffin says: 'Whether an instrument or weapon be a deadly one is, at least generally speaking, for the decision of the court, because it is a matter of reason that it is, or is not, likely to do great bodily harm, which determines its character in this respect. State v. Craton, 6 Ired. (N. Car.) 164. Hence, it is clear that a gun, sword, large knife, or bar of iron, or any other heavy instrument, by a blow from which a grievous hurt would probably be inflicted, are deemed, in law, deadly instruments.' The instrument declared to be deadly in that case, was an oaken staff, nearly three feet long, and of the diameter of an inch and a half at one end and two inches at the other end. It was manifestly so heavy as to make it dangerous. Greenleaf says (Greenleaf on Evidence (14th ed.), vol. 3, § 147): that malice may be presumed from 'casting stones or other heavy bodies . . . over a wall, or from a building, with intent to kill,' etc., 'or where a parent or master corrects a child with an instrument likely to cause death,' etc. Wharton, in Precedents of Indictments, vol. 1, p. 244, approves a precedent for assault with 'a large stick,' when it was necessary to allege an intent to kill, and a charge of assault with 'a large knife' has been held good under like circumstances. A club means more, not only a large, but a heavy, stick. We think that a club is such an instrument, in its weight, dimensions, and character, that the court must conclude that a blow stricken with it by a man would probably produce death, or great bodily harm. We therefore hold that the superior court has jurisdiction of the offense charged in the first count, and the failure to prove that particular charge does not oust the jurisdiction acquired by virtue of the form of the indictment. State v. Ray, 89 N. Car. 587; State v. Reeves, 85 N. Car. 553."

A pitchfork is a deadly weapon, within the meaning of Kentucky Gen. Stat., ch. 29, art. 6, § 2, prescribing the punishment for willful and malicious striking with a deadly weapon, with intent to kill. In Evans v. Com. (Ky. 1889), 12 S. W. Rep. 768, the court said: "A pitchfork is an instrument with which life may be readily taken, and therefore a deadly weapon."

A Hoe Held Per Se to Be a Deadly Weapon.—In Hamilton v. People, 113 Ill. 38; 55 Am. Rep. 396, the court said: "The point is made there is no proof that the hoe with which the assault is alleged to have been made is a deadly weapon. The indictment alleges, and the proofs show, that an assault was made upon Parks with a loaded pistol and a hoe. This, we think, was sufficient.

Definition.

WEAPON.

Definition.

Conceding it was necessary that the deadly character of the weapons with which the assault was made should have been established before the jury (a matter not necessary to be determined), we are of opinion that was sufficiently done by proof that it was done with a hoe and loaded pistol. A hoe, both in popular and legal signification, is per se a deadly weapon, fully as much so as a loaded pistol or an axe. Such things as all persons of ordinary intelligence are presumed to know, are not required to be proved. While the indictment is somewhat informal, yet we think it is sufficient, at least after verdict, no motion having been made to quash. In a case of this kind the gist of the offense is the assault with a felonious intent, hence it is not necessary to set out the manner of the assault with any degree of particularity."

Pin Thrust down Infant's Throat.—In State v. Norwood (N. Car. 1894), 20 S. E. Rep. 712, it was held that the pushing of a pin down an infant's throat, thereby causing its death, was killing it with a deadly weapon. The court said: "The question whether an instrument with which a personal injury has been inflicted is a deadly weapon depends, not infrequently, more upon the manner of its use than upon the intrinsic character of the instrument itself. (State v. Huntley, 91 N. Car. 620.) We may expect death to ensue from pushing such a pin down the throat of an infant, just as we may look for death or serious bodily harm as a consequence of firing a pistol into a crowd of human beings, or at a particular person."

A Chisel—"Deadly Weapons."—These words, as used in Kentucky Rev. Stat., ch. 28, art. 6, § 2, 1 Stanton 382, are not restricted to such weapons or instruments as are made and designed for offensive or defensive purposes, or for the destruction of life or the infliction of injury. "Deadly weapon," as used in said statute, embraces any deadly weapon with which a person may be wounded by cutting or stabbing. A chisel is held to be a deadly weapon in this case. Com. v. Branham, 8 Bush (Ky.) 387.

Dangerous Weapon.—(See also ASSAULT, vol. 1, pp. 813, 816, for a number of instances, and see supra, this note, Deadly Weapon).—A weapon likely to produce death or great bodily harm. U. S. v. Reeves, 38 Fed. Rep. 404; U. S. v. Williams, 6 Sawy.

(U. S.) 244; Skidmore v. State, 43 Tex. 96.

An Axe.—In State v. Hertzog, 41 La. Ann. 777, the court, by Fenner, J., said: "The defendant asked the judge to charge the jury, in substance, that, inasmuch as the wound was inflicted with an axe, which is not per se a dangerous weapon within the meaning of the statute, defendant could not be convicted without allegation and proof that the wound was inflicted 'with intent to kill.' Exception was taken to the refusal of the judge so to charge. The contention of defendant is that the first clause of the statute applies to weapons technically dangerous, constructed and employed for use as weapons; and that, where the offense is committed with instruments intended and employed for innocent and useful purposes, and only becoming dangerous weapons when diverted from their proper use and purpose, the case falls within the second clause and requires allegation and proof of the intent to kill; and that otherwise such intent would be, in no case, essential, and that clause of the statute would be inoperative. We were much impressed with the force of this argument, though its strength was weakened by a consideration of the difficulty of holding that a wound inflicted with so deadly an instrument as an axe used as a weapon, is not inflicted with a dangerous weapon under the terms of the statute. The question, however, is not res nova, and our doubts are resolved by the clear authority of the case of State v. Jacob, 10 La. Ann. 141, in which the indictment was under the same statute and the instrument used was a pocket-knife. The lower judge had been asked to charge that 'if the knife used by the defendant was shown by the evidence to be an ordinary pocket-knife, such as is commonly used by planters for proper purposes, and was not by the accused specially provided for this occasion, then it was not a dangerous weapon within the meaning of the law.' And this court said: 'We are of opinion the judge did not err in refusing to give such instructions.' The case is directly in point, rendered over thirty years ago, and has never been overruled. We feel bound to follow it." See also State v. Scott, 39 La. Ann. 943.

A Knife.—In State v. Henn, 39 Minn. 476, Gilfillan, C. J., for the court, said: "This is an indictment for assault in the second degree. One of the kinds of assault that come within this degree is assault 'with a weapon or other instrument or thing likely to produce grievous bodily harm.' Penal Code, § 187, subsection 4. This indictment charges the assault to have been 'with a weapon, to wit, a knife,' 'the said knife being then and there a weapon and instrument likely to produce grievous bodily harm.' It is objected that as a knife is not necessarily a weapon likely to do grievous bodily harm, but may or may not be so, this knife ought to be more particularly described in the indictment, so that from the description it may be seen whether it was such a weapon or instrument or not. But the description of the knife, to wit, as 'a weapon and instrument likely to produce grievous bodily harm,' is sufficient to bring the case within the definition of offense cited. In State v. Dineen, 10 Minn. 407, the description was 'a dangerous weapon, to wit, a large, heavy stone,' and it was held sufficient. It was proper to prove the previous threats of defendant to assault the complainant. The fact of the assault being denied, it was proper to strengthen the direct proof of it by proving the threats made only a few hours before, showing defendant in the mood and temper to make the assault, and intending to make it."

Definition.WEAPON.*Definition.

On the trial of an indictment for an assault with a dangerous weapon, to wit, with a knife, there was evidence that the assault was with a jackknife. The judge ruled that a jackknife, like that exhibited to the jury, was a dangerous weapon. It was held, on a bill of exceptions, which did not more particularly describe the knife, that the court could not say, as matter of law, that the instruction was erroneous. Com. v. O'Brien, 119 Mass. 342; 20 Am. Rep. 325.

Question of Law or Fact.—In U. S. v. Small, 2 Curt. (U. S.) 243, the court said: "In many cases, it is practicable for the court to declare that a particular weapon was, or was not, a dangerous weapon, within the meaning of the law. And when it is practicable, it is matter of law, and the court must take the responsibility of so declaring. U. S. v. Wilson, Bald. (U. S.) 78. But where the question is whether an assault with a dangerous weapon has been proved, and the weapon might be dangerous to life, or not, according to the manner in which it was used, or according to the part of the body attempted to be struck, I think a more general direction must be given to the jury; and it must be left for them to decide whether the assault, if committed, was with a dangerous weapon. Rex v. Noakes, 5 C. & P. 326; 24 E. C. L. 342." See also Barker v. State, 48 Ind. 163; Doering v. State, 49 Ind. 58; 19 Am. Rep. 669; and supra, this note, Deadly Weapon.

Sharp and Dangerous Weapon.—Clubs, sticks, staves, bricks, stones, and iron bars are not "sharp, dangerous weapons," within 3 New York Rev. Stat. (5th ed.), p. 970, § 24, respecting assaults "with knife, dirk, dagger, or other sharp, dangerous weapon." People v. White, 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 606.

Pitchfork.—A blow given with the handle of a pitchfork, without pushing or thrusting with the tines, is not an assault with a "sharp, dangerous weapon," within the meaning of the act of 1854 (New York Laws of 1854, ch. 74), providing for the punishment of assaults with dangerous weapons. Filkins v. People, 69 N. Y. 104; 25 Am. Rep. 143. Here the court said: "The assault was by a blow, as with a stick or club, and not by pushing or thrusting with the tines. As used, the weapon was no more dangerous than it would have been if there had been buttons on the tines to prevent their puncturing the flesh, or than would have been a knife held by the blade, the holder striking with the handle. A blow thus given with the handle of a knife would not be an assault with a knife or sharp instrument within the statute, any more than would an attempt to discharge a loaded gun, the touch-hole of which was plugged, be an offense under the English statute making it criminal to attempt to discharge a loaded gun at another. Rex v. Harris, 5 C. & P. 159; 24 E. C. L. 254; 1 Russell on Crimes (9th ed.) 979, marg. 725."

Concealed Weapon.—(See also CONCEALED WEAPONS, vol. 3, p. 408, where the subject is treated at large).—A pistol with the tubes imperfect and battered up, and the locks so much out of order that it could not be discharged by the trigger, is a firearm, the carrying of which, concealed, is prohibited. Atwood v. State, 53 Ala. 508; overruling Evins v. State, 46 Ala. 88.

Georgia Code, § 4527, makes it penal to carry concealed about the person

WEAR AND TEAR—(See also BAILMENTS, vol. 2, p. 52; LEASE, vol. 12, p. 1019).—A phrase commonly used in leases and contracts of bailment to limit liability for injury to the subject of the contract.¹

any pistol except a horseman's pistol. The mainspring being disabled so as to render a discharge of the weapon impossible in the ordinary mode of using firearms, is no excuse or justification. Williams v. State, 61 Ga. 417; 34 Am. Rep. 102.

In Missouri carrying a pistol, not for use as a weapon, but only for the purpose of delivering it to the owner, is not criminal. State v. Roberts, 39 Mo. App. 47.

A person who carries concealed about his person, all the pieces of a pistol, which could readily be put together so as to make an effective weapon, is guilty of carrying concealed weapons, though at the time he carried them concealed, the pieces were separate and incapable of use as a firearm until put together. Hutchinson v. State, 62 Ala. 3; 34 Am. Rep. 1. Compare Coak v. State, 11 Tex. App. 19.

In State v. Duzan, 6 Blatchf. (Ind.) 31, carrying concealed an unloaded pistol was held to be within the statute. But in Carr v. State, 34 Ark. 450; 36 Am. Rep. 15, a contrary decision was reached. The court said: "In this case, the implements found on defendant were pistols, and worn concealed. But they were not, either of them, loaded; and one was wholly unfit for use, if it had been. These things, affirmatively shown, rebut the presumption that the pistols were worn to be used as weapons. They could not be so used. If the state, in a given case, should show that pistols were worn concealed, the jury might well presume that they were loaded, and worn as weapons. But the defendant might remove the presumption by proof. It would be one of fact, and not of law. The attention of his honor, the circuit judge, seems to have been directed to the point of defense, based upon the journey, which he correctly decided. For want of sufficient proof that the pistol was worn as a weapon, a new trial should have been granted."

The language of the North Carolina statute is not "concealed on his person," but "concealed about his person," and hence, if the weapon be within reach and control of the defendant, it is sufficient to bring the case within the meaning of the statute. State v. McManus, 89 N. Car. 558. In this case, the court said: "It is insisted that the pistol, if in the basket and concealed, was not about the person of the defendant, though upon his lap. Such is not the meaning of the statute. The language is not 'concealed on his person,' but 'concealed about his person;' that is, concealed near, in close proximity to him, and within his convenient control and easy reach, so that he could promptly use it, if prompted to do so by any violent motive. If the pistol was concealed in the basket, and that was in the defendant's lap, on his arm, or fastened about his person, or if placed near his person, though not touching it, this would be sufficient. It makes no difference how it is concealed, so it is on or near to and within the reach and control of the person charged."

In Alabama, a person who, in the room of another in which there are several persons, bears in his vest pocket a pistol, which is willfully or knowingly covered or kept from sight, is guilty of a violation of the statute (Alabama Code, § 3274) against carrying concealed weapons. Owen v. State, 31 Ala. 387.

1. Reasonable Wear and Tear.—In Manchester Bonded Warehouse Co. v. Carr, 5 C. P. Div. 507, the court said: "These words ('reasonable wear and tear') no doubt, include destruction to some extent, e. g., destruction of surface by ordinary friction, but we do not think they include total destruction by a catastrophe which was never contemplated by either party."

Fair Wear and Tear, etc.—In Davis v. Davis, 57 L. J. Ch. 1095, Kehewich, J., said: "If those words, 'fair wear and tear and damage by tempest excepted,' were not there, any dilapidations found at any time, or at the end of the term, by reason of the wear and tear, the wearing out of the walls and floors of a public house, for example, from the constant traffic and so forth—the lessee would be liable to replace, and if, unfortunately, by a storm, his chimney pot was blown down, or he had his roof broken, he would be bound to put it straight, and restore the place to good and substantial repair."

WEARING APPAREL—(See also SEPARATE PROPERTY OF MARRIED WOMEN, vol. 22, p. 1).—This phrase, in exemption and revenue laws, has its popular import.¹

Natural and Reasonable Wear and Tear.—In an article of agreement for the sale of real estate, by which the vendor stipulates to deliver possession of the premises, at a future day, in as good repair as they were in at the time of the execution of the contract, "natural and reasonable wear and tear excepted," the exception covers only such decay or depreciation in value, of the property, as may arise from ordinary and reasonable use; and injury to the property by a freshet is not within the exception. Green v. Kelly, 20 N. J. L. 547. Here Whitehead, J., said: "The last objection made by the defendant's counsel, is, that as it appears by the declaration, the injury to the dam arose from a freshet, it must be regarded as only natural wear and tear, and therefore comes within the exception in the article. We were referred to Webster's dictionary for the meaning of the terms used in the exception, particularly the words natural and tear; and from these definitions the counsel argues that, by the use of these terms, the parties meant more than the ordinary decay of the property by reasonable use. It is insisted that the exception provides, not only for the ordinary decay of the property, by the use of the term wear; but also by the use of the other terms, for the violent rending or destruction of the same by natural causes, as by freshets. It should be borne in mind, that the agreement was to be executed by payment of the purchase-money and delivery of the deed and possession of the premises, at a future day; and until then the defendant was to retain the possession. There is nothing in the agreement from which it can be inferred that the sum the plaintiff agreed to pay was not a full and fair price for the property in the condition it was at the date of the contract. It would be unreasonable to suppose that the plaintiff would covenant to pay a full price for the property at a future day, and in the meantime run the hazard of its destruction by the elements, or of its being improperly used while in the possession of the defendant. But however this may be, the words used in the exception are to be interpreted in their popular and usual meaning, and as they are understood by plain practical men; and in that sense, they do not justify the construction contended for by the defendant's counsel. The intention of the parties was, that upon the plaintiff's performing the stipulations on his part, possession of the property was to be delivered to him, in as good condition as it was at the date of the contract, except as it might be depreciated in value by the ordinary use of it by the defendant. The word natural, in the connection in which it is here used, means no more than ordinary, as contradistinguished from unnatural or extraordinary; and the whole clause refers only to the decay or depreciation in value of the mill, by its ordinary and reasonable use by the defendant. The destruction of the dam by the freshet does not, in my opinion, come within the exception."

Wear and Tear Distinguished.—The case of Bigge v. Bigge, 9 Jur. 192, illustrates the distinction between "wear" and "tear." In that case a testator had, by handling, worn his will in two—a very different thing from his having torn it in two—so there was no revocation by "tearing" within the Statute of Wills.

1. Anderson's Law Dict., "Apparel."

In Freeman on Executions (2d ed.), § 232, it is said that the exemption of wearing apparel from execution was probably confined at common law to the garments in which the debtor was clad, citing Cooke v. Gibbs, 3 Mass. 193; Sunbolf v. Alford, 3 M. & W. 248; Wolf v. Summers, 2 Campb. 631; Bowne v. Witt, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 475. None of these cases are directly in point, and an examination of the cases following shows no such interpretation has been given the statutes.

Exemptions — Bags — Bedding, etc.—Bags are not articles of wearing apparel, nor bedding; nor do they fall within the statutory designation of articles exempt from levy and sale under execution; neither are they necessary for actual use in the preservation of articles declared by statute to be exempt. Shaw v. Davis, 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 389.

Exemptions.—Cloth purchased for a coat, carried to a tailor to be made into one, and cut out, is exempted from attachment. Ordway v. Wilbur, 16 Me. 263; 33 Am. Dec. 663.

The provision of Massachusetts Rev. Stats., ch. 97, § 22, exempting from execution "the necessary wearing apparel" of a debtor, extends to cloth and trimmings put into the hands of a tailor by the debtor, to be made into clothes necessary for him. Richardson v. Buswell, 10 Met. (Mass.) 506. Dewey, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in this case, said: "In giving a construction to a remedial statute, we are to bear in mind the great object and purposes which apparently led to its enactment, the mischief intended to be avoided, and which called for a remedy. By the general law of attachment, independent of the exemption which the statutes have made from time to time, everything belonging to the debtor, in the nature of property, might be taken on execution and sold. The law interposed, and, to secure to the debtor the absolute necessities of life, exempted from attachment and execution, his 'necessary wearing apparel.' It is admitted that the wearing apparel which was about to be made from the articles seized on execution, was necessary to the plaintiff. But it is said that it is not exempted from execution, because the cloth and trimmings thus seized were not yet fashioned and formed into a coat; and it is contended that, until that takes place, the exemption does not apply. The counsel for the defendant asks, what is the limit to the exemption of articles adapted to clothing, if not that by him now insisted upon? Is the exemption to be applied to the earlier stages of the wool unmanufactured, or the flannel before it is fulled and dyed? Now it seems to us, that whatever difficulties might exist as to the articles in these earlier stages above supposed, they do not arise here. This cloth was not merely made, or purchased for clothing, but was actually appropriated to that purpose. The case does not, therefore, depend upon the mere purpose of mind of the debtor to make such use of it at a future day, but an actual appropriation of it to the purpose of wearing apparel. To be useful and convenient for clothing, the articles needed the operation of the tailor, and they were placed in his hands, to be made into a coat. Having been thus appropriated and used, it assumes the character of clothing for the party, and is within the exemption given by the statute."

Exemptions.—Trunk, Jewelry, etc.—A traveling trunk, mahogany cabinet box, and breastpin, are not articles exempted from attachment and execution under the provisions of chapter 184 of the Revised Statutes of New Hampshire, as wearing apparel, necessary for the debtor and his family, nor as household furniture. Towns v. Pratt, 33 N. H. 345; 66 Am. Dec. 726.

Exemptions.—Watch.—In Re Steele, 2 Flipp. (U. S.) 325, the court said: "It would not be doing any great violence to the meaning of the term 'wearing apparel,' as used in the bankrupt act, to include in it a gold watch of moderate value. The definition of the word 'apparel,' as given by lexicographers, is not confined to clothing; the idea of ornamentation seems to be a rather prominent element in the word, and it is not improper to say that a man 'wears' a watch or 'wears' a cane. The exemption law of Arkansas says that 'wearing apparel shall be exempt, except watches.' Arkansas Dig. 503, 504; James' Bankruptcy 58; Avery & Hobbs' Bankrupt Law, 68. In Peverly v. Sayles, 10 N. H. 356, under a statute which exempted 'wearing apparel necessary for immediate use,' it was held that an overcoat and a suit of clothes 'to go to meeting in' were included. In Ordway v. Wilbur, 16 Me. 263; 33 Am. Dec. 663, cloth sent to a tailor to be made into clothes was in that form held to be exempt as 'apparel.' In Bumpus v. Maynard, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 626, the debtor was in bed—his clothes were on a chair, and his watch on a table. The officer was sued for refusing to levy on them, and it was held that they were exempt as 'wearing apparel,' notwithstanding they were not on the person. There are some expressions in the case which indicate that possibly the court did not intend to include the watch as 'wearing apparel,' but it is probable they did. It was decided in Smith v. Rogers, 16 Ga. 479, that a watch was not wearing apparel. But in Mack v. Parks, 8 Gray (Mass.) 517; 69 Am. Dec. 269, it was held, in a case where an officer with an attachment asked the debtor to let him look at his watch, and being permitted to do it from his person by breaking the cord to which it was attached, that the watch was exempt from seizure at common law, because by that law wearing apparel on the person was exempt from levy or distraint. See Freeman on Executions, § 232. We have no state statute in Tennessee, that I can find, exempting wearing apparel, and we depend on these common-law principles for immunity in such cases. It is said in Richardson v. Duncan, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 220, that our exemption laws are to be liberally construed, and this is the universal doctrine of modern times. In that case it was held that an 'ass' is included in that statute which exempts 'a horse, mule, or yoke of oxen;' and in Webb v. Brandon, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 285, an ox wagon is included in the description 'one two-horse wagon.' But whether a watch may be included in the statutory exemption of 'wearing apparel' or not, it certainly may be allowed as 'other necessities' under certain circumstances."

A watch of moderate value may be exempt from execution as "necessary wearing apparel," when it is made to appear that the watch and other articles reserved as wearing apparel do not exceed the amount limited by the statute. But in such case it lies with the party claiming the exemption to prove affirmatively the facts which establish his claim. Stewart v. McClung, 12 Oregon 431. Here the court said: "The question whether a watch is a necessary article of wearing apparel, and as such, exempt, seems, from the decisions, to depend upon the particular facts, or attendant circumstances of each case, such as the value of the watch, the condition and business of the debtor, etc., and has been differently decided under different circumstances."

... If a watch is in no sense 'wearing apparel,' as some of the authorities indicate, the judicial construction of the word 'necessary' is of no importance. On the other hand, it would seem that if a watch worn by a person may be considered as a part of his dress or apparel, the word 'necessary,' as judicially construed, would not so materially affect the meaning of the phrase 'wearing apparel' as to exclude it. It is probably true that a watch is ordinarily worn more for convenience than as a mere luxurious ornament. But to determine whether it is one or the other, necessary or luxurious, as an article of dress or apparel, the value of the watch is allowed to have a controlling influence in determining that result. If the value of the watch be unreasonable, or too much money be invested in it, the law regards it, as justice to the creditors would require, rather as a luxury than a necessity. And under our statute this element of value would necessarily become an important factor, as the exemption of 'wearing apparel' is limited to one hundred dollars. But, as we have seen, upon the question whether a watch is a necessary article of wearing apparel, the authorities are conflicting. Upon the whole, our own judgment inclines us to the opinion that the phrase 'necessary wearing apparel,' as used in our statute, may include in it a watch of moderate value without doing violence to its meaning. We are not, therefore, prepared to say that a watch of moderate value is not a necessary article of wearing apparel, and as such exempt, when it is made to appear affirmatively that the watch and other articles of apparel selected or reserved do not exceed the amount limited by the statute." See also Mack v. Parks, 8 Gray (Mass.) 520; 69 Am. Dec. 269.

On the other hand in Gooch v. Gooch, 33 Me. 535, it was held that a watch, which the testator had been in the habit of carrying upon his person, did not pass by a bequest of his "wearing apparel;" nor by a bequest of his "house furniture."

A silver watch and chain, worn by the debtor, is not exempt under Minnesota Gen. Stat., ch. 66, § 279, as "wearing apparel of the debtor and his family," nor as "household furniture," though the debtor be a householder with a family, and has no clock or other watch or timekeeper and used the said watch to keep the time at his house. In Rothschild v. Boelter, 18 Minn. 332, the court said: "The statute in question exempts (sub. 5) 'all wearing apparel of the debtor and his family.' It is contended that a watch worn by a debtor is wearing apparel. It would not be urged, however, that a watch which a debtor had never worn, but which, for instance, as in one of the New York cases cited by defendant, had always been hung up in the house, was his wearing apparel. If, then, this watch be wearing apparel, it must be the circumstance that the debtor wears it, that makes it so. In a certain sense, indeed, he may be said to 'apparel himself' in it, as he might be said to do with respect to any other wearable article of use or ornament, e. g., a diamond ring. But, if this makes it wearing apparel, a debtor might, as suggested by the respondent, keep any number of such articles, whatever their value, from his creditors, for the quantity of wearing apparel exempted is without limit. But that an article may be worn does not make it wearing apparel within this statute. The words are to be construed, in this case, according to the common and approved usage of the language (Gen. Stat., ch. 4, § 1), namely, as referring to garments or clothing generally designed for wear of the debtor and his family."

Neither the watch, nor its chain, key, and seals, nor the finger ring which were usually worn by a person when living, are to be deemed a part of his wearing apparel, which, after his decease, are, by the Vermont Comp. Stat., ch. 50, § 1, to go to his widow. Redfield, Ch. J., dissenting. Otherwise of a bosom pin. The court, in Sawyer v. Sawyer, 28 Vt. 252, said; "The county court held that the watch, watch key, watch chain, cord and seals, and the finger ring, and the sword and sword belt, were not to be deemed a part of the wearing apparel of the deceased husband, and a majority of the court think this was a sound construction of the statute. They seem to me to fall clearly within the category of ornaments. To call them wearing apparel would be, as it appears to me, to give a latitudinarian meaning to the term, which the legislature never intended it should have. Though a watch may have a further use than mere ornament, yet that is not enough to make it and its incidents wearing apparel. The finger ring is peculiarly matter of ornament; and we are disposed to consider the sword and sword belt the emblems of distinction worn on special occasions, and which were in no way attached to the wearing apparel, so as to become a part of it."

Exemptions—Necessary Wearing Apparel.—The New Hampshire statute exempting from attachment the necessary wearing apparel for immediate use, exempts suitable apparel for labor, with an extra suit for days of religious worship, and an overcoat at all seasons of the year. In Peverly v. Sayles, 10 N. H. 357, the court said: "The wearing apparel necessary for immediate use must be such an amount of clothing as is necessary to meet the varying changes of our climate, and the customary habits and ordinary necessities of the mass of the people. The clothing worn by the individual while about his daily toil might be all that was necessary for the time, but be wholly insufficient when such labor ceased; and the clothing suitable and proper for days of labor might not be such as the common sentiment of the community would deem necessary and proper for use on days set apart for religious assembling and worship; a common privilege, which our laws accord to all, and which it deems necessary to all. A suitable overcoat, also, is no luxury but a necessity; always required to be on hand, as a protection against the frequent changes and inclement seasons of our climate. We regard, then, the instructions of the court as fully within the requirements of the statute; and that, in the words of the charge, the statute is designed to exempt from attachment, as necessary wearing apparel, 'an outside, or great coat, at all seasons of the year; and, in addition, the decent and comfortable everyday wearing apparel, a full suit, suitable to wear abroad or to meeting.'"

And in Towns v. Pratt, 33 N. H. 349; 66 Am. Dec. 726, it was said: "The exemption, however, under the statute is limited to the wearing apparel necessary for the debtor and his family. The word 'necessary,' as here used, is not to be understood in its most rigid sense, implying something indispensable, but as equivalent to convenient and comfortable. Peverly v. Sayles, 10 N. H. 356. It would, therefore, include such articles of dress or clothing as might properly be considered among the necessities in contradistinction to the luxuries of life. Davlin v. Stone, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 359. Whether an article attached is a necessary or a luxury, may, under some circumstances, be a question for the jury, depending upon the situation of the debtor and the character and uses, and perhaps the cost, of the article. But in reference to trinkets, like a breastpin, we think the court may be understood to know so much of their nature and purposes as to be at liberty to determine, without the intervention of a jury, that, under no circumstances, can they be held to be requisite for the comfort or convenience of the wearer, as apparel, so as to render them necessary within the meaning of the statute."

In United States Revenue Laws.—As used in the Tariff Act of 1883, "wearing apparel" is held not to include shoes. Swayne v. Hager, 37 Fed. Rep. 782. The court said: "So, also, in my opinion, shoes were not intended to be included in the terms, 'wearing apparel of every description,' in the provisions cited from schedule K. By reading it with the context, 'wearing apparel . . . made up or manufactured wholly or in part by a tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer,' it seems evident that Congress intended other manufacturers of a class similar to a 'tailor or seamstress'—'something ejusdem generis.' The principle noscitur a sociis appears to me to be applicable. A shoemaker is not in any respect similar to a tailor, or seamstress. In ordinary popular use of language, no one, I presume, would for a moment think that shoes are included in the terms 'wearing apparel.' See the following decisions supporting and illustrating the construction adopted. Oates v. National Bank, 100 U. S. 244; Bend v. Hoyt, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 270; Adams v. Bancroft, 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 386; Reiche v. Smythe, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 162."

Under the Tariff Act of 1846, it was held that shawls, whether worsted shawls, worsted and cotton shawls, silk and worsted shawls, barege shawls, merino shawls, silk shawls, worsted scarfs, silk scarfs, and mousseline de laine shawls, were "wearing apparel," and therefore subject to a duty of thirty per cent. under schedule C. In Maillard v. Lawrence, 16 How. (U. S.) 261, the court said: "The effort has been made to substitute for the literal and lexicographical and popular meaning of the phrase 'wearing apparel,' some supposed mercantile or commercial signification of these words, and to render subservient to that signification what was clearly accordant with the etymology of the language of the statute, with the essential purposes and action of the government, and with the widespread, if not the universal, understanding, of all who may not happen to fall within the range of a limited and interested class. In instances in which words or phrases are novel or obscure, as in terms of art, where they are peculiar or exclusive in their signification, it may be proper to explain or elucidate them by reference to the art or science to which they are appropriate; but if language which is familiar to all classes and grades and occupations—language, the meaning of which is impressed upon all by the daily habits and necessities of all, may be wrested from its established and popular import in reference to the common concerns of life, there can be little stability or safety in the regulations of society. Perhaps, within the compass of the English language, and certainly within the popular comprehension of the inhabitants of this country, there can scarcely be found terms the import of which is better understood than is that of the words 'shawl' and 'wearing apparel,' or of 'shawl' as a familiar, everyday and indispensable part of wearing apparel. And it would seem to be a most extravagant supposition which could hold that, in the enactment of a law affecting the interests of a nation at large, the legislature should select for that purpose language by which the nation or the mass of the people must necessarily be misled. The popular or received import of words furnishes the general rule for the interpretation of public laws as well as of private and social transactions; and wherever the legislature adopts such language in order to define or promulge their action or their will, the just conclusion from such a course must be, that they not only themselves comprehended the meaning of the language they have selected, but have chosen it with reference to the known apprehension of those to whom the legislative language is addressed, and for whom it is designed to constitute a rule of conduct, namely, the community at large. If, therefore, the strange concession were admissible that, in the opinion of a portion of the mercantile men, shawls were not considered wearing apparel, it would still remain to be proved that this opinion was sustained by the judgment of the community generally, or that the legislature designed a departure from the natural and popular acceptance of language."

A citizen of the United States, arriving home from a visit to Europe with his family, at the end of September, by a vessel, brought with him wearing apparel, bought there for his and their use, to be worn here during the season then approaching, "not excessive in quantity for persons of their means, habits, and station in life," and their ordinary outfit for the winter. A part of the articles had not been worn, and on these duties were exacted by the col-

WEEK—(See also TIME, COMPUTATION OF, vol. 26, p. 3; STATUTES, vol. 23, p. 140; TAXATION, vol. 25, p. 372).—The word "week," both in law and in common conversation or writing, has two separate and distinct meanings. Sometimes, it means a period of time commencing on Sunday morning and ending Saturday at midnight; at other times the term is used as signifying a period of time of seven days' duration, without any reference to when that period commences, whether on Sunday, Monday, or Saturday.¹

lector. It was held that, under the statute exempting from duty "wearing apparel in actual use and other personal effects (not merchandise) . . . of persons arriving in the United States," the proper rule to be applied was to exempt from duty such of the articles as fulfilled the following conditions: (1) wearing apparel owned by the passenger, and in a condition to be worn at once without further manufacture; (2) brought with him as a passenger, and intended for the use or wear of himself or his family who accompanied him as passengers, and not for sale, or purchased or imported for other persons, or to be given away; (3) suitable for the season of the year which was immediately approaching at the time of arrival; (4) not exceeding in quantity, or quality, or value, what the passenger was in the habit of ordinarily providing for himself and his family at that time, and keeping on hand for his and their reasonable wants, in view of their means and habits in life, even though such articles had not been actually worn. Astor v. Merritt, 111 U. S. 202.

1. State v. Yellow Jacket Silver Min. Co., 5 Nev. 430.

Though "a week" usually means any consecutive seven days, it will sometimes be interpreted to mean the ordinary notion of a week reckoning from Sunday to Sunday. Bazalgette v. Lowe, 24 L. J. Ch. 368, 416.

And, probably, a "week" usually means seven clear days; thus where a statute provided that notice of appeal should be given "within one week" before such appeal was to be heard, and notice was given on the twenty-second for the twenty-ninth, it was held that the notice was insufficient. Reg. v. Sweeney, 2 Ir. L. R. 278.

"Per Week."—A theatrical engagement at so much "per week," may be shown, by usage, to mean, "per week during every week that the theater is open." Grant v. Maddox, 16 L. J. Exch. 227.

"Week Next Preceding."—The word "week" in the provision of the Nevada Act of 1873, for the removal of the county seat of Humboldt County, that all the offices shall be removed to W. "on the week next preceding May 1, 1873," does not mean the week ending at 12 o'clock on Saturday night, but the seven days prior to May 1, 1873. Evans v. Job, 8 Nev. 322.

Once a Week.—Where a statute for the maintenance of public schools provided that to impose an additional school tax, an election should be called by posting notices for twenty days, and "if there is a newspaper in the county, by advertisement therein once a week for three weeks," it was held, that it was not necessary for the call to be published twenty-one days before the day of election, but that three insertions upon three successive weeks and at any time in any of such weeks before the election were sufficient. State v. Yellow Jacket Silver Min. Co., 5 Nev. 340.

The first publication of a notice of a sale under a power contained in a mortgage, which requires the notice to be published "once each week for three successive weeks," need not be made three weeks before the time appointed for the sale. Dexter v. Shepard, 117 Mass. 480. See also Fröthingham v. March, 1 Mass. 247.

In Ronkendorff v. Taylor, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 361, the court said: "The words of the law are, 'once a week.' Does this limit the publication to a particular day of the week? If the notice be published on Monday, is it fatal to omit the publication until the Tuesday week succeeding? The object of the notice is as well answered by such a publication, as if it had been made on the following Monday. A week is a definite period of time, commencing on Sunday and ending on Saturday. By this construction the notice in this case must be held sufficient. It was published, Monday, January the 6th, and omitted until Saturday, January the 18th, leaving an interval of eleven days; still the publication on Saturday was within the week succeeding the notice of the sixth. It would be a most rigid construction of the act of Congress, justified neither by its spirit nor its language, to say that this notice must be published on any particular day of a week. If published once a week, for three months, the law is complied with, and its object effectuated."

WEEKLY.—See note 1.

In Steinle v. Bell, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 172, it was held that a week is a definite period of time, commencing on Sunday and ending on Saturday; and under the rule requiring service by publication to be made, by publication "not less than once a week for six weeks," the notice need not be published on the same day in each week, but may be on any day in each week during the six weeks. Seven days' interval between publications is not essential.

Statute Prescribing Time for Capital Executions.—A "week of time," within the meaning of the Colorado statute prescribing that such week shall be appointed within which a condemned person shall be executed, means a period beginning and ending Saturday at midnight. In re Tyson, 13 Colo. 482. In this case the court said: "The command of the statute is that a week of time shall be fixed by the court within which the sentence must be executed, such week not to be less than two weeks, nor more than four weeks, from the day of passing sentence. We are of the opinion that a week of time so to be fixed must be held to be calendar week, i. e., a period of time extending from twelve midnight, Saturday, until twelve midnight the following Saturday. By consulting lexicographers of established accuracy, this conclusion will be found to be in accordance with the primary and usual definition given to the word 'week.' 'Week. A period of seven days; particularly the period of seven days commencing with Sunday.' Worcester's Dict. . . . 'Seven days of time. The week commences immediately after twelve o'clock on the night between Saturday and Sunday, and ends at twelve o'clock, seven days, of twenty-four hours each, thereafter.'

Bouvier's Law Dict. The word was judicially construed in accordance with the foregoing definitions in the case of Ronkendorff v. Taylor, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 361 (7 L. Ed. 886), where it is said: 'A week is a definite period of time, commencing on Sunday and ending on Saturday.' It follows from this construction that while in most cases more than two full calendar weeks must necessarily elapse, under the statute, between the time of sentence and the execution, in no case could such execution take place within less than fifteen days from the date of sentence. Sunday being a non-judicial day, the most favorable case possible in support of the theory advanced by counsel for the prisoner—that the time could be shortened under the late act—would arise if a defendant should be sentenced upon a Saturday. For convenience, we will assume that such Saturday is the first day of the month. The week of execution could in no event commence to run until the third Sunday thereafter,—the sixteenth day of the month,—which would be the earliest possible day for the sentence to be executed, under the terms of the act. And the same result would follow under the former law, requiring at least fifteen days from the time of sentence to the execution; as it has been decided in this state that when time is to be computed, either prior or subsequent to a day named, the usual rule is to exclude either the first or last day of the designated period, and include the other. Stebbins v. Anthony, 5 Colo. 348. So, under either law in the case supposed, a sentence might be executed upon the sixteenth day, for aught that appears in either act to the contrary. We are not, on account of the illustration given, to be understood as sanctioning the execution of the death penalty upon the Sabbath day. Such a course would be highly improper, if not positively illegal. If the latter, an additional day would be gained under the new law. In addition to the authorities herein before cited, we refer to the following in support of the conclusion reached in this opinion: 1 Bishop's Criminal Law (8th ed.), § 280 et seq.; Wharton's Criminal Law (8th ed.), § 31; Wade Retroactive Laws, § 283; State v. Arlin, 39 N. H. 179; Marion v. State, 20 Neb. 233; 57 Am. Rep. 825."

1. Weekly Paper.—Trustees, in selling

WEEKLY PAYMENT LAWS.—In several of the states statutes have been recently enacted known as the "Weekly Payment Laws," the purpose of which is the protection of the employees of corporations from what has been termed "the greed of corporate capital." The terms of the Rhode Island statute,¹ are as follows: Every corporation, other than religious, literary, or charitable corporations, and every incorporated city, but not including towns, shall pay weekly the employees engaged in its business the wages earned by them to within nine days of the date of such payment, unless prevented by inevitable casualty; provided, however, that, if at any time of payment any employee shall be absent from his place of labor, he shall be entitled to said payment at any time thereafter on demand. Any corporation violating any of the provisions of this act shall be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars and not more than one thousand dollars. The constitutionality of this statute was assailed upon the following grounds: First, because it interfered with the liberty of the individual to contract for the sale of his labor to the best advantage, as he deemed fit, and also with the liberty of the corporation so to contract with the individual; and second, because it was class legislation, in that it applied only to corporations, and further, to certain classes of corporations only. The court negated these contentions and upheld the statute.² certain church property, under Ontario Rev. Stat. (1887), ch. 237, § 13, advertised on the same day of the week for four successive weeks in a daily paper. It was held that this was not a compliance with the provision of the statute directing publication in a "weekly paper," to make a proper sale of the lands, and that the purchaser had good grounds for refusing to accept the title offered. East Presbyterian Church v. McKay, 16 Ont. 30.

1. Rhode Island Pub. Laws, ch. 918, §§ 1, 2.

2. State v. Brown, etc., Mfg. Co. (R. I. 1892), 39 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 190. In this case it was urged that the statute was in conflict with article V of the amendments to the United States constitution, but the question was dismissed with the observation that "that amendment, like all the rest of the first ten amendments, is intended solely as a limitation on the exercise of power by the government of the United States, and is not applicable to the legislation of the states." Citing Barron v. Baltimore, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 247; State v. Paul, 5 R. I. 185; In re Liquors of Fitzpatrick, 16 R. I. 60; Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 540; Withers v. Buckley, 20 How. (U. S.) 84; Twich- ell v. Com., 7 Wall. (U. S.) 321; Ex p. Spies, 123 U. S. 131; Cooley's Const. Lim. (6th ed.) 29. The second point urged against the statute was that it contravened article XIV., section 1, of the amendments to the United States constitution, but it was held that an incorporated company was neither a citizen of the United States nor a person within the meaning of the amendment, and therefore could not be included within its provisions. The court reviews and relies upon the following cases: Insurance Co. v. New Orleans, 1 Woods (U. S.) 85; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 586; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 177.

It was also contended that the statute violated sections 2, 10, and 16 of article 1 of the constitution of Rhode Island, relating, respectively, to the equal distribution, among the citizens, of the burdens of the state; to depriving one of property, etc., except by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land; and to taking private property for public uses without just compensation. Upon this point, the court said: "It seems to us that the question of conflict with these constitutional provisions may be determined by a solution of the question whether chapter 918 is a valid exercise of the power reserved to the general assembly to amend or repeal acts of incorporation. If it is a valid exercise of such reserved power, then these constitutional provisions, as to so much thereof as it is claimed chapter 918 violates, would have no application; for as the defendant is an artificial and not a natural body, it accepted its charter—its creation, so to speak—on such conditions as its creator, the general assembly, either originally or subsequently imposed." The court, relying upon Greenwood v. Union Freight R. Co., 105 U. S. 13; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 518; Wales v. Stetson, 2 Mass. 143; 3 Am. Dec. 39; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch (U. S.) 87; Miller v. New York, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 478; Roxbury v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 6 Cush. (Mass.) 424; Bangor, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 47 Me. 34; Inland Fisheries v. Holyoke Water Power Co., 104 Mass. 446; Sherman v. Smith, 1 Black (U. S.) 587; Massachusetts General Hospital v. State Mut. L. Assur. Co., 4 Gray (Mass.) 227; Fitchburg R. Co. v. Grand Junction R., etc., Co., 4 Allen (Mass.) 198; Com. v. Eastern R. Co., 103 Mass. 254; 4 Am. Rep. 555; Albany Northern R. Co. v. Brownell, 24 N. Y. 345, overruling Miller v. New York, etc., R. Co., 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 513; State v. Northern Cent. R. Co., 44 Md. 131; Worcester v. Norwich, etc., R. Co., 109 Mass. 103; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, and distinguishing Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 319, determined that the statute in question operated as an amendment to the defendant's charter, and was of such a character as to constitute a proper and legal exercise of the state's reserved power to amend corporate charters; and the fact that a penalty was attached to the requirement contained in the statute, did not in any wise militate against its being an amendment to the charter. Citing, with approval as to this last point, Shaffer v. Union Min. Co., 55 Md. 74.

A question was made upon the argument whether the statute was to be deemed an exercise of the police power of the state. In regard to this, the court said: "While, if it were a police power, there can be no question of the propriety of its exercise, yet the converse is not true, viz., that if it is not a police power, it would necessarily be unreasonable and an invalid exercise of the power reserved to the general assembly to amend charters. As this act applies only to corporations and is, therefore, intended to remedy evils presumably attaching to them only, we do not, in our view of the case, consider it necessary to consider that point further."

The point was made by counsel that the power to contract, granted in the charter, was such property of the defendant that modifying or limiting it by the general assembly was taking away the defendant's property without compensation. In negating this position, the court said: "The property of a corporation that cannot be taken away by the general assembly through the exercise of its reserved power is such property as, upon the dissolution of the corporation, would belong to its creditors and stockholders, and not a privilege it derived from the creating power, and which it was agreed, upon accepting the charter, might be amended at will by the general assembly." It was argued that the statute would prevent contracts for payment by the piece or job, but the court construed it differently, saying: "If employees are to be paid by a time standard, then they must be paid weekly; but if they are to be paid by the piece, then wages are not 'earned' until the piece is done, and the wages to be paid weekly are the wages 'earned' to within nine days of the date of payment." Continuing, the court said: "It has been urged that chapter 918 is unconstitutional, because it interferes with the rights of employees to make such contracts with a corporation as they see fit. No inhibition is placed upon employees to make such contracts as they choose with any person or body, natural or artificial, that is authorized to contract with them. But corporations are artificial bodies and possess only such powers as are granted to them, and natural persons dealing with them have no right to demand that greater power should be granted to corporations in order that they may make other contracts with such corporations than the corporations are authorized to enter into. Chapter 918 was clearly passed in the interest of the employee, and it is not easy to see how it would operate to his disadvantage. If he did any labor under a time contract which the corporation was not authorized to make, he would be paid, not under the contract, but under a quantum meruit, every week. Stress was laid upon the fact that chapter 918 applied only to certain kinds of corporations, as it does not include religious, literary, or charitable corporations." The court dismissed this question with the following observation: "The excepted corporations rarely, if ever, have capital stock; rarely, if ever, are prosecuted merely for pecuniary gain, and, being for the spiritual, mental, and physical elevation of mankind, would not come within the ends to be subserved by the act as to other corporations. The different aspect from other corporations with which they are regarded by the state is clearly indicated by the constitutional provision regarding petitions for acts of incorporation in general, presented to the general assembly, to be continued until another election of members shall have taken place, and public notice thereof shall have been given; whereas, petitions for acts of incorporation for religious, literary, or charitable purposes may be acted on at any time without such continuance and notice. Rhode Island constitution, art. 4, § 7. We fail to see any force in the objection that an invidious distinction has been made in favor of such corporation." The circumstance of the inclusion of cities in, and the exclusion of towns from, the operation of chapter 918, in the opinion of the court, required no consideration, for, as public corporations, they are governed by rules of law not applicable to the corporation in question, and the only inquiry being whether the statute was constitutional so far as related to the latter.

But in Illinois, a somewhat similar statute¹ was declared unconstitutional, as constituting a taking of property without due process of law, and as being special or class legislation.²

1. Illinois Act approved April 23, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the weekly payment of wages by corporations."

2. Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66; 44 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 1. In this case Shope, J., for the court, said: "Property, in its broader sense, is not the visible thing which may be the subject of ownership, but is the right of dominion, possession, and power of disposition which may be acquired over it. And the right of property preserved by the constitution is the right not only to possess and enjoy it, but also to acquire it in any lawful mode, or by following any lawful industrial pursuit which the citizen in the exercise of the liberty guaranteed, may choose to adopt. Labor is the primary foundation of all wealth. The property which each one has in his own labor is the common heritage. And as an incident to the right to acquire other property, the liberty to enter into contracts by which labor may be employed in such way as the laborer shall deem most beneficial, and of others to employ such labor, is necessarily included in the constitutional guaranty. . . . It is undoubtedly true that the people in their representative capacity may by general law render that unlawful in many cases which had hitherto been lawful. But laws depriving particular persons or classes of persons of rights enjoyed by the community at large, to be valid, must be based upon some existing distinction or reason, not applicable to others not included within its provisions. And it is only when such distinctions exist that differentiate in important particulars persons or classes of persons from the body of the people, that laws having operation only upon such particular persons or classes of persons have been held to be valid enactments. . . . The act under consideration applies not to all corporations existing within the state, nor to all that have been or may be organized for pecuniary profit under the general incorporation laws of the state. There is no attempt to make a distinction between corporations and individuals who may employ labor. The slightest consideration of the act will demonstrate that many corporations that may be and are organized and doing business under the laws are not included within the designated corporations. No reason can be found that would require weekly payments to the employees of an electric railway that would not require like payment by an electric light or gas company; to a corporation engaged in quarrying or lumbering that would not be equally applicable to a corporation engaged in erecting, repairing, or removing buildings or other structures; to mining that would not exist in respect to corporations engaged in making excavations and embankments for roads and canals, or other public or private improvements of like character; that will apply to a street or elevated railway that will not make it equally important in other modes of transportation of freight and passengers. The public records of the state will show, and it is a matter of common knowledge, that very many corporations have been organized and are doing business in the state which necessarily employ large numbers of men, that are not included within the act under consideration. The restriction of the right to contract affects not only the corporation and restricts its right to contract, but that of the employee as well.

It should be observed that in the first case all ordinary business corporations are within the purview of the statute, while in the other case, many corporations of this character are omitted from the statute. This explains one point of difference between the two decisions.

There are statutes in some of the states prohibiting corporations from withholding, under certain circumstances, the wages due their employees, and from paying them by orders redeemable by the corporations in goods or truck, in lieu of cash wages. These statutes have been discussed in other parts of this work, but they may be read with profit in connection with the present subject, and reference is here made to them.¹

WEIGHAGE.—A duty or toll imposed by the English law, to be paid for weighing merchandise, as for weighing wool at the king's beam, or for weighing other avoirdupois goods.²

... An illustration of the manner in which it affects the employee, out of many that might be given, may be found in the conditions arising from the late unsettled financial affairs of the country. It is a matter of common knowledge that large numbers of manufacturing were shut down because of the stringency in the money market. Employers of labor were unable to continue production for the reason that no sale could be found for the product. It was suggested in the interest of employees and employers as well as in the public interest that employees consent to accept only so much of their wages as was actually necessary to their sustenance, reserving payment of the balance until business should revive, and thus enable the factories or workshops to be opened and operated with less present expenditures of money. Public economists and leaders in the interest of labor suggested and advised this course. In this state and under this law no such contract could be made. The employee who sought to work for one of the corporations enumerated in the act would find himself incapable of contracting as all other laborers in the state might do. The corporations would be prohibited from entering into such a contract, and if they did so, the contract would be voidable at the will of the employee, and the employer subject to a penalty for making it. The employee would, therefore, be restricted from making such a contract as would insure to him support during the unsettled condition of affairs, and the residue of his wages when the product of his labor could be sold. The employees would, by the act, be practically under guardianship; their contracts voidable as if they were minors; their right to freely contract for, and to receive the benefit of their labor, as others might do, denied them." It was also said that the statute under consideration, not being a general law, was in conflict with the Illinois Constitution, art. 11, § 1, providing that "no corporation shall be created by special law, or its charter extended, changed, or amended, . . . but the general assembly shall provide by general laws for the organization of all corporations hereafter to be created."

1. STORE ORDER ACTS, vol. 23, p. 935; WAGES—STATUTES REGULATING PAYMENT OF, vol. 28, p. 517.

2. Hoffman v. Jersey City, 34 N. J. L. 176. Here it was said that this royal duty or toll had never been conferred upon weigh-masters and measures in any of the charters and ordinances of our cities.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.—(See FALSE WEIGHTS AND MEASURES, vol. 7, p. 796.)

I. Definition, 49.

II. Power to Regulate, 49.

III. Regulation and Inspection, 51.

IV. Public Weighers, Surveyors, etc., 54.

V. Contracts and Sales by Weight and Measure, 56.

I. DEFINITION.—A weight may be said to be a body of determinate mass, intended to be used on a balance or scale for measuring the weight or mass of the body in the other pan or part of the scale (as the platform in a platform-scale). A measure is a unit or standard adopted to determine dimension, volume, or other quantity of an object.¹

II. POWER TO REGULATE.—Power to regulate and fix a standard of weights and measures in the United States is vested by the constitution² in Congress, but up to the present time that body has not availed itself of the authority thus conferred.³ However, a mere grant of power to Congress, by the federal constitution, to regulate weights and measures, does not extinguish in the states the right over the same subject, until Congress shall have exercised the power given it, and, accordingly, numerous statutes have been passed by the various states in the attempt to reduce their weights and measures to a uniform system.⁴ In

1. Century Dict.

2. United States Const., art. 1, § 8.

3. The Miantinomi, 3 Wall. Jr. (U. S.) 46; Caldwell v. Dawson, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 123.

The only legislation upon the subject of weights and measures has been statutes prescribing the weights and measures to be used in invoices. United States Rev. Stat., § 2837; providing for the prescription of certain weighing and gauging instruments by the commissioner of internal revenue, § 3249; providing a penalty for use of false weights and measures by distillers, § 3306; providing the standard troy pound for the regulation of coinage and providing standard weights for mints and assay offices, §§ 3548, 3549; sanctioning the use of the metric system, § 3569; providing for the keeping on board merchant vessels certain weights and measures, § 4571; and providing for the distribution of standards amongst the several states for the use of agricultural colleges, § 5460.

4. This view is opposed in The Miantinomi, 3 Wall. Jr. (U. S.) 46, where it was said that "the regulation of weights and measures having been given by the constitution to Congress, it is doubtful whether the enactment of any state on the subject is of any validity whatever, even though Congress has wholly neglected to attend to this regulation;" but the rule laid down in the text is sustained by a number of text writers and decisions. Story's Const., § 1122; Cooley's Const. Lim. (6th ed.) 744; Pomeroy on Const. Law, § 410; Weaver v. Fegely, 29 Pa. St. 27; 70 Am. Dec. 151; Harris v. Rutledge, 19 Iowa 388; 87 Am. Dec. 441; Farmers', etc., Bank v. Smith, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 69; Caldwell v. Dawson, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 123. See Frazier v. Warfield, 13 Md. 279.

In Weaver v. Fegely, 29 Pa. St. 27; 70 Am. Dec. 151. Lewis, C. J., said: "In every state in the Union weights and measures have been constantly governed either by a standard established by a state statute, or by the common law of the state. The power of each state to establish its own common law on this subject has never been denied. If the states have this power, they certainly have the power to enact statutes. The power being acknowledged, it is not for the federal government to interfere with the manner of exercising it. To deny the existence of that authority now would overturn the practice which has uniformly been acted on by all the states during the whole period of their political existence." And in Harris v. Rutledge, 19 Iowa 388; 87 Am. Dec. 441, Judge Dillon, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Under the national constitution Congress has power to 'fix the standard of weights and measures.' This power it has never exercised, and until it is exercised, the respective states may, for themselves, regulate weights and measures."

In Caldwell v. Dawson, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 121, it was held that as Congress had not passed a law fixing the standard of weights and measures, as authorized to do by the federal constitution, the laws of the state must govern the subject. And in State v. Peel Splint Coal Co., 36 W. Va. 819, it was said that the inspection and regulation of weights and measures have always been regarded as proper subjects of police supervision.

The states may exercise powers granted to Congress where Congress fails to exercise them, save where the grant to Congress is in express terms exclusive, or the states are expressly prohibited from exercising it, or where the grant to one would make the exercise by the other absolutely and totally repugnant. Thus, it is held that states may pass bankruptcy laws when Congress fails to exercise its power on the subject. In Farmers', etc., Bank v. Smith, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 68, Tilghman, J., said: "The states are not to be divested of their power by inferences, unless the inferences be inevitable. Now that is not the case here. On the contrary the power contended for, on behalf of the states, is in perfect harmony with the power granted to Congress. A power to legislate on a subject of necessity at a time when Congress does not think it expedient to act. I think the constitution has received a practical construction on this point, although I know that the weighty opinion of Judge Washington has lately been pronounced to the contrary, but to that opinion is opposed the strong argument of the supreme court of New York in Livingston v. Van Ingen, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 507, in which it was adopted as a principle that in cases where power is affirmatively vested in Congress, and not expressly taken away from the states, they may go on to legislate until their laws come into collision with the acts of Congress. By practical construction, however, I do not mean judicial decision, but practice sanctioned by general consent. In the same section of the constitution from which Congress derives its power to establish a uniform system on the subject of bankruptcies, they have also given to them the power to fix the standard of weights and measures. This they have never done, but the states have regulated them at their pleasure, and, I believe, without question."

The following note is appended to the report of Mays v. Jennings, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 102: "By an order of Congress, June 5, 1836, a set of standard weights and measures, similar to those in use in England anterior to the passing of the 'Act of Uniformity,' in May, 1834, was prepared by Mr. Hassler, for the use of each customhouse, and for each state. Hence, the old measures of England, superseded by the imperial system, with such modifications as local customs or state laws have ingrafted upon it, may be regarded as the general standard adopted in this country. Most of the states of the Union have attempted to reduce their standards of weights and measures to a uniform system, and numerous laws have been enacted with that view; but so far from succeeding in their object, they have had, in most instances, an opposite effect. There are but few states in which the proportions of their measures are required by law to be the same—lineal, superficial, and cubic measures excepted—although they may bear the same names; and owing to the difficulty of enforcing new regulations, strong prejudices against any innovation, and a constant influx of settlers from one state into another, and from various countries of Europe, who bring their own accustomed weights and measures, uniformity cannot be said to exist in any state of the Union. In this country, as in England and France before their new systems were adopted, local consumers do not feel the whole disadvantage of this confusion; but merchants and others, who make large sales or purchase in different parts of the country, often experience serious difficulties in converting to their own local standards the quantities expressed according to another rate. The proportion which one standard bears to another is not always easily obtained; and when it is, the calculations to be

England the subject is regulated by the Weights and Measures Act of 1878, and subsequent statutes.¹

III. REGULATION AND INSPECTION.—Laws and ordinances regulating the character of weights and measures to be used,² and making provision for their being periodically inspected and stamped by a duly authorized officer, are not unreasonable.³ The test is usually required to be made with reference to the standards in the possession of the proper officer of made are often long and difficult, and may not always give an accurate result." Hunt's Merchants' Magazine, vol. iv., p. 344; McCulloch's Commercial Dict., p. 370.

In Alabama, legal weights of agricultural products of the state were established by Act of February 18th, 1891. Acts 1890-91, No. 596, p. 1353. And in California, general provisions were enacted in 1891 establishing a standard of weights and measures. California Stat. 1891, ch. 263, p. 487. And in Idaho a uniform standard of weights and measures was established and the office of state sealer and inspector created. Idaho Laws 1890-91, p. 204. In Massachusetts, standard weights, measures, and balances are provided for, and also the testing of weights, measures, and balances of merchants. Massachusetts Acts 1890, ch. 426, p. 325.

1. 41 & 42 Vict., ch. 49. And see the Weights and Measures Act of 1889, 52 & 53 Vict., § 21.

2. Snell v. Bellville, 30 U. C. Q. B. 81. The by-law in this case provided that every person selling meat or articles of provision by retail, whether by weight, count, or measure, should provide himself with scales, weights and measures, but that no spring balance, spring scale, spring steelyards, or spring weighing machine should be used for any market purpose. Wilson, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Nor is there any reason to say that the prohibition of the use of spring balances, etc., is beyond their power either. It is well known that these springs become affected by use and by the change of temperature so as not to remain true."

3. People v. Rochester, 45 Hun (N. Y.) 102. In this case it was held that the common council of Rochester was authorized by the provisions of its charter to make an ordinance providing that "it shall be the duty of the city sealer, and he is hereby authorized to inspect and examine at least once in every six months hereafter, and as much oftener as he thinks proper, all weights and measures used by any corporation, merchant, retailer, trader, or dealer for weighing or measuring, such weights and measures shall be inspected at the place or places where the same are kept for use, but if such weights and measures shall be found unconformable to the standard, they shall be sent by the owner or owners thereof to such place in said city as the sealer shall direct, for the purpose of being sealed, within three days after such owner or owners shall be required to do so by said sealer."

Under the general law relating to weights and measures, and the city charter of 1834, the council of Cincinnati had the power to appoint an inspector or sealer of weights and measures, and to enforce by fine the use of weights and measures sealed by such inspector. Huddleson v. Ruffin, 6 Ohio St. 604.

By Massachusetts Gen. Stat., ch. 51, § 11, it is provided that every sealer of weights and measures shall annually in May advertise in some newspaper, or put up notifications in different parts of the city or town, for every inhabitant who uses weights and measures for the purpose of buying and selling, and for public weighers who have the same, to bring in their weights, measures, etc., to be sealed and adjusted, and who shall forthwith adjust and seal all weights and measures brought to him for that purpose. Section 16 provides that any person who sells by any other weights or measures than those which have been adjusted as before provided, shall forfeit a sum not exceeding twenty dollars for each offense. There being no other provision for sealing weights and measures than that provided in section 11, the necessary construction is that persons using weights and measures must have them sealed by the sealer of the town in which he lives, and therefore it was held that where a plaintiff was an inhabitant of Stow, and sold beef by weights and scales which had been tested in Boston, the sale was illegal. Smith v. Arnold, 106 Mass. 269.

Minnesota Gen. Stat., ch. 21, § 11, contains provisions for a penalty for selling or disposing of goods, wares, or merchandise by unsealed and unproved scales or measures, and such provision implies a prohibition. Such sales, therefore, are illegal, and no recovery can be had for the price against the purchaser. Bisbee v. McAllen, 39 Minn. 143.

Under Massachusetts Stat. 1859, ch. 206, § 4, providing that milk shall be sold in wine measure and that all persons engaged in selling milk, shall annually cause to be sealed by the sealer of weights and measures, all cans used in the buying or selling of milk at wholesale, it was held that although the sealer refused to seal at the price allowed by statute, the seller could not recover the price. Miller v. Post, 1 Allen (Mass.) 434.

By the Georgia Code, § 1592, ordinaries are required to give notice by publication or otherwise when standard weights and measures are obtained by them, and under the general rule that all public officers are presumed to do their duty, the ordinaries will be presumed to have given such notice. But a failure to give such notice would not relieve one selling goods by weights and measures from his obligation to have them duly marked as required by section 1589. Finch v. Barclay, 87 Ga. 393.

Where the weights or measures have once been stamped or sealed as required by law, but the stamp or seal has become obliterated by time and use, the person using them is not liable to the penalty imposed for the use of unstamped weights and measures, provided such weights or measures be otherwise unobjectionable. Starr v. Stringer, L. R., 7 C. P. 383.

Under the English Licensing Act of 1872, § 8, all intoxicating liquor sold by retail and not in a cask or bottle, and not sold in a quantity less than half a pint, is required to be sold in measures marked according to the imperial standards. A publican who was asked for a pint of beer by a customer went into an inner room where he drew the beer into a marked measure and poured it into a jug, which he then brought into the room where the customer was sitting and handed it to him.

The customer could not see the beer drawn and never saw it while in the measure. It was held that the sale was not complete until the beer was handed to the customer, that the beer was not sold by a marked measure as required by statute and that the publican was properly convicted of an offense thereunder. Addy v. Blake, 19 Q. B. Div. 478.

The English statutes usually vest the power of appointing inspectors of weights and measures with the magistrate at quarter sessions. Reg. v. Jarvis, 3 El. & Bl. 640. In counties of cities and counties of towns, to which a court of quarter sessions has been granted under 5 & 6 Will. IV., ch. 76, the recorder has the powers relating to inspectors of weights and measures usually given to the magistrates in quarter sessions assembled. Reg. v. Hull, 8 Ad. & El. 638; 3 N. & P. 595; 1 W. W. & H. 385. But see Duly v. Sharwood, 6 El. & Bl. 830; 3 Jur. N. S. 63.

The Statute of 37 Geo. III., ch. 143, § 1, by which the justices at their respective petty sessions within the divisions, districts, and other places of the several counties of England, were authorized to appoint examiners of weights and balances, extends only to such divisions, etc., as were known and recognized at the time when the act was passed, and therefore such appointment made at petty sessions by two justices for a district which they had, without the consent of the other magistrates, created within the last five or six years, was held illegal. Rex v. Devon, 1 B. & Ald. 588.

Scales Kept in Stock for Sale.—The Pennsylvania Act of April 15th, 1845, which provided for the inspection and sealing of weights and measures, does not require the maker, vendor, or proprietor of beams, scales, weights and measures kept in stock for sale, to have them tested and sealed, but is obligatory and penal only as to such scales, weights, etc., as are in actual use for the measuring and weighing of commodities bought and sold. Stolle v. Gabel, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 616.

Must Act Within His District.—The inspector, in the performance of his duties, must confine himself to the district for which he is appointed, and if he knowingly stamps weights sent to him for that purpose by a person residing within a district for which another inspector has been legally appointed, he will, under some statutes, incur a penalty therefor. Reg. v. Skelton, 1 El. & El. 816; 5 Jr. N. S. 1347.

the state,¹ and where anyone is found using false weights and measures, provision is usually made for the seizure of such false instruments² and the punishment of the offender.³

Earthen Vessels.—Earthenware jugs, or drinking cups ordinarily used as imperial measures by a publican in his business, although not stamped as measures and exempted by 5 & 6 Wm. IV., ch. 63, § 21, from being so stamped, are, nevertheless, measures within section 28. Reg. v. Aulton, 3 El. & El. 568; 30 L. J. M. C. 129.

Penalty for Use of Unstamped Measure.—Where goods are sold in improved scales or measures in violation of law, no recovery can be had for the price against the purchaser. Bisbee v. McAllen, 39 Minn. 143.

Measurement in Evidence—Proof of Conformity with Standard.—By the New York Laws 1851, ch. 134, § 33, it is provided that "no surveyor shall give evidence in any cause, pending in any of the state courts or before arbitrators, respecting the survey and measurement of lands which he may have made, unless such surveyor shall make oath, if required, that the chain or measure used was conformable to the standards which were the standards of the state at the time at which the survey was made." It was held that this applies not to measurements of quantity of an excavation, but only to surface surveys. McManus v. Gavin, 77 N. Y. 36.

1. According to Howell's Michigan Ann. Stat., ch. 34, it is unlawful to allow any test of scales or weights except by reference to the standards in the state treasurer's office. McGeorge v. Walker, 65 Mich. 5. And see Finch v. Barclay, 87 Ga. 393.

An inspector is not authorized in seizing any weight without having first compared it with the standard, in order to ascertain whether it is just or not. Kershaw v. Johnson, 1 C. & K. 329.

2. Under 5 & 6 Wm. IV., ch. 63, earthen vessels were liable to seizure if ordinarily used as measures, and if found on examination to be unjust. Washington v. Young, 5 Exch. 403. And see Reg. v. Aulton, 3 El. & El. 568.

But where, under a city ordinance requiring baskets used for the sale of fruits and vegetables to have the fractional parts of a bushel contained in each, marked or stamped thereon, or else to be forfeited with their contents, the clerk of the city market seized several baskets of apples and forfeited them as offered for sale in unmarked baskets, it was held in replevin therefor that as no act of the legislature expressly authorized the forfeiture, the city council had no power to inflict that penalty for the violation of the ordinance. Phillips v. Allen, 41 Pa. St. 481; 82 Am. Dec. 486.

Under 5 & 6 Will. IV., ch. 63, § 28, weighing machines are not forfeited, though unjust, although weights and measures are; and consequently where a jury held that a pair of scales were a weighing machine, it was held that the inspector was not authorized in seizing them. Thomas v. Stephenson, 2 El. & Bl. 108; 17 Jur. 597; 22 L. J. Q. B. 258; 75 E. C. L. 107.

Where a spring balance is against the seller and in favor of the buyer, they are not liable to seizure as being false and unjust. Booth v. Shadgett, 8 L. R. Q. B. 352.

3. See FALSE WEIGHTS AND MEASURES, vol. 7, p. 796.

By the English Weights and Measures Act of 1889 (52 & 53 Vict., § 21) it is provided that any inspector of weights and measures, or officer appointed for the purpose by the local authority, may, at all reasonable times, enter any building or part of a building or other place in which coal is sold, or kept, or exposed for sale, and may stop any vehicle carrying coal for sale and for delivery to a purchaser, and may test any weights and weighing instruments found in any such place or vehicle, and may weigh any load, sack, or other less quantity of coal found in any such place or vehicle which is in the course of delivery to any purchaser, and that if it appears to a court of summary jurisdiction that any load, sack, or less quantity so weighed is of less weight than that represented by the seller, the person selling, or keeping, or exposing the coal for sale, or the person in charge of the vehicle, as the case may be, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds. And it was held that in order to convict the seller of coal of an offense under this act there

The inspector may, under his general warrant and appointment, enter any shop within his district at all seasonable times to examine and seize false weights and measures, and need not have a special warrant for each individual case.¹

By custom in some of the manors in England, the leet jury had authority to examine, break, and destroy all weights and measures found by them to be false.²

IV. PUBLIC WEIGHERS, SURVEYORS, ETC.—A state or municipality may, in the exercise of its police power, appoint public or licensed weighers, surveyors, etc., and provide that all sales of certain commodities, such as hay, grain, etc., shall be upon the weight or quantity as ascertained by such weighers or surveyors,³ must be an actual representation by him as to the weight of the coal sold, and that a representation made to an inspector by a servant in charge of a vehicle carrying coal for delivery to a purchaser was not of itself the representation of the master, so as to make him liable under this section. Roberts v. Woodward, 25 Q. B. Div. 412.

If a purchaser knows that he is receiving a less quantity than the law requires the measurement to contain, and consents to receive it, the seller cannot be convicted of selling at a less weight and measure than prescribed by law.

In Blanchard v. State, 3 Ind. App. 395, New, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "If Keys, the purchaser of the coal, knew that eighteen hundred pounds was all he was to get for a twenty-five bushel load, was not deceived in the weight, and was satisfied with the amount he received, we do not see how it can be said that he was cheated or defrauded by the appellant, nor does the evidence fairly tend to show that it was the purpose of the appellant to wrong him."

Penalties imposed on the seller of coal for every sack deficient in weight, are recoverable by action. Collins v. Hopwood, 15 M. & W. 459; 16 L. J. Exch. 124.

Proof of Measure.—The contents of measures are not to be proved but by a production in court. Chenie v. Watson, Peake's Add. Cas. 123.

1. Hutchings v. Reeves, 9 M. & W. 747; 6 Jur. 439; Kershaw v. Johnson, 1 C. & K. 329. And the same privilege extends to a servant assisting such inspector in the discharge of his duty, but who has not himself received any warrant or authority in writing from the quarter sessions or a justice of the peace. Hutchings v. Reeves, 9 M. & W. 747; 6 Jur. 439.

2. Wilcock v. Windsor, 3 B. & Ad. 43. But all the jury must be sufficiently near to concur in the condemnation of the scales. Holland v. Heath, 2 Jur. 234. And see Sheppard v. Hall, 3 B. & Ad. 433.

A custom to swear the jurors at one court-leet to inquire and return their presentments at the next court, is bad in law. Davidson v. Moscrop, 2 East 56.

Any one obstructing the jury in the execution of their duties in examining weights and measures, may be amerced, but the presentment should state what the act of obstruction is. Frost v. Lloyd, L. R., 9 Q. B. 130; 11 Jur. 59; 16 L. J. Q. B. 13.

3. State v. Tyson, 111 N. Car. 687; Johnson v. Martin, 75 Tex. 33.

Laws requiring articles to be inspected, or weighed and measured before being sold, are in the nature of police regulations, and valid. Ordinances regulating the traffic in all kinds of products and prohibiting their sale except upon the certificate of weight according to public scales, are common to all cities. Gaines v. Coates, 51 Miss. 335; Yates v. Milwaukee, 12 Wis. 673. But municipalities have only power to pass such ordinances when the authority is specially conferred by the legislature. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, vol. 15, p. 1175.

An ordinance requiring oats to be weighed by the public weighmaster before being offered for sale, and imposing a penalty for its violation, is not unconstitutional. Raleigh v. Sorrell, 1 Jones (N. Car.) 49. And so, also, are ordinances requiring all hay sold within the municipality, or brought there to be used therein, to be weighed upon the hay scales of the corporation. Gass

v. Greenville, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 62; Yates v. Milwaukee, 12 Wis. 673.

A city ordinance prohibiting the sale of any timber brought into the city for sale without a survey, does not apply to timber delivered there to be used for a specific purpose under a special contract made elsewhere. Briggs v. A Light Boat, 7 Allen (Mass.) 287.

Where a city ordinance, passed under due authority of law, provides that every person who shall sell or purchase any lumber not surveyed, marked, or numbered as required should forfeit and pay a penalty for each offense, "provided, however, that lumber may be sold to, or purchased by, any person for his own use, not intended to be sold again by him, without being surveyed, marked, or numbered as aforesaid, and that in such case, if the purchaser so request, the surveyor shall not be required to number and mark such lumber but only to survey the same," it was held that a sale of lumber to a person for his actual use without being surveyed was not in violation of the city ordinance, and that the seller might recover the price. Howe v. Norris, 12 Allen (Mass.) 82.

There can be no doubt that lumber could be sold in the bulk or lump, so much payable for the whole, and no survey would be necessary. There would be no need of the statutory protection in such case, but when lumber is sold, the price of which is to depend upon the number of thousands of feet, which is to be ascertained by the survey or inspection of some person, the surveyor must be an official surveyor, or the sale is void and the seller can not recover the price. Richmond v. Foss, 77 Me. 590.

Maine Rev. Stat., ch. 41, § 2, provides that firewood and bark are to be measured by a sworn measurer before being sold, but this does not apply to trimmings of lumber consisting of small pieces when they are sold under a contract, whereby the purchaser agrees to take all that should be made at the seller's mill at fifty cents per cart load. Duren v. Gage, 72 Me. 118. And a statute which requires lumber of any kind to be surveyed or measured to ascertain its quantity, does not apply to labor in any way expended on lumber, though to be paid for according to the thousands of cords—it only applies to sales of lumber. Bruce v. Sidelinger, 82 Me. 318.

In Stokes v. New York, 14 Wend. (N.

Y.) 87, it was held that an ordinance of the city of New York requiring anthracite or hard coal to be weighed by weighers appointed by the corporation, was a valid by-law, not unreasonable or in restraint of trade, and that a penalty imposed for violation of it could be enforced by action. And see State v. Peel Splint Coal Co., 36 W. Va. 819; Charleston v. Rogers, 2 McCord (S. Car.) 495.

Where a statute requires coal delivered in sacks to be weighed if required, each sack with the coal, and afterward each sack without the coal, it was held that a weighing by putting the sacks of coal successively in one scale against weights equal to the weight of which each sack should contain and an empty sack in the other scale, was not a weighing according to the statute. Meredith v. Holman, 16 M. & W. 798; 16 L. J. Exch. 126.

It is provided by the Massachusetts Gen. Stat., ch. 49, §§ 187, 190, that coal when sold in quantities of five hundred pounds or more, except by the cargo, shall be sold by weight, and that on or before the delivery of such coal the seller shall cause the same to be weighed by a sworn weighmaster, and a certificate of the weight thereof signed by the weigher shall be delivered to the buyer, or his agent, at the time of delivery of the coal, a violation of which renders the seller liable to a penalty. It was held that no action would lie to recover the price of such coal unless these requirements are complied with. Libbey v. Downey, 5 Allen (Mass.) 299.

The statute in Maryland, requiring grain which is brought to the city of Baltimore by water, to be weighed by the weigher general, does not apply to grain brought by water and carried through elevators. Gill v. Cacy, 49 Md. 243.

Under an act to provide for the inspection, measuring, and weighing of grain in the city of Baltimore, it was held that the weight of wheat might be ascertained by weighing one bushel in every sixty according to the long established usage of the city of Baltimore, notwithstanding a particular section of the act provided that the inspector should "carefully determine the weight of all wheat" that should be inspected by him. Frazier v. Warfield, 13 Md. 279.

A weighmaster under the charter and ordinances of Jersey City is an officer appointed for the convenience of commerce and trading, to determine weights for which they may charge a reasonable fee.¹ Unless prohibited by statute, a person not a public weigher may keep scales and obtain orders for weighing produce, without becoming liable to the public weigher.²

V. CONTRACTS AND SALES BY WEIGHT AND MEASURE.—Unless the contrary appears, contracts and sales are presumed to be made with reference to the standards of weights and measures as fixed by law, and local custom will not be allowed to control;³ but the and measurements when called upon to do so; and a conviction against a person who was employed by the seller to measure plaster as it was taken from the vessel and delivered on the cars because, as was alleged, he was exercising the office of weighmaster without appointment by the common council, is illegal. Hoffman v. Jersey City, 34 N. J. L. 172.

Weight of Bread.—A city ordinance regulating the weight of loaves of bread is a valid police regulation. Paige v. Fazackerly, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 394; Tanner v. Albion, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 121; People v. Wagner, 86 Mich. 594; 24 Am. St. Rep. 141. And even, it seems, the price. Guillotte v. New Orleans, 12 La. Ann. 432; Mobile v. Yuille, 3 Ala. 137; 36 Am. Dec. 441. And see POLICE POWER, vol. 18, p. 753.

In England, statutes have been frequently passed regulating the sale of bread and requiring it to be sold by weight. See Williams v. Deggan, 16 L. T. N. S. 492; Jones v. Huxtable, 8 B. & S. 433; L. R., 2 Q. B. 460; Mitton v. Troke, 20 L. T. N. S. 563; Reg. v. Kennett, 20 L. T. N. S. 656; L. R., 4 Q. B. 565; Reg. v. Wood, L. R., 4 Q. B. 559; 10 B. & S. 534; Hill v. Brownings, L. R., 5 Q. B. 453. And requiring all persons selling bread from any cart or other carriage to be provided with a pair of scales. Robinson v. Cliff, 1 Exch. Div. 294; 45 L. J. M. C. 109; 34 L. T. N. S. 689; Ridgway v. Ward, 14 Q. B. Div. 110; Daniel v. Whitfield, 15 Q. B. Div. 408.

Prescriptive Right to Weigh.—The right of a corporation by custom to measure all coals imported into the port of London was not converted by the act of 5 & 6 Will. IV., ch. 63, into a right to weigh. Smith v. Cartwright, 6 Exch. 927; 20 L. J. Exch. 401.

1. In Yates v. Milwaukee, 12 Wis. 676, Cole J., said: "We do not think that the charge for weighing a load of hay and giving a certificate of the weight, was exorbitant. It was but twelve cents—a trifle, when we take into account the cost and expense of procuring and keeping up such scales." And see Goody v. Penny, 9 M. & W. 687; Mills v. Furnell, 2 B. & C. 899; 4 D. & R. 561.

In State v. Tyson, 111 N. Car. 687, the fee was eight cents for weighing a bale of cotton, one-half to be paid by the buyer and one-half by the seller, and it was held a valid and reasonable regulation.

2. Watts v. State, 61 Tex. 184.

But one who is not in a public position as weighmaster, bound to weigh for all persons, but who has scales designed for weighing heavy articles, and does such weighing for a fee, is bound to use only reasonable diligence to know that his scales are correct, and reasonable care to avoid mistakes in using them. McGeorge v. Walker, 65 Mich. 5.

3. Custom, Etc.—Where a covenant was made for the delivery of a given number of barrels of corn, the quantity should be ascertained by the bushel measure, as fixed by law, and not by weight and neighborhood custom, which cannot be permitted to control law. Mays v. Jennings, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 102.

In Pennsylvania, 2,000 pounds constitute a ton. In Evans v. Meyers, 25 Pa. St. 114, where a contract was made for a given number of tons of iron, it must be considered to have been made in reference to the act which declares a ton to be 2,000 pounds, and it was an error to admit evidence of a local custom giving 2,268 pounds to a ton, which existed where the contract was made, to control the statute. See also Weaver v. Fegely, 29 Pa. St. 27; 70 Am. Dec. 151. A contrary view was held in The Miantinomi, 3 Wall. Jr. (U. S.) 46, where the court, in effect, said: When parties contract for any material by weight, using terms that have come to us from times past with a definite meaning, such as ton, which has commonly been regarded as meaning parties may provide in the contract for a different standard and will be bound by such agreement,¹ unless the statute forbids the use of any other than the standard fixed by law.²

2,240 pounds, the mere fact that a state has undertaken to regulate weights and measures, and in discharge of such office, has fixed the ton at 2,000 pounds, will not dispense with the obligation to furnish the old measure.

In Harris v. Rutledge, 19 Iowa 388; 87 Am. Dec. 441, it was held that a contract for masonry at so much per perch should be construed to mean the standard perch as fixed by the statutes of the state, and that no implied contract to the contrary was competent. And see Caldwell v. Dawson, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 121.

A custom that every pound of butter sold in a particular market town shall weigh eighteen ounces, is bad. Noble v. Durell, 3 T. R. 271.

When a contract was made to deliver one thousand bushels of wheat, it was complied with by the vendor's tendering a quantity of wheat, equal in the aggregate to one thousand bushels statute weight, although it would not fill the statute measure of eight gallons to the bushel. Generally the term bushel in a contract calls for a quantity equal to eight gallons, but in respect to wheat, rye, and Indian corn an exception is made, and the term bushel is satisfied by a quantity equal in weight alone to the statute requisition, unless the parties have otherwise agreed. Milk v. Christie, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 103.

If the reddendum in an hospital renewed lease is so many quarters of corn, it will be understood to mean legal quarters. St. Cross Hospital v. De Walden, 6 T. R. 338. And a contract described as having been made for a certain number of bushels of corn must be considered as a contract for that number of statute bushels. Hockin v. Cooke, 4 T. R. 314.

Where a testator devised "forty-five acres of the lands of Dromquin, known as the house division" to A, "and fifty acres of the same lands" to B, it was held that extrinsic evidence was inadmissible to show that he meant Irish, and not statute, acres. O'Donnell v. O'Donnell, L. R., 1 Ir. Ch. 284.

1. Where the statute fixes the ton at 2,000 pounds, contracts of sale by the ton will be held to be for a ton of 2,000 pounds, but if the parties agree for the sale of so many tons, "2,240 pounds to the ton," the seller will be bound to furnish tons of 2,240 pounds. Sise v. Rockingham County, 62 N. H. 441; Harrison v. Mora, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 224. And a contract for the sale of a certain number of tons of iron by the ton "long weight" is not in contravention of the statutes 5 Geo. IV., ch. 74, and 5 & 6 Wm. IV., ch. 63, as it is a multiple of the standard pound and consequently such contract is valid. Giles v. Jones, 11 Exch. 393, affirming 10 Exch. 119.

2. By 22 & 23 Car. II., ch. 12, the buyer of corn by any other than the Winchester measure was subject to the penalty of forty shillings in addition to the value of the corn so bought. Rex v. Arnold, 5 T. R. 353. And a contract for the sale of corn by the hobbet was held to be in contravention of 22 Car. II., ch. 8, § 2, and, therefore, an action would not lie for the breach of it. Tyson v. Thomas, M'Clell. & Y. 119.

But 5 & 6 Wm. IV., ch. 53, § 6, abolishing the use of certain weights and measures, and section 21 enacting that any contract, bargain, or sale made by any such weights and measures should be wholly null and void, do not render void a contract entered into in the United Kingdom for the sale of goods to be weighed and measured by the weights and measures mentioned in section 6, unless such goods are also weighed and measured in England. Rosseter v. Cahlmann, 8 Exch. 361; 22 L. J. Exch. 128. And it seems that 5 Geo. IV., ch. 74, § 15, is not repealed by the above statute, and that consequently contracts by local weights may be lawfully made, if the proportion to the standard is expressed, though it is otherwise with respect to measures, all local measures being abolished by 5 & 6 Wm. IV., ch. 53, § 6. Giles v. Jones, 11 Exch. 393. Hence, the sale of wheat by the hobbet, which is the denomination of a measure in Wales, if the quantity delivered is to be determined by the weight, is a sale by weight and not by measure, and therefore not contrary to this last section, which applies to sales by measure only, and not to sales by weight. Hughes v. Humphreys, 3 El. & Bl. 954; 23 L. J. Q. B. 360.

Where malt was sold by a measure

WEIR.—A dam across a river.¹

WELL.—(See also UNDERGROUND WATERS, vol. 27, p. 425).—
See note 2.

called a hobbet, being a measure established by local custom, without specifying what proportion that measure bore to the standard as directed by 5 Geo. IV., ch. 74, § 15, and the parties afterwards settled their accounts inter alia as to the malt, it was held in an action by the plaintiff against the defendant that he might prove the settlement of accounts as a payment of the demand. Owens v. Denton, 1 C. M. & R. 711; 5 Tyr. 359.

1. Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N. J. L. 55. Connecticut Gen. Stat., tit. 23, § 2, provides that "whoever shall first make a weir for catching fish on any flat within any river, cove, creek, or harbor, shall not be interrupted in the enjoyment of it by any other person, etc." This statute is an ancient one and was passed before modern fishing pounds were used. It was held, however, that these pounds, being used for the same purpose as weirs and in substantially the same way, are to be regarded as weirs within the statute. Stannard v. Hubbard, 34 Conn. 375. The court, in this case, said: "The statute on which this claim is founded is an ancient one, passed at a time when, in this country, structures like the modern fishing pound were unknown. Still, as the structures of the petitioner and the respondents are used for the same purpose as the weirs in use at the time of the passing of the statute, and operate in the same way by leading the fish into an inclosure where they are retained until taken out of it by the fishermen, we are of opinion that they come within the meaning of the statute, and are weirs within any proper definition of the term; so that the question fairly arises whether the respondents' weir was an unlawful interruption of the one previously erected by the petitioner. And as they were both in the same harbor, and within the distance within which a second one cannot lawfully be erected so as to intercept the fish in their course to the first, and as the one last built did in fact to some extent thus interfere with and prevent the fish going to the petitioner's weir, the lawfulness of the last erection must, of course, turn upon whether the petitioner's weir was upon a 'flat' within the meaning of the statute."

2. Agreement to Dig a Well.—An agreement to dig a well does not imply that water other than surface water shall be obtained. Littrell v. Wilcox, 11 Mont. 83. The court said: "Now, as to the special contract to reach water. It cannot be seriously contended that it appears from the evidence that the plaintiffs ever agreed, in terms, to sink to water. But defendant founds his argument upon his construction of the word 'well;' that plaintiffs agreed to drill a 'well;' that a 'well' is a hole in the ground, containing water other than surface water; that when plaintiffs agreed to drill a 'well' they contracted to furnish an article meeting that definition, and that, if they did not produce a hole in the ground containing water other than surface water, they did not drill a 'well,' and cannot recover. Let it be observed here that nothing was said about price when the work was commenced and the contract made. The defendant himself selected the site for the proposed well. Nothing was said about plaintiffs undertaking to reach water. All that can be gleaned from the conversations of the parties is that plaintiffs were to dig a well. From this contract, and the circumstances, to construe an undertaking on the part of the plaintiffs to reach water or receive no pay, seems to us to do great violence to language, and to the ordinary transactions of sane men. It appears that the services of plaintiffs were worth what they charged. When plaintiffs went to dig a well, when they took a site selected by defendants, when no guaranty of reaching water was made, when no price was fixed for performing the services or reaching water, can a court for a moment regard it as within the contemplation of the parties, as shown from their words or their acts, that they used the word 'well' as meaning a hole in the ground, containing water other than surface water? We think not. Bouvier's Law Dictionary defines a 'well' as 'a hole dug in the ground in order to obtain water.' This is, to our mind, the only practical view. The object of a well is to obtain water. The well may be unsuccessful. The object of a mining shaft is to develop a mine that will pay

WELSH MORTGAGE—(See also MORTGAGES, vol. 15, p. 729).—

The Welsh mortgages, which are mentioned in the English books, though they have now gone out of use, resembled the vivum vadium of Coke, or the mortuum vadium of Glanville; for though in them the rents and profits were a substitute for the interest, and the land was to be held until the mortgagor refunded the principal, yet, if the value of the rents and profits was excessive, equity would, notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary, decree an account.¹

—an object not always attained. Under the circumstances of the case, we cannot construe the word 'well' as defendant insists; and he must depend wholly upon the construction of that word, for he utterly failed to prove any special contract in terms, and the jury so found."

Whether Well Includes the Land.—In Johnson v. Rayner, 6 Gray (Mass.) 110, the court said: "The single question arising on the construction of this deed is, whether these words convey a fee in the premises occupied and used as a well, or whether they purport to grant merely an easement or right to use them for a particular designated purpose; and it seems to us entirely clear that it is a grant of a fee. The deed conveys a certain, definite and specific parcel of land, describing it, not by metes and bounds, but by the use of a term which indicated the purpose to which it was then appropriated and the structure by which it was occupied. The term 'well' aptly designates the soil covered by and used with it. It is an artificial excavation and erection in and upon land, which necessarily, from its nature and the mode of its use, includes and comprehends the substantial occupation and beneficial enjoyment of the whole premises on which it is situated."

In Mixer v. Reed, 25 Vt. 257, the court, by Redfield, C. J., said: "The principal question in this case is, whether the defendant owned the land in which the well was, or only the right to use the water. John H. King, before his deed to Blodgett, seems to have owned the land and well. In that deed, he reserved it by the terms 'two-thirds of the well, on the above described premises, in common' with the grantee. This he conveys to defendant by the terms 'spring or well, situate,' etc. These terms all evidently mean the same thing, so that we can gather very little, properly, from any supposed difference between 'well' and 'well of water.' One might conclude, perhaps, that a well possibly might import land rather more distinctly than 'a well of water;' for we use the expression 'a dry well,' which is probably as much of a solecism as a dry spring. The question, after all, returns, whether a well imports the land in which it is dug and erected. We think it does, as much as stagnum, which is usually rendered pool, which is nothing more than a large spring, or standing water, or as gurgies, which is ordinarily rendered a whirlpool, or a deep spring, or pool, as it is translated in the notes of Coke, Litt. 1, ch. 1, § 1. And this writer, and all the writers on this subject, regard these words as conveying the land, covered with water. The well included, ex vi termini, not only the orifice which reached down to the water, but the whole opening in the earth, before it was stoned, and the stone, and the stone laid into the wall, and the water therein. And this, we think, must be regarded as the thing intended to be conveyed, and not the water merely, which only imports the right to use the water, and by which term nothing passes but the easement, or right to take the water."

1. 4 Kent's Com. (13th ed.), p. 137.

A Welsh mortgage is where the mortgagee enters at once and takes the rents instead of interest, and is by agreement, or distinct understanding, to have no remedy for the principal.

"It is true likewise, that it must have been a mortgage at first, or ab initio, and not by any subsequent parol agreement.

"This case was of that character, confessedly on both sides at first, in 1824. And if once a mortgage in any way, no subsequent or collateral agreement to prevent a redemption is allowed to bar it; as once a mortgage, it is always a mortgage until a foreclosure, regular and designed as one. 2 Vern. 520; 1 Eden R. 59; 7 Ves. 273; 4 Ves. 350." Bentley v. Phelps, 2 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 444.

WHARVES; WHARFAGE; WHARFINGERS.—(See also BOUNDARIES, vol. 2, p. 495; CARRIERS OF GOODS, vol. 2, p. 770; DOCKAGE, vol. 5, p. 848; DOCKS, vol. 5, p. 851; EMINENT DOMAIN, vol. 6, p. 509; LIENS, vol. 13, p. 574; MARITIME LIENS, vol. 14, p. 410; NAVIGABLE WATERS, vol. 16, p. 236; NAVIGATION, vol. 16, p. 270; NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, p. 386; PILOTS, vol. 18, p. 443; RIPARIAN RIGHTS, vol. 21, p. 411; SHIPS AND SHIPPING, vol. 22, p. 710; STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU, vol. 23, p. 903; WATERCOURSES, vol. 28, p. 943.)

- I. Definition, 60.
- II. In General, 61.
- III. Kinds of Wharves, 63.
 1. Public or Private, 63.
 2. Private, 64.
 3. Public, 64.
 4. Right to Erect Public Wharves a Franchise, 65.
- IV. Right of a Riparian Owner, 65.
 1. To Erect Wharves, 65.
 2. Extent of Riparian Owner's Right, 66.
 3. Limitations on Riparian Rights, 69.
- V. Rights and Duties of Municipalities Over Wharves, 72.
 1. Right to Erect, 72.
 2. Power Over Wharves, 73.
 3. Limitations on Rights of Municipalities, 77.
 4. Duties of Municipalities, 78.
- VI. Right to Access to Wharves, 79.
- VII. Remedies of Owners of Wharves, 82.
- VIII. Obligations and Duties of Wharf Owners, 83.
 1. To Keep in Repair, 83.
 2. Degree of Care, 84.
 3. Extent of Duty, 85.
 4. Notice of Defects, 85.
 5. Concealed Obstructions, 86.
 6. As to Depth of Water, 86.
 7. Duty of Lessee of Wharf, 87.
 8. Damage to Vessel on Sunday, 88.
- IX. Wharfage, 89.
 1. Definition, 89.
 2. Right to Charge, 89.
 3. Liability for Wharfage, 90.
 4. Improvements Necessary to Create Liability, 92.
 5. Rights of Lessee of Wharf, 92.
 6. Rates of Wharfage—Regulation of, 93.
 7. Right to Distrain for Wharfage, 95.
- X. Wharfinger (See CARRIERS OF GOODS, vol. 2, p. 770; WAREHOUSEMAN, vol. 28, p. 636), 95.
 1. Definition, 95.
 2. Nature of Liability, 96.
 3. When Responsibility Begins, 96.
 4. When Responsibility Ends, 97.
 5. Duty to Deliver Goods to Owner, 97.
 6. Estoppel to Deny Bailor's Title, 98.
 7. Wharfinger's Lien, 98.
 - a. On Goods, 98.
 - (1) Extent of Lien, 98.
 - (2) Advances for Freight, 99.
 - (3) Termination of Bailor's Liability, 100.
 - b. On Vessel, 100.
 - (1) For Wharfage Charges, 100.
 - (2) Priority, 101.
 - (3) Enforcement, 102.
 - c. Lien Under Statute, 102.
 8. Wharfinger's Interest an Insurable One, 102.

I. DEFINITION.—A wharf is a structure on the shore of a harbor, river, or other navigable water, for the convenience of loading or unloading vessels, and receiving and landing passengers.¹

1. Ex p. Easton, 95 U. S. 68; Geiger v. Filor, 8 Fla. 325. When the structure projects into the water it is a pier, and when there is no particular artificial structure, but the mere natural bank, it is generally known as a landing.

Any construction of timber or stone upon the bank of a nontidal stream, of such shape that a vessel may lay alongside of it with its broad side to the shore, is a wharf. Keokuk v. Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co., 45 Iowa 196. But a

II. IN GENERAL.—One of the special powers conferred by the legislature upon municipalities bordering upon navigable waters, is the authority to erect wharves and charge compensation for keeping them and their approaches in a safe condition.¹ But the authority of the states over such waters and their shores is of course subject to the constitution of the United States, and acts of Congress made in regulation of commerce.²

structure erected for ferry purposes, on a river bank, by permission of the common council of the city of New York, consisting of piles covered with flooring, is not a "pier" within the meaning of New York Laws 1857, ch. 563. Stevens v. Rhinelander, 5 Robt. (N. Y.) 285. Also, a paved street extending to the water's edge and used by vessels as a place for receiving and discharging freight is a wharf. Keokuk v. Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co. 45 Iowa 196; Geiger v. Filor, 8 Fla. 325.

"A wharf is a structure, on the margin of navigable waters, alongside of which vessels can be brought for the sake of being conveniently loaded or unloaded, and wharfage is the fee paid for tying vessels to a wharf, or for loading goods on a wharf or shipping them therefrom." Langdon v. New York 93 N. Y. 129.

The Charlestown Wharf Company were authorized to extend and maintain their several wharves, into the channel, as far as the line established for the harbor of Boston, with the right and privilege to lay vessels at the sides and ends of such wharves, and to receive wharfage and dockage therefor. At the passing of this act, the Charlestown Wharf Company were the proprietors of several wharves within the limits mentioned in the act, and of a sea wall built below high-water mark, and filled up behind to high-water mark, and used for the purpose of landing lumber and other things upon, with pier or pile wharves about eighty feet in width, projecting therefrom, toward the channel. It was held that the sea wall was a wharf within the meaning of the act, and that the proprietors were thereby authorized to extend the same along their whole front to the line of the harbor. Fitchburg R. Co. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 3 Cush. (Mass.) 58.

1. Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 82; The Wharf Case, 3 Bland Ch. (Md.) 383; Pollard v. Hagan, 3 How. (U. S.) 212; New Orleans v. U. S., 10 Pet. (U.

S.) 737; Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U. S. 80; Municipality v. Pease, 2 La. Ann. 538; Worsley v. Municipality, 9 Rob. (La.) 324; 41 Am. Dec. 333; 1 Dillon on Mun. Corp. (4th ed.), § 103.

That such power does not violate the constitution of the United States, see Cincinnati Packet Co. v. Catlettsburg, 105 U. S. 559.

Particular Municipalities.—For the rights and powers of the city of New York in respect to wharves, see Hill v. New York (Supreme Ct.), 18 N. Y. Supp. 399; Kingsland v. New York, 110 N. Y. 569; Williams v. New York, 105 N. Y. 419; Langdon v. New York, 93 N. Y. 129; Walsh v. New York Floating Dry Dock Co., 77 N. Y. 448; People v. Green, 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 505; People v. Mallory, 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 76; New York v. Huntington, 114 N. Y. 631; Hoeft v. Seaman, 38 N. Y. Super. Ct. 62; Bigler v. New York, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 253; Turner v. People's Ferry Co., 21 Fed. Rep. 90; The Craigendoran, 31 Fed. Rep. 87; Crocker v. New York, 15 Fed. Rep. 405.

Brooklyn.—Brooklyn v. New York Ferry Co., 87 N. Y. 204; Atlantic Dock Co. v. Brooklyn, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 242. New Orleans.—The Lizzie E., 30 Fed. Rep. 876; Silver v. Tobin, 28 Fed. Rep. 545; New Orleans v. Wilmot, 31 La. Ann. 65; New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Ellerman, 105 U. S. 166. Baltimore.—Hazlehurst v. Baltimore, 37 Md. 199.

For the right to collect wharfage for the use of certain wharves, constructed under a peculiar arrangement between the town commissioners and private parties, see Dugan v. Baltimore, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 357. Mobile.—Mobile v. Moog, 53 Ala. 561. Philadelphia.—The Volusia, 3 Wall. Jr. (C. C.) 375.

2. Cooley v. Philadelphia Port Wardens, 12 How. (U. S.) 296; Pollard v. Hagan, 3 How. (U. S.) 212; Cisis v. Roberts, 36 N. Y. 292; New Orleans Port Wardens v. Ship, etc., 14 La. Ann. 289; Port Wardens v. Prats, 10 Rob.

And the legislature in conferring these powers may make the cities repositories of them in such a manner as it deems expedient.¹ It may modify them or revoke them altogether, if in so (La.) 459; Chapman v. Miller, 2 Spears (S. Car.) 769; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 82; Jeffersonville v. Louisville, etc., Ferry Co., 35 Ind. 19; Mobile Harbormaster, etc. v. Southerland, 47 Ala. 511.

A state government may authorize the construction of wharves on navigable streams, within its own territorial limits, even below low-water mark, where the power of the Congress of the United States has not been exercised in the premises. Savannah v. State, 4 Ga. 26.

Local Ordinances.—An ordinance which demands of all steamboats which shall moor or land in a particular port, a sum measured by the tonnage of the vessel is in violation of the federal constitution, and void, and cannot be justified under the plea that it is intended as a compensation for the use of wharves built by the city. Cannon v. New Orleans, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 577.

An ordinance which provides that "steam packets and other vessels trading steadily and performing regular successive voyages from adjoining states of the Union, shall pay to the harbor master one cent per ton every three months," is void, as being a duty on tonnage. Alexander v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 3 Strobb. (S. Car.) 594.

But a city ordinance which authorizes the collection of a wharfage rate to be measured by the tonnage of the vessels which use the wharves, and estimated to be sufficient to light the wharves and to keep them in repair, and which may be in excess of their expenses, is not in conflict with the constitution or with any law of the United States. Ouachita Packet Co. v. Aiken, 121 U. S. 444.

Nor is an ordinance which provides for the levying of a tax on "money or capital invested in shipping" in contravention of the federal constitution, as being a regulation of commerce or a duty on tonnage or even as a preference of the ports of one state over the ports of another. State v. Charleston, 4 Rich. (S. Car.) 286.

"In view of the decisions there is no room to contend that a state statute fixing rates of compensation to be paid to a wharfinger for the use of his wharf by a vessel moored thereat, is a tax upon tonnage or an impediment to navigation." The Barge John M. Welch, 9 Ben. (U. S.) 507.

But a state statute which authorizes the levy of a tonnage tax on vessels owned in foreign ports, and entering its ports in pursuit of commerce, in order to defray the expenses of her quarantine regulations, is in violation of the federal constitution and void. Peete v. Morgan, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 581.

A statute of a state which enacts that the masters and wardens of a port within the state shall be entitled to demand and receive, in addition to other fees, the sum of five dollars, whether called on to perform any service or not, for every vessel arriving in port, is unconstitutional and void. Southern Steamship Co. v. New Orleans Port Wardens, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 31.

In Transp. Co. v. Parkersburg, 107 U. S. 691, Bradley, J., said: "A duty on tonnage is a charge for the privilege of entering, or trading, or lying in a port or harbor. Wharfage is a charge for the use of a wharf. Exorbitant wharfage may have a similar effect as a burden on commerce as a duty of tonnage has; but it is exorbitant wharfage, and not a duty of tonnage."

A city ordinance which compels vessels laden with the products of other states to pay, for the use of the public wharves of the city, fees which are not exacted from vessels laden with the products of its own state, is void. Guy v. Baltimore, 100 U. S. 434.

1. Waddingham v. St. Louis, 14 Mo. 190; Baltimore v. White, 2 Gill (Md.) 444; Wilson v. Inloes, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 351; Ravenswood v. Flemings, 22 W. Va. 52; 46 Am. Rep. 485; Weber v. State Harbor Com'rs, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 57; New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Ellerman, 105 U. S. 166.

It was held in Fuller v. Edings, 11 Rich. (S. Car.) 239, that where the owner of a plantation owned a private wharf which yielded him a considerable income, and the legislature authorized a public wharf to be made near the private one, on the same plantation, and directed the appointment of commissioners to estimate the amount of damage which should be made to the owner doing it does not deprive the cities of property actually acquired under the exercise of the power.¹

III. KINDS OF WHARVES.—1. Public or Private.—Wharves may be either public or private. Whether the one or the other depends, in case of dispute, upon the purpose for which they are built, the uses to which they have been applied, the place where located, and the character of the structure.²

"for the value of the premises taken for public use as well as for the damages generally to the same," the owner was not entitled to compensation for the damages he might sustain for the loss of income from his private wharf.

A grant of a right to erect a public toll wharf is not a contravention of the Mississippi Constitution, art. 1, § 1, which provides that no one shall have exclusive public emoluments or privileges from the community but in consideration of public service; such a grant is presumed to be for the public good. Martin v. O'Brien, 34 Miss. 21.

Unless clearly intended, no exclusive right of wharfage passes as incident to a grant, by the state, of land under water, below high-water mark, in a harbor or navigable stream. Turner v. People's Ferry Co., 21 Fed. Rep. 90. See also Charles River Bridge Co. v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420.

For effect of the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution on the power of the legislature to grant exclusive privileges, see Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36.

1. In New Orleans, etc., Co. v. Ellerman, 105 U. S. 172, Matthews, J., said: "Whatever powers the municipal body rightfully enjoys over the subject are derived from the legislature . . . and may be revoked at any time, not touching, of course, any property of the city actually acquired in the course of administration." See 1 Dillon on Mun. Corp. (4th ed.), § 103.

That a municipal corporation may be authorized to establish a public wharf upon private property on making compensation to the owner of the land, see Waddingham v. St. Louis, 14 Mo. 190; Iron R. Co. v. Ironton, 19 Ohio St. 299; Page v. Baltimore, 34 Md. 558; State v. Jersey City, 34 N. J. L. 390.

Cities, when authorized by the legislature, may build wharves on streets bordering on the Mississippi river, and make other improvements thereon. Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324; Illinois, etc., R. & Canal Co. v. St. Louis, etc., Elevator Co., 2 Dill. (U. S.) 70.

Notwithstanding a city has the right to erect and maintain wharves, the legislature may grant lawfully to a railroad company a portion of the water front for its own wharf purposes, free from the control of the city. New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Ellerman, 105 U. S. 166.

In respect to wharves, see Georgetown v. Chew, 5 Cranch (C. C.) 508.

2. Dutton v. Strong, 1 Black (U. S.) 23.

But it does not always follow because an individual owns a wharf that he always has a right to the exclusive enjoyment of it, for he may at the same time be obliged to let others use it upon the payment to him of a reasonable compensation as wharfage. Dutton v. Strong, 1 Black (U. S.) 23.

In Horn v. People, 26 Mich. 222, Campbell, J., said: "There is no instance in which the term 'public wharf' has been used in our legislation to indicate anything analogous to a dedication to any public use, like that of highways. Such a public right is unknown to the common law. Wharfage includes exclusive use, for longer or shorter periods, by each vessel, depending on the nature of its business, and the extent of its cargo. All that is meant in the charter by a public wharf is a wharf belonging to the city and to be used like any other wharf property. The term is applied as well to wharves on city property away from streets, as to wharves at the ends of streets." Compare Scott v. Layng, 59 Mich. 43.

A private wharf projecting into a navigable river is not private property to such an extent, that a person who temporarily goes upon it or fastens his vessel to it becomes thereby a trespasser. Degan v. Dunlap, 15 Phila. (Pa.) 69.

Wharves and piers of the city of New York are streets of the city, for the free passage of all citizens. Taylor v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 37 N. Y. 275.

When the grantees of a wharf have

2. Private.—If private, the public have no right to use them without the owner's consent, express or implied.¹

3. Public.—When, however, they are thrown open to the use of the public, a general license is conferred upon anybody to use them for all lawful purposes, and this license can be terminated only by notice and request to discontinue such use. The presumption is that the owner consents to such use.²

been in possession of it as originally built for fifty years, it is too late for anyone to dispute their title to it as built. Bedlow v. New York Floating Dry Dock Co., 112 N. Y. 263; Chicago v. Laffin, 49 Ill. 172. See also New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Hanning, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 649.

A right in private individuals to soil on a channel may be devoted to wharves and the like without being subject to the control of the public. Galveston v. Menard, 23 Tex. 349.

A legislative grant authorizing the grantee to erect a wharf, and conveying the right "to the use and occupancy of the adjoining land," with a provision that "it shall be used for none other than wharf purposes," for a specified time, confers an interest in the land sufficient to entitle the grantee to recover possession from a party who has deprived him of it. Frisbie v. McClernin, 38 Cal. 568.

Where the structure is not erected in any harbor or place where vessels are in the habit of resting, but is confined within the shore of the sea or the navigable waters of a lake, and has never been held as intended for such use by the public, no implication arises that the owner of the structure has consented that the public may use it. Dutton v. Strong, 1 Black (U. S.) 23.

The presumption is that a wharf erected by a city is for public use; and in the absence of an ordinance prescribing wharfage dues, a vessel is not liable to make payment to the city for using such wharf. Muscatine v. Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co., 45 Iowa 185.

The right to erect a wharf is founded either in the ownership of the soil, or the right of eminent domain. Jeffersonville v. Louisville, etc., Steam Ferry Co., 27 Ind. 100; 89 Am. Dec. 495.

That compensation is received for the use of a public wharf does not deprive it of its public character. See Galveston Wharf Co. v. Galveston, 63 Tex. 14.

The possession of a wharf, under color of title, is sufficient to put another claimant upon proof of a title as good as that of the person in possession. Linthicum v. Ray, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 241.

1. Public Wharves.—Christie v. Malden, 23 W. Va. 667.

The owner of a private wharf, by permitting others to use it, does not dedicate it thereby to the public, or give the right to use it without his permission. Whether one has an exclusive use of his own wharf depends, not upon whether it be erected above or below low-water mark, but solely upon the question in whom the title to the property is vested. O'Neill v. Annett, 27 N. J. L. 290; 72 Am. Dec. 364.

The fact that the expense incurred by a city in filling up a dock was raised in the same manner as if it were for paving and regulating the streets, will not have the effect of a dedication of the land so made to the public. Schermerhorn v. New York, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 119.

2. Use of Public Wharves.—Nicoll v. Gardner, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 289; Lansing v. Smith, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 9; 21 Am. Dec. 89; Dutton v. Strong, 1 Black (U. S.) 23.

There is an implied license to vessels upon navigable waters to enter and occupy docks adjacent to such waters, in the manner and for the purpose contemplated by their erection; but such license may be revoked by reasonable notice given by the owner of the dock to persons having vessels lying therein; and if the owner of such dock unfastens and casts loose a vessel lawfully moored at the same, without such notice, he is liable for the injury which may be occasioned to such vessel thereby. Heaney v. Heaney, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 625.

The owner of a wharf or landing on a navigable river has the right to prohibit its being used for unusual and unaccustomed purposes, such as the storage of lumber in such a way as to obstruct the free access to and from the vessels. Compton v. Hawkins, 90 Ala. 411; 24 Am. St. Rep. 823.

4. Right to Erect Public Wharves a Franchise.—While the public may make use of a private wharf, with the consent of the owner, the right to erect public wharves and to demand wharfage therefrom is a franchise derived only from legislative grant.¹

IV. RIGHT OF A RIPARIAN OWNER—1. To Erect Wharves.—The right of a riparian owner to construct wharves upon his own land bordering on navigable waters is generally recognized. This right, however, terminates at the point of navigability, unless special authority be granted, and is subject to the condition that its exercise does not obstruct or impede the paramount right of navigation.²

But the proprietor of a wharf who is obliged to permit the use of his wharves for the loading and unloading of vessels, cannot make a rule that no steam engines, except his own, shall use them for that purpose. Lincoln v. Pennsylvania Warehousing Co., 8 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 195. See further, on the same subject, Taylor v. Atlantic Mutual Ins. Co., 37 N. Y. 275; Schermerhorn v. New York 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 119.

Where a city, having rights in any premises, has parted with those rights, by her own repeated voluntary acts, any attempt to assume them, by depriving the public of the easement which they had acquired, or denying the purchasers of the lots the right of way, or the privilege of improving their property, except on the payment of wharfage or tolls, is illegal. Breed v. Cunningham, 2 Cal. 361.

1. Right to Erect Public Wharves.—People v. Broadway Wharf Co., 31 Cal. 34; Wharf Case, 3 Bland (Md.) 383; The Geneva, 16 Fed. Rep. 874; Carrollton R. Co. v. Winthrop, 5 La. Ann. 36; Municipality v. Pease, 2 La. Ann. 538; Worsley v. Municipality, 9 Rob. (La.) 324; 41 Am. Dec. 333; St. Martinsville v. Steamer "Mary Lewis", 32 La. Ann. 1293; State v. Jersey City, 25 N. J. L. 525; Pollard v. Hagan, 3 Howe (U. S.) 212; New Orleans v. U. S., 10 Pet. (U. S.) 735; Weber v. State Harbor Com'rs, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 57.

The right to erect public wharves "is a franchise, and cannot be exercised by an individual except by a grant for that purpose by the sovereign power, or by prescription. . . . The right to take wharfage or tolls being a charge upon the public and against common right, could not be granted, even by the crown, except upon some consideration of benefit to the public—as the erection of a wharf, the keeping of it in repair and the like; or in consideration of a right of way given to the public over the property of the individual to whom the toll was granted." Wiswall v. Hall, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 313.

The general assembly has authority to grant to corporations the right to make and maintain wharves, and the corporations, or their lessees, can build wharves with inclines or aprons. De Gruy v. Aiken, 43 La. Ann. 798.

2. Simons v. French, 25 Conn. 346; Kean v. Stetson, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 492; State v. Wilson, 42 Me. 9; Wetmore v. Atlantic White Lead Co., 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 70; Rice v. Ruddiman, 10 Mich. 125; Lorman v. Benson, 8 Mich. 18; Ensminger v. People, 47 Ill. 384; 95 Am. Dec. 495; Chicago v. Laffin, 49 Ill. 172; Bell v. Gough, 23 N. J. L. 624; Stevens v. Paterson, etc., R. Co., 34 N. J. L. 532; 3 Am. Rep. 269; Dutton v. Strong, 1 Black (U. S.) 23; St. Paul, etc., R. Co. v. Schurmeir, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 272; Weber v. State Harbor Com'rs, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 57; Irwin v. Dixon, 9 How. (U. S.) 10. And see generally, Lay v. King, 5 Day (Conn.) 72; Com. v. Shaw, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 9; Wilson v. Inloes, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 351; Fleet v. Hegeman, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 42; Pennsylvania v. Wheeling, etc., Bridge Co., 13 How. (U. S.) 519; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 713; O'Neill v. Annett, 27 N. J. L. 290; 72 Am. Dec. 364; Keypoint Steamboat Co. v. Farmers' Transp. Co., 18 N. J. Eq. 516; Fitchburg R. Co. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 3 Cush. (Mass.) 58; Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 435; 4 Am. Dec. 155; Sale v. Pratt, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 191; Bell v. Hull, etc., R. Co., 6 M. & W. 699.

"By the common law, the riparian owner has the right to establish a wharf on his own soil, this being a lawful use of the land. The right is judicially recognized in this country, and riparian proprietors on ocean, lake, or navigable river have, in virtue of their proprietorship, and without special legislative authority, the right to erect wharves, quays, piers, and landing places on the shore, if these conform to the regulations of the state for the protection of the public, and do not become a nuisance by obstructing the paramount right of navigation. This right has been exercised by the owners of the adjacent land from the first settlement of the country. The right terminates at the point of navigability, unless special authority be conferred, because at this point the necessity for such erections ordinarily ceases. Such structures are presumptively lawful where they are confined to the shore, and no positive law is violated in their erection." Dillon Mun. Corp. (4th ed.), § 106.

2. Extent of Riparian Owner's Right.—Any interference with the right of navigation constitutes a nuisance, the existence of which,

The owner of land on a navigable river has certain riparian rights, whether his rights extend to the middle of the stream or not, and these rights, though they must be enjoyed subject to general rules and laws of the legislature, are valuable and cannot be taken away without compensation. Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 497.

In East Haven v. Hemingway, 7 Conn. 186, Hosmer, C. J., said: "Proprietors on navigable rivers have a right to the soil covered by the water so far as they can occupy it; i. e., to the channel, with the exclusive privilege of wharfing and erecting piers in front of their land, but with this qualification that they do not impede the navigation of the water."

The owner of a lot upon the "water front" of San Francisco, as established by the Act of March 5, 1851, is not a riparian proprietor in the sense in which that term is used in the law of tide waters, and he has not such a right of entry upon a wharf erected by a stranger adjoining his lot, when his lot extends below low-water mark, that he can maintain ejectment for it. Dana v. Jackson Street Wharf Co., 31 Cal. 118; 89 Am. Dec. 164.

That rights of wharfage do not attach necessarily to grants of land by the state beyond low-water mark, see Weber v. State Harbor Com'rs, 18 Ware (U. S.) 57; Potomac Steamboat Co. v. Upper Potomac Steamboat Co., 109 U. S. 672. Compare Turner v. People's Ferry Co., 21 Fed. Rep. 90; also Langdon v. New York, 93 N. Y. 129.

As to the general power of legislature in making grants under water, see Gould v. Hudson River R. Co., 6 N. Y. 522; New York v. Hart, 95 N. Y. 443; Davenport, etc., R. Co. v. Renwick, 102 U. S. 180; Backus v. Detroit, 49 Mich. 110; 43 Am. Rep. 447.

In Grant v. Davenport, 18 Iowa 179, the court said: "In thus holding, it must be borne in mind that this wharf does not interrupt or interfere with the free navigation of the river. On the contrary, it rather assists than obstructs."

We entertain no doubt as to the right of the riparian proprietor (outside of any incorporated city or town), to erect wharves or landing places on the shores of navigable rivers, if they conform to state legislations (if any), and do not obstruct the paramount right of navigation. The right is expressly recognized in Dutton v. Strong, 1 Black (U. S.) 23, and we find no case to the contrary. If the proprietor's land is within the limits of an incorporated town or city, his right must yield to the paramount right (when the right is given by the law of its creation) of the corporation to build, erect, and regulate the wharves and landings." See also Atty. Gen'l v. Richards, 2 Anstr. 603; Atty. Gen'l v. Philpot, 2 Anstr. 607; Atty. Gen'l v. Cleaver, 18 Ves. Jr. 218; Rex v. Ward, 4 Ad. & El. 384; 31 E. C. L. 92; Rex v. Russell, 6 B. & C. 566; 13 E. C. L. 254; Atty. Gen'l v. Parmeter, 10 Price 379; Atty. Gen'l v. Burridge, 10 Price 350; Atty. Gen'l v. Forbes, 2 Myl. & C. 123; Ripon v. Hobart, 3 Myl. & K. 169; Mohawk Bridge Co. v. Utica, etc., R. Co., 6 Paige (N. Y.) 554; Atty. Gen'l v. Cohoes Co., 6 Paige (N. Y.) 133; Com'rs v. Wright, 6 Am. Jur. 185.

In Groton v. Hurlbut, 22 Conn. 178, Ellsworth, J., said: "It is time the public should understand that not every ditch in which the tide ebbs and flows, through the extensive salt marshes along the coast, and which serve to admit and drain off the salt water from the marshes, can be considered a navigable stream. Nor is every small creek in which a fishing skiff or gunning canoe can be made to float, deemed navigable; but in order to have this character, it must be however, must be proved and not presumed. A wharf even in navigable water is not a nuisance per se.¹

No consideration of convenience or utility will justify such unlawful obstructions.² It is not enough that a city council navigable for some general purpose useful to trade or business." Approved in Burrows v. Gallup, 32 Conn. 493; 87 Am. Dec. 186.

1. Wharf as Nuisance. — Dutton v. Strong, 1 Black (U. S.) 23; Rex v. Grosvenor, 2 Stark. 511; Rex v. Russell, 6 B. & C. 566; 13 E. C. L. 254; Rex v. Tindall, 6 Ad. & El. 143; 33 E. C. L. 26; Reg. v. Russell, 3 El. & Bl. 942; 77 E. C. L. 942; Com'rs v. Wright, 6 Am. Jur. 185; Colchester v. Brooke, 7 Q. B. 339; Gann v. Free Fisheries, 11 H. L. Cas. 192; Atty. Gen'l v. Cohoes Co., 6 Paige (N. Y.) 133.

In Reg. v. Betts, 16 Q. B. 1022, the defendant was indicted for maintaining a nuisance by building a bridge partly in the bed of a navigable river. The court said: "According to the authority of Lord Tenterden in Rex v. Russell, 6 B. & C. 566; 13 E. C. L. 254, and to the opinion of this court in Rex v. Ward, 4 Ad. & El. 384; 31 E. C. L. 92, it is for the jury to say whether an erection of this kind is a damage to the navigation or not. . . . The true question is whether a damage accrues to the navigation in the particular locality, and that is a question for the jury."

In Mohawk Bridge Co. v. Utica, etc., R. Co., 6 Paige (N. Y.) 554, where an injunction was sought to prevent a bridge being erected across the Mohawk river at the city of Schenectady, New York, the court said: "The principles upon which this court should proceed in granting or refusing relief by injunction in cases of this kind are correctly laid down by Lord Brougham in the recent case of Ripon v. Hobart, 3 Myl. & K. 169. If the thing sought to be prohibited is in itself a nuisance, the court will interfere to stay irreparable mischief, when the complainants' right is not doubtful, without waiting for the result of a trial. But where the thing sought to be restrained is not in itself noxious, but only something which may, according to circumstances, prove to be so, the court will refuse to interfere until the matter has been tried at law by an action."

2. Wisconsin River Imp. Co. v. Lyons, 30 Wis. 61.

In Atlee v. Northwestern Union Packet Co., 21 Wall. (U. S.) 389, the court, by Miller, J., said: "In all incorporated towns or cities located on navigable waters, there is in their charters, or in some general statute of the state, either express or implied power for the establishment and regulation of these landings. This may be done by the legislature of the state, or by authority expressly or impliedly delegated to the local municipal government. In all such cases there is exercised a control over the location, erection, and use of such wharves or landings, which will prevent their being made obstructions to navigation and standing menaces of danger. The wharves or piers are generally located by lines bearing such relation to the shore and to the navigable waters as to present no danger to vessels using the river, and the control which the state exercises over them is such as to secure at once their usefulness and safety. These structures are also allowable in a part of the water which can be used for navigation, on the ground that they are essential aids to navigation itself. The navigable streams of the country would be of little value for that purpose if they had no places where the vessels which they floated could land, with conveniences for receiving and discharging cargoes, for laying by safely until this is done, and then departing with ease and security in the further prosecution of their voyage. Wharves and piers are as necessary almost to the successful use of the stream in navigation as the vessels themselves, and are to be considered as an important part of the instrumentalities of this branch of commerce. But to be of any value in this respect they must reach so far into deep water as to enable the vessels used in ordinary navigation to float while they touch them, and are lashed to their sides. They must of necessity occupy a part of the stream over which a vessel could float if they were not there."

Where the owners of lots bordering on the Chicago river had erected docks thereon, and enjoyed the use of the same for a period of over twenty-five declares an obstruction to be a nuisance; it must be proved to be one in fact.¹

A riparian proprietor has an exclusive right to the use and improvement of his own water front between high and low-water mark; and the erection of wharves or other improvements upon the same by others, is an infringement of his rights as such owner.²

years, without complaint or interruption from any source, the court held that even if they were not riparian proprietors, and their boundaries did not extend beyond the water's edge, the corporate authorities could not declare the docks a nuisance. If a nuisance, they had become so by the act of the city, and it had no power to require their removal without first making compensation to the owners. Chicago v. Laflin, 49 Ill. 172.

In an indictment for building a wharf in a navigable river, the defendant showed that the wharf was a convenience to the public, as by its erection the channel of the river was kept clear. The court held that the question for the jury was whether the wharf occasioned any hindrance to the navigation of the river by vessels of any description, and not whether the erecting of the wharf had caused a benefit to the navigation in general. Reg. v. Randall, 1 C. & M. 496; 41 E. C. L. 272.

1. In Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 497, the court said: "It is a doctrine not to be tolerated in this country that a municipal corporation, without any general laws either of the city or of the state within which a given structure can be shown to be a nuisance, can, by its mere declaration that it is one, subject it to removal by any person supposed to be aggrieved, or even by the city itself. This would place every house, every place of business, and all the property of the city, at the uncontrolled will of the temporary local authorities." See also Atlee v. Northwestern Union Packet Co., 21 Wall. (U. S.) 389; Bainbridge v. Sherlock, 29 Ind. 364; 41 Ind. 35.

"So where a riparian proprietor had constructed a wharf which extended to, but did not encroach upon, the navigable part of the river, and which was not shown to be a nuisance in fact, it was held by the supreme court of the United States that the city within which the wharf was situated could not, under the charter power to establish docks and wharf lines, and restrain and prevent encroachments upon the river and obstructions thereto, pass an ordinance declaring the wharf to be an obstruction to navigation, and a nuisance, and ordering it to be summarily abated."

1 Dillon Mun. Corp. (4th ed.), § 111.

2 People v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 379.

In Hagan v. Campbell, 8 Port. (Ala.) 9, the court said: "It is clear that no part of such erections can be rested upon the lands of the riparian proprietor, nor can he be excluded from the use of the water, or denied other riparian rights."

If a private person constructs a wharf upon land belonging to a city, he acquires no rights in it apart from what belongs to the public at large, and in such an event, possession of the wharf could be recovered by the city in ejectment, and afterward used as the city thought expedient. Walker v. State Harbor Com'rs, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 648; Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. Atlee, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 479; People v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 379.

In Steers v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 51, the plaintiff owned the fee of the street extending to the river. He constructed a wharf on the water line and had the right to collect wharfage. The city, without his consent, built a pier at the end of the street, shutting the plaintiff's wharf off from the water. The court held that the pier belonged to the plaintiff by accretion, and that the city must account to him for all wharfage collected without allowing expense of collecting the same.

A steamboat company owning a wharf adjacent to the slips of a ferry company, has the same right of navigation in front of the slips as in any part of the river, but has no right willfully to obstruct the ferry company in the use of their slips. Delaware River Steamboat Co. v. Burlington, etc., Steam Ferry Co., 81 Pa. St. 103.

There is much conflict among the decisions as to the extent of the rights of a riparian proprietor. In some states he is regarded as owning to low-water mark; in others only to high-water

3. Limitations on Riparian Rights.—The rights of riparian proprietors in respect to the erection of wharves are subject to such limitations as the legislature may see fit to impose. It is therefore competent for the legislature to pass acts establishing harbor and dock lines, and to take away, without making compensation, the rights of proprietors to build wharves on their own land beyond the lines, even when such wharves would occasion no actual injury to navigation.¹ But a right of wharfage acquired mark; while in others a still different rule prevails. What the rule is in such state must be determined by consulting the statutes of that state. Even when the right extends only to high-water mark, the owner clearly has an inchoate right to use the lowland for improving his property and constructing wharves upon the same. But such a use gives him no property in the land under the water, and the state can transfer its right in such land to a stranger at any time before it is reclaimed by the owner. Wetmore v. Brooklyn Gas Light Co., 42 N. Y. 384; Ledyard v. Ten Eyck, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 102; State v. Jersey City, 25 N. J. L. 530. See also Simpson v. Neill, 89 Pa. St. 183.

1. In re Port Wardens Line, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 453; Hart v. Albany, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 571, affirming 3 Paige (N. Y.) 213; Hagan v. Campbell, 8 Port. (Ala.) 9; Mobile v. Eslava, 9 Port. (Ala.) 577; 33 Am. Dec. 325; Carrollton R. Co. v. Winthrop, 5 La. Ann. 36.

As to the power of the legislature in respect to making grants of lands under navigable waters, see Hoboken v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 124 U. S. 656, distinguishing Hoboken Land, etc., Co. v. Hoboken, 36 N. J. L. 540. For the leading case in New York on this point, see Langdon v. New York, 93 N. Y. 129.

In Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 53, the court said: "On the whole the court are of opinion that the act fixing a line within the harbor of Boston, beyond which no riparian proprietor should erect a wharf or other permanent structure, although to some extent it prohibited him from building such structure on flats of which he owned the fee, was a constitutional law, and one which it was competent for the legislature to make; that it was binding on the defendant and rendered him obnoxious to its penalties if he violated its provisions."

But in Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 498, the court, by Miller, J.,

said: "We are of opinion that the city of Milwaukee cannot, by creating a mere artificial and imaginary dock line, hundreds of feet away from the navigable parts of the river, and without making the river navigable up to that line, deprive riparian owners of the right to avail themselves of the advantage of the navigable channel by building wharves and docks to it for that purpose."

Chicago Lake Front Case.—An act passed by the legislature of the State of Illinois in 1869, granted to the Illinois Central Railroad Company, certain submerged land in the harbor of Chicago in fee, with a proviso that the defendant should not have power to alienate such lands, and that the gross receipts from the use, profits, and lease of the lands, or improvements thereon should be a part of the gross receipts of the company, for the purpose of taxation; and provided also that the harbor should not be obstructed or the right of navigation impaired, and that the legislature might regulate the rates of wharfage and dockage. It was held that the grant was in trust only, with the additional privilege to make certain improvements in the harbor, and was revocable except as to such lands as, at the time of the repeal thereof, had already been improved and reclaimed upon the faith of the grant. Illinois v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 33 Fed. Rep. 730.

This case was carried on appeal to the supreme court of the United States, where the decision of the court below was affirmed. The material part of the statute embodying the grant was as follows:

"Sec. 3. The right of the Illinois Central Railroad Company under the grant from the state in its charter, which said grant constitutes a part of the consideration for which the said company pays to the state at least seven per cent. of its gross earnings, and under and by virtue of its appropriation, occupancy, use, and control, and the riparian ownership incident to such grant, appropriation, occupancy, use, and control, in and to the lands submerged or otherwise lying east of the said line running parallel with and four hundred feet east of the west line of Michigan avenue, in fractional sections ten and fifteen, township and range as aforesaid, is hereby confirmed; and all the right and title of the State of Illinois in and to the submerged lands constituting the bed of Lake Michigan, and lying east of the tracks and breakwater of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, for a distance of one mile, and between the south line of the south pier extended eastwardly and a line extended eastward from the south line of lot twenty-one, south of and near to the roundhouse and machine shops of said company, in the south division of the said city of Chicago, are thereby granted in fee to the said Illinois Central Railroad Company, its successors and assigns; provided, however, that the fee to said lands shall be held by said company in perpetuity, and that the said company shall not have power to grant, sell, or convey the fee to the same, and that all gross receipts from use, profits, leases or otherwise, of said lands, or the improvements thereon, or that may hereafter be made thereon, shall form a part of the gross proceeds, receipts, and income of the said Illinois Central Railroad Company, upon which said company shall forever pay into the state treasury, semi-annually, the per centum provided for in its charter, in accordance with the requirements of said charter; and provided, also, that nothing herein contained shall authorize obstructions to the Chicago harbor, or impair the public right of navigation, nor shall this act be construed to exempt the Illinois Central Railroad Company, its lessees or assigns, from any act of the general assembly which may be hereafter passed, regulating the rates of wharfage and dockage to be charged in said harbor."

Field, J., rested the conclusion of the majority of the court upon the following reasoning: "The question, therefore, to be considered, is whether the legislature was competent to thus deprive the state of its ownership of the submerged lands in the harbor of Chicago, and of the consequent control of its waters; or, in other words, whether the railroad corporation can hold the lands and control the waters by the grant, against any future exercise of power over them by the state. That the state holds the title to the lands under the navigable waters of Lake Michigan, within its limits, in the same manner that the state holds title to soils under tide water, by the common law, we have already shown; and that title necessarily carries with it control over the waters above them, whenever the lands are subjected to use. But it is a title different in character from that which the state holds in lands intended for sale. It is different from the title which the United States hold in the public lands which are open to pre-emption and sale. It is a title held in trust for the people of the state, that they may enjoy the navigation of the waters, carry on commerce over them, and have liberty of fishing therein, freed from the obstruction or interference of private parties. The interest of the people in the navigation of the waters and in commerce over them may be improved in many instances by the erection of wharves, docks, and piers therein, for which purpose the state may grant parcels of the submerged lands; and, so long as their disposition is made for such purpose, no valid objections can be made to the grants. It is grants of parcels of lands under navigable waters that may afford foundation for wharves, piers, docks, and other structures in aid of commerce, and grants of parcels which, being occupied, do not substantially impair the public interest in the lands and waters remaining, that are chiefly considered and sustained in the adjudged cases as a valid exercise of legislative power consistently with the trust to the public upon which such lands are held by the state. But that is a very different doctrine from the one which would sanction the abdication of the general control of the state over lands under the navigable waters of an entire harbor or bay, or of a sea or lake. Such abdication is not consistent with the exercise of that trust which requires the government of the state to preserve such waters for the use of the public. The trust devolving upon the state for the public, and which can only be discharged by the management and control of property in which the public has an interest, cannot be relinquished by a transfer of the property. The control of the state for the purposes of the trust can never be lost, except as to such parcels as are used in promoting the interests of the public therein, or can be disposed of without any substantial impairment of the public interest in the lands and waters remaining. It is only by observing the distinction between a grant of such parcels for the improvement of the public interest, or which when occupied do not substantially impair the public interest in the lands and waters remaining, and a grant of the whole property in which the public is interested, that the language of the adjudged cases can be reconciled. General language sometimes found in opinions of the courts, expressive of absolute ownership and control by the state of lands under navigable waters, irrespective of any trust as to their use and disposition, must be read and construed with reference to the special facts of the particular cases. A grant of all the lands under the navigable waters of a state has never been adjudged to be within the legislative power; and any attempted grant of the kind would be held, if not absolutely void on its face, as subject to revocation. The state can no more abdicate its trust over property in which the whole people are interested, like navigable waters and soils under them, so as to leave them entirely under the use and control of private parties, except in the instance of parcels mentioned for the improvement of the navigation and use of the waters, or when parcels can be disposed of without impairment of the public interest in what remains than it can abdicate the police powers in the administration of government and the preservation of the peace. In the administration of government the use of such powers may for a limited period be delegated to a municipality or other body; but there always remains with the state the right to revoke those powers and exercise them in a more direct manner and one more conformable to its wishes. So with trusts connected with public property or property of a special character, like lands under navigable waters, they cannot be placed entirely beyond the direction and control of the state. The harbor of Chicago is of immense value to the people of the State of Illinois in the facilities it affords to its vast and constantly increasing commerce; and the idea that its legislation can deprive the state of control over its bed and waters and place the same in the hands of a private corporation created for a different purpose—one limited to transportation of passengers and freight between distant points and the city—is a proposition that cannot be defended. . . . It is hardly conceivable that the legislature can divest the state of the control and management of this harbor and vest it absolutely in a private corporation. Surely an act of the legislature, transferring the title to its submerged lands and the power claimed by the railroad company to a foreign state or nation would be repudiated without hesitation as a gross perversion of the trust over the property under which it is held. So would a similar transfer to a corporation of another state. It would not be listened to that the control and management of the harbor of that great city—a subject of concern to the whole people of the state—should thus be placed elsewhere than in the state itself. All the objections which can be urged to such attempted transfer may be urged to a transfer to a private corporation like the railroad company in this case. Any grant of the kind is necessarily revocable, and the exercise of the trust by which the property was held by the state can be resumed at any time. Undoubtedly there may be expenses incurred in improvements made under such a grant which the state ought to pay; but, be that as it may, the power to resume the trust whenever the state judges best is, we think, incontrovertible. The position advanced by the railroad company in support of its claims to the ownership of the submerged lands, and the right to the erection of wharves, piers, and docks at its pleasure, or for its business in the harbor of Chicago, would place every harbor in the country at the mercy of a majority of the legislature of the state in which the harbor is situated. We cannot, it is true, cite any authority where a grant of this kind has been held invalid, for we believe that no instance exists when the harbor of a great city, and its commerce, have been allowed to pass into the control of any private corporation. But the decisions are numerous which declare that such property is held by the state by virtue of its sovereignty, in trust for the public. The ownership of the navigable waters of the harbor, and of the land under them, is a subject of public concern to the whole people of the state. The trust with which they are held, therefore, is governmental and cannot be alienated, except in those instances mentioned, of parcels used under a valid city grant is a property right, which cannot be taken away by the legislature without first compensating the owner thereof.¹

V. RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF MUNICIPALITIES OVER WHARVES—

1. Right to Erect.—If a city is itself a riparian owner, this probably, in the absence of any restrictive provision in its charter, will give to it an implied authority to erect wharves thereon and to charge compensation for their use,² and it will not be presumed, because the city merely has abstained from control of them, that it has dedicated them thereby to any other public use.³

in the improvement of the interest thus held, or when parcels can be disposed of without detriment to the public interest in the lands and waters remaining. This follows necessarily from the public character of the property, being held by the whole people for purposes in which the whole people are interested." Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387.

In Baltimore v. White, 2 Gill (Md.) 444, it was held that under an act of the legislature prohibiting any person from making or extending any wharf in the city of Baltimore, without the consent of the city, the city might refuse its assent to the erection of a wharf except upon condition that its exterior margin should constitute a public wharf. If individuals act upon the city's assent thus conditioned, they consent to the dedication of the exterior margin of the wharves for that purpose, and in the absence of any contract or legislative provision as to wharfage, the city is entitled to collect it and not the owner and builder of the wharf.

1. Langdon v. New York, 93 N. Y. 129; Williams v. New York, 105 N. Y. 419.

2. Com. v. Roxbury, 9 Gray (Mass.) 519, and note; New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Ellerman, 105 U. S. 166.

In Murphy v. Montgomery, 11 Ala. 586, Ormud, J., said: "The title to the wharf is in the city, and such being the fact, it had the same right as any other proprietor to collect wharfage from those landing goods there. The right, resulting from its proprietary interest, is not a franchise, but a right of property."

Wharves may be constructed by a city either by direct construction on its own part or by contract with others, giving them the revenue for a period of time to compensate for the erection. Geiger v. Filor, 8 Fla. 325.

A public wharf may be established by a city where any public street abuts upon a navigable stream, whether the riparian owner has or has not title to the land under the water to the middle of the stream. Backus v. Detroit, 49 Mich. 110; 43 Am. Rep. 447.

Where a city government has authority and proposes to erect a wharf for public convenience, it is not bound to accept the offer of the owners of the land on which it is proposed to erect it, to build the wharf at their own expense, to be under the control of the city. Waddingham v. St. Louis, 14 Mo. 190.

A bona fide purchaser of a wharf, erected under contract with a city and in which the city had certain rights, is affected with notice of these rights. Baltimore v. White, 2 Gill (Md.) 444.

A private wharf erected upon land within the limits of a municipal corporation, but not dedicated to the public, cannot be taken by the city without compensation, nor can the authorities collect wharfage at the same. Such right is not conferred by a clause in the city charter authorizing the city to regulate the erection and repair of private wharves, and the rate of wharfage thereat. Grant v. Davenport, 18 Iowa 179.

A city authorized by its charter to erect wharves on its own property, to obtain control over other wharves in the city, and to raise a revenue therefrom, has no power to take a lease of a wharf containing a provision that it should be kept as a free wharf. Mobile v. Moog, 53 Ala. 561.

Wharves, whether terminating streets or not, are not streets. If owned by a city they may be leased to private individuals. The interest in such a case is not in the nature of an easement, but proprietary. Horn v. People, 26 Mich. 221.

3. In Boston v. Lecraw, 17 How. (U.

2. Power Over Wharves.—Except where a city is itself a riparian owner, all of its power in respect to wharves must be derived from the legislature.¹ Being thus derived, the

S.) 426, the court, by Grier, J., said: "The people of Boston, who owned this land as their common and private property, acted through a corporation, whose corporate grants and licenses are matters of record. Their own use of their own property for their own benefit cannot be called a dedication of it to any other public or wider extent. Whether it was called 'town dock' or 'public dock' (which were used as synonymous terms), it would furnish no ground to presume that they had parted with their right to govern and use it in the manner most beneficial to the people or public of the town or city."

1. Source of Power.—Carrollton R. Co. v. Winthrop, 5 La. Ann. 36; State v. Jersey City, 25 N. J. L. 525; Municipality v. Pease, 2 La. Ann. 538; St. Martinsville v. Steamer Mary Lewis, 32 La. Ann. 1293; Snyder v. Rockport, 6 Ind. 237.

Cities having legislative authority to establish and regulate wharves, may cause public wharves to be constructed at the ends or in front of streets terminating or fronting on navigable waters, without invading the rights of the owner of private property abutting on such streets, or the rights of the adjoining riparian proprietor—and this, irrespective of whether the fee in the street is in the city or in the adjoining proprietor. McMurray v. Baltimore, 54 Md. 104; Dugan v. Baltimore, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 375; Haight v. Keokuk, 4 Iowa 199; Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324.

Where a city in Alabama constructed a wharf at the end of a dedicated street leading to the water, it was held that the adjoining proprietor was not the owner of the wharf, and could not eject the city therefrom. Doe v. Jones, 11 Ala. 63.

An ordinance by which municipal authorities undertake, without express legislative authority therefor, to give to private persons the right to occupy a portion of the public wharf with a grain elevator for fifty years, without reserving the right to resume possession and regulate the charges, is void. Illinois, etc., R., etc., Co. v. St. Louis, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 70.

The legislature of Massachusetts has power to establish lines in the harbor of Boston, beyond which no wharf shall be extended or maintained, and to declare any wharf extended or maintained beyond such lines a public nuisance; and statutes establishing such lines take away the right of the proprietors of flats in the harbor beyond the lines, to build wharves thereon, even when they would be no actual injury to navigation; and such statutes, although they provide for no compensation to such proprietors, are not unconstitutional, as taking private property and appropriating it to public uses without compensation, within the meaning of article 10, of the Declaration of Rights; nor as impairing the obligation of the grant made by the colony ordinance, and thus transgressing the prohibition of United States Const., art. 1, § 10, against passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts. But such statutes do not affect the right to maintain wharves erected before their passage. Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 82.

It was held that the power given to San Francisco to erect, repair, and regulate public wharves, to regulate the erection and repairs of private wharves, and to fix the rate of wharfage, did not vest in the city any property interest in the wharves. People v. Broadway Wharf Co., 31 Cal. 33.

The legislature may confer its authority as it deems fit. Fuller v. Edings, 11 Rich. (S. Car.) 239; Weber v. State Harbor Com., 18 Wall. (U. S.) 57.

A city authorized by its charter to erect a public wharf on the land of a private citizen, is not bound to select, as agent for the accomplishment of the work, the owner of the land upon which the erection is proposed. Waddingham v. St. Louis, 14 Mo. 190. But unless expressly empowered by its charter to erect wharves, a city has no right to do it as a distinct and independent undertaking, though a city will not be restrained from grading a street to the river, merely because a wharf may be incidentally formed thereby. Snyder v. Rockport, 6 Ind. 237.

The power to prohibit the establishment of other wharves and landings is a necessary part of the power to erect and regulate. Muscataine v. Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co., 45 Iowa 185.

Where a city is authorized by its charter to establish and regulate the use of wharves, fix the rates of wharfage, and regulate the anchorage and mooring of boats and rafts, it possesses, and by ordinance may exercise, the incidental power of prohibiting any and all persons, including those owning lots abutting on the stream navigated, from using any other place than the wharf as established by the city authorities, without permission of the city and payment of the ordinary wharfage fee. This grant of power necessarily confers the authority to fix the location and limits of the wharves and landings, and to prohibit the use of any other place for that purpose. The mere power to establish wharves and regulate them and the boats and rafts choosing to land there instead of elsewhere, would be idle and useless. The power to prohibit the landing of boats or rafts at other places than the public wharves is necessary in order to the full exercise of the power granted, and is necessary also in order to protect the city in its revenues granted by the charter. Dubuque v. Stout, 32 Iowa 80; 7 Am. Rep. 171. Compare Dubuque v. Stout, 32 Iowa 47.

The authority to erect wharves includes the power to condemn private property for that purpose, upon making proper compensation to the owner, and also the power to extend or diminish those already in existence. Hannibal v. Winchell, 54 Mo. 172.

A city may authorize a steamboat company to erect a building on or near the banks of a river in front of land belonging to a private owner, reserving, however, public control over the structure. Barney v. Keokuk, 4 Dill. (U. S.) 593, affirming 94 U. S. 324.

But a grant of a privilege to construct a wharf or dock in a public highway does not authorize the erection of a warehouse. Bingham v. Doane, 9 Ohio 165.

Wharves at Ends of Streets.—A city cannot erect a wharf at the foot of a street, if the fee within the lines of the street be in a private owner, In re Cramp, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 16; People v. Pacific Rolling Mills Co., 60 Cal. 323; People v. San Francisco Gas Light Co., 60 Cal. 349; though it may establish a wharf where any street duly dedicated to the public abuts on a navigable river, irrespective of whether or not the riparian owner's title runs to the middle of the stream; Backus v. Detroit, 49 Mich. 110; 43 Am. Rep. 447; and it has been held that the right of a city to erect wharves under the circumstances was not affected by the question whether the street had been regularly opened and condemned as a highway, or its use as such had been acquired by dedication, McMurray v. Baltimore, 54 Md. 103.

It was held in Horn v. People, 26 Mich. 222, that wharves constructed by the city under this power, whether at the end of highways or on its property, are the property of the city, and may be leased as such. In this case, Campbell, J., said: "There is no instance in which the term 'public wharf' has been used in our legislation to indicate anything analogous to a dedication to any public use, like that of highways. . . . The term is applied as well to wharves on city property away from streets as to wharves at the end of streets."

When a city has acquired the right of extending streets over the flats to the channel, it has the like right to erect wharves in front of the streets. Galveston v. Menard, 23 Tex. 349.

An ordinance of a city provided that the wharf company might have and exercise all the rights, privileges, and powers conferred by the charter, provided the wharf company so used the privileges "as not to obstruct the free passage of the streets on land south of" the street named. It was held that the company had no right to construct switches on the south side of its main track on such street, and that the fact that the wharf company improved and reclaimed the street did not give the company any privileges not granted, nor deprive the city of its power over such street. Galveston Wharf Co. v. Gulf, etc., R. Co., 81 Tex. 494.

Where a proprietor of lands laid out a town on a navigable river, and dedicated the land along it for a common, it was held that the town authorities had thereby the right to build wharves upon it. Newport v. Taylor, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 699.

Wharves and the franchise of collecting wharfage may be leased by the corporation. Farnum v. Johnson, 62 Wis. 620.

For construction of ordinances of the city in respect to obstructing public piers and wharves, see Vandewater v. New York, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 258; Com. of Pilots v. Erie R. Co., 5 Robt. (N. Y.) 366.

For validity and effect of acts and ordinances regulating the cording of wood, as to private wharves and landings, see Com. v. Gillam, 8 Serg. & R.

legislature may revoke such powers at its will, provided that in doing so, it does not deprive the city of property acquired under legislative grant.¹ In regard to private wharves lawfully erected, cities have only such power of regulation and control as is conferred directly or indirectly upon them by their charters.² Even when conferred in terms, the power must be strictly construed when it affects private rights; not so strictly, however, as to defeat the purpose of the grant.³

On the other hand, as cities are incorporated for the promotion

(Pa.) 50; Southwark v. Neil, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 54.

For effect of the ordinance of 1852, passed by the city council, setting apart one of its water lots to the public as a free dock, see San Francisco v. Calderwood, 31 Cal. 585; 91 Am. Dec. 542.

For powers of the corporation, under various statutes, to construct and extend piers abutting on the wharf or street called "South street," or to require proprietors of adjacent lots to do so, and rights to wharfage, see Marshall v. Guion, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 581; New York v. Whitney, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 485; Thompson v. New York, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 487; Murray v. Sharp, 1 Bosw. (N. Y.) 539.

For jurisdiction of harbor masters and dock masters, see Hecker v. New York Balance Dock Co., 24 Barb. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 215; Adams v. Farmer, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 588.

Action by the city to set aside a lease made by corporate officers of wharves and piers, is maintainable. See New York v. Union Ferry Co., 55 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 138; New York v. North Shore Staten Island Ferry Co., 55 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 154.

1. Revocation of Power.—Whatever powers the municipal body rightfully enjoys over the subject are derived from the legislature, and may be revoked at any time, not touching, of course, any property of the city actually acquired in the course of administration. New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Ellerman, 105 U. S. 166.

2. Municipal Control.—McLaughlin v. Stevens, 18 Ohio 94; Martin v. Evansville, 32 Ind. 85; Brooklyn v. New York Ferry Co., 87 N. Y. 204.

Where the charter of a city authorizes it to regulate the erection and repair of private wharves and the rates of wharfage thereat, "the city," said Wright, C. J., in Grant v. Davenport, 18 Iowa 179, "may regulate but not destroy; may exercise control, as over other private property within its limits, but not to the extent of appropriating the use and enjoyment thereof to the public without compensation."

For power of the corporation to regulate the use of the docks and basins of the city, and to direct what class of vessels shall resort to certain slips or docks, see Hecker v. New York Balance Dock Co., 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 215.

For what constitutes a violation of the by-law of the village, which provides that no boat shall "lay against or near to the south bank of the basin in the public square for more than twenty-four hours during any one week," see Larned v. Syracuse, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 166.

For the power of the city council to establish and enforce by-laws, etc., respecting the harbor and wharves, and regulation for the security, welfare, and convenience of the city, see Dubois v. Augusta, Dudley (Ga.) 30.

An ordinance of the city of Muscatine, passed under section 18, clause 5, of the charter, prescribing that rafts of lumber "landed and sold or drawn out within the city limits, shall pay a wharfage," does not entitle the city to charge the wharfage upon a raft still in the water, and not sold. Muscatine v. Hershey, 18 Iowa 39.

3. Construction of Powers.—A city charter provided for regulating wharfage "of all articles brought to public landings in said district." A by-law was enacted imposing a fine on any person "who shall sell on any of the wharves or landings, within the said district, any cord wood, unless the same shall have been corded or measured by the proper corder." This was held not to affect private wharves. The court said: "Their powers in this particular are limited by the act of incorporation to public landings and their public estate. Their special authority respecting the authority of individuals of the public good, the erection of a wharf, like the paving of a street or other public improvement, will be presumed to be for the benefit of the public; and, in the absence of any express intention to require compensation for the use of its wharves, the presumption is that none was intended.¹ But cities which have authority to regulate and control wharves within their corporate limits, may refuse to allow a wharf to be built, or may impose such limitations, restrictions, and conditions upon the construction of them as they may deem most beneficial for the navigation and commerce of the city.² They cannot, however, under a must appear on the face of the proceedings to be strictly pursued." Southwark v. Neil, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 54. See also Muscatine v. Hershey, 18 Iowa 39; Martin v. Evansville, 32 Ind. 85.

The Georgia Act of 1841, requiring the mayor and aldermen of the city of Savannah, the commissioners of pilotage for the bar of Tybee and river Savannah, and the proprietors and owners of wharves and lands on the shore of Hutchinson's Island, to appoint commissioners to determine the proper line of wharf heads along the shore of said island, is mandatory in its language, and not permissive merely; and the service therein enjoined not being foreign to the official duties of the appointees, its performance is obligatory on them; and it is no sufficient excuse for their refusal, that in their own opinion, or that of others, it will injure the navigation of the river Savannah, the commerce of the city, and the public generally. Savannah v. State, 4 Ga. 26.

An act authorizing a tax "for building, rebuilding, and repairing such wharf as" the township owns, authorizes no assessment unless the township owns a wharf. Bacon v. Mulford, 41 N. J. L. 59.

1. In Muscatine v. Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co., 45 Iowa 185, the court said: "The erection of a wharf by a city is and must be presumed to have been made for the use and benefit of the public, like the paving of a street or other improvement, unless the contrary is shown. Such use to be free, unless an intent to charge therefor is provided by ordinance, or possibly in some other manner, so as to clearly indicate such intent."

Where a wharf, in a public port, has been dedicated to the public use, a toll cannot afterward be imposed for the use of it. Wharf Case, 3 Bland (Md.) 361.

2. A city may refuse its assent to the erection of a wharf except upon the condition that its exterior margin shall constitute a public wharf. Baltimore v. White, 2 Gill (Md.) 444.

Limitations on Municipal Control.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387; Illinois, etc., R., etc., Co. v. St. Louis, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 70; Goszler v. Georgetown, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 593; People's R. Co. v. Memphis R. Co., 10 Wall. (U. S.) 380; Gale v. Kalamazoo, 23 Mich. 344; 9 Am. Rep. 80; Brooklyn v. Brooklyn City R. Co., 47 N. Y. 475; 7 Am. Rep. 469; Milhau v. Sharp, 27 N. Y. 611; 84 Am. Dec. 314; Presbyterian Church v. New York, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 538; Stuyvesant v. New York, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 588; Es. p. Albany, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 277; New York, etc., R. Co. v. New York, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 568; Martin v. Brooklyn, 1 Hill. (N. Y.) 548; Johnson v. Philadelphia, 60 Pa. St. 445; Western Sav. Fund v. Philadelphia, 31 Pa. St. 175; 72 Am. Dec. 730; Dingman v. People, 51 Ill. 277; Brimmer v. Boston, 102 Mass. 19; Jackson v. Bowman, 39 Miss. 671; Oakland v. Carpentier, 13 Cal. 540; Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 524; Cooley's Const. Lim. (4th ed.) *206.

A grant by a common council by deed, of the exclusive use of a public slip, cannot affect in any way the right of the corporation to enforce the ordinances which apply to the public slips of a city. New York v. Rice, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 604.

The mayor and city council are but trustees of the public; the tenure of their office impressed their ordinances with liability to change. They could not, if they would, pass an irrevocable ordinance. The corporation cannot abridge its own legislative powers. Their contracts, when consummated and within their chartered powers, must bind them and their successors, what-power to regulate, surrender to private individuals the exclusive use of a wharf for a fixed period. They have no power to pass ordinances which shall cede away, control, or embarrass their legislative powers, or which shall disable them from performing at any time their public duties.

3. Limitations on Rights of Municipalities.—A city cannot condemn private property for use as a wharf, and use it for any other purpose.¹ Nor can it, under a power to regulate, grant to an individual the exclusive use of a wharf for a definite ever be the consequences. State v. Graves, 19 Md. 373.

A city cannot, by contract, deprive itself of the power to regulate the reconstruction of railways, made necessary by the changes in the character of pavements used upon the streets of the city; neither can it embarrass or clog its right to exercise such power by undertaking, either expressly or by implication, to pay the expenses necessarily incurred by the company in complying with the reasonable and proper regulations made by the city on this subject. Louisville City R. Co. v. Louisville, 8 Bush (Ky.) 415.

A license granted by a city to an individual, to connect his property with the city railroad by a turn-out track, is not such a contract as will prevent the city from abandoning said railroad whenever it deems expedient for the public good. Branson v. Philadelphia, 47 Pa. St. 329. In this case the court said: "Perhaps it might be sufficient to say that he took the license subject to 'all other ordinances relating to the railroad in the city of Philadelphia.'"

The city council of Cincinnati undertook to grant away an exclusive right to use the streets of the city for the purpose of laying gas pipes for conveying gas to be used for lighting the city, for a term of twenty-five years, and thereafter, until the gas works' pipes, etc., were purchased by the city. To enable the city council to grant such an exclusive right by ordinance in the nature of a contract, the power must be shown to have been expressly granted or to be so far necessary to the proper execution of the powers which are expressly granted, as to make its existence free from doubt. State v. Cincinnati Gas Light, etc., Co., 18 Ohio St. 262.

People v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. (Supreme Ct.), 3 N. Y. Supp. 29.

1. In Illinois R., etc., Co. v. St. Louis, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 70, the court, by Dillon,

J., said: "A wharf differs in many material respects from a street. The latter is primarily intended for the purposes of passage or travel, and any erection in it, without legislative authority, is a nuisance; but a wharf is intended to afford conveniences for the landing of vessels, the loading or unloading of their cargoes, and to supply a place on which the wares discharged from vessels or awaiting shipment may be laid or deposited; and it would seem that structures or appliances of any kind intended, and which have the effect to facilitate the handling and preservation of merchandise arriving at the wharf, erected upon it under municipal authority, and remaining at all times subject to municipal control, would be lawful and within the purposes for which the wharf property was acquired or dedicated. We do not say that the municipal authorities could use the wharf property for mere warehouse purposes, though we have no doubt that it would be competent for them to erect, or authorize the erection thereon, of such structures, for the receipt and shipment of goods by water, as they might deem expedient in order to promote the trade and commerce of the city. And we are clearly of opinion that the erection, under the sanction of the city, of an elevator to be used in handling grain at the wharf, and at all times under the direction and control of the municipal authorities, is such a use of wharf property as does not fall without the scope of dedication, and such a structure would not, therefore, be a public nuisance. We have not met with, nor have counsel cited, any adjudication upon the precise point; and we have therefore been compelled to decide it upon principle, and have felt that it was due to the importance of the question to set forth our views, as we have done, with considerable fullness."

In Belcher Sugar Refining Co. v.

period. It has no power to pass ordinances or make contracts that will destroy or abridge its legislative powers or embarrass it in the performance of its public duties.¹

4. Duties of Municipalities.—Municipalities like individuals are bound, in assuming control of their wharves and landings, to provide safe wharves for the landing of goods, and are liable for whatever damages are occasioned by any neglect in this respect.²

St. Louis Grain Elevator Co., 10 Mo. App. 401, the court held that a city which had condemned property for use as a wharf, under legislative authority, might have, for a limited time, a portion thereof for the erection of an elevator warehouse; but on appeal to the supreme court in 82 Mo. 121, the court held that while the city, in order to meet the demands of commerce and the changed methods of handling grain, might license the erection of elevators and warehouses to be used in connection with the wharves without violating the rights of the owners of the land, it had no right to lease any portion of it for a term of years without a reservation of the right to cancel the lease—that without such a reservation it was but a lease of a portion of land condemned solely for public use for wharf purposes, for the private use and private gain of the lessee.

In Belcher Sugar Refining Co. v. St. Louis Grain Elevator Co., 10 Mo. App. 401; 82 Mo. 121, it was held that the legislature had the power to give to municipal authorities portions of a public wharf for wharf purposes, and that where property was condemned as “a public highway for wharf purposes,” its use for grain elevators was not inconsistent with such a purpose.

A lease of a wharf and landing from the city of Philadelphia, does not give the tenant a right to store street dirt on its whole length, the wharf being part of the street. Struthers v. Bickley, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 539.

It would not do to permit property condemned for one purpose to be used for another and different purpose, or property condemned for public use to be used for a private use. Belcher Sugar Refining Co. v. St. Louis Grain Elevator Co., 82 Mo. 121.

1. Milhau v. Sharp, 27 N. Y. 611; 84 Am. Dec. 314; New York v. Cunard Steamship Co. (Supreme Ct.), 15 N. Y. Supp. 904; Brooklyn v. Brooklyn City R. Co., 47 N. Y. 475; 7 Am. Rep. 469;

Gale v. Kalamazoo, 23 Mich. 344; 9 Am. Rep. 80; Dingman v. People, 51 Ill. 277; Brimmer v. Boston, 102 Mass. 19; Johnson v. Philadelphia, 60 Pa. St. 445; Jackson v. Bowman, 39 Miss. 671.

A board of trustees of a city gave the defendants the exclusive privilege of laying out, establishing, and constructing wharves, etc., in the city for a term of thirty-seven years. It was held that the ordinance under which the grant was made was void as being a transfer of the corporate powers of the board, and that the powers delegated by the government to municipal corporations were trusts not subject to be delegated by the corporations. Oakland v. Carpenter, 13 Cal. 540.

A grant of the right to use a portion of a pier for ferry purposes, does not include the right to erect and maintain sheds suitable for running the ferry. Cunard Steamship Co. v. Voorhies, 50 N. Y. Super. Ct. 253.

2. McGuiness v. New York, 52 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 450; Jeffersonville v. Louisville, etc., Steam Ferry Co., 27 Ind. 100; 89 Am. Dec. 495.

A city, keeping a wharf and charging for the anchoring of boats, is bound to protect the boats against the dangers of ordinary floods. Shinkle v. Covington, 1 Bush (Ky.) 617.

If a city owns a river wharf and charges toll to those using the wharf as a landing, it is bound to use the precautions and appliances for securing and holding boats and rafts that a diligent man ordinarily would employ for the protection of his own boat at his own wharf. Wiley v. Allegheny, 118 Pa. St. 490; 4 Am. St. Rep. 608.

The obligations assumed by a city, upon taking charge of its wharves and landings, and by charging and receiving wharfage dues, are to provide a good and safe wharf for the landing of goods, and to keep it in repair. Fennimore v. New Orleans, 20 La. Ann. 124.

The libellant occupied a portion of a public wharf, under a lease from the city, with floats used by him as a coal

So municipalities which assume the function of maintaining wharves may be compelled to keep the same in repair.¹

VI RIGHT TO ACCESS TO WHARVES.—The owner of a wharf on a navigable river is entitled to free access to it at all times,² and yard. In a sudden flood, the chains by which his floats were held to a mooring post on the wharf broke, and his floats were swept away, the mooring post remaining firm. He sought to recover of the city on the ground of its negligence in not replacing posts which were cut down by a railroad company, to which it had granted a right of way along the wharf, and which he might have used in time of flood for additional moorings. It was held that the city was not liable, in the absence of any evidence that the libellant complained of the cutting of the posts, or notified the city to replace them; he not being entitled to the same degree of care due from a wharfinger to navigators using its wharf. Jackson v. Allegheny, 41 Fed. Rep. 886.

But a city is not liable to an individual because its common council refuses to repair certain docks which it is directed to repair. For this purpose the common council is an agent of the state and not of the city. New York, etc., Saw Mill, etc., Co. v. Brooklyn, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 37.

When, however, it is made by statute the duty of the department of docks of a city to keep a wharf belonging to the city in repair, although the use of the dock is solely for the benefit of the department of charities, but in its custody, the city is liable for damages caused to a vessel rightfully using the dock, by the failure of the department of docks, as its agent, to keep the dock in repair. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. New York, 38 Fed. Rep. 159.

The liability of public trustees who have been vested by statute with the control of wharves and docks, differs in no way from that of absolute owners levying tolls for their own benefit. Mersey Docks v. Gibbs, 11 H. L. Cas. 686.

But when trustees are not vested with any such control, and the duty of removing obstructions imposed by statute is discretionary and not compulsory, no liability attaches. Forbes v. Lee Conservancy Board, 4 Exch. Div. 116. And harbor trustees cannot be held liable for failing to cleanse, deepen, or remove obstructions from harbors, when they have no funds to enable them to do so. Grant v. Sligo Harbor Com'rs, 11 Ir. R. C. L. 190.

A city is liable for injury to boats occasioned by its failure to remove at reasonable intervals the accumulations from drains at public wharves to which boats are invited, and at which the city collects wharfage. The Dave & Mose, 49 Fed. Rep. 389.

A city maintaining a wharf, is liable to the owner of a boat, who has paid the wharfage, for the loss of the boat while fastened to the wharf, if such loss was occasioned by its negligence in not furnishing proper fastenings. Shinkle v. Covington, 1 Bush (Ky.) 617. See also People v. Albany, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 539; 27 Am. Rep. 95; Buckbee v. Brown, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 110.

In order to establish the liability of a city for negligence in maintaining a wharf, it is not necessary to show title in the city, and that it is impowered to exercise control over the wharf. It is enough if it can be shown that it is in possession of the wharf, controlling and charging toll for its use, and it is not material whether the city has adopted ordinances for the regulation of the wharf or having such, neglected to enforce them. Pittsburg v. Grier, 22 Pa. St. 54.

1. When a charter of a city imposes upon it the duty of repairing its wharves, an indictment will lie for a failure to do so. Lyme Regis v. Henley, 3 B. & Ad. 77; 23 E. C. L. 32. See also People v. Albany, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 539.

A wharf built by individuals is private property. One built by a city, under the general law, is under the jurisdiction and control of the city authorities. In the latter case the city can be compelled to repair it, and is liable for damages occasioned by the neglect to repair. Jeffersonville v. Louisville, etc., Steam Ferry Co., 27 Ind. 100; 88 Am. Dec. 495.

For effect of a grant of the wharfage to be collected at a public pier upon the obligation of the corporation to repair. see Taylor v. New York, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 559.

2. Delaware River Steamboat Co. v. Burlington Steam Ferry Co., 81 Pa.

any unauthorized obstruction which materially interferes with this right is unlawful and constitutes a nuisance.¹ He, however, St. 103; Stetson v. Faxon, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 147; Thayer v. Boston, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 511; 31 Am. Dec. 157; Simpson's Appeal, 77 Pa. St. 270.

The defendant, owning a vessel and a wharf upon a navigable stream, and finding a raft of lumber belonging to the plaintiff fastened in the stream so as to obstruct the approach of his vessel to his wharf, untied the raft, doing no unnecessary damage; and, not being in charge of any person, it floated away. It was held that he was not liable for the loss of the lumber, as raftsmen on navigable streams have no right to moor their rafts in such a manner as to deprive wharf owners of access to their wharves. Harrington v. Edwards, 17 Wis. 586; 84 Am. Dec. 768. The situation and customary use of a pier may be such as to impliedly license (authorize) any vessel to moor to it, subject to a charge for wharfage. Where the pier is built in the shallow waters of a lake, out to, but not into, navigable waters, and on the open shore, and not in any harbor, and has been used only for the private business of the owner, no implied license can arise. Dutton v. Strong, 1 Black (U. S.) 23.

One who uses a pier which projects from a bulkhead near a wharf in such a way as to prevent the owner of the wharf from using it as he had a right, is liable for whatever damages the owner sustains on account of such obstructions. Camden, etc., R. Co. v. Finch, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 48.

Where a city obstructed a private wharf by turning the course of a stream so as to cause sand to form an embankment in front of it, thus obstructing the approach of vessels, Archer, C. J., in Barrow v. Baltimore, 2 Am. Jur. 204 observed as follows: "I cannot permit myself to doubt but that the character of the plaintiff's rights were such that he might well complain of any injury to them. He had the right which every man has to the benefits flowing from a navigable stream contiguous to his land. He had a right to pass and repass with his vessels. No man has a right to moor a vessel to his land without his consent, and if he was in the habit of asking and receiving a compensation from owners of vessels for such consent, and has been deprived of this benefit and profit by this filling up of the navigable stream opposite to his land, he has been deprived of an important privilege and been compelled to surrender it for the public benefit. He has been disseised, or more properly speaking, deprived, of an easement appurtenant to his land, which constitutes a great portion of its value. It would be in vain to guard with such vigilance the freehold itself, if the liberties and privilege appurtenant to it were not also subject to constitutional guardianship. Over the soil covered by the water, over the water itself which belongs to the state, I need not say he has no right; but he has a perfect right to the soil of the wharf itself, to the profits growing out of the depth of the navigable water attached to it which are incident to the soil itself."

A and B were adjoining dock owners. A sought to restrain B from erecting a wooden platform alongside of his wharf, whereby the water space between the two docks would be diminished materially. Peirce, J., said: "These wharf owners have concurrent rights in the dock, and to deprive one of the lawful use of the dock and wharf that another may have more room for the storage of cargo, seems so inequitable, if not illegal, that it cannot be justified." Bailey's Appeal, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 506.

The riparian proprietor, as proprietor of the adjoining land and as connected with it, has the right of exclusive access to and from the waters of the lake at that particular point; he has the right to build piers and wharves in front of his land out to navigable waters in aid of navigation, not interfering with the public use. Delaplaine v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 42 Wis. 215; 24 Am. Rep. 386.

In Railway Co. v. Renwick, 102 U. S. 180, the better and more substantial doctrine is laid down, that the land under the water in front of a riparian proprietor, though beyond the line of private ownership, cannot be taken and appropriated to a public use by a railway company under its right of eminent domain, without making compensation to the riparian proprietor. But see Langdon v. New York, 93 N. Y. 129.

1. In Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. Atlee, 2 Dill. (U.) S. 479, the cannot maintain a private action for a public nuisance by reason of any injury which he suffers in common with the public, although, if by reason of such a nuisance he sustains a peculiar injury differing in kind and not merely in degree and extent from that which the general public sustains from the same cause, he may recover damages in a private suit for such peculiar injury.¹

court, by Dillon, J., said: "Any erection or obstruction not authorized by competent legislative enactment, which materially interferes with the paramount right of navigation, is unlawful, and comes within the legal notion of a nuisance. . . . The river is a highway, or water way, for the use of the public, just the same as a street or highway; and individuals, for their own convenience, have no more right, without legislative authority, to obstruct the one than they have to incumber or obstruct the other. . . . A pier built within the navigable channel, that is at point in the river where vessels may go, and where they have a right to go, is an unlawful structure in the eyes of the law. Indeed, any permanent structure which interferes with, or which may endanger or obstruct navigation, is unlawful, and cannot be legalized by any considerations of utility, or otherwise, except by direct legislative authority."

1. Suit for Private Injury.—Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 208; Brightman v. Fair Haven, 7 Gray (Mass.) 271; Smith v. Boston, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 255; Franklin Wharf Co. v. Portland, 46 Me. 42; Wilkes v. Hungerford Market Co., 2 Bing. N. Cas. 281; 29 E. C. L. 336.

The owner of a wharf on public navigable waters cannot maintain a private action for illegally filling up such waters and thereby obstructing his access to his wharf. Harvard College v. Stearns, 15 Gray (Mass.) 1.

In Greasley v. Codling, 2 Bing. 263; 9 E. C. L. 407, Burrough, J., said: "The question in all these cases is, whether the inconvenience complained of is general, or a particular inconvenience of the party complaining; that is the point of the decisions and who can doubt about the particular injury in the present case."

No action lies for the obstruction of a navigable stream by the building of a bridge, whereby the owner of a parcel of land and a wharf above the bridge is prevented from coming to the wharf from the sea in vessels, although his wharf is the only one above the bridge used for business purposes, and he is compelled thereby to abandon the use of his wharf for such purposes and to transport his goods by land at an enhanced expense. Dougherty v. Bunting, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 1.

In Blackwell v. Old Colony R. Co., 122 Mass. 1, the court, by Gray, C. J., said: "The fact that the plaintiff alone now navigates the stream, or has a wharf thereon at which he carries on his business, only shows that the present consequential damage to him may be greater in degree to him than to others; but does not show that the injury is different in kind, or that other riparian proprietors and the rest of the public may not, whenever they use the stream, suffer in the same way."

The owner of a wharf and dock, who dredges out a channel from his dock over flats belonging to other persons and lying between high and low-water mark, cannot recover damages, in a private suit, from a city for an injury to the channel by the discharge of sewage from a common sewer into the dock, whereby the channel is partly filled up, and the owner put to additional expense in getting vessels to his wharf; although he dredged out the channel openly and with a claim of right. Breed v. Lynn, 126 Mass. 367.

The owner of a wharf upon a tide-water creek cannot maintain an action for an illegal obstruction to the creek occasioned by emptying into the same, a short distance above the plaintiff's dock, a large quantity of gravel, sand, stones, etc., to such an extent as to damage the plaintiff seriously in the conduct of his business; but he can maintain an action for an obstruction adjoining the wharf, which prevents vessels from lying at it in the accustomed manner, this being a particular damage. Brayton v. Fall River, 113 Mass. 218; 18 Am. Rep. 470. In this case the court said: "An individual cannot maintain a private action for a public nuisance by reason of any injury which he suffers in common with the public. The only remedy is by

Nor is he entitled to the exclusive use of the water adjacent to his wharf as against the parties temporarily occupying the same in the due course of navigation of the river.¹

VII. REMEDIES OF OWNERS OF WHARVES.—The owner of a wharf not only has the right to recover damages in an action at law for any injury actually done to his wharf, but he is entitled also to the benefit of equitable remedies for the prevention of injuries to his rights by injunction to prevent the erection of obstructions or otherwise.²

indictment, or other public prosecution. But, if by reason of a public nuisance, an individual sustains peculiar injury, differing in kind, and not merely in degree or extent from that which the general public sustains from the same cause, he may recover damages in a private suit for such peculiar injury.

Where the plaintiff had a right to erect wharves, and artificially deepen its docks, it is not barred from recovery from the city for filling up its dock with sewage, because such use of its property changed somewhat the currents of the tide, and made the matter negligently discharged by the defendant accumulate in larger quantities than it otherwise would have done. Constitution Wharf Co. v. Boston, 156 Mass. 397.

While A was the owner of a dock, a railroad company erected a pier in the river for a bridge, whereby A's property was injured for dock purposes. A sold the property to his wife, who sued the company. It was held that A had a right of action for damages, but that it did not pass to his wife by the conveyance. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Maher, 91 Ill. 312.

For the power of city authorities to construct a certain sewer, with an outfall in a public dock, and how much power should be exercised to avoid creating a nuisance in the dock, see Franklin Wharf Co. v. Portland, 67 Me. 46; 24 Am. Rep. 1.

1. In Bainbridge v. Sherlock, 29 Ind. 364; 95 Am. Dec. 644, it was held that a navigator landing at one wharf is not justified by any public right in the river in so mooring his vessel that, while moored, its side and stern will be carried by the current against the wharf boat of a contiguous wharfing lower down the river, thus obstructing access to the lower wharf. But this case was again considered in 41 Ind. 35, and a somewhat modified conclusion reached. It was there held that the appellee had a right to run their boat in any part of the river not then occupied by other boats navigating the river, and to stop at any wharf which their business might require. In this case the court, by Worden, J., said: "The appellants had the right to land at such wharf or wharves as suited their convenience; and if in doing so the current of the river or other circumstances carried the stern of their boat down stream so that a portion of the boat's length lay in front of the appellee's wharf, but still in the navigable waters of the river, they were but in the exercise of a legal right, and cannot be responsible to the appellee for any consequential damages which he may have sustained by other boats being prevented from landing at his wharf, provided that the appellants, in thus exercising their rights, exercised due care, skill, and dispatch, and subjected the appellee to as little inconvenience as possible, consistently with the exercise of their own rights. Doubtless unreasonable and vexatious delays, thus wrongfully preventing ingress to and egress from the appellee's wharf, would subject the appellants to liability for the damages consequent thereon."

2. People v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 379; Crocker v. New York, 15 Fed. Rep. 405.

Thus where a shore owner has a right to erect wharves on the water front adjacent to his land, an injunction will issue to restrain the erection of obstructions to such wharves. Parker v. Taylor, 7 Oregon 435.

In Penniman v. New York Balance Co., 13 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 40, a bill in equity was brought to prevent an injury to a private wharf by the erection of permanent obstructions which, if erected, would interfere with the ingress to and egress from a wharf. The court, in this case, said: "It is a familiar rule that an injunction will be granted to prevent and restrain a nuisance, and it will be allowed at the instance of any private individual, who sustains a special injury from it. The

VIII. OBLIGATIONS AND DUTIES OF WHARF OWNERS—1. To Keep in Repair.—The owner or occupant of a wharf who has the right to collect wharfage for the use of it is bound to keep it in repair.¹ This duty arises by implication of law, and is a natural plaintiffs' right to the wharfage and to the gains from the pier, and the gains which they made from vessels lying in the basin, were rights peculiar to them, the loss of which constitutes an injury special to them."

In Murray v. Sharp, 1 Bosw. (N. Y.) 539, equity interfered to prevent a city from interfering with the rights of the owner of a private wharf by appropriating an adjoining slip for the purposes of a public wharf.

The owner of a private wharf is entitled to an injunction restraining the construction of another wharf in front of his, which would interfere with his ingress to and egress from the same, unless competent authority to erect the proposed wharf be first shown. Cowell v. Martin, 43 Cal. 605. On the other hand equity will not interfere to compel the owners of a private wharf to allow a particular person to use it, when the reason for excluding him is on account of the extent of their business. Audenried v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 66 Pa. St. 370.

Where it had been agreed that a certain part of the dock between two wharves should be kept open for a passage way for vessels going to and from the wharves, it appeared that it was the custom of the defendant to moor his vessels in that part of the lock, and to receive wharfage from vessels so moored; it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction to vindicate its rights. Commercial Wharf Co. v. Winsor, 146 Mass. 559.

Where it was not shown clearly that the contemplated wharf would be a public nuisance, an injunction was not granted. Harlan v. Paschall, 5 Del. Ch. 435.

For the remedy of an owner who desired to build a wharf, upon the refusal of the board of wardens to define the line of low-water mark, on his application, see Tatham v. Philadelphia Wardens, 2 Phila. (Pa.) 246.

In Silver v. Tobin, 28 Fed. Rep. 545, the plaintiff sought by injunction to attack a contract whereby the city of New Orleans had farmed out the right to collect wharfage on the public wharves. The court held that he had mistaken his remedy, his right being to resist the payment of excessive wharfage, should such be demanded of him.

Where a city conveyed land under water, the grantee covenanted to build and maintain wharves thereon, and the city covenanted that the grantee should have the right to all wharfage which accrued therefrom, it was held that the city could not be enjoined from building wharves outside of those of the grantee, thereby preventing the use of the wharves of the latter. Langdon v. New York, 6 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 314.

In an action brought to abate a wharf built within eight hundred feet of the plaintiff's wharf, which he had erected under an act of the legislature authorizing him to build it "as long as 1,200 feet," and granting him the use of the overflowed land for one hundred feet on each side of his wharf, the court held that the plaintiff's privilege of building was to build at right angles to the bank, directly into the slough, and not along the bank; and that the defendant's wharf did not interfere with the right of the plaintiff. Rush v. Jackson, 24 Cal. 308.

1. In Swords v. Edgar, 59 N. Y. 28; 17 Am. Rep. 295, while the plaintiff was assisting in the discharge of a cargo from a steamer, the defendant's pier, where the steamer was, fell and injured him. The court said: "Though the pier be private property, and though it be granted that the owner or occupant thereof might at any time close it and refuse entrance upon it to any and all persons, yet so long as it was kept open . . . to the public for the profit of defendant's lessees, there was, upon such lessees primarily, the duty of taking care, so long as it was thus kept open, that those who had a lawful right to go there, could do so without incurring danger to their persons."

In an action against the proprietors of a wharf for injuries, occasioned by a defect therein, to a person upon it in the employment of a party to whom the wharf was let, the jury were instructed that if the defendants had established the wharf for the use of the public for and obvious duty under the circumstances, and so cannot be said to rest in or be founded on contract.¹

2. Degree of Care.—The decisions do not seem to be unanimous in regard to the degree of care to be exercised by the owner of a wharf. According to the weight of authority, however, such owner or occupant is required to use only ordinary care in keeping his wharf in repair,² though in some jurisdictions a reasonable compensation, they were bound to keep it safe for such use; that if the plaintiff, when properly on the wharf in the exercise of reasonable care and diligence, sustained injury through a defect in the wharf, he was entitled to recover, unless the defect was so hidden and concealed that it could not be discovered by such examination and inspection as the construction, use, and exposure of the wharf reasonably required; and if the defendants knew that causes rendering the wharf insecure were constantly or occasionally in operation which they could by the exercise of ordinary diligence and care provide against, they ought to do so. It was held that the defendants had no ground of exception. Wendell v. Baxter, 12 Gray (Mass.) 494.

But the owner of a wharf boat, who is not a common carrier of passengers, and who receives no compensation from passengers for the use of his boat, while he is required to keep the pass-way safe which he permits the public to use, is not bound to maintain pass-ways for passengers over and around every part of his wharf boat. Grand Tower Mfg. etc., Co., v. Hawkins, 72 Ill. 386.

In Parnaby v. Lancaster Coal Co., 11 Ad. & El. 223; 39 E. C. L. 54, the court, by Tindal, C. J., said: "The canal company made the canal for their profit, and opened it to the public upon payment of tolls to the company; and the common law in such a case imposes a duty upon the proprietors, not perhaps to repair the canal or absolutely to free it from obstructions, but to take reasonable care so long as they keep it open for public use of all who may choose to navigate it, that they may navigate without danger to their lives or property."

A pier, like any other public place, must be kept in repair, and if it is not, and damage ensues, the party who should keep it in repair is liable for his negligence. Claway v. Byrne, 58 Barb. (N. Y.) 449.

In an action for negligence in allowing a wharf to get out of repair, the fact that the door and fastening were in good repair when the defendant assigned the right to collect wharfage, does not relieve the defendant from its duty to keep the wharf in a safe condition. Cleary v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co., 40 Fed. Rep. 908. See Hall v. Tillson, 81 Me. 362.

The corporation of Pittsburg, which had charge of a wharf therein, and received tolls for its use, permitted piles of iron to remain thereon for a longer time, and nearer the water's edge, than was allowed by the city ordinances. A boat was anchored at the wharf. Soon after, the water rose rapidly and high, and carried the boat further inland and up the bank; the water then fell, and the boat, to avoid one of the piles of iron, was necessarily conducted further into the stream than the line of boats at the wharf, above and below; while in this position in the night, it struck on one of the piles of iron and was struck by some floating body and sunk. The court held that the owners could sustain an action on the case against the city for their loss. Pittsburg v. Grier, 22 Pa. St. 54.

Nickerson v. Tirrell, 127 Mass. 236; Carleton v. Franconia Iron, etc., Co., 99 Mass. 216; Thompson v. North Eastern R. Co., 2 B. & S. 106; Mersey Docks, etc., Board v. Gibbs, L. R., 1 H. L. Cas. 93.

1. Collett v. London, etc., R. Co., 16 Q. B. 989; Wendell v. Baxter, 12 Gray (Mass.) 494; Lyme Regis v. Henley, 3 B. & Ad. 92; 23 E. C. L. 32.

In Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 295; 72 Am. Dec. 302, Perley, C. J., said: "The case is put distinctly upon the ground that the public duty, which was the foundation of the action, arose out of the control which the city exercised over the wharf, and the income received for the use of it."

2. In Nickerson v. Tirrell, 127 Mass. 236, Morton, J., said: "The owner or occupant of a dock is liable in damages to a person who, by his invitation, he is required to exercise the utmost degree of care in this respect.¹

3. Extent of Duty.—His duty is not limited to persons who come on the wharf to transact business for which it is adapted, but extends to all who come there for legitimate purposes, as a customhouse officer, who comes to prevent smuggling,² or the agents of the post office,³ or the vendors of goods to persons upon a vessel lying at a dock,⁴ or hackmen carrying passengers,⁵ or those who go there to make inquiries.⁶

4. Notice of Defects.—If a wharf or its approaches are known to be in a dangerous condition, it is the duty of those having control of them either to close them or to give conspicuous notice to the public of the existence of the danger.⁷

express or implied, makes use of it, for an injury caused by any defect or unsafe condition of the dock which the occupant negligently causes or permits to exist, if such person was himself in the exercise of due care. Such occupant is not an insurer of the safety of his dock, but he is required to use reasonable care to keep his dock in such a state as to be reasonably safe for use by vessels which he invites to enter it, or for which he holds it out as fit and ready. If he fails to use such due care—if there is a defect which is known to him, or which by the use of ordinary care and diligence should be known to him, he is guilty of negligence and liable to the person who, using due care, is injured thereby." Pittsburg v. Grier, 22 Pa. St. 54.

1. The owner of a public wharf is held to the utmost care in keeping it safe for vessels having a right to use it; and an instruction asked to this effect should not be modified by adding that "utmost care" must be understood as "only reasonable and proper care, in view of the safe mooring of floats and rafts under ordinary circumstances, and floods which could and should have been anticipated." Willey v. Allegheny, 118 Pa. St. 490; 4 Am. St. Rep. 608.

2. In Low v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 72 Me. 313; 24 Am. Rep. 331, the court, by Barrows, said: "The company owes a duty to all public officers whose attendance there is made necessary by the business carried on at their wharf. . . . It avails nothing to say that the owners had not dedicated their wharf to smuggling and did not invite the plaintiff to come there to prevent it. They had dedicated their wharf to the use of vessels bringing merchandise from foreign ports, and without watchfulness on the part of the customs officers it was sure to be misused."

3. Wendell v. Baxter, 12 Gray (Mass.) 494. See also infra, this title, Duty of a Lessee of Wharf.

4. Smith v. London, etc., Dock Co., 3 L. R. C. P. 326.

5. Tobin v. Portland, etc., R. Co., 59 Me. 183; 8 Am. Rep. 415.

6. Stratton v. Staples, 59 Me. 94.

7. Thompson v. North Eastern R. Co., 2 B. & S. 106; Ulrichs v. Phoenix Horseshoe Co., 35 Fed. Rep. 308.

Owners of wharves and slips who know them to be dangerous for public use, are bound to close them, or to give and maintain some conspicuous notice of the danger. This applies to a new landing until fit for use. Heissenbuttel v. New York, 30 Fed. Rep. 456. See also Gibbs v. Liverpool Docks, 3 H. & N. 164.

Where dock owners have knowledge of the existence and dangerous character of a bar in their dock, which they had ample opportunity to remove, they are liable to a vessel which entered the dock on their invitation, for damages caused by the bar. The Calvin P. Harris, 33 Fed. Rep. 295.

The owners of a wharf are liable for damages suffered by a vessel lawfully using it, caused by an obstruction known by the owners to exist, but not by the master of the vessel. Barber v. Abendroth, 102 N. Y. 406; 55 Am. Rep. 821.

A wharfinger is not liable for injuries sustained by a vessel by reason of obstructions in the water alongside of a dock when their existence is as well known to the agents of the vessel as to the wharfinger. The Stroma, 42 Fed. Rep. 922.

The master of a vessel cannot recover damages for injuries sustained by his

5. Concealed Obstructions.—A wharf owner is liable for injuries sustained by a vessel coming in contact with concealed obstructions, the existence of which he might have known by the exercise of reasonable diligence;¹ and this whether he owns the soil of the dock or not, and regardless of whether the wharf be public or private.²

6. As to Depth of Water.—Although the owner of a wharf is under no obligation to keep at any time a sufficient depth of water to accommodate vessels of all sizes, it is his duty to give information of inequalities of depth when necessary to protect vessels about to land,³ and he is responsible for all injuries sustained by vessels lawfully at his wharf, and in the exercise of due care on account of such inequalities,⁴ but he is not required to dredge vessel while attempting to enter a dock in the night time against the advice of the dock stevedore. Phillips v. Schlesinger, 137 Mass. 338.

A person having the exclusive privilege of using a pier and its adjoining slip for shipping coal, is not liable to the owner of a barge loaded there with coal, for damages sustained by the barge by reason of its settling down on a pile at the bottom of the slip, although such person knew of the existence of the pile, where the barge of her own accord remained at the pier longer than it needed after being loaded. Onderdonk v. Smith, 23 Blatchf. (U. S.) 562.

1. The owner of a wharf procured a vessel to bring a cargo to it, to be there discharged, and suffered her to be placed there at high water over a rock sunk and concealed in the adjoining dock. Of the position of the rock and its dangers to vessels he had long been aware, but gave no notice thereof to the owners of the vessel or to anyone in the employment. Without negligence on their part, the vessel settled down upon the rock, with the ebb of the tide, and was bilged by it. It was held that the wharf owner was liable in damages, whether he owned the soil of the dock or not, and whether or not his wharf was a public wharf. Carleton v. Franconia Iron, etc., Co., 99 Mass. 216.

A wharf owner is liable for damage sustained by a vessel on account of concealed obstructions, the existence of which he might have ascertained with reasonable diligence. Manhattan Transp. Co. v. Mayor, etc., 37 Fed. Rep. 160.

Although the city charter prescribed the election of a wharfmaster, it was held that the city was liable for the loss of a steamer wrecked by striking upon an iron cylinder negligently permitted to lie on the wharf, and concealed at the time by the water. Constructive possession of the cylinder by the United States marshal at the time was no excuse; the libel not preventing the city authorities from removing it above high-water mark. Memphis v. Kimbrough, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 133.

The occupants of a pier which has a spike projecting from it below the water are liable for the injury caused by the spike, where, by the exercise of due care, they might have discovered the dangerous character of it, and this, too, although the pier had been used with safety for years. Smith v. Havemeyer, 36 Fed. Rep. 927.

2. Carleton v. Franconia Iron, etc., Co., 99 Mass. 216.

3. In Nelson v. Phoenix Chemical Works, 7 Ben. (U. S.) 37, the court, by Benedict, J., said: "A wharfinger is not bound to maintain a depth of water in the berth at his wharf sufficient for all vessels at all tides. The proposition, that it is the duty of a wharfinger to give information as to inequalities in the surface of the bottom when it is material to the safety of a vessel about to moor at his wharf (Sawyer v. Oakman, 7 Blatchf. (U. S.) 290), is entirely consistent with the other proposition, that it is the duty of the shipmaster, before placing his vessel in the berth, to ascertain whether the depth of water in the dock is sufficient for the draught of his vessel."

4. Barrett v. Black, 56 Me. 498; 96 Am. Dec. 497; Carleton v. Franconia Iron, etc., Co., 99 Mass. 216; Wendell v. Baxter, 12 Gray (Mass.) 294; Sweeney v. Old Colony, etc., R. Co., 10 Allen (Mass.) 368; 87 Am. Dec. 644; and keep even the bed of the stream in the vicinity of his wharf.¹ He is not liable for injuries caused by delay occasioned by an insufficiency of water at his wharf.²

7. Duty of Lessee of Wharf.—The lessee of a wharf, like the owner, must keep it in repair.³ The lessor, however, is liable for Elliott v. Pray, 10 Allen (Mass.) 378; 87 Am. Dec. 653; Parnaby v. Lancaster Canal Co., 11 Ad. & El. 223; 39 E. C. L. 54; Gibbs v. Liverpool Docks, 3 H. & N. 164.

The owner of a wharf who makes use of it for gain in the course of his business, is liable for the damage to a vessel using the wharf and in the exercise of due care, caused by inequalities in the bottom alongside of the wharf. Sawyer v. Oakman, 7 Blatchf. (U. S.) 290.

1. The respondent, a town, owned a wharf on public lands on a navigable stream about one hundred and fifty feet wide, and kept the usual berths safe, for which wharfage was charged. The libellant moored his canal boat at high water nearly in the middle of the stream, outside of three other boats at the wharf, without directions from respondent, and without paying, or being liable to pay, any wharfage. The person in charge of the boat ascertained soon after her arrival, and before the tide fell, that the bottom was uneven, and knew that he would be aground at low water. The boat did ground, and was injured. It was held that the respondent was not required to dredge and keep even the bed of the stream abreast of the wharf, so that vessels against which no wharfage was chargeable might moor and lie there safely until they could come to the wharf; and that the vessel took the risk arising from the uneven nature of the bottom, and could not recover for her injury. Elting v. East Chester, 50 Fed. Rep. 112.

In Carleton v. Franconia Iron, etc., Co., 99 Mass. 216, the court, by Gray, J., said: "The owner or occupant of land is liable in damages to those coming to it, using due care, at his invitation or inducement, express or implied, on any business to be transacted with or permitted by him, for an injury occasioned by the unsafe condition of the land or of the access to it, which is known to him and not to them, and which he has negligently suffered to exist and has given them no notice of."

2. Insufficiency of Water.—The mere fact of insufficient water depth at the wharf, does not show fault on the part of the wharfinger that renders him liable. The Bark Francesca, 9 Ben. (U. S.) 34.

In Nickerson v. Tirrell, 127 Mass. 236, the court, by Morton, J., said: "The general rules of law applicable in cases of this character are well settled. The owner or occupant of a dock is liable in damages to a person who, by his invitation, express or implied, makes use of it, for an injury caused by any defect or unsafe condition of the dock which the occupant negligently causes or permits to exist, if such person was himself in the exercise of due care. Such occupant is not an insurer of the safety of his dock, but he is required to use ordinary care to keep his dock in such a state as to be reasonably safe for use by vessels which he invites to enter it, or for which he holds it out as fit and ready. If he fails to use such due care—if there is a defect which is known to him, or which by the use of ordinary care and diligence should be known to him, he is guilty of negligence and liable to the person, who, using due care, is injured thereby."

3. In Barrett v. Black, 56 Me. 498; 96 Am. Dec. 497, the lessee of a private wharf through whose procuration a vessel was hauled alongside of his wharf, to be there loaded by him with his cargo, in accordance with a contract of affreightment, was held liable to the owners for an injury occasioned to the vessel while loading, by grounding at low tide on rocks in the berth, which was represented by the occupant of the wharf to be safe and not known by the owners of the vessel to be otherwise. The right of the corporation of the city of New York to collect wharfage on one of the public piers of that city, carries with it the correlative duty of keeping the same in repair. And this right, duly transferred to another party, invests him with all the rights and subjects him to all the duties of the assignor; so that the lessee of a pier is liable for the value of property lost by reason of the want of a suitable any damage caused by a defect in existence at the time the lease was made.¹

8. Damage to Vessel on Sunday.—The fact that a vessel is forbidden by statute to enter a berth at a wharf on Sunday, does not prevent the owner of a vessel hauled in on that day from recovering in admiralty for injuries sustained by her through the wrongful act or omission of another.²

guard to the pier. Radway v. Briggs, 37 N. Y. 256. The lessee and occupant of a public pier who is required by the terms of the lease to keep the pier in repair, is liable for the death of a stranger caused by a hole which was permitted to exist in the pier for a long time. Gluck v. Ridgewood Ice Co. (Supreme Ct.), 9 N. Y. Supp. 254.

The lessee of a wharf is liable for damage arising from its unusual and dangerous condition, unless he can show reasonable care and examination in regard to it. Smith v. Havemeyer, 32 Fed. Rep. 844.

A covenant in a lease to make such repairs to a dock and bulkhead as "they" require, includes the clearing out of accumulations in the river-bottom. O'Rourke v. Peck, 29 Fed. Rep. 223.

1. Wendell v. Baxter, 12 Gray (Mass.) 494, was a case where the plaintiff was injured while in the employ of a lessee of a wharf, and the following instruction to the jury was upheld: "That if they were satisfied that the defendants had established the wharf for the use of the public, and invited the public to use it for a reasonable compensation, they were bound to keep the wharf safe for the use for which it was made and erected at that place; that if the plaintiff, being properly on the wharf, in the prosecution of his business, and in the exercise of reasonable care and diligence, sustained the injury alleged through a defect in the wharf, he was entitled to recover, unless the defect was latent, and so hidden and concealed that it could not be discovered by such examination and inspection as the construction, use, and exposure of the wharf reasonably required; that if the defendants knew that causes rendering the wharf insecure were constantly or occasionally in operation, which they could, by the exercise of ordinary diligence and care, anticipate and provide against, they were required to do so."

The owner of a pier is liable for damages caused by its defective construction and dangerous condition, although it is in the possession of a tenant, if it was let in such a defective and dangerous state. Moody v. New York, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 282. See also Lyme Regis v. Henley, 3 B. & Ad. 92; 23 E. C. L. 32.

2. In Sawyer v. Oakman, 7 Blatchf. (U. S.) 290, the court said: "I deem it unnecessary to enlarge upon the question whether the supposed violation of the laws of Massachusetts in hauling into the dock on Sunday, is a bar to a recovery for the injury sustained afterwards, when the vessel had grounded. The view taken by Judge Lowell of the decision in Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Philadelphia, etc., Steam Towboat Co., 23 How. (U. S.) 209, is entirely satisfactory to my mind."

In Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Philadelphia, etc., Steam Towboat Co., 23 How. (U. S.) 209, the court, by Grier, J., said: "The appellants urge, as a further ground of defense, that the collision took place on Sunday, shortly after the steamboat had commenced her voyage from a wharf's parcel of the territory of Hartford county in the state of Maryland; that the boat was used and employed by her owners in towing canal boats; and that when entering on her voyage, those who had her control and management were engaged in their usual and ordinary work and labor—the same not being a work of necessity or charity—contrary to the laws of the state of Maryland. . . . The law relating to the observance of Sunday defines a duty of a citizen to the state and the state only. For a breach of this duty he is liable to the fine or penalty imposed by the statute, and nothing more. Courts of justice have no power to add to this penalty the loss of a ship, by the tortious conduct of another, against whom the owner has committed no offense." See also Powhatan Steamboat Co. v. Appomattox R. Co., 24 How. (U. S.) 247, where it was held that placing goods

IX. WHARFAGE—1. Definition.—Wharfage is the fee paid for tying vessels to a wharf or for loading goods upon a wharf or shipping them from it.¹

2. Right to Charge.—The right to charge wharfage belongs to whomsoever has the right to erect a wharf.² And this is true of both public and private wharves.³

in a warehouse on Sunday did not bar an action to recover therefor, although destroyed by fire on that same day.

1. Langdon v. Mayor, etc., of New York, 93 N. Y. 129; Geiger v. Filor, 8 Fla. 325; Ex p. Easton, 95 U. S. 68.

Wharfage is a charge for the use of a wharf. Parkersburg, etc., Transp. Co. v. Parkersburg, 107 U. S. 691.

Wharfage Not a Tax.—In Keokuk v. Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co., 45 Iowa 196, the court, by Beck, J., said: "The wharfage fee charged under the city ordinances in question is in no sense a tax. It is a charge made as compensation for the use of the wharves built and maintained for the benefit of vessels engaged in commerce." See also Schwartz v. Flatboats, 14 La. Ann. 243.

Graduated Charges.—That wharfage charges may be graduated by the tonnage of vessels without thereby becoming a duty of tonnage within the meaning of the federal constitution, see Quachita Packet Co. v. Aiken, 121 U. S. 444; Cincinnati, etc., Packet Co. v. Catlettsburg, 105 U. S. 559; Packet Co. v. St. Louis, 100 U. S. 423; Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co. v. Keokuk, 59 U. S. 80; 45 Iowa 196; U. S. v. Duluth, 1 Dill. (U. S.) 469; Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. Atlee, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 479; 21 Wall. (U. S.) 389; Ellerman v. McMains, 30 La. Ann. 190.

2. Chicago v. Laffin, 49 Ill. 172; The Kate Tremaine, 5 Ben. (U. S.) 60; Radway v. Briggs, 37 N. Y. 256; Muller v. Spreckels, 48 Fed. Rep. 574; People v. Roberts, 92 Cal. 659; Lesesne v. Young, 33 S. Car. 543.

In Ensminger v. People, 47 Ill. 384; 95 Am. Dec. 495, the court said: "It then follows that owners of the land on a stream have the right between high and low-water mark, to establish a private wharf and charge reasonable compensation for its use, but, like the use of other property or services, the charges must not be unreasonable or exorbitantly high."

A city, though it cannot lay tonnage duties, may exact wharfage compensation for the use, by vessels, of wharves built and maintained by the city; and rating wharfage by the size of the vessel, to be ascertained by its tonnage, does not necessarily render the enactment void. Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. St. Louis, 4 Dill. (U. S.) 10, 17, n.

For the right of the corporation, under the charter, to collect wharfage for a certain space in front of the city and along the banks of the river, dedicated to the public, see Sacramento v. Steamer New World, 4 Cal. 41.

In an action to recover the wharfage of a public wharf leased to the plaintiff by the agent of a city corporation, the plaintiff must show that the lease was made in the mode designated by law, or the complaint will be dismissed. Taylor v. Beebe, 3 Robt. (N. Y.) 262.

Where a tug agreed to tow a barge to a particular place and the barge was left temporarily at a wharf to await the arrival of another section of the tug's tow, the court held that the owner of the wharf could charge and collect wharfage from either the barge or the tug for such use of his wharf. Birchall v. Barge No. 6, 27 Fed. Rep. 472.

3. Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. St. Louis, 100 U. S. 423; Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U. S. 80; De Bary Baya Merchants' Line v. Jacksonville, etc., R. Co., 40 Fed. Rep. 392.

In Aiken v. Eager, 35 La. Ann. 567, the court held that a custom to present bills for wharfage as soon as the vessel arrived at the wharf was conclusive evidence of an understanding between the parties that the bills were then due.

An ordinance establishing the rates of wharfage to be collected from vessels using the wharves of the city, does not conflict with any provision of the federal constitution. Vicksburg v. Tobin, 100 U. S. 430.

But a regulation by which vessels from another state are required to pay fees not exacted from domestic vessels is invalid, such fees being regarded as a mere expedient to foster domestic commerce at the expense of other states. Guy v. Baltimore, 100 U. S. 434.

3. Liability for Wharfage.—No use can be made of a wharf, even for a few minutes, without incurring a liability for wharfage.¹ But the question is constantly arising as to whether the use made of a wharf is of a kind to subject one to liability for wharfage.²

Wharfage dues charged by a corporation, are not, properly speaking, a tax, like that which is levied for the support of the government. Schwartz v. Flatboats, 14 La. Ann. 243.

1. In Easby v. The Whitburn, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 600, the libeled steamer in distress was obliged to make fast to a wharf. She made fast to piers 41 and 39 and thus lay across pier 40, though a few feet out in the stream. In endeavoring to come to pier 41 a line was made fast to pier 40 for a few minutes. The owner of pier 40 made a claim for wharfage. The court said: "The respondent could make no use of the wharf without incurring liability to pay for it."

2. Where the defendant was the owner of a ferry, with the right to land his boats at any point within the city limits, and the wharves of the city were used by the ferry, it was held, in an action by the city against the defendant, that the latter was not liable for wharfage, but that he was liable for a proportion of the cost of improving the landing and the wharf. Kennedy v. Covington, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 567. In this case the court, by Simpson, J., said: "It is a well settled principle of law that every owner of property shall use and exercise the rights incident thereto so as not to interfere with the rights and privileges which belong to other persons. Now, in this case, both parties have rights which attach to the same property, one of them the right to use it as a ferry landing, the other to use it for the benefit of the city and the convenience of its inhabitants. To the full enjoyment of the right which belongs to the city, the grading and paving of the landing, and the construction of wharves, is indispensably necessary. For the accomplishment of this object a considerable expenditure of money is required, and by its accomplishment, the interest of both parties is evidently promoted. The construction of wharves increases the business, the prosperity, and the growth of the city, and thereby contributes to the enhancement of the value of the ferry privilege, by a corresponding increase of its business. As, therefore, the city is compelled to incur a large expenditure, to enable her to have the full enjoyment of her rights in the common property, and as it operates to the advantage of both parties, every principle of equity and justice requires that the owners of the ferry, if they use the improvement, should be made liable, in some form or other, to contribute their ratable proportion to the cost of the construction. This liability cannot, however, authorize the city to subject them to the payment of regular wharfage. Such a charge might materially diminish the value of the ferry franchise."

But a city authorized to collect wharfage "for any vessel lying at anchor within any slip" has no right to wharfage against a vessel that is fastened to an adjacent pier, although in lying at the pier it occupies the greater part of the slip. Walsh v. New York F. & D. Co., 77 N. Y. 448.

A badly burned vessel, if fastened to a wharf, may be liable for wharfage. The George E. Berry, 25 Fed. Rep. 780.

Accidental Use.—When a vessel alongside of a public pier is accidentally, and without the fault of the owner, burned and sinks to the bottom near the mouth of the slip, thereby so obstructing the slip as to prevent other vessels from entering therein, those entitled to wharfage cannot recover for the loss thereof caused by such obstruction, without first showing that the owner, by due care and attention, could have removed the wreck, or at least have shifted its position so as to prevent its being a cause of injury, and that he is in default for not having done so. Hancock v. York, etc., R. Co., 10 C. B. 349; 70 E. C. L. 347.

A vessel lying at a public pier in New York was burned without fault of the owner, and sank at or near the mouth of the slip, so as to prevent other vessels coming in. It did not appear that the owner, by any care, could have removed the wreck or made it less in the way of other vessels. It was held that under these circumstances the parties entitled to wharfage could maintain no action for the loss by the obstruction. Nor was an insurance company, which had insured an undivided interest in the vessel, and had accepted an abandonment after she sank, liable for the loss of wharfage, there being no want of due care and attention on their part. Taylor v. Atlantic Mutual Ins. Co., 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 106; 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 369; affirmed in 37 N. Y. 275.

Where one person owns a wharf, and another uses a pier which projects from a bulkhead near the said wharf, so as to prevent the owner of the wharf from using it, the said owner cannot claim wharfage. Such use of the pier may be an obstruction for which the owner of the wharf may recover damages. Camden, etc., R. Co. v. Finch, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 48.

It has been held that the city of New Orleans cannot, by ordinance, exact wharfage dues from vessels landing or making fast to the batture of the Mississippi river in front of the city, at places where no artificial facilities are furnished. The Lizzie E., 30 Fed. Rep. 876.

Where the defendant, who had a right to use a berth at a wharf for a certain specified time and in a specified manner, but not during a gale, ran his vessel alongside, etc., in a gale, it was held that an action ex contractu for use and occupation would not lie. Hathaway v. Ryan, 35 Cal. 188.

A vessel compelled by stress of weather to moor to a wharf for safety, is bound to pay wharfage for such use of the wharf, and the amount of wharfage due in such a case is the customary charge for wharfage. Heron v. The Marchioness, 40 Fed. Rep. 330.

The owner of a vessel lying at one wharf and overlapping onto an adjoining wharf is liable, after notice, to wharfage, for the use made of the wharf by the overlapping portion of the vessel. The Wm. H. Brinsfield, 39 Fed. Rep. 215.

Under the Michigan statute defining "wharfage" as the "lying immediately in front of, or attached to, any wharf . . . so as to prevent the use of any portion of such wharf . . . with or without the discharge of freight, or passengers across such wharf," the mere lapping-over of a vessel lying at an adjoining wharf was held to come within the statute. The Hercules, 28 Fed. Rep. 475. But compare The Steamship Cornwall, 10 Ben. (U. S.) 108. Here the circumstances were these: The Cornwall was a large steamship which had a regular berth at a pier, but which she could enter with safety only at slack water. At the time in question she arrived at her pier at 10 a. m., but the tide did not serve until 1 p. m. She accordingly waited for the tide and made fast at the end of the pier. When so made fast her length was such that she overlapped an adjoining pier on either side. To the pier thus overlapped by her stem a line was run from the steamship, for her better security, while so waiting for the tide. It was held that the steamship did not "make fast to" such pier within the meaning of the New York Wharfage Act, and that the owner of the pier was not entitled to recover wharfage of her. The Cornwall, 10 Ben. (U. S.) 108. See also Ellwell v. Fabre, 5 N. Y. Supp. 60; Demopolis v. Webb, 87 Ala. 659.

A schooner from ten to fifteen feet from the dock, aground, scuttled, and entirely out of water at low tide, fastened in part by lines connected with an anchor on shore, and in part by lines or chains fastened to some part of the pier, is not subject to wharfage, using that term in its ordinary acceptation. The court observed: "I do not think the mere stretching of a line to the dock, under these circumstances, constitutes such wharfage as is referred to or intended in the resolution, and it should not be charged for as such." Pelham v. Woolsey, 16 Fed. Rep. 418.

A Float Is a Wharf.—In Woodruff v. One Covered Scow, 30 Fed. Rep. 269, wharfage was held to attach to a structure consisting of a float made of timbers, in width some eleven feet, and in length some twenty-three feet, constructed to float in the water, and to support above the surface of the water a floor and a house nearly the size of the float. One use of the structure was to store within the house the oars and sails of small boats landing at the float, and to afford persons means of egress from small boats coming to the ship to the adjoining wharf, and thence to the shore. But it was never used as a means for transporting upon it from place to place either passengers or freight. It remained moored to a wharf, being attached to it by lines, and then safely rising and falling with the tide. A lien was enforced for this use of the wharf.

Where, under the port regulations of Savannah, two vessels were allowed

4. Improvements Necessary to Create Liability.—Though in some cases wharfage has been allowed when no artificial improvements were made,¹ it may be considered now as settled that the owner of a wharf privilege must improve his shore so as to facilitate the receiving and discharging of cargoes, and to afford a secure mooring to vessels, before he can collect wharfage.²

5. Rights of Lessee of Wharf.—The lessee of a public wharf is entitled to the wharfage accruing at it, and all vessels using it are subject to the same rules and regulations which govern the use of public wharves.³ But a diminution of wharfage busi-to lie abreast at the wharf, and the cargo of one was carried directly to the other, it was held that the wharf owner could, in the absence of any contrary contract, charge the rates allowed for landing and shipping. Robertson v. Wilder, 69 Ga. 340.

1. In Sacramento v. Steamer New World, 4 Cal. 41, Heydenfeldt, J., said: "A wharf is properly an artificial construction, and to such its meaning must be limited; but it does not follow that the definition of wharfage is to be confined to the charge for landing at a wharf. Words must be taken according to their most universal acceptance in common use, and so we find the term wharfage generally applied to a charge for landing goods, whether upon an artificial or a natural landing." See also Dubuque v. Stout, 32 Iowa 80; 7 Am. Rep. 171.

2. The Lizzie E., 30 Fed. Rep. 876; Shreveport v. Red River, etc., Line, 37 La. Ann. 562; 55 Am. Rep. 504; New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Ellerman, 105 U. S. 166; Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U. S. 80; St. Martinsville v. Steamer Mary Lewis, 32 La. Ann. 1293.

In New Orleans v. Wilmot, 31 La. Ann. 65, the court said: "The only ground on which any sum can be claimed by the front proprietors from the owners of vessels for mooring at the banks of public navigable waters, and their discharging and receiving cargoes, is that such proprietor, by the expenditure of money and labor, has constructed and maintains works which facilitate the discharging and receiving of cargoes, and afford to vessels the means of mooring and remaining in security."

In Muscatine v. Herchey, 18 Iowa 39, Wright, C. J., said: "A wharf implies a structure artificial in its character. A landing without more is not a wharf, certainly not in its primary sense. We would not say that there may not be a landing so sufficient for all needful purposes in its natural state as to obviate the necessity of further guards or securities. But we suggest that it should be known and designated as a wharf, whether made or existing in its natural state, and that the city should at least provide the means for cabling and securing the craft and rafts landing at such points, before making the owner of the property, which has never been dedicated to the public use, liable for landing and drawing out his lumber thereon."

A vessel cannot be charged wharfage for landing on the natural bank of a river, though the landing be made within the wharf limits established by ordinance. Cape Girardeau v. Campbell, 26 Mo. App. 12.

In Columbus v. Grey, 2 Bush (Ky.) 476, the court, by Peters, C. J., said: "Notwithstanding the right was reserved by appellee, it does not appear that he had built wharves, improved the shore, or had made any preparations for the reception or delivery of goods, or the accommodation of vessels. And therefor, it does not appear that he was entitled to the tolls and wharfage collected by appellant from steamboats or other vessels landing at the banks."

A municipal corporation has no power to impose a tax for the mere privilege of using the banks of navigable waters for purposes of navigation. Cannon v. New Orleans, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 577.

3. A lease of a public wharf only entitles the lessee to the wharfage accruing thereat; the wharf still continues a public wharf, and all vessels, including those of the lessee, resorting to it, are subject to the general rules of law regulating the use of wharves, slips, and piers, and the mooring and stationing

ness resulting from a cause over which the lessor has no control, gives no right of action against the lessor.¹

6. Rates of Wharfrage—Regulation of.—The erection of a wharf by a city is presumed to be for the public benefit, rather than for revenue, and in the absence of an ordinance fixing the wharfrage dues, or providing for the payment of a compensation for the use of the wharf, no charges can be collected by the city.² When chargeable, however, such rates must in any event be reasonable.³ If the right to charge wharfrage be not expressly restricted, the rate is discretionary and cannot be interfered with, unless it be clearly unreasonable.⁴

of vessels. Com'rs of Pilots v. Clark, 33 N. Y. 251.

1. Thus where A leased from a city a wharf for a certain period, the city agreeing to indemnify the lessee if the "right to collect wharfrage was suspended for any period by the intervention of third parties," it was held that a diminution of trade on the river caused by the rebellion did not interfere with the right "to collect," and hence there could be no claim for indemnity from the city. Marshall v. Vicksburg, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 146. In this case it was further held that under the clause providing that "in case the right to collect wharfrage or rents shall be interrupted or defeated permanently through the instrumentality or with the aid of the mayor and council of the city, the city should grant certain indemnity," this right was not defeated by an ordinance reducing wharf charges which the lessee himself caused to be passed, nor by a tax other than wharfrage which the city had a right to lay, nor by a quarantine embargo laid with the lessee's consent.

The occupants of a wharf under a lease which reserved the use of the premises for the purpose of loading and unloading coal, are liable for the sinking of a canal boat occasioned by the dangerous condition of the bottom alongside the wharf, though coming to the wharf for the purpose of unloading coal for parties authorized to use the premises for that purpose. O'Rourke v. Peck, 40 Fed. Rep. 907.

2. Muscatine v. Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co., 45 Iowa 185.

3. Reasonable Rate.—Muscatine v. Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co., 45 Iowa 185; Kennedy v. Covington, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 585; 1 Dillon on Mun. Corp. (4th ed.), § 112.

In Parkersburg, etc., Transp. Co. v.

Parkersburg, 107 U. S. 691, the court said: "It is an undoubted rule, of universal application, that wharfrage for the use of all public wharves must be reasonable. But then the question arises, by what law is this rule established, and by what law can it be enforced? By what law is it to be decided whether the charges imposed are, or are not, extortionate? There can be but one answer to these questions. Clearly it must be by the local municipal law, at least until some superior or paramount law has been prescribed. . . . The courts of the United States do not enforce the common law in municipal matters in the states because it is federal law, but because it is the law of the state."

4. 1 Dillon on Mun. Corp. (4th ed.), § 112; Muscatine v. Hershey, 18 Iowa 39.

In Keokuk v. Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co., 45 Iowa 196, it is held that a city may prescribe, by ordinance, fees not unreasonable, which must be paid for the use of wharves; and such an ordinance is not unconstitutional, even though it exacts a payment from vessels moored at places where no wharves have been provided. See also Dubuque v. Stout, 32 Iowa 80; 7 Am. Rep. 171.

As between the lessor of a bulkhead and the lessor of the adjoining pier, evidence of the custom of the port is admissible to show how far wharfrage is collectible for the use of the bulkhead, and to what extent for the use of the pier. A written contract may be interpreted by the local customs in reference to which it was made, and it is error to exclude evidence of such customs. Mangum v. Farrington, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 236.

In Municipality v. Pease, 2 La. Ann. 538, the court said: "The government of the municipality has determined that Though the amount of wharfage may be regulated by the legislature,¹ such regulation of rates does not confer upon the owners of them the public wharf franchise.

Extortionate wharfage charges can be prevented only by an act of legislature.² It has been held that if a wharfinger gives notice of his rates to a customer in advance, the latter, by making use of his wharf, impliedly contracts to pay such charges, and may not afterward disaffirm his contract or refuse payment upon the ground that the charges are unreasonable.³ And where one is the rates of wharfage are due, as such; from this the state has not dissented. The responsibility of the act rests with the municipal government. The consequence of the interference of the judicial power in the details of its finances can be readily foreseen. . . . If this wharfage is a tax on commerce, or on imports or exports, it is unconstitutional however small the amount. If it be not per se unconstitutional, the unconstitutionality depending, according to the argument, on the unreasonableness of the amount, the action of the judiciary is brought directly in conflict with the municipal administrative power on an administrative question, over which, it must be conceded, that the city government is called upon to exercise, to a certain extent, discretionary power."

In A Coal Float v. Jeffersonville, 112 Ind. 15, the court said: "While the reasonableness of an ordinance is a question of law for the decision of the court, an ordinance cannot be held to be unreasonable which is expressly authorized by the legislature. The power of a court to declare an ordinance unreasonable and therefore void, is practically restricted to cases in which the legislature has enacted nothing on the subject-matter of the ordinance, and, consequently, to cases in which the ordinance was passed under the supposed incidental power of the corporation merely."

Voluntary Payment.—Where the owners of boats have paid wharfage fees collected without any authority, under protest, they cannot be recovered back in an action against the city. Muscatine v. Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co., 45 Iowa 185. See also, on this point, Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. St. Louis, 4 Dill. (U. S.) 10; Murphy v. Montgomery, 11 Ala. 586; Allnutt v. Inglis, 12 East 527; Baltimore v. White, 2 Gill (Md.) 444.

1. In Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113,

Waite, C. J., said: "There is no attempt to compel these owners to grant the public an interest in their property, but to declare their obligations, if they use it in this particular manner. It matters not in this case that these plaintiffs in error had built their warehouses and established their business before the regulations complained of were adopted. What they did was from the beginning subject to the power of the body politic to require them to conform to such regulations as might be established by the proper authorities for the common good."

In Murphy v. Montgomery, 11 Ala. 586, Ormond, J., said: "It is further urged that the city council has no right to collect toll at this wharf, because there is no provision in its charter authorizing it to do so. We infer from the deed found in the record leasing this wharf to those under whom the defendant claims, that the title to the wharf is in the city, and such being the fact, it has the same right as any other proprietor to collect wharfage from those landing goods there. This right, resulting from its proprietary interest, is not a franchise, but a right of property. It is true that as this is a matter which affects the public, the legislature may regulate its exercise, by declaring what tolls or wharfage an individual shall be allowed to receive; but this does not make the right a franchise, but is merely a restraint upon the exercise of one of the rights of property." See also Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113.

2. De Bary Baya Merchants' Line v. Jacksonville, etc., R. Co., 40 Fed. Rep. 392.

3. Southern Steam Ship Co. v. Sparks, 22 Tex. 657; 75 Am. Dec. 793. See also Jeffersonville v. Louisville, etc., Steam Ferry Co., 27 Ind. 100; 35 Ind. 19; 89 Am. Dec. 495; Winnepenny v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. St. 135.

In Woodruff v. Havemeyer, 106 N. Y. 129, referring to a statute which made authorized by law to establish, improve, and regulate a wharf, and to collect from boats using it a moderate wharfage to defray the expenses incurred, and has accordingly expended money in such improvement, one using the wharf may not resist payment of wharfage on the ground that it had not been well built, or that it needed further improvements.¹

7. Right to Distrain for Wharfage.—The owner of a wharf may distrain for wharfage any goods or chattels on board a ship or vessel which has used his wharf, although the vessel has removed from the wharf.²

X. WHARFINGER—1. Definition.—A wharfinger is one who maintains for hire a wharf for receiving goods.³

it lawful for the owners or lessees of wharves to charge and collect a certain sum per ton on all goods remaining on the same, for every day after the expiration of twenty-four hours from the time such goods were deposited thereon, Andrews, J., said: "But however this may be, we think the statute cannot be construed to prohibit the owner of a private wharf from entering into a contract for the landing and deposit of goods upon his wharf upon such terms as may be agreed upon between himself and the owner of the goods, nor can it be construed as requiring him to store goods for any period of time without compensation." See also Bain v. The Minnie L. Gerow, 48 Fed. Rep. 836.

1. In Prescott v. Duquesne, 48 Pa. St. 118, the court, by Woodward, C. J., said: "This is not the way to try the question whether municipal corporations have performed public duties. A mandamus would, perhaps, lie to compel the borough to provide adequate facilities of wharfage, or an injunction, at the suit of some agent of the public, to restrain them from collecting fees for inadequate performance. In either of these modes, the question would be tried once for all parties interested. But each individual customer cannot raise the question as a defense to charges he has voluntarily incurred. If he does not like the facilities furnished, he need not use them, but if he uses them he must pay for them, so long as the power of assessment vested in the borough is not abused."

The delivery of freight, however, from one wharf to another, is such a use of the wharf upon which the freight is finally deposited, as to entitle the proprietor of said wharf to claim the same wharfage, which he might have claimed had the original delivery been at his wharf. The J. H. Starin, 15 Blatchf. (U. S.) 473. See also Union Wharf Co. v. Hemingway, 12 Conn. 293. Though in London it has been held that a wharfinger cannot claim wharfage for freight loaded into lighters from barges tied to a wharf. Stephen v. Castor, 3 Burr. 1408.

Wharfage may include the transportation of goods over a wharf, as well as the privilege of landing them upon it. Ex p. Cass (Cal. 1887), 13 Pac. Rep. 169.

That a higher rate of wharfage may be charged when freight is removed from a wharf by means of drays, carts, or cars than if removed by lighters or other vessels, in order to compensate the proprietor for extra wear and tear of his wharf, see Soule v. San Francisco Gas Light Co., 54 Cal. 241.

There is no doubt that, in the absence of statute, a wharfinger has a right to make such contract as he sees fit with his customers as to his compensation. In Southern Steamship Co. v. Sparks, 22 Tex. 657; 75 Am. Dec. 793, Wheeler, C. J., said: "It cannot be doubted that a wharfinger, no less than a common carrier, may make what contract he pleases as to his compensation."

2. Bradby on Distress 133; Hale de Port Maris 77.

In New York, a distress for wharfage may be made at a place different from that where the wharfage accrued, provided such place is within the jurisdiction authorizing the process. Nicoll v. Gardner, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 288.

The right to distrain for wharfage was not taken away by the Act of 1846, abolishing distress for rent, nor by the Act of 1860, "in relation to the rates of wharfage," etc. Mangum v. Farrington, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 236.

3. Rodgers v. Stopfel, 32 Pa. St. 111;

2. Nature of Liability.—It is now well settled that the liability of a wharfinger for goods deposited on his wharf does not differ materially from that of a warehouseman. He is responsible only for losses which happen through his neglect to exercise reasonable and ordinary care and diligence.¹ The burden of proving negligence on the part of the wharfinger is upon the owner of the goods.² The old doctrine of Lord Mansfield, which subjected a wharfinger to the same liability as a common carrier, has been discarded in both the United States and in England.³ But if a wharfinger undertakes to convey goods from his wharf to a vessel by his own lighter, he assumes thereby the responsibility of a common carrier, and will be held liable as such in case of loss or injury to the goods.⁴

3. When Responsibility Begins.—The responsibility of a wharfinger begins when the goods are delivered at, or rather on, the wharf, and he has expressly or impliedly received them into his care and custody.⁵ A delivery of goods at a wharf is not necessarily a deliv-

72 Am. Dec. 775; The Bark Francesco, 9 Ben. (U. S.) 34; Story on Bailments (9th ed.), §§ 451, 452.

1. Schmidt v. Blood, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 268; 24 Am. Dec. 143; Blin v. Mayo, 10 Vt. 56; 33 Am. Dec. 175; Sideways v. Todd, 2 Stark. 400; Story on Bailments (9th ed.), § 452.

The liability of a wharfinger is not distinguishable from that of a warehouseman. Both are bound only to take common and reasonable care of the commodity intrusted to them. Foote v. Storrs, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 326.

In Cox v. O'Riley, 4 Ind. 368; 58 Am. Dec. 633, the court, by Perkins, J., said: "Wharfingers are not, like common carriers, answerable for all goods that may be intrusted to them in their line of business, except such as may be lost by the act of God or the public enemy. They are responsible for losses only which happen through a neglect to exercise reasonable and ordinary care and diligence. They are in the same category, in this particular, with warehousemen."

2. In an action against a wharfinger for the loss of goods intrusted to him, the burden is on the plaintiff to prove a want of care, and it is not sufficient to show a loss of the goods merely. Foote v. Storrs, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 328; Blin v. Mayo, 10 Vt. 56; 33 Am. Dec. 175.

3. Platt v. Hibbard, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 497; Roberts v. Turner, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 232; 7 Am. Dec. 311; Garside v. Trent Nav. Co., 4 T. R. 581; In re Webb, 8 Taunt. 443; Sideways v. Todd, 2 Stark. 400.

In Brown v. Denison, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 593, Savage, C. J., said: "The main question in the case is, whether the defendants are liable in this action for the safe transportation of the flour after it went out of their possession. I am of the opinion that simply as depositaries or forwarders they are not liable, having used ordinary diligence in forwarding the property by responsible persons."

In Ross v. Johnson, 5 Burr. 2825, Lord Mansfield said: "It is impossible to make a distinction between a wharfinger and a common carrier. They both receive the goods upon a contract. Every case against a carrier is like the same case against a wharfinger."

4. The liability of a wharfinger who undertakes to carry goods from his wharf to the vessel in his own lighters is similar to that of a carrier. Maving v. Todd, 1 Stark. 72.

In Buckman v. Levi, 3 Camp. 414, Lord Ellenborough said: "Before the defendant can be charged in the present instance, he must be put into a situation to resort to the wharfinger for his indemnity. But no receipt was taken for the chairs; they were not booked; and no person belonging to the wharf is fixed with a privity of their being left there. The plaintiff was bound to procure them to be booked, or to deliver them to the wharfinger himself, or some person who can be proved to be his agent for the purpose of receiving them."

5. Quiggin v. Duff, 1 M. & W. 174; Rodgers v. Stophel, 32 Pa. St. 111; 72 Am. Dec. 775.

ery to the wharfinger.¹ Such a delivery, in order to be effectual, must be accompanied by notice to him, or his agent, before he can be presumed to have assumed charge of them.²

4. When Responsibility Ends.—The responsibility of a wharfinger ends when he ceases to have control of the goods intrusted to him, or as soon as that of the vessel begins.³ His control over the goods ceases when he has delivered them to the proper officers of the vessel.⁴ Actual delivery need not be proved where by usage the officers are regarded as receiving goods when assuming control of them on the wharf.⁵ Delivery to be valid must be made to the captain or to someone having authority to receive the goods.⁶ Delivery to one of the crew will not be sufficient.⁷ Usages in the vicinity may have a good deal to do with determining when the responsibility begins and ends.⁸

5. Duty to Deliver Goods to Owner.—Where the goods are demanded of a wharfinger by the proper owner, with all charges

1. In Blin v. Mayo, 10 Vt. 56; 33 Am. Dec. 175, the court, by Williams, C. J., said: "A mere delivery of goods at the wharf is not necessarily a delivery to the owners as wharfingers. The usages of business, in the vicinity, are of importance to show when a wharfinger acquires and when he ceases to have the custody of goods in that capacity, as in the case of common carriers."

2. Gibson v. Inglis, 4 Camp. 72.

In Packard v. Getman, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 757; 16 Am. Dec. 475, the court, by Woodworth, J., said: "Admitting that, according to the usual custom and understanding of parties, a delivery on the dock, near a boat, is a good delivery so as to charge the carrier, it must always be accompanied with express notice; otherwise, he is not answerable."

3. Merritt v. Old Colony, etc., R. Co., 11 Allen (Mass.) 80; Gass v. New York, etc., R. Co., 99 Mass. 220; 96 Am. Dec. 742.

In Cobban v. Downe, 5 Esp. 41, Lord Ellenborough said: "Undoubtedly, where the responsibility of the ship begins, that of the wharfinger ends; and a delivery to the ship creates a liability there; but the delivery must be to an officer or person accredited on board the ship; it cannot be delivered to the crew at random; but the mate is such a recognized officer on board the ship, that delivery to him is a good delivery."

4. Cobban v. Downe, 5 Esp. 41.

5. In Cobban v. Downe, 5 Esp. 41, Lord Ellenborough said: "The defendant has proved that, by established usage, the goods are delivered by the wharfinger to the mate and crew of the vessel which is to carry them; from which time it has been considered that their responsibility is then at an end."

6. In Leigh v. Smith, 1 C. & P. 638; 11 E. C. L. 506, the court by Best, C. J., said: "A wharfinger must prove by distinct evidence that he delivered to the mate or an officer of the ship."

7. The goods may not be delivered to the crew at random. Cobban v. Downe, 5 Esp. 41.

8. In Blin v. Mayo, 10 Vt. 56; 33 Am. Dec. 175, the court, by Williams, C. J., said: "By the usages and customs of business is not understood to be meant such customs as, from their long continuance, have become part of the common law, but such customs and usages as are generally regarded and adopted by the persons doing business in the vicinity, and with reference to which contracts are made. The evidence of the customs and usages of the merchants, in the vicinity of the defendant's wharf, was properly received, to show that goods landed on the wharf . . . were not considered as in their custody and that they did not receive and take care of them as wharfingers."

A usage of trade may be proved to aid, in case of doubt, in construing a contract, or in determining upon the manner of discharging some duty or performing some act; but to give it controlling effect, it must be shown to be a long continued, uniform, and generally known usage. It must also be a usage relating to matters of fact, and paid or tendered, they must be delivered,¹ although he may withhold the goods when notified that they bear spurious trade-marks, and that the sale of them will be enjoined. But a wharfinger who has illegally detained goods, which the owner has afterward agreed to accept and send for, is not liable for their destruction by fire without his fault, after the owner has had a reasonable time in which to recover them.²

6. Estoppel to Deny Bailor's Title.—It has been held that a wharfinger is not estopped to denying his bailor's title.³ But where he once acknowledges the title of the person for whom he holds, he cannot afterward dispute it.⁴

7. Wharfinger's Lien—a. ON GOODS—(1) Extent of Lien.—A wharfinger has a lien on goods intrusted to his keeping to the amount of his wharfage charges;⁵ but no lien attaches until the goods are actually landed at the wharf.⁶ The lien extends to a general balance of accounts.⁷ But the wharfinger has no lien for not to modes of thinking as to law. Cox v. O'Riley, 4 Ind. 368; 58 Am. Dec. 633.

1. Hunt v. Maniere, 34 Beav. 157.

2. Carnes v. Nichols, 10 Gray. (Mass.) 369.

3. In Thorne v. Tilbury, 3 H. & N. 534, Brammell, B., said: "The case is analogous to one where a tenant says to his landlord 'you had a title at the time when you let me into possession, but have not now.'"

In Biddle v. Bond, 34 L. J. Q. B. 137, the court said: "We think that the true ground upon which a bailee may set up the jus tertii is that indicated in Shelbury v. Scotsford, viz., that the estoppel ceases when the bailment upon which it is founded is determined by what is equivalent to a title paramount."

4. Holl v. Griffin, 3 M. & S. 732.

In Gosling v. Birnie, 7 Bing. 339; 20 E. C. L. 153, the court said: "I think the plaintiff is entitled to recover; and if we were to hold otherwise, we should throw doubt on the principle by which a large portion of the trade of London is regulated; namely, that if a wharfinger acknowledges the title of the person for whom he holds, he cannot afterward dispute it, and it is not material whether the acknowledgment be oral or written."

5. Spears v. Hartly, 3 Esp. 81; Holderness v. Collinson, 7 B. & C. 212; 14 E. C. L. 30; Steinman v. Wilkins, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 466; 42 Am. Dec. 254; Scott v. Jester, 13 Ark. 437; Story on Bailments (8th ed.), § 453.

This lien will prevail over legal process against the owner of goods, if it attaches prior to the teste of such process. Rex v. Humphrey, 1 McClel. & Y. 173. Here the Crown obtained execution against one Emerson. The only goods Emerson had were in the possession of one Humphrey, a wharfinger, who had a lien on the goods for his charges. The lien was prior in time to the date of the execution. The court, in this case, said: "It is plain he has a double security: the personal security against the bankrupt and the more substantial security of actual possession of the goods. Shall it be said then that the Crown, by virtue of any privilege, shall be enabled to take from this man his better security, namely, the goods?"

The lien holds although the Statute of Limitations has run against the demand. Thus, in Spears v. Hartly, 3 Esp. 81, Lord Eldon said: "I am of the opinion that though the Statute of Limitations has run against a demand, if the creditor obtains possession of goods on which he has a lien for a general balance, he may hold them for that demand by virtue of the lien."

6. Syeds v. Hay, 4 T. R. 260.

In Stephen v. Castor, 3 Burr. 1408, Lord Mansfield said: "We are all of us clear that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover the wharfage or crantage duty for such part of the goods as were not unloaded upon their wharf."

7. 2 Kent's Com. (12th ed.) 642; Spears v. Hartly, 3 Esp. 81; Holderness v. Collinson, 7 B. & C. 212; 14 E. C. L. 30.

In Naylor v. Mangles, 1 Esp. 109, warehouse rents or for labor in landing and weighing goods in the absence of an expressed or implied agreement to that effect, though a continued and undisputed usage is evidence of such an agreement.¹

(2) Advances for Freight.—A wharfinger has a lien for advances made for freight.²

an owner of twenty-five hogsheads of sugar stored with a wharfinger, sold them, but the wharfinger refused to deliver them until his account against the seller for wharfage and advances on other goods had been settled. Lord Kenyon said: "A lien from usage was matter of evidence. The usage in the present case has been proved so often, it should be considered as a settled point that wharfingers had the lien contended for."

Lenckhart v. Cooper, 3 Bing. (N. Cas.) 99; 32 E. C. L. 55, turns upon the invalidity of a custom to extend the lien of a wharfinger to all claims he may have against the bailor other than for mere wharfage. Dresser v. Bosanquet, 4 B. & S. 460, involves the question of the construction and effect of certain statutes claimed to give a lien.

In Richardson v. Goss, 3 B. & P. 119, R. shipped goods to W.'s order. Before the arrival of the goods W. countermanded the order. Subsequently the goods arrived and were cared for by W.'s wharfinger. R. demanded the goods upon payment of the wharfage charge, but the wharfinger refused to give them up unless R. paid a general account which existed between him and W. The court, in this case, said: "Here the wharfinger had no right to detain the goods against R., who was no creditor in respect of anything but what had been laid out upon them, though if W. had demanded the goods, the wharfinger would have had a right founded on custom to retain for his general balance."

In Grant v. Humphrey, 3 F. & F. 162, a lien was held not to exist under the following circumstances: Certain oil, while under the care of a wharfinger, took fire, part being entirely consumed and the remainder only partially so. But the identity of all but a small part was lost in the fire. The unidentified oil had been delivered without payment of wharfage charge upon the same. When the owner of the identified oil demanded it, the wharfinger refused to give it up unless the wharfage charges due on all the oil was paid. The court said: "The lien would be on all the oil, and they would have a right to detain all; or, as to each portion of it, they could claim the lien pro rata, but they could not let all the rest go free, and then claim the lien, as to this last lot, for the charge on all the rest."

1. In Holderness v. Collinson, 7 B. & C. 212, Bailey, J., said: "There may be an usage in one place varying from that which prevails in another. Where the usage is general, and prevails to such an extent that a party contracting with a wharfinger must be supposed consensant of it, then he will be bound by terms of that usage. But then it should be generally known to prevail at that place. If there be any question as to the usage, the wharfinger should protect himself by imposing special terms, and he should give notice to his employer of the extent to which he claims a lien. If he neglects to do so, he cannot insist upon a right of general lien for anything beyond the mere wharfage." In this case the court sustained the claim of general lien for wharfage, but refused to allow the lien for warehouse rent and labor in landing and weighing, as the custom to allow a lien for these matters was not sufficiently proved. As to such charges, the lien is specific, applying only to the particular goods on which the services were rendered.

2. In Sage v. Gittner, 11 Barb. (N.Y.) 120, the court, by Shankland, J., said: "By the custom of warehousemen, known and established, they have a right to receive goods from the carrier, if in apparently good order, and advance to the latter his reasonable charges for carriage of them, and to hold them subject to the lien of the carrier for the amount thus advanced."

But no lien exists under the following circumstances: A imported certain iron which upon its arrival was landed at B's wharf. On the day after its arrival it was sold to C. The greater part of it was delivered to C when A became bankrupt. It was understood

(3) Termination of Bailor's Liability.—If the owner of goods deposited at a wharf sells them, and gives notice to the wharfinger of such sale, on tendering the wharfage then due, he is discharged from liability for future wharfage.¹ Such notice may be given either verbally or by a delivery order.²

b. ON VESSEL—(1) For Wharfage Charges.—Contracts for wharfage are recognized both in England and the United States as maritime contracts,³ and as such are cognizable in admiralty.⁴ By virtue of such contracts, a maritime lien arises in favor of the proprietors of a wharf against the vessel using it for the payment of reasonable wharfage charges,⁵ and no distinction is made in this respect between A and B that wharfage charges should not be payable until some future date. B refused to deliver to C the remainder of the iron, unless he paid A's wharfage charges, which C refused to do. The court observed: "There was, therefore, in this case, no original right of lien in respect of these charges, and I am not aware of any case where it has been decided that a subsequent default in payment can give such a right where it did not originally exist." Crawshaw v. Homfray, 4 B. & Ald. 50; 6 E. C. L. 385.

1. In Wooster v. Blossom, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 244; 72 Am. Dec. 549, the court, by Pearson, J., said: "If the owner sells and a delivery order is handed to the wharfinger, with a tender of the wharfage, there is no further claim on the vendor, and the personal lien attaches to the vendor, on the ground that the wharfinger is no longer liable to the vendor for the safe-keeping of the article, and, of course, has no further claim on him, but the wharfinger's liability, and his corresponding claim passes over to the vendee."

In Barry v. Longmore, 12 A. & E. 639; 40 E. C. L. 144, the court said: "The defendant could not claim more; for, although no delivery order had been served, yet, as the rate had been notified to the defendant, he had notice of the change of property, and could not allege any further lien."

2. Wooster v. Blossom, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 244; 72 Am. Dec. 549.

3. The Canal Boat Kate Tremaine, 5 Ben. (U. S.) 60; Johnson v. McDonough, Gilp. (U. S.) 101; The Maggie Hammond, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 435; De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 398; The Robert J. Mercer, 1 Sprague (U. S.) 284; Gardiner v. Ship New Jersey, 1 Pet. Adm. 223.

In Ex p. Easton, 95 U. S. 68, the court, by Clifford, J., said: "Viewed in the light of these considerations, it is clear that a contract for the use of a wharf by the master or owner of a ship or vessel, is a maritime contract and, as such, that it is cognizable in admiralty."

4. Ex p. Easton, 95 U. S. 68; and cases cited in preceding note.

5. In Ex p. Easton, 95 U. S. 68, a question arose whether a maritime lien existed for wharfage charges. In the course of the decision the court said: "Wharf accommodation is a necessity of navigation, and such accommodations are indispensable for ships and vessels and water craft of every name and description, whether employed in carrying freight or passengers, or engaged in the fisheries. Erections of the kind are constructed to enable ships, vessels and all sorts of water craft to lie in port in safety, and to facilitate their operation in loading and unloading cargo, and in receiving and landing passengers. Piers or wharves are a necessary incident to every well-regulated port, without which commerce and navigation would be subjected to great inconvenience, and be exposed to vexatious delay and constant peril. Conveniences of the kind are wanted both at the port of departure and at the place of destination, and the expenses paid at both are everywhere regarded as properly chargeable as expenses of the voyage."

... Such erections are indispensably necessary for the safety and convenience of commerce and navigation, and those who take berth alongside them to secure those objects derive great benefit from their use. All experience supports the proposition, and shows to a demonstration, that the contract of the wharfinger appertains to the pursuit of commerce and navigation.

... Standard authorities, as well as between a foreign and domestic vessel.¹ But the contract must be made by some person having authority to pledge the vessel to the performance of it, before a lien can be created.²

(2) Priority.—A maritime lien for dockage has been given priority over a bottomry lien;³ but a mortgage placed on a vessel reason, principle, and the necessities of commerce, support the theory that the contract for wharfage is a maritime contract, which, in the case supposed, gives to the proprietor of the wharf a maritime lien on the ship or vessel for his security. . . . Viewed in the light of these considerations, it is clear that a contract for the use of a wharf, by the master or owner of a ship or vessel, is a maritime contract, and, as such, that it is cognizable in the admiralty; that such a contract, being one made exclusively for the benefit of the ship or vessel, a maritime lien in the case supposed arises in favor of the proprietor of the wharf against the vessel for payment of reasonable and customary charges in that behalf for the use of the wharf, and that the same may be enforced by a proceeding in rem against the vessel, or by a suit in personam against the owner."

But when a vessel is under arrest on legal process, and in the custody of the law, a wharfinger cannot enforce his lien by a detention of the vessel; he must apply to the court for its allowance, and it will be ordered to be paid in concurrence with other liens standing in the same rank of privilege. The Phebe, Ware (U. S.) 354.

In an action by a lessee of public wharves for the wharfage of a boat, constructed simply as a depository for oysters brought to the city for sale, being mostly boarded up at the sides, and square at both ends, with one end made fast to the bulkhead, midway between two piers which formed a slip, and connected with the bulkhead by gang planks, over which oysters received at the other end were generally discharged directly upon the wharf or street, the court held that, under the act of the legislature and the ordinances of the corporation of New York, the boat was liable for full wharfage, it being conceded that the bulkhead was a "wharf," and the boat a "vessel." Decker v. Jaques, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 80.

The fact that a vessel is a mere barge, not fitted with any means of propulsion, but dependent on towing, does not prevent a lien from attaching. Ex p. Easton, 95 U. S. 68. A lien also attaches for the wharfage of a floating boathouse, although never used in the transportation of passengers or freight. Woodruff v. One Covered Scow, 30 Fed. Rep. 269.

But a libel for a balance of an account between a wharfinger and a steamboat, most of the items of which were not maritime, was held not to be maintainable. The Saginaw, 32 Fed. Rep. 176.

Where a marshal, however, levied on, but did not keep actual possession of, a vessel which had been removed from a wharf without the knowledge of the wharfinger, and which was afterward returned to the same wharf, it was held that the lien of the wharfinger was revived, and that he was to be paid his previous wharfage out of the proceeds of a sale under the execution made after her return. Johnson v. Schooner M'Donough, Gilp. (U. S.) 101.

A floating structure moored alongside a wharf, so that carts containing refuse to be dumped into boats can be driven over it from the wharf, is not a vessel within the meaning of the maritime law, and no lien for wharfage attaches to it under that law. Ruddiman v. A Scow Platform, 38 Fed. Rep. 158.

A steamboat owned by a city and employed in the transportation of the harbor police, is exempt from liability to seizure to enforce a claim in admiralty for wharfage. The Police Boat Seneca, 8 Ben. (U. S.) 509.

1. In respect to awarding a maritime lien upon a vessel for wharfage, no distinction should be made between foreign and domestic vessels. The Canal Boat Kate Tremaine, 5 Ben. (U. S.) 60. See also Banta v. McNeil, 5 Ben. (U. S.) 74.

2. The Mary K. Campbell, 31 Fed. Rep. 840.

3. In Ex p. Lewis, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 483, the court, by Story, J., said: "If the dockage be a lien, is it a privileged lien, having priority over a bottomry interest? It being indispensable for the preservation of the vessel, it seems prior to its arrival at the wharf under an attachment, may take precedence of the wharfinger's lien.¹

(3) Enforcement.—A wharfinger may enforce his lien either by a proceeding in rem against the vessel, or by a suit in personam against the owner.²

c. LIEN UNDER STATUTE.—All questions affecting liens under statutes can be determined only by referring in each case to the statutes of the state under which the question arises.³

8. Wharfinger's Interest an Insurable One.—A wharfinger has an insurable interest in all goods intrusted to his care, and such interest will be included in a policy covering "goods in trust."⁴ In to me that it must necessarily be so considered."

1. The Mary K. Campbell, 31 Fed. Rep. 840.

2. Ex p. Easton, 95 U. S. 68.

An action to recover wharfage is not an action for the recovery of real or personal property; and persons claiming to own the wharf are not necessary parties to an action for wharfage. Kelsey v. Murray, 18 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 294; 28 How. Pr. 243.

A wharfinger cannot maintain an action in his own name to recover money due for dockage and wharfage, although by statute the dockage and wharfage is directed to be paid to him, and he is required to collect the same. Buckbee v. Brown, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 110.

Distress, and not an action, is the proper remedy for the collection of wharfage under the New York Laws 1860, ch. 254, § 7. Warren v. McDiarmid, 34 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 304.

A wharfinger in Charleston may recover wharfage from the owner of goods shipped by a factor to his customer in the country, if it is not paid by the factor, although it is shown to be the custom in that city for the factors to pay the wharfage in such cases. Fitzsimons v. Milner, 2 Rich. (S. Car.) 370.

Where a city ordinance fixed wharfage rates, it was held that it was not necessary, in order to enforce a lien for delinquent wharfage, that the ordinance should provide for such enforcement, as the provisions of the general statute might be invoked. A Coal-Float v. Jeffersonville, 112 Ind. 15.

3. The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 558; The Steamer St. Lawrence, 1 Black (U. S.) 529.

Under New York Laws 1875, p. 482, fixing the rates of wharfage, a vessel which makes fast to two distinct landing places must pay accordingly. If she leaves a wharf without paying the wharfage due, she becomes liable, under the said statute, to pay double the rates established by the statute. The added amount is not a penalty, but is a wharfage rate; and the statute gives a lien on the vessel for the entire sum. The Virginia Rulon, 13 Blatchf. (U. S.) 519.

Indiana Rev. Stat., § 3106, provides that a city may have a lien against a boat, vessel, or water craft for landing, wharfage, or dockage, where the claim has been contracted on behalf of the boat, vessel, or water craft by the owner, master, clerk, or consignee; it is not necessary that an ordinance regulating the rates of wharfage shall declare the claim therefor to be a lien on the vessel "contracting the same," as such lien attaches by operation of law. A Coal-Float v. Jeffersonville, 112 Ind. 15.

For the statutes of various states upon this subject, see Stimson's American Statute Law, § 4643.

4. See WAREHOUSEMAN, vol. 28, p. 636; Ex p. Bateman, 8 De G. M. & G. 263.

In Waters v. Monarch F., etc., Assur. Co., 5 El. & Bl. 870; 85 E. C. L. 868, Lord Campbell, C. J., said: "The first question is whether, upon the construction of the contract, these goods were intended to be covered by the policy. I think in either policy the description is such as to include them. What is meant in those policies by the words 'goods in trust?' I think that means goods with which the assured were intrusted; not goods held in trust in the strict technical sense . . . but goods with which they were intrusted in the ordinary sense of the case of loss he can recover the full amount of the insurance; but is liable to pay over to the owner all in excess of his charges.¹ He may, at his own expense and without notice to the owner, keep a floating policy for the benefit of all who may become his customers.²

WHEN.—The ordinary meaning of the adverb “when” is at that time.³

word. They were so intrusted with the goods deposited on their wharves. I cannot doubt the policy was intended to protect such goods; and it would be very inconvenient if wharfingers could not protect such goods by a floating policy.”

1. In Waters v. Monarch F., etc., Assur. Co., 5 El. & Bl. 870; 85 E. C. L. 868, Lord Campbell, C. J., said: “The last point that arises is, to what extent does the policy protect those goods. The defendants say that it was only the plaintiffs’ personal interest. But the policies are in terms contracts to make good ‘all such damage and loss as may happen by fire to the property hereinbefore mentioned.’ That is a valid contract; and, as the property is wholly destroyed, the value of the whole must be made good, not merely the particular interest of the plaintiffs.”

2. In Waters v. Monarch F., etc., Assur. Co., 5 El. & Bl. 870; 85 E. C. L. 868, the court said: “And I think that a person intrusted with goods can insure them without orders from the owner, and even without informing him that there was such a policy.”

3. Webster’s Dict. This definition was adopted in St. Louis v. Withams, 90 Mo. 646, where it was held that, in the construction of a city ordinance, words are to be taken in their ordinary sense; hence, the word “when” cannot be converted into “while” where the effect would be to turn special sessions into general ones, as in the phrase “when assembled.” The court said: “The case hinges on the proper interpretation of the words ‘when assembled.’ Words are to be taken in their ordinary sense. The ordinary meaning of the adverb ‘when’ is ‘at the time that.’ (Webst. Dict.) The meaning for which the city contends would convert ‘when’ into ‘while,’ the effect of which would be to turn special sessions into general ones in open repugnance to charter provisions. If this conclusion is correct, then such conclusion is not in the least affected by the concluding words of the mayor’s message to the special session: ‘I am not adverse to submitting for your consideration any measure, if satisfied that the public interests demand it shall be heard.’ Because the mayor, being required by the charter to specially state to the municipal assembly the objects for which they have been convened, could not ‘reserve the right to submit other measures if the public interest demanded a hearing for them.’ Such a reservation is unknown to the charter, and, besides, does not ‘specially state’ the objects for which the assembly have been convened. A special statement is a very different sort of thing from a right reserved to make a special statement at some subsequent period.”

“When” in the Sense of “If.”—In State v. Haberle, 72 Iowa 140, the court held it to be no error in an instruction that “when” was used in the sense of “if.” The court said: “The court further instructed the jury as follows: ‘When it is successfully proven that the general reputation of a witness for general moral character is bad, the witness is impeached, and the jury will be warranted in disregarding the testimony of such witness, as unworthy of belief. The defendants have been witnesses in their own behalf, and are subject to be impeached, the same as any other witness.’ This instruction is claimed to be erroneous, because it assumes that the defendants were impeached. We do not think it is vulnerable to this objection. The use of the expression, ‘when it is successfully proven,’ etc., is equivalent to saying, ‘If it be successfully proven,’ etc.”

Agreement to Discharge Defendant
“When” a Certain Sum Shall Be Paid.—In such an agreement “when” was held to be equivalent to “at a time after.” Kirtz v. Peck, 113 N. Y. 222. The court said: “There is no language in the contract providing for any specific time for the delivery of the release and discharge, but it may be required at any time after payment. Its language is,

WHENEVER.—The word “whenever,” though often used as equivalent to “as soon as,” is sometimes used where the time intended by it is, and will be, until its arrival, or for some uncertain period at least, indeterminate.¹

WHISKY.—See note 2.

‘when’ the money is paid, the said Jane A. Bush and her husband shall release and discharge the party of the first part from all claims, dues, and demands which they or either of them may have against him. Morris v. Sliter, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 59. The word ‘when’ is used in the sense ascribed to it by lexicographers, as ‘at a time after,’ and as thus used the case of Morris v. Sliter, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 59, is precisely in point.”

In a Will.—“When” in a testamentary gift usually has the sense of “if” and implies a condition. Guyther v. Taylor, 3 Med. Eq. 323; Jolly v. Hancock, 22 L. J. Exch. 38; 7 Exch. 820; Hanson v. Graham, 6 Ves. Jr. 239.

But circumstances, even though slight in the context, may be sufficient to show that a condition was not intended, and in such cases the gift will be held vested. Fisher v. Johnson, 38 N. J. Eq. 47; Mennig v. Batdorff, 5 Pa. St. 503; Letchworth's Appeal, 30 Pa. St. 175.

“When” usually creates a condition precedent. Jolly v. Hancock, 22 L. J. Exch. 38; 7 Exch. 820.

Where there is a testamentary gift to A, “if,” or “when,” or “provided,” or “in case,” or “so soon as” (phrases which are synonymous, Shrimpton v. Shrimpton, 31 Beav. 425), a certain event happens—e. g., attaining a stated age—such a gift, standing unaffected by the context, confers only a contingent interest, and requires the happening of the event to give it validity. But with the aid of a context such words may, without difficulty, not defer the vesting of the subject-matter of the gift, but merely refer to the futurity of its possession. 1 Jarm. on Wills (6th ed.) 805, 809, 816, 842, 854–960; Boraston's Case, 3 Rep. 19 a; Phipps v. Ackers, 3 C. & F. 703; nom. Phipps v. Williams, 5 Sim. 44; Scotney v. Lomer, 54 L. J. Ch. 558; 55 L. J. Ch. 443; 29 Ch. Div. 535; 31 Ch. Div. 380; In re Wrey, 54 L. J. Ch. 1098; 30 Ch. Div. 507. It has also been said that “‘when’ cannot be considered as so strongly indicating contingency as ‘provided,’ and ‘if.’” Watson Eq. 1217.

Where the gift is to a class “who,” or “as,” shall attain a certain age, the rule (nearly universally applied) is to regard the attainment of the age as part of the description of the beneficiary, and to construe the gift as contingent, “upon the ground that no one could claim who could not predicate of himself that he was of the age required.” Per Wigram, V. C., in Bull v. Pritchard, 16 L. J. Ch. 186; 5 Hare 567. See also 1 Jarm. on Wills (6th ed.) 817, 818, 854, 860. But even this construction may yield to a context. Muskett v. Eaton, 45 L. J. Ch. 22; 1 Ch. Div. 435; 1 Jarm. on Wills (6th ed.) 819, 855–860.

The word “when,” like the words “at” and “if,” applied to a bequest of personalty, makes the gift contingent; but the addition of the words “equally to be divided,” in a case where there are several legatees, shows that the words “when,” etc., were only used to designate the time when the enjoyment of the legacy was to commence, and would not prevent it from vesting. Sims v. Smith, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 347.

1. Robinson v. Greene, 14 R. I. 188.

The word “whenever” and its synonyms, referring to the time when property is to be enjoyed, are among the most ordinary words used in creating a vested remainder, and cannot be relied on as a test of a contingent one. Manderson v. Lukens, 23 Pa. St. 31.

2. The selling of a compound in which whisky is the predominant ingredient is selling whisky. Thus, in Galloway v. State, 23 Tex. App. 398, where an indictment charged the offense as selling “whisky,” and the evidence showed that the article sold was “whisky cocktail,” it was held that there was no variation between the allegation and proof. The court said: “It is in proof that what is called ‘whisky cocktail,’ is only a mode of preparing whisky as a beverage. Whisky is the predominant ingredient. In selling the compound, the accused undoubtedly sold whisky, which was a component part of the article sold, and the main ingredient designed and desired in the sale and purchase. If whisky be present as the predominant

WHISTLING.—See note 1.

WHITE.—See note 2.

WHITE PERSON.—(See also MULATTO, vol. 15, p. 946; NEGRO, vol. 16, p. 484).—These words, as ordinarily used in the United States and in their well settled and popular meaning, include only persons of the Caucasian race, so the words used in the naturalization laws of the United States do not include individuals of the Mongolian race;³ nor persons of half white and half Indian element in the mixture, it is immaterial that bitters and tonics be used to qualify or render it more palatable as a beverage. (Wall v. State (Ala. 1886) 8 Crim. L. Mag. 202). Mr. Wharton says: 'If pretexts such as these are sustained, the worst vendors of the worst liquors would be the best protected by law.' (2 Whart. Crim. L. (8th ed.,) § 1507.) We have found no error in the conviction in this case, and the judgment is affirmed." See also INTOXICATING LIQUORS, vol. 11, p. 582.

1. In Moore v. Haviland, 61 Vt. 58, the court said: "The plaintiff was allowed to show by expert witnesses what whistling in horses is, and how it affects them, but was precluded from showing by this class of witnesses that whistling in horses was an unsoundness, and that it was so universally considered among horsemen. The court instructed the jury in a manner not expected to in regard to what facts would amount to a legal unsoundness in a horse, and submitted to the jury to determine whether they found such facts established. We think there was no error in the action of the county court on this subject. The proposition of the plaintiff would substitute the expert witnesses in the place of the court and jury to determine what constitutes an unsoundness. This is never allowable. Witnesses, expert or non-expert, are never legally allowed to assume the province of both the court and jury. Interrogatory 8, in the deposition of Albert Way, was: 'State whether there was any unsoundness of any kind about the horse,' and the answer: 'He was perfectly sound, with the exception that he was inclined to be flat-footed.' This question and answer, if they stand alone, were a clear invasion of the principle which we have just laid down, that a witness, expert or non-expert, is never allowed to assume the office of both the court and jury in determining the vital question in issue. But by the two preceding questions the witness had been particularly called upon to state whether during the summer of 1886, at any time while he knew the horse, there had been any defect about his breathing, or if he had noticed any inclination or appearance of his being what is called a 'whistler.' These questions the witness had answered in the negative. They covered fully the only point in issue on this subject between the parties. In this state of the witness's testimony, interrogatory 8 and its answer were wholly immaterial. They added nothing to the force of the witness's testimony, properly drawn out, in the case. It would have been wiser, perhaps, to have excluded the interrogatory and its answer; yet it is quite manifest that, following the witness's testimony, properly drawn out on the vital question in the case, it added nothing to the force of that testimony, and was directed to a phase of the case which might have been, but was not, in issue, and so it was wholly irrelevant and immaterial, and could have wrought the plaintiff no injury." See also HORSSES, vol. 9, p. 766.

2. White Paper Ballots.—Ballots upon paper tinged with blue, which has ruled lines, not placed there as marks to distinguish the ballots, are upon white paper within the meaning of a statute providing "that no ballot shall be received, or counted, unless the same is written or printed upon white paper, without any marks or figures thereon, intended to distinguish one ballot from another." People v. Kilduff, 15 Ill. 493.

3. In re Ah Yup, 5 Sawy. (U. S.) 155. In this case Sawyer, J., reviewing the history of the legislation, said: "Neither in popular language, in literature, nor in scientific nomenclature, do we ordinarily, if ever, find the words 'white person' used in a sense so comprehensive as to include an individual of the Mongolian race. Yet, in all, color, blood; who are therefore not entitled to be admitted to citizenship.¹

The distinction between white persons and persons not white does not depend upon the predomination of white blood over negro blood. The classes are to be understood as embracing those persons commonly understood to belong to the white or colored population respectively.² So the words "white" and notwithstanding its indefiniteness as a word of description, is made an important factor in the basis adopted for the distinction and classification of races. I am not aware that the term 'white person,' as used in the statutes as they have stood from 1802 till the late revision, was ever supposed to include a Mongolian. While I find nothing in the history of the country, in common or scientific usage, or in legislative proceedings, to indicate that Congress intended to include in the term 'white person' any other than an individual of the Caucasian race, I do find much in the proceedings of Congress to show that it was universally understood in that body, in its recent legislation, that it excluded Mongolians. At the time of the amendment, in 1870, extending the naturalization laws to the African race, Mr. Sumner made repeated and strenuous efforts to strike the word 'white' from the naturalization laws, or to accomplish the same object by other language. It was opposed on the sole ground that the effect would be to authorize the admission of Chinese to citizenship. Every Senator, who spoke upon the subject, assumed that they were then excluded by the term 'white person,' and that the amendment would admit them, and the amendment was advocated on the one hand, and opposed on the other, upon that single idea."

Hawaiians.—U. S. Rev. Stat. 1878, § 2169, allowing only persons of the white and African races to become citizens, is not modified by 22 U. S. Stat. at L., p. 61, § 14, which provides that "hereafter no state court, or court of the United States shall admit Chinese to citizenship, and all laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed," as the purpose of the latter act was to remove all doubt as to the eligibility of Chinese to citizenship, and therefore a native of the Hawaiian Islands may not be naturalized, as he belongs to neither of the races mentioned. In re Kanaka Nian, 6 Utah 259.

The court said: "There is a general rule of construction of statutes that if a portion of a number of classes are included by name such a rule of construction for this section would admit to citizenship the aliens of all other races, an effect that Congress unquestionably never intended. Some courts had admitted Chinese to citizenship, and this section was evidently made to prevent such naturalization and to remove all doubt. We are of opinion that the laws authorize the naturalization of aliens of the Caucasian or white races and of the African races only, and all other races, among which are the Hawaiians, are excluded."

Liability of United States for Property of Friendly Indians Destroyed by a "White Person."—U. S. Rev. Stat., § 2154, making the United States liable, under certain circumstances, for the property of friendly Indians, which is taken, injured or destroyed by a "white person," does not apply where the offender is a negro. U. S. v. Prettyman, 100 U. S. 235.

1. In re Camille, 6 Fed. Rep. 256.

2. Duval v. Johnson, 39 Ark. 182.

In People v. Dean, 14 Mich. 406, Campbell, J., said: "As the decisions now stand, so far as I have been able to follow them out, there is not a court in the United States which holds that a 'colored person,' in the popular acceptance, although lighter than a mulatto, can be called 'white' without doing violence to language. In this state, both before and since the constitution now under consideration, the population of African descent has always been divided into black, mulatto, and 'other persons of color,' under statutes designed to protect them from illegal bondage; and every one must admit that statutes which protected none of a lighter shade than mulatto would have been of comparatively small service in that direction. (See Rev. Stat. 1838, p. 624; 2 Comp. L., § 5735; L. 1859, p. 526.) The term, 'persons of color,' was used in a very broad sense, and in conformity with popular usage, or it was senseless altogether."

"colored," as used in statutes providing for the maintenance of schools, are held to be used in their ordinary acceptation.¹

WHOEVER.—See note 2.

WHOLESALE.—(See also INTOXICATING LIQUORS, vol. 11, pp.

The division line is generally recognized to be that of one-quarter blood, as in Virginia, see Dean v. Com., 4 Gratt. (Va.) 541; and in Kentucky, Gentry v. McMinis, 3 Dana (Ky.) 382.

In Louisiana, if the proportion of African blood did not exceed one-eighth the person was deemed white; as was the rule in the colonial code noir of France. 2 Kent's Com. 72.

1. Van Camp v. Board of Education, 9 Ohio St. 407. In this case Peck, J., said: "In determining what is to be understood by the terms 'white' and 'colored,' as used in this act, we may look to the state of things existing at the time, the evils complained of, and the remedies sought to be applied. For nearly two generations, blacks and mulattoes had been a proscribed and degraded race in Ohio. They were debarred from the elective franchise and prohibited from immigration and settlement within our borders, except under severe restrictions. They were also excluded from our common schools and all means of public instruction—incapacitated from serving upon juries, and denied the privilege of testifying in cases where a white person was a party. It would be strange, indeed, if such a state of things had not increased, in the present generation, the natural repugnance of the white race to communion and fellowship with them. Whether consistent with true philanthropy or not, it is nevertheless true, that in many portions, if not throughout the state, there was and still is an almost invincible repugnance to such communion and fellowship. . . . Our standard philologist, Webster, defines 'colored people' to be 'black people, Africans or their descendants, mixed or unmixed.' Such is also the common understanding of the term. A person who has any perceptible admixture of African blood, is generally called a colored person. In affixing the epithet 'colored,' we do not ordinarily stop to estimate the precise shade, whether light or dark, though, where precision is desired, they are sometimes called 'light colored,' or 'dark colored,' as the case may be. If we look at the evils the law was intended to remedy, we shall arrive at the same result. One of the evils undoubtedly was the repugnance felt by many of the white youths and their parents to mingling, socially and on equal terms, with those who had any perceptible admixture of African blood. This feeling or prejudice, if it be one, had been fostered by long years of hostile legislation and social exclusion. The general assembly, legislating for the people as they were, rather than as, perhaps, they ought to have been, while providing for the education and consequent ultimate elevation of a long degraded class, yielded for the time to a deep-seated prejudice, which could not be eradicated suddenly, if at all. Such an arrangement, in the present state of public feeling, is far better for both parties—for the colored youth as well as those entirely white. If those a shade more white than black were to be forced upon the white youth against their consent, the whole policy of the law would be defeated. The prejudice and antagonism of the whites would be aroused, bickerings and contentions become the order of the day, and the moral and mental improvement of both classes retarded. It would seem, then, from this examination of the law of 1853, and the circumstances under which it was passed, that the words 'white' and 'colored,' as used in that act, were both used in their ordinary and common acceptation, and that any other construction would do violence to the legislative intent, and perpetuate the very evils that act was intended to remedy." See also SCHOOLS, vol. 21, p. 766.

2. In Palmer v. Wakefield, 102 Mass. 214, it was held that the provision of a statute subjecting to a penalty "whoever" brings a pauper into any town in the state where he is not lawfully settled, knowing him to be poor and indigent, etc., applies to public officers as well as to private persons.

669-670; RETAIL, vol. 21, p. 296).—A term frequently used in statutes regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors.¹

1. Commission Merchant.—Under the seventy-ninth section of the Internal Revenue Act of 1864, as amended by the act of July 13th, 1866 (14 Stat. at L.), persons who sell goods in their own name at their own store, on commission, and have possession of the goods as soon as the sales are made, and who deliver and send them off to their customers—such sales being to an extent exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars per annum—are to be taxed as “wholesale dealers,” not less than persons who sell to that amount on their own account. Slack v. Tucker, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 321.

Intoxicating Liquors.—By Wisconsin Session Laws (1850) ch. 139, § 5, all notes or accounts or evidences of debt given for retail liquor bills are absolutely void. The term “wholesale” implies the selling in or by unbroken parcels, as by the barrel, pipe, or cask, etc., while the term “retail” implies the cutting up or dividing such pieces, or parcels, or casks, into smaller quantities, and selling to customers in such manner. The purchase of liquors from time to time, in six or ten gallon kegs of different kinds, cannot, in any proper use of language, be called “selling by wholesale,” if the casks are taken from a large bulk. Gorsuth v. Butterfield, 2 Wis. 237.

Wholesale Liquor Dealer.—A manufacturer of liquor, selling in unbroken packages at his place of business to dealers, is not a “wholesale liquor dealer,” liable to taxation as other merchants. Taylor v. Vincent, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 282; 47 Am. Rep. 338; Pearce v. Com., 6 Ky. 113.

The mere fact that a liquor dealer sold by the quart, and in larger quantities, not drunk or intended to be drunk on the premises, is not enough to constitute him a “wholesale dealer.” State v. Lowenhaupt, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 14. Here the court said: “We have no definition in terms in any of our statutes of a wholesale dealer in liquor, nor of a retail dealer. It is clear that the occupation and business of a wholesale dealer by 46th section of Act of 1882, is a privilege and is forbidden to be followed without a license; but does this presentment charge the party guilty of doing this? We cannot so understand it. Mr. Bouvier (Law Dict., vol. 2, p. 473), defines retail ‘to sell by small parcels, and not in gross.’ Retailer of merchandise as ‘one who deals in merchandise in smaller quantities than he buys—generally with a view to profit.’ These definitions are not clear nor full, and do not add much to a distinct conception of the things attempted to be defined. We take it, what is meant by retailing is selling by small quantities, to suit customers, articles which are bought in larger amounts generally. Now one who sells in this way, or whose business is so to sell, is a retail dealer; one who sells by the nature of his business in gross, and not by the small quantity or parcel to consumers, is a wholesale dealer. While these definitions may not include all the elements in detail of either character of dealer, they go far enough for the decision of this case. It is not averred that the defendant is a wholesale dealer, or that he sells or did sell to this party by the wholesale, to be by him retailed, or as a retail dealer, nor in fact is there any fact averred from which the party’s character as wholesale dealer can be made out except that he ‘sold by the quart and in larger quantities, not drunk or intended to be drunk on the premises.’ It may have been a gallon sold in a jug on the order of a customer. It would be an abuse of language to hold this would constitute a wholesale dealer in liquors, intended to be provided for by the statute.”

The board of aldermen of P. granted a license to H. to sell liquor at retail only, and H. gave bond to comply with the conditions of the license. Before it was granted, the board had passed a resolution that a sale of liquor in quantities over three gallons should be a sale at wholesale; but this resolution was not stated in the license, or recited or referred to in the bond, or stated or referred to in the grant of license, as recorded. In an action on H.’s bond for a breach thereof, in selling ten gallons of liquor, drawn from a cask containing a much larger quantity, it was held that the sale, being in the ordinary sense a sale at retail, was not affected by the resolution of the board, and was no breach of the condition of the bond. Tripp v. Hennessy, 10 R. I. 131. In this case the court, by Brayton, C. J., said: “It is not seriously contended that a sale in this quantity is, according to the common and popular import of the term, a sale at wholesale. In that common and popular sense the words wholesale and retail must be taken to have been used in the statute. The sale here involves the idea of breaking up and dividing, and parceling out the goods which are held by the seller in larger parcels or packages in which he has purchased, and excludes the idea of selling a thing whole and unbroken. It is not insisted that, within the meaning of the act as it stands, the sale made by the defendant, Hennessy, is one at wholesale. It has been decided that such a sale is not one at wholesale, but is such as a retailer may and does make. State v. Wilson, 2 Wis. 237. But it is claimed that it is such by virtue of a resolution of the board of aldermen. Before granting any licenses under chapter 757, which requires the licensees to state whether the licensee should sell by wholesale or at retail, the board of aldermen, in order to define the meaning of those terms and to settle the line of distinction between them, resolved, that a sale at retail should be a sale in quantities not exceeding three gallons; a sale in quantities greater than three gallons, a sale at wholesale. This resolution was, however, not stated in the license which was required to be given the person licensed, and was also required to be posted up in the place licensed. The license was simply to sell at retail; neither was the resolution recited or referred to in the bond, nor was it stated or referred to in the grant of the license as recorded. The grant did not limit or define the term 'at retail.' "

WHOLLY DESTROYED.—See note 1.

1. Fire Insurance.—In Oshkosh Packing, etc., Co. v. Mercantile Ins. Co., 31 Fed. Rep. 204, the court, by Dyer, J., said: "In this state, Wisconsin, we have a statute which provides that 'whenever any policy of insurance shall be written to insure any real property, and the property insured shall be wholly destroyed without criminal fault on the part of the insured or his assigns, the amount of the insurance written in such policy shall be taken conclusively to be the true value of the property when insured, and the true amount of loss and measure of damages when destroyed.' The expression 'wholly destroyed' in this statute is equivalent to total loss; and total loss, as applicable to a building (for this statute relates only to real property), means, not that the materials of which it is composed were all utterly destroyed or obliterated, but that the building, though some part of it may remain standing, has lost its identity and specified character as a building, and instead thereof has become a broken mass, or so far in that condition that it cannot be properly any longer designated a building. When that has occurred, then there is a total destruction or loss. May, Ins., § 421a. Or, as it is said in one of the authorities which treats of this question, a total loss does not mean an absolute extinction. The question is not whether all the parts and material composing the building are absolutely or physically destroyed, but whether, after the fire, the thing insured still exists as a building. 1 Wood, Ins., § 107."

The words "wholly destroyed," as used in the statute, are equivalent to "total loss," and mean that the building, though some part of it may remain standing, has lost its identity and specific character as a building, and has become a disintegrated mass that cannot be properly designated as a building, and the court properly instructed the jury that, in order to aid the defendant, the standing wall must be believed to be of material value "as a building or a part of a building," and also properly refused to instruct that, if such wall were of any material value, it would avail the defendant. Barnard v. National F. Ins. Co., 38 Mo. App. 107.

The words "wholly destroyed," as used in the statute, have a technical meaning, different from their ordinary meaning in common usage, which would apply the words to any material change of form or substance. But, under the statute, a building is wholly destroyed, only when no part of it remains intact or substantially uninjured, so that it can be utilized in effectually restoring the structure to its entirety. The trial court erred in submitting to the jury, without proper definition, the meaning of the words, as well as their application to the facts in evidence. Ampleman v. Citizens Ins. Co., 35 Mo. App. 308.

In Seyk v. Millers Nat. Ins. Co., 74 Wis. 67, the court said: "Were the WIDOW—(See also DOWER, vol. 5, p. 884; HUSBAND AND WIFE, vol. 9, p. 789).—In technical as well as ordinary use, the term widow has reference to a woman who has lost her husband by death,¹ the condition of widowhood being terminated by subsequent marriage.² A divorced woman is not a widow upon the death of her former husband, and can claim no rights as such.³

insured buildings wholly destroyed within the meaning of section 1943? The evidence is that all the combustible material in the structures was destroyed, and, although portions of the brick walls were left standing, yet they were useless as walls, and many, perhaps most, of the bricks therein were spoiled by the heat. It cannot be doubted that the identity and specific character of the insured buildings were destroyed by the fire, although there was not an absolute extinction of all the parts thereof. This was an entire destruction of the buildings, within the meaning of the statute. 1 Wood, Ins., § 107." See also FIRE INSURANCE, vol. 7, p. 1002.

1. Webster's Dict.; Whitsell v. Mills, 6 Ind. 229.

2. Alexandria Bank v. Hoof, 4 Cranch (C. C.) 323; Cooper v. Pogue, 92 Pa. St. 254.

In Com. v. Powell, 51 Pa. St. 440, Thompson, J., said: "In common parlance, we know the term 'widow' means an unmarried woman, and unless it be shown, which has not been attempted, that there is a technical sense to which it is to be referred for exposition, this is the sense in which we must regard it as used by the legislature. Our law dictionaries agree in their definitions of the usual acceptance of the meaning of the word 'widow': A woman whose husband is dead. Whart. 'Widow,' an unmarried woman whose husband is dead. Bouvier. Worcester defines the word thus, 'A woman whose husband is dead and who remains unmarried;' and Webster, in the unabridged edition of 1844, 'A woman who has lost her husband by death and has not taken another—one long bereaved of a husband.' The word is so entirely and exclusively descriptive of an unmarried condition, having once been married, that any other sense would be figurative."

The right, however, which is given to a widow to sue for the homicide of her husband, is not divested by her subsequent marriage. Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Garr, 57 Ga. 277.

3. Claim of Burr, 11 Op. Atty. Gen'l 1; Whitsell v. Mills, 6 Ind. 229; Schonfield v. Turner, 75 Tex. 324. In Matter of Ensign's Estate, 103 N. Y. 284, Finch, J., said: "The divorced wife is not 'the widow.' She may be the lawful wife of another man, and the deceased may have lawfully remarried in another state, or by permission of the court in this, and it would follow, if the appellant is right, that a woman may be a widow although her lawful husband is living, and that an intestate may leave two widows with equal rights to administration and distribution. Suppose that, with unusual activity, he should leave four, how would each get one-third of the personalty? and were the children of any account in the scheme of distribution? In one event 'the widow' is entitled to the whole surplus. The appellant's counsel solves the struggle for priority by applying to the later wives, with a sort of grim humor, the maxim caveat emptor, but the suggestion is not quite adequate to unsettle the law and unite at desired points a severed bond. When the court dissolves the marriage contract at the suit of the innocent wife, it is authorized to decree the payment to her of a suitable allowance. And why is that? If any marital right continues after the divorce, the wife remains entitled to her support and may enforce it in the ordinary way. On the contrary, the statute recognizes that when the marriage tie is broken, and the relation ended, no future rights will remain to the wife, and no future obligations bind the husband which have their root in the marriage relation."

"Widow" Interpreted "Husbandless."
—In Rittenhouse v. Hicks, 23 Wkly. L. Bull. (Ohio) 269, under the circumstances recited, the word widow as used in a will was held to mean husbandless. By a will property was left in trust for the plaintiff, who was to receive the income during her natural life and after her death the trust to end and

The word widow, as used in the insurance policy in a beneficial society, was held to mean only the legal widow, and not the putative wife of the deceased husband.¹

A devise or bequest to the widow of a certain person is held to have reference not necessarily to the wife at the time of the making of the will, but to the wife who might survive the person designated.²

the property to belong to her children. At the time of the will the plaintiff had a husband whose habits were dissipated. It was further provided that if the plaintiff "should become a widow" the trust should cease and the property be turned over to her absolutely after the death. After the death of testator, the plaintiff procured a divorce and claimed that she was a widow within the terms of the will. The court said: "While technically the word widow means a woman whose husband has died while she was still married to him, yet, as in construing wills, the courts will always disregard the technical meaning of a word in the face of a plain intention on the part of a testator to use the word in a different and more liberal sense. The question here presented is whether this testatrix meant the word widow to be understood in its technical sense or not. From a careful consideration of the whole context of the will, as well as the evidence furnished by the circumstances which surrounded the testatrix at the time of its execution, it is certain that the only object of the creation of the trust was to keep this property from the control of this particular husband, and that the testatrix used the word widow simply as a term designating a husbandless condition; wherefore, the divorce having had the effect of severing the daughter's married relation with this husband and of putting her property as completely beyond his control as his death would have done, the conclusion, the court thought, was inevitable that the event named for terminating the trust occurred by the granting of the divorce. Authority for this conclusion is found in numerous cases where the word 'unmarried,' which technically means 'never having been married,' has been decided to mean 'wifeless' as coming within the testator's intention."

¹ Schnook v. Independent Order, etc., 53 N. Y. Super. Ct. 181.

In Bolton v. Bolton, 73 Me. 299, the husband insured his life, payable to his widow, while living with a woman who for years had passed as his wife. Upon his death the money was passed to his supposed widow, but, afterward, upon his lawful widow appearing and claiming the insurance, the court held that the latter was properly entitled thereto. And in Grand Lodge, etc. v. Elsner, 26 Mo. App. 108, it was held that the deceased having been lawfully married, in a foreign country, his abandonment of his wife, without a legal severance of the marital bond, his cohabitation, in this state, with another woman, as his wife, and rearing a large family by her, does not entitle the latter woman, as against the former, to the benefits of the fund, and his intention in effecting the insurance, and her good faith in considering herself his wife, are immaterial.

2. Widow Not Necessarily Wife at Time of Making Will.—Under a testamentary direction "that if either of testator's sons should die without leaving lawful issue, the widow of the decedent should receive one-third of the rents of the real estate devised to him by the will," it was held that the benefit of the provision not being restricted to a wife living at the time of the making of the will, or at the testator's death, the person who was the wife at the time of the son's death was entitled to the rents. Swallow v. Swallow, 27 N. J. Eq. 278. So in Schettler v. Smith, 41 N. Y. 328, the court held that the word "widow," as used in the will, plainly included any wife who might survive him.

But in Van Brunt v. Van Brunt, 111 N. Y. 178, affirming 48 Hun (N. Y.) 614, where the testatrix, at the time of the making of her will and at her death, had eight children, seven of whom were married and had issue, and she devised the residuum of her estate to her executors, in trust, to pay the income to her children in equal portions during their lives, and "after their deaths to their respective husbands or wives," and provided that if a child

WIFE—(See also HUSBAND AND WIFE, vol. 9, pp. 789, 790; WIDOW; WILLS).—The correlative of husband; a woman who is united to a man in the lawful bonds of wedlock.¹ The word wife has been held to include widow.²

A devise or bequest to the wife of the testator, or the wife of some other person, is held to be confined to the wife at the date of the will, if there be one at that time.³

should die without issue, "or without leaving a husband or wife," his or her share was to go to the survivors "after the decease or remarriage of said husband or wife," it was held that the husband or wife intended was one living at testatrix's death, and not one becoming such by a marriage thereafter, and that, therefore, the devise did not restrain alienation for more than two lives in being at the testatrix's death.

1. Webst. Dict.

In People v. Hovey, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 118, the court said: "The terms husband and wife have a very definite and precise meaning. They are descriptive of persons who are connected together by the marriage tie, and are significant of those mutual rights and obligations which flow from the marriage contract. Until those obligations are assumed there is no wife, and the term is then applied, not merely to describe a woman who has been married, but as expressive of the relations existing between her and her husband. So long as that relation continues, she is properly a wife; when that ceases, the term is no longer applicable. The decree dissolves the marriage, and declares that each party is freed from its obligations. The marriage contract therefore is at an end; not only the complainant in the chancery suit but the defendant, also, is absolved from all the obligations arising out of that contract. The relation of the parties, consisting in their mutual rights and duties, no longer exists; and it would seem to follow that the words husband and wife, used to describe that relation, have ceased to be applicable. Certainly the former wife, as to whom the dissolution of the marriage is entirely unlimited, cannot be said after this decree to have had a husband living; for she might marry again, and thus, if that were so, have two lawful husbands at the same time. The husband and wife are correlative terms, so defined by lexicographers, which implies that whenever one can be properly applied, there must be a person to whom the corresponding term is applicable. If, therefore, the defendant is no longer the husband of his former wife, then she is no longer his wife."

"Wife" in Statutes Allowing Alimony.—Where the words of the statute were "the wife may file her petition for alimony alone," it was held that the word "wife," as used, included a divorced woman. Woods v. Waddles, 44 Ohio St. 449; McGill v. Deming, 44 Ohio St. 645.

2. Guardians, etc., of Reigate Union v. Guardians of Croyden, 61 L. T. N. S. 733; Medway v. Bedminster, 53 J. P. 580.

3. Garratt v. Niblock, 1 Russ. & M. 629; Bryan's Trust, 2 Sim. N. S. 103.

In Johnson v. Johnson, 1 Tenn. Ch. 621, it was held that a devise by a husband to his "dear wife," not mentioning her name, applied exclusively to the individual who answers the description at the date of the will, and not to an after-taken wife. The Chancellor said: "The original intent of the testator, every one will concede at once, was to give the property devised to his then existing wife. The words 'my dear wife' point to a person then existing, the qualifying adjective necessarily implying affection for an individual. Such affection being, of course, inconceivable of a person not then occupying the designated relation. To substitute another object of the testator's bounty, would be to violate his intent and to make a will for him. In the absence of all authority, I should consider it too plain for argument that the will does effectually designate the wife existing at the date of the will as the object of the testator's bounty as if she had been mentioned by her Christian name."

In Borcham v. Bagnall, 8 Hare 131, a devise to the testator's wife and nephew and to the survivor, was held to apply exclusively to the wife living at the date of the will and death of the testator, and not to a subsequently married wife.

A divorced wife is not a wife, within a general bequest or limitation;¹ nor is a woman who through bigamy becomes a supposed wife.²

WILLFUL—(See also KNOW, vol. 12, p. 522, and references in note below).—"Willful is a word of familiar use in every branch of law, and although in some branches of law it may have a special meaning, it generally, as used in courts of law, implies nothing blamable, but merely that the person of whose action or de-

"The distinctions upon the subject deducible from general principles, and the authorities just referred to, appear to be the following: First, that a devise or bequest to the wife of A, who has a wife at the date of the will, relates to that person, notwithstanding any change of circumstances which may render the description inapplicable at a subsequent period, and, by parity of reasoning, is under all circumstances confined to her; but that, secondly, if A have no wife at the date of the will, the gift embraces the individual sustaining that character at the death of the testator; and, thirdly, if there be no such person either at the date of the will or at the death of the testator, it applies to the woman who shall first answer the description of wife, at any subsequent period." Jarm. on Wills (6th ed.), vol. 1, p. 303.

As Descriptive.—When the word wife is used as a mere word of description, the rights of the claimant are not affected by divorce. Bullock v. Zilley, 1 N. J. Eq. 492. So in Anshutz v. Miller, 81 Pa. St. 212, it was held that where an estate is given to a person described by relation either to the testator or other devisees, on a contingency which may or may not happen, and at the execution of the will there is a person to whom, upon the happening of the contingency, the description would apply, as a general rule such person is intended to be the devisee.

Son's Surviving Wife.—In Re Lyne's Trust, L. R., 8 Eq. Cas. 67, where a testator gave £500 to trustees to pay the dividends to his son for life, and after his decease to transfer the capital unto and equally between and amongst the wife of his son (in case she should survive him) and all and every the child and children of his son equally upon their attaining twenty-one, at which period the shares of such children were to be vested in them; and at the date of the will the son had a wife and one child, but the wife died before the testator; and after the testator's death his son married again and died, leaving a widow, who now claimed to be entitled to a moiety of the fund equally with the only child of the son, it was held that the gift was to a class, consisting of all the children and any wife of the son who survived him. Sir R. Malins, V. C., said: "It is impossible to say what the testator would have done if he had been asked whether he intended any future wife to take. It is said that the intention was to benefit the wife of the son who was known to the testator, and not a stranger who was unknown to him; but, on the other hand, the children of the son who should come into esse after the death of the testator, and whom he could not know, were intended to take equally with the child whom he did know. Then the gift is to the children because they are the children of his son and his own grandchildren, and why should not the gift to the son's wife be equally a gift to her because she was the wife of his son, and because she might be the mother of those children who were to take? I think he meant to constitute a class—that is, children of his son and wife of his son, if a wife should survive him. The only condition is, that the wife should survive the son, and the class must be ascertained at one and the same time, which is the death of the son. Considering, therefore, that the second wife might have been the mother of the son's children who were to take, and that she would equally require a provision for her support, whether she was the wife existing at the date of his will, or a future wife, I think there is quite as much to be said in favor of the intention being to benefit a future wife as an existing wife."

1. Hutchins v. Morrison, 58 L. J. Ch. 80.

2. Wilkinson v. Joughin, 35 L. J. Ch. 684.

fault the expression is used is a free agent, and that what has been done arises from the spontaneous action of his will. It amounts to nothing more than this, that he knows what he is doing, and intends to do what he is doing, and is a free agent."¹

But in penal statutes, the word, as ordinarily used, means not merely voluntarily, but with a bad purpose.²

1. In re Young, 31 Ch. Div. 174; State v. Clark, 29 N. J. L. 98; Highway Com'rs v. Ely, 54 Mich. 181; Newell v. Whittingham, 58 Vt. 341.

In Fuller v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 31 Iowa 204, the court said: "It is said by defendant's counsel that the word 'willfully' implies the idea of malice of a mild kind, an evil intent without excuse. Such may be its meaning in indictments and criminal statutes, but it is not to be so understood here. The word means 'obstinately, stubbornly; with design; with a set purpose,' and this definition must be applied to it where it occurs in the statute under consideration."

It is not error to instruct the jury that an act is willful when done with deliberation, and not through surprise or confusion, or a bona fide mistake. People v. Sheldon, 68 Cal. 434.

2. Felton v. U. S., 96 U. S. 699; North Carolina v. Vanderford, 35 Fed. Rep. 287; Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 220; Com. v. Bradford, 9 Met. (Mass.) 270; State v. Clark, 29 N. J. L. 98; Savage v. Tullar, Brayt. (Vt.) 223; State v. Preston, 34 Wis. 675; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Nash (Ind. 1890), 24 N. E. Rep. 884; Wales v. Miner, 89 Ind. 118; State v. Abram, 10 Ala. 928; McManus v. State, 36 Ala. 285; U. S. v. Three Railroad Cars, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 196; Yoakum v. State, 21 Tex. App. 260; Thomas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 200.

A willful act is one committed with an evil intent, with a legal malice, without reasonable ground for believing the act to be lawful, and without legal justification. Bowers v. State, 24 Tex. App. 542; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Nash (Ind. 1890), 24 N. E. Rep. 884.

In State v. Preston, 34 Wis. 682, Dixon, C. J., said: "This is an action to recover a penalty alleged to have been incurred by the defendant under section 101, ch. 19, Rev. Stat. (1 Tay. Stats., 508, § 137), which reads as follows: 'Whoever shall willfully obstruct any highway, or fill up, or place any obstruction in, any ditch constructed for draining the water from any highway, shall forfeit for such offense a sum not exceeding twenty-five dollars; and the overseer of the proper district shall cause such obstruction immediately to be removed.' The principal question to be considered in the case is as to the meaning and effect of the word 'willfully' above used, and arises upon an offer of proof made by the defendant on the trial, which was rejected by the court. Having shown by the witness, one of the supervisors, that an application was made to the supervisors to take up the road in question, the defendant then offered to prove by him 'that the supervisors of the town of Koshkonong, in the year 1871, and prior to the alleged act of the defendant in obstructing this road, upon proper application made to them to take up and discontinue the same, upon due notice given, met to decide such application, viewed the premises in question and determined that there was no highway there, and so informed the defendant, and instructed him to place the fence where he did.' The offer was objected to by the plaintiff, and rejected by the court; and exception was taken by the defendant. The question thus presented might have been considered in other cases which have come before this court, and particularly in State v. Hayden, 32 Wis. 663, but as the point has never been taken, it has not hitherto been considered or decided. It is still an open question, and is now to be determined for the first time. For the plaintiff it is contended that the term willfully, as here used, signifies no more than voluntarily or purposely — thus distinguishing the act of obstructing made penal, from one which may be said to have been accidental, which last alone it was the design of the statute not to punish. The word willfully, as used to denote the intent with which an act is done, is undoubtedly susceptible of different shades of meaning or degrees of intensity according to the context and evident purpose of the writer. It is sometimes so modified and reduced as to mean little more than plain intentionally, or designedly. Such is not, however, its ordinary signification when used in criminal law and penal statutes. It is there most frequently understood not in so mild a sense, but as conveying the idea of legal malice in greater or less degree, that is, as implying an evil intent without justifiable excuse. 1 Bishop on Criminal Law, § 421. Thus, in State v. Abram, 10 Ala. 928, where the mutilation, by a slave, of any of the members of a white person, when 'willfully' committed, was declared by the statutes to be mayhem, and so punishable, it was held that a mutilation could not be regarded as willfully done, unless under the circumstances it could be considered as having been wantonly done, when it would be deemed willful within the meaning of the act. The court say 'that it was not intended by the term willful to exclude those acts only which were purely accidental and without blame of any kind.' In McManus v. State, 36 Ala. 285, speaking of the word willful as employed in statutory murder, the court say: 'Willful is not the synonym of voluntary. In truth, they express no idea which is common to both. The former is a word of much greater strength than the latter. Willful, in this connection, denotes "governed by the will; without yielding to reason; obstinate; stubborn; perverse; inflexible." Voluntary, in this connection means "willing; acting with willingness." It is the antithesis of involuntary.' And see also Harrison v. State, 37 Ala. 154, where the word willful, employed in a statute imposing a penalty for the disturbance of religious worship, was understood in a milder sense. And in Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 220, indictment under the statute against blasphemy, Chief Justice Shaw says: 'The statute makes it penal willfully to blaspheme the holy name of God, etc. The word "willfully" in the ordinary sense in which it is used in statutes, means not merely "voluntarily" but with a bad purpose, and in this statute must be construed to imply an intended design to calumniate and disparage the Supreme Being, and to destroy the veneration due to Him.' In Com. v. Bradford, 9 Met., (Mass.) 268, where the defendant was indicted on the statute for willfully giving in a vote at an election, knowing himself not to be a qualified voter, it was held that evidence that he had consulted counsel as to his right to vote, and submitted to them the facts of his case, and was advised by them that he had the right, was admissible in his favor as tending to show that he did not know that he was not a qualified voter. But the fullest and most satisfactory discussion we have found in any case is in U. S. v. Three Railroad Cars, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 196, which arose in the district court of the United States for the northern district of New York. The question there was as to the proof necessary to authorize a conviction under a penal statute of the United States prescribing a punishment for 'willfully' removing an official seal from property which had been sealed up by officers of the customs; and the court decided that it must appear that the party not only intended to remove the seal, but that he had at the time a knowledge of its character. One who removed such a seal in ignorance of its character, and in the honest execution of a supposed duty in the care and transportation of the property, was held not liable to punishment under the statute, for the reason that he could not be deemed to have acted willfully. Speaking of the words knowingly, willfully and maliciously, as used in criminal and penal statutes, the court says: The first of these words does not, in common parlance, or in legal construction, necessarily and per se, imply a wicked purpose or perverse disposition, or indeed any evil or improper motive, intent or feeling; but the second is ordinarily used in a bad sense, to express something of that kind, or to characterize an act done wantonly, or one which a man of reasonable knowledge and ability must know to be contrary to his duty.' Further citations might be made, but the foregoing are enough, we think, to justify the conclusion at which we have arrived, which is, that the evidence offered should have been received for the purpose of showing that the obstruction in question was not willful. Assuming the facts to have been as stated in the offer, it is clear that the defendant was not guilty of the offense charged, and for which a penalty has been assessed against him in this action. The word willfully, employed in the statute to characterize the offense, cannot be construed, as counsel for the plaintiff contends, so as to embrace an obstruction erected in the most perfect good faith by the landowner, believing that no highway existed at the place, and acting under the advice and direction of the proper public officers charged by law with the general supervision and control of all the roads and highways in the town." Compare State v. Smith, 52 Wis. 136.

Definition.WILLFUL.*Definition.

Definition.

Willful and Reckless Distinguished.

On a prosecution for disturbing religious worship (Alabama Code, § 4038), the evidence showing that the defendant, while under the influence of liquor, went into a church after the services had begun, talked loud enough to attract attention, used profane language, and said that he could pray as well as the preacher and would do it, a charge instructing the jury that they must find him not guilty, "if they believe from the evidence that what he said and did was said and done heedlessly, or recklessly—that is, carelessly, without thinking of the probable consequences"—is properly refused. Johnson v. State, 92 Ala. 82. The court in this case said: "Defendant requested the court to charge the jury, 'that if they believed from the evidence that what the defendant did and said in the church, on the night on which he is charged with having disturbed religious worship, was done and said heedlessly, or recklessly—that is, carelessly—without thinking of the probable consequences of what he said and did, they will find the defendant not guilty.' This charge was refused, and defendant excepted. We suspect this charge was asked on the supposed authority of Harrison v. State, 37 Ala. 154, and the note appended to section 4033 of the Code. This is a misapprehension of this court's ruling. The trial court, in that case, had instructed the jury that they could convict, if the disturbance was either willfully or recklessly done. This court ruled that the circuit court erred in giving that charge, because the statute punished only a willful disturbance. We drew a distinction between the words willful and reckless, and held that recklessness did not necessarily imply willfulness. A grossly careless act may be characterized as reckless, and serious consequences may result from it. Yet, such consequences would not necessarily be willfully brought about. We, in Harrison's case, simply asserted that the word reckless is not the synonym of the statutory word willful, and therefore, the circuit court erred in asserting disjunctively that it was enough if the disturbance was willfully or recklessly done. We decided that there might be recklessness without willfulness. We are now asked to declare that, if there is recklessness, there cannot be willfulness. We cannot assent to this. An act may be careless, heedless, rash, reckless, and still be willful."

WILLFUL.Definition.

Willful Distinguished from Malicious.

—In Anderson v. How, 116 N. Y. 336, the court said: "Bishop, in his work upon Criminal Law, says: 'A Massachusetts case decides that the word "maliciously" in the statute against malicious mischief, is not sufficiently defined as "the willfully doing of any act prohibited by law, and for which the defendant has no lawful excuse," but it means more.' Com. v. Walden, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 558. The same author says: 'The words "willful" and "malicious" cover together a broader meaning than the word "willful" alone.' Section 429. "Willfully" sometimes means little more than plain "intentionally," or "designedly." Section 428. Colt, J., in Com. v. Williams, 110 Mass. 401, in discussing the difference in the meaning of 'willful' and 'malicious,' says: 'The injury must not only be willful—that is, intentional and by design, as distinguished from that which is thoughtless or accidental, but it must, in addition, be malicious in the sense above given, that is, an act or injury done, either out of a spirit of wanton cruelty, or black or diabolical revenge.' Willfulness is implied in maliciousness, but maliciousness is not implied in willfulness. 'To make "willful" imply both a wrong and malice is to give to it a force and effect beyond what it will bear, or what can be maintained, either in common acceptance or its legal import.' Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 245." State v. Massey, 97 N. Car. 465.

In a prosecution for obstructing a street, the court instructed the jury that it was not necessary that they should find that the defendant or its employees acted maliciously, in order to find the defendant guilty, but that it was sufficient if the street was "willfully" obstructed; and that to act willfully means to act "intentionally or knowingly." This was held to be not objectionable when considered in connection with another portion of the charge, which expressly directed that to justify a conviction they must find that the obstruction complained of was "unreasonable." State v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 77 Iowa 442.

Malice Implies Willfulness.—See MALICE, vol. 14, p. 5; MALICIOUSLY, vol. 14, p. 8; State v. Robbins, 66 Me. 324.

Distinguished from Corruptly—Perjury.—An indictment for perjury under United States Rev. Stat., § 5392, must allege, among other things, that the false oath was taken willfully, and an allegation that it was corruptly taken does not embrace the element of willfulness. U. S. v. Edwards, 43 Fed. Rep. 67. The court said: "To constitute perjury it is essential that the oath was administered in the manner prescribed by law, and by some person duly authorized to administer the same, in the matter wherein it was taken. The false statement must be material to the issue in the case in which it was made, and it must be willfully made. U. S. v. Stanley, 6 McLean (U. S.) 409. Perjury cannot be committed unless the person taking the oath not only swears to what is false or what he does not believe to be true, but does so willfully. U. S. v. Dennee, 3 Woods (U. S.) 39; U. S. v. Evans, 19 Fed. Rep. 912; 3 Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.), § 189; 2 Bish. Crim. Law (8th ed.), §§ 1017-1046; U. S. v. Hearing, 26 Fed. Rep. 744. Rash or reckless statements on oath are not perjury, but the oath must be willfully corrupt. Authorities supra and U. S. v. Moore, 2 Low. (U. S.) 232. The Revised Statutes of the United States, § 5392, under which this indictment is found, makes out of the essence of the offense of perjury that it be committed willfully. U. S. v. Shellmire, Baldw. (U. S.) 378. But it is contended by the district attorney that the word 'corruptly,' used in the indictment, is the equivalent of 'willfully.' The understanding of the court is that the two words have an entirely different meaning. 'Corruptly' means viciously, wickedly. 'Willfully' means with design, with some degree of deliberation. To say that testimony was corrupt is to say that it was wicked or vicious, whereas, to say that it was willful is to aver that it was given with some degree of deliberation; that it was not due to surprise, inadvertence, or mistake, but to design. The statute used the word 'willfully' and makes it of the essence of the offense; and the court is not persuaded that the averment that a false oath was corruptly taken is of the same import as the averment that it was willfully taken. The court being of the opinion that willfulness is an essential ingredient for the offense of perjury, under section 5392, of the United States Revised Statutes, it must be charged in the indictment, or the indictment will be bad. The first count in the indictment under consideration does not aver with distinctness before what tribunal, officer, or person the oath was made, or by whom it was administered; and it fails to aver that the matter subscribed and stated by the defendant was so subscribed and stated by him willfully, and contrary to such oath. And the second count in the indictment also fails to aver that the defendant willfully, and contrary to the oath taken by him, stated and testified to matter which he did not believe to be true. The demurrers to the indictment on the grounds stated are well taken, and they are sustained."

In Indictment.—See INDICTMENT, vol. 10, p. 597-99.

Embezzlement—Willfully Misapplied.—See EMBEZZLEMENT, vol. 6, p. 4984.

Willful Negligence.—See NEGLECT, vol. 16, p. 394.

In the Law of Mayhem.—See MAYHEM, vol. 14, p. 995.

Willful Malpractice.—See MALPRACTICE, vol. 14, p. 77.

Unlawful Distinguished from Willful.

—Many of the statutes provide that if anyone "willfully" beats or kills (or the like) a dumb animal, he may be punished. When the word "willful" is thus used, it means more than its import in common parlance. It means with evil intent or legal malice, or without reasonable ground to believe the act to be lawful. Where such a statute is in force, it should be defined in instructions to the jury. Thomas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 200. But in such an instance it is error to say that the jury may convict if the killing or injury was "unlawful," for many acts are unlawful in a civil that are not so in a criminal sense. The court said: "The indictment sufficiently charges the offense of willfully and wantonly killing a dumb animal, but an inspection of the charge of the court reveals a fundamental error. The jury were instructed that if they believed that the defendant unlawfully killed the animal as charged, they should convict. The killing might have been unlawful, and yet not willful and wanton." Jones v. State, 9 Tex. App. 178. See also UNLAWFULLY, vol. 27, p. 696.

WILLS.

- I. Definition, 124.
 - II. History and Origin, 125.
 - III. By What Law Regulated, 127.
 - IV. Classification, 127.
 1. Written Testaments or Ordinary Wills, 127.
 2. Nuncupative Wills, 127.
 3. Mystic Testaments, 127.
 4. Holographic or Olographic Testaments, 127.
 5. Contingent Wills, 130.
 6. Alternative Wills, 135.
 7. Wills Operative at the Election of a Third Person, 135.
 8. Wills Intended to Take Effect in Execution of a Power, 137.
 9. Joint and Mutual Wills, 137.
 - V. What Constitutes a Will, 138.
 1. Distinguishing Characteristics, 138.
 2. Informal Instruments, 141.
 - a. English Cases, 141.
 - b. American Cases, 142.
 3. Deeds Distinguished from Wills, 145.
 4. Whether an Instrument May Operate Partly as a Deed and Partly as a Will, 150.
 5. Wills Distinguished from Gifts Mortis Causa, 150.
 6. Memorandum of Instructions, 151.
 7. Entraneous Papers—Incorporation by Reference, 154.
 8. Wills Written on Several Sheets of Paper, 158.
 9. Evidence of Testamentary Intention, 158.
 - VI. Formal Requisites, 159.
 1. Signature, 159.
 - a. English Rule, 159.
 - b. American Rule, 160.
 - c. Construction of English and American Statutes, 161.
 - d. Signature Distinguished from Execution, 168.
 - e. Requisites of Valid Signature, 168.
 2. Publication, 176.
 3. Acknowledgment, 183.
 4. Sealing, 193.
 5. Attestation and Subscription, 194.
 - a. Distinguished, 194.
 - b. In the Absence of Legislation, 194.
 - c. Effect of Legislation, 195.
 - d. Effect of Unsigned Attestation Clause in Jurisdic-
- tions in Which Subscription Is Unnecessary*, 197.
 - e. Essentiality of Attestation Clause, 198.
 - f. Attestation Clause, Following or Preceding Signature, 199.
 - g. Value of Attestation Clause as Evidence, 199.
 - h. Value of Testimony of Subscribing Witnesses, 203.
 - i. Knowledge of Witnesses as to Contents or Nature of Paper, 205.
 - j. Attestation as to Sanity, 205.
 - k. Request to Witnesses to Sign, 205.
 - l. Testator Must Sign or Acknowledge Before Witnesses Subscribe, 209.
 - m. Subscribing in Presence of Testator—Acknowledgment in Presence of, Subscription in Absence, 210.
 - n. Simultaneous Presence of Witnesses, 223.
 - o. What Is Subscription—Animus Attestandi—Subscribing by Mark, Initial, Seal, Stamp—Subscribing by Another, 225.
 - p. Where Witnesses Should Subscribe—Position of Signature, 227.
 - q. Subscribing on Different Paper from Will, 229.
 - r. Attestation of Will Consisting of Several Sheets—Additions Subsequent to Attestation, 229.
 - s. Nothing Interlineations, 230.
 - t. Certificate of Acknowledgment, 230.
 - u. Re-execution, 231.
 - v. Qualifications of Attesting Witnesses, 231.
 - (1) "Credible" Witnesses Construed to Mean "Competent" Witnesses, 231.
 - (2) Who Are Competent Attesting Witnesses, 231.
 - a) Examples—Children as Attesting Witnesses, 232.
 - b) Legatees and Devisees, 233.

- (c) Husband and Wife, 236.
- (d) Executors, 236.
- (e) Heirs, 237.
- (f) Judge of Probate, 237.
- (3) Time When Competency Must Exist, 238.
- 6. What Is Writing Within the Statute of Frauds, 240.
- VII. Who May Make a Will—Personal Disabilities, 241.
 - 1. Testamentary Capacity—In What It Consists (See TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY, vol. 25, p. 970; INSANITY, vol. 11, p. 105), 241.
 - 2. Aliens (See CONFLICT OF LAWS, vol. 3, p. 630; ALIENS, vol. 1, p. 456), 241.
 - 3. Infants (See INFANTS, vol. 10, p. 618), 241.
 - 4. Married Women (See HUSBAND AND WIFE, vol. 9, p. 797; MARRIED WOMEN, vol. 14, pp. 594-603), 241.
 - 5. Idiots and Lunatics (See INSANITY, vol. 11, p. 105; TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY, vol. 25, pp. 974, 977), 241.
 - 6. Persons of Unsound Mind (See INSANITY, vol. 11, p. 105; TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY, vol. 25, p. 970), 241.
 - 7. Traitors and Felons, 241.
 - 8. Persons Deaf, Dumb, and Blind (See also TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY, vol. 25, p. 975), 242. [244.]
 - 9. Persons Who Cannot Read, 244.
- VIII. Restraints on Testamentary Power—Who May Be Devisee or Legatee, 245.
 - 1. Gifts to Aliens (See ALIENS, vol. 1, p. 630), 245.
 - 2. Gifts to Charitable Uses (See CHARITIES, vol. 3, p. 137), 245.
 - 3. Gifts to Corporations (See CORPORATIONS, vol. 4, p. 235), 245.
 - 4. Gifts for Accumulation (See PERPETUITIES AND TRUSTS FOR ACCUMULATION, vol. 18, p. 335), 245.
 - 5. Whether Devisee or Legatee Who Has Murdered Testator May Take, 245.
 - 6. Gifts Contrary to Public Policy or Good Morals (See REMAINDERS AND EXECUTORY INTERESTS, vol. 20, p. 875, 246.
 - 7. Gifts to Bastards, 247.
 - 8. Gifts to Mistress or Paramour, 249.
 - 9. Gifts to Subscribing Witnesses, 250. [250.]
 - 10. Disinheritance of Children, 250.
 - 11. Wills Between Husband and Wife (See HUSBAND AND WIFE, vol. 9, p. 797), 250.
 - 12. Gifts to Scrivener, 250.
- IX. What May Be Devised or Bequeathed, 250.
 - 1. General Principles, 250.
 - 2. Transmissible Interests in Personality (See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, vol. 7, p. 238 et seq.; REMAINDERS AND EXECUTORY INTERESTS, vol. 20, p. 875), 251.
 - 3. Transmissible Interests in Real Estate (See ESTATES, vol. 6, p. 875; REMAINDERS AND EXECUTORY INTERESTS, vol. 20, p. 875), 251.
 - 4. Lands out of Testator's Possession—Rights of Entry and Action, 251.
 - 5. Devise of Lands Occupied by Testator Without Title, 253.
 - 6. Equitable Rights to Reconveyance, 254.
 - 7. Devise of Land Contracted for by Testator, 255.
 - 8. After Acquired Personality, 256.
 - 9. After Acquired Lands, 257.
 - 10. Joint Interests, 258.
 - 11. Remainders and Executory Interests (See REMAINDERS AND EXECUTORY INTERESTS, vol. 20, pp. 838, 968), 259.
 - 12. Community Property (See COMMUNITY PROPERTY, vol. 3, p. 350), 259.
- X. Probate and Its Effects (See PROBATE AND LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION, vol. 19, p. 161), 259.
- XI. Alterations, Erasures, and Interlineations, 259.
 - 1. Whether Presumed to Have Been Made Before or After Execution, 259.
 - 2. Admissibility of Extrinsic Evidence as to Date of Alterations, 260.
 - 3. Alterations Dated Prior to Execution, 261.
 - 4. Distinctions Between Ink and Pencil Alterations, 262.

5. Mode of Making Alterations, 264.
 6. Alterations by a Stranger, 265.
 7. Alterations by a Legatee, 266.
- XII. Revocation, 266.
1. Testator's Right to Alter or Revoke, 266.
 2. Revocation Defined, 266.
 3. Presumption of Revocation (See LOST PAPERS, vol. 13, p. 1091), 266.
 4. Parol Revocation, 266.
 5. Revocation by Burning, Tearing, Canceling, Obliterating, or Destroying, 267.
 6. Dependent Relative Revocation, or Revocation with a View to Another Disposition, 284.
 7. Whether an Earlier Will Is Revived by Revoking a Later One, 288.
 8. Will Executed in Duplicate—Destruction or Alteration of One Part, 292.
 9. Where Same Expressions Occur in Both Will and Codicil, and Testator Cancels or Obliterates Them in One Only, 293.
 10. Effect of Destroying Will and Leaving Codicil Intact—Revocation of Codicil by Destruction of Will, 293.
 11. Revocation by Subsequent Will, Codicil, or Other Writing, 294.
 12. Revocation by Alteration of Estate (See LEGACIES AND DEVISES, vol. 13, p. 100), 308.
 13. Change of Condition and Circumstances (See LEGACIES AND DEVISES, vol. 13, p. 101), 313.
 14. Revocation by Void Conveyance, 316.
 15. Revocation by Marriage and Birth of Issue, 316.
 16. Extrinsic Evidence, 326.
- XIII. Revival and Republication, 327.
1. At Common Law, 327.
 2. Under English and American Statutes, 329.
 3. Republication by Codicil (See CODICIL, vol. 3, p. 301), 333.
 4. Wills Revoked by Operation of Law, 333.
 5. Consequences of Republication, 333.
- XIV. General Principles of Interpretation (See INTENT, vol. 11, p. 372; INTERPRETATION, vol. 11, p. 507), 336.
1. Intention of the Testator, 336.
 2. Surrounding Circumstances, 340.
 3. All Parts of a Will Construed Together, 341.
 4. In What Sense Words Are to Be Understood, 345.
 5. Some Effect Given to a Will Rather Than None, 350.
 6. Effect Given to Every Part of a Will if Possible, 350.
 7. Presumption in Favor of Construction Consistent with Law, 352.
 8. Favor Shown by Law to Heir or Next of Kin, 352.
 9. Presumption Against Partial Intestacy, 354.
- XV. Admissibility of Extrinsic Evidence (See AMBIGUITY, vol. 1, p. 525; EVIDENCE, vol. 7, p. 92), 355.
- XVI. Details of Testamentary Construction, 355.
1. Words Descriptive of the Objects of the Gift—To What Period Referred, 355.
 2. Words Descriptive of Property—To What Period Referred, 359.
 3. Inconsistency and Repugnance, 363.
 4. Rule as to the General and Particular Intent, 367.
 5. A Clear Gift Not to Be Cut Down by Doubtful Expressions, 369.
 6. Rejecting Words, 371.
 7. Supplying Words, 372.
 8. Changing Words, 375.
 9. Transposing Words, 378.
 10. Uncertainty, 379.
 11. Implication—Estates Arising Therefrom, 382.
 - a. General Principles, 382.
 - b. Implication from Recitals, 383.
 - c. Gifts Implied to Effectuate the Intent, 384.
 - d. Intent to Charge the Realty with Debts and Legacies in Exoneration of the Personalty When Implied (See LEGACIES AND DEVISES, vol. 13, p. 120), 385.
 - e. Implication of Estates Tail—Gifts Over in Default of Issue, 385.
 - f. Gift to Issue Not Implied

- from Gift Over in Default of Issue*, 386.
- g. Gift to Children Not Implied from Gift Over in Default of Issue*, 387.
- h. Implication of Life Estates*, 387.
- i. Gift to A till Twenty-one, with a Gift Over in Case of Death Under Age*, 391.
- j. Absolute Interest Not Implied from Gift till Twenty-one*, 392.
- k. No Implication that Equitable Dispositions Coincide with Legal*, 392.
- l. Gifts Implied from Powers of Appointment*, 393.
- m. Implication of Cross-Remainders* (See REMAINDERS AND EXECUTORY INTERESTS, vol. 20, p. 868), 394.
- n. Implication of Cross-Executory Limitations*, 398.
12. What Passes Under a General or Residuary Bequest (See LEGACIES AND DEVISES, vol. 13, p. 45), 399.
13. What Passes Under a General or Residuary Devise (See LEGACIES AND DEVISES, vol. 13, p. 51; see also supra, this title, Words Descriptive of Property—To What Period Referred; infra, this title, "Lands"—"Real Estate"), 399.
14. Under What Circumstances a General Devise or Bequest Operates as a Good Execution of a Power (See POWERS, vol. 19, pp. 929-936), 399.
15. Construction of Words Descriptive of Property, 399.
- a. "Lands"—"Real Estate,"* 399.
- (1) Reversionary Interests, 399.
- (2) Leaseholds for Lives, 400.
- (3) Leaseholds for Years, 400.
- (4) Beneficial Interest in Mortgages, 401.
- (5) Trust and Mortgage Estates, 401.
- (6) Lands Contracted for, 403.
- (7) Lands Contracted to Be Sold, 403.
- (8) "Lands", Includes Houses, Mines, Wells (See LAND, vol. 12, p. 655), 403.
- b. Tenements—Hereditaments*, 403.
- c. Messuage* (See MESSUAGE, vol. 15, p. 386), 403.
- d. Premises* (See PREMISES, vol. 19, p. 4), 403.
- e. House* (See HOUSE, vol. 9, p. 777), 403.
- f. Curtilage* (See CURTILAGE, vol. 1, p. 968), 403.
- g. Appurtenances* (See APPURTENANCES, vol. 1, p. 644), 403.
- h. Farm* (See FARM, vol. 7, p. 811), 403.
- i. Devise of Free Use—Use and Occupation*, 403.
- j. Devise of "Rents and Profits" or "Income" of Land*, 404.
- k. Estate*, 406.
- l. Property* (See PROPERTY, vol. 19, p. 283), 408.
- m. Effects* (See EFFECTS, vol. 6, p. 174), 408.
- n. Mortgages—Securities for Money—Money on Security*, 408.
- o. Ground Rents*, 409.
- p. Money or Moneys* (See MONEY, vol. 15, p. 702), 409.
- q. "Money Due and Owning,"* 409.
- r. Ready Money—Cash* (See READY MONEY, vol. 19, p. 971), 409.
- s. Goods and Chattels* (See CHATTELS, vol. 3, p. 163; GOODS, vol. 8, p. 1362), 410.
- t. Things* (See THINGS, vol. 25, p. 1058), 410.
- u. Possessions* (See POSSESSION, vol. 18, p. 842, n.) 410.
- v. Household Effects—Furniture—Goods* (See HOUSEHOLD, vol. 9, p. 782, note 3), 410.
16. Meaning of Certain Words Descriptive of Objects, 410.
- a. Children* (See CHILDREN, vol. 3, p. 229), 410.
- b. Grandchildren* (See GRANDCHILDREN, vol. 8, p. 1412), 410.
- c. Cousins* (See COUSINS, vol. 4, p. 462), 410.
- d. Nephews, Nieces* (See NEPHEWS, vol. 16, p. 485), 410.

- e. Family (See FAMILY, vol. 7, p. 807), 410.
 - f. Next of Kin (See NEXT OF KIN, vol. 16, p. 703; KINDRED, vol. 12, p. 521), 410.
 - g. Issue (See ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 868), 410.
 - h. Descendants (See DESCENDANTS, vol. 5, p. 641; ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 868), 410.
 - i. Relations (See RELATIONS, vol. 20, p. 728), 410.
17. Construction of Gifts to Classes, 410.
- a. Distinguishing Characteristics of Such Gifts (See LEGACIES AND DEVISES, vol. 13, p. 60), 410.
 - b. Time of Ascertaining the Class, 410. [410.]
 - (1) In Gifts to Children,
 - (2) Gifts to Other Classes of Relatives—Grandchildren, Great-Grandchildren, Brothers, Nephews, Nieces, Cousins, 418.
 - (3) Gifts to Relations, 418.
 - (4) Gifts to Heirs or Next of Kin, 419.
 - c. Taking per Capita or per Stirpes, 420.
 - d. Rule Where the Number of Objects Is Erroneously Referred to, 428. [430.]
18. Estates in Fee and in Tail,
- a. What Sufficient to Pass the Fee, 430.
 - b. Expressions Which Pass an Estate Tail, 434.
 - (1) Devise to A, and the Heirs of His Body, 434.
 - (2) Devise to A, and His Issue (See ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 879), 434.
 - (3) Devise to A for Life and After His Decease to His Issue (See ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 886), 434.
 - (4) Devise to A, or to A for Life, or to A and His Heirs, and if He Die Without Issue Over (See ISSUE, vol. 11, pp. 899, 921), 434.
 - (5) Devise to A and His Children—Rule in Wild's Case, 434.
 - (6) Devise to A and His Sons in Tail Male, and for Want of Such Issue Over, 435.
 - c. Devise to A for Life, and After His Decease to His Heirs or the Heirs of His Body—Rule in Shelley's Case, 436.
 - d. Effect of a General Power of Disposition After a Prior Life Estate (See REMAINDERS, vol. 20, p. 958), 436.
19. Absolute Interests in Personality, 436.
- a. Gift to A and His Executors or Representatives, 436.
 - b. Gift to A and His Heirs, 437.
 - c. Gift to A and the Heirs of His Body, 439.
 - d. Gift to A and His Issue (See ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 879), 439.
 - e. Gift to A for Life, and After His Decease to His Issue (See ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 890), 439.
 - f. Gift to A, as to A for Life, or to A for Life and After His Decease to His Issue, with Gift Over in Default of Issue (See ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 923), 439.
 - g. Gift to A and His Children—Rule in Wild's Case, 439.
 - h. Rule That Words Which Create an Estate Tail in Realty, Create an Absolute Interest in Personality, 440.
 - i. Subsequent Restrictions—Gifts for a Particular Purpose, 440.
 - j. Effect of General Power of Disposition After Prior Gift (See REMAINDERS, vol. 20, p. 955), 441.
 - k. Gift of Income Indefinitely, 441.
20. Vesting—Whether a Gift Is Vested or Contingent, 441.
- a. Of Construing an Interest to Be Vested Rather than Contingent, 441.
 - b. Vesting of Realty, 447.
 - (1) General Principles, 447.
 - (2) Devise to Testator's Heir, 449.

- (3) Devise to Youngest or Only Surviving Child, or Persons Sustaining a Particular Character, 449.
- (4) Devise to A At, When, If, Or Provided He Attains Twenty-one, 450.
- (5) Gifts to Classes (See REMAINDERS, vol. 20, p. 854), 453.
- (6) An Estate to Commence on Certain Specified Events, Fails Unless All the Events Happen, 454.
- (7) Devise After Payment of Debts, 454.
- c. Vesting of Legacies Payable out of Personality, 454.
 - (1) When the Gift and Time of Payment Are Distinct, 454.
 - (2) When the Only Gift Is Founded in the Direction to Pay—Gift to One At, If, On, Upon, When, and After Twenty-one, 457.
 - (3) Payment Postponed for Convenience of Testator, or to Let In Some Other Interest, 458.
 - (4) Effect of Severance, 458.
 - (5) Gift of Intermediate Interest, 458.
 - (6) Effect of Gift Over Upon Vesting, 460.
 - (7) Gifts to Classes, 460.
 - (8) Residuary Bequests, 461.
 - (9) Foregoing Rules Yield to a Clear Contrary Intent, 461.
 - (10) Gift of Interest to A for Life and at His Death the Principal to B, 462.
 - (11) Direction to Pay at Specified Time, 463.
- d. Vesting of Legacies Charged on Land, 463.
- e. Legacies Charged Upon Both Real and Personal Estate, 464.
- f. Legacies Charged Upon Proceeds of Converted Land, 464.
- g. Vesting of Mixed Funds, 465.
- h. Whether a Contingency Affecting One of the Series of Limitations Affects All, 465.
- 21. Divesting, 467.
 - a. Divesting Clauses Strictly Construed—Vested Gift Not Divested Unless Exact Contingency Happens—Failure of Gift Over, 467.
 - b. Of Construing an Interest to Be Absolute Rather Than Defeasible, 468.
 - c. Contingent Interests Subject to a Condition Subsequent, 468.
- 22. Conditions, 468.
 - a. By What Words Created—Gifts to Executors and Testamentary Trustees—Conditions, Limitations, Conditional Limitations, 468.
 - b. Conditions Precedent and Subsequent Distinguished, 473.
 - c. Time of Performance—Ignorance of the Existence of Condition as an Excuse for Non-Performance, 474.
 - d. Impossible, Impolitic, Immoral, or Illegal Conditions, 475.
 - e. Conditions in Restraint of Marriage, 476.
 - (1) As to Real Estate, 476.
 - (2) Personalty, 477.
 - (3) Legacies Charged on Land, 481.
 - (4) Legacies Charged on Proceeds of Converted Land—Mixed Funds, 481.
 - (5) Restraints Upon Second Marriage, 481.
 - (6) Performance and Waiver, 482.
 - f. Condition Not to Contest Will, 483.
 - g. Assuming Testator's Name, 484.
 - h. Residence, 484.
 - i. Repugnant Conditions, 484.
- 23. Survivorship, 486.
 - a. Words of Survivorship—To What Period Referred, 486.
 - b. "Survivors"—When Read "Others," 490.
 - c. Accrued Shares, 493.
- 24. Substitution, 494.

- a. Definition, 494.
- b. Gifts Over on Death Under Specified Circumstances, 494.
- c. Gifts Over to Executors, Administrators, or Representatives, 495.
- d. Gifts to Classes, Substitutional and Independent Gifts, 495.
- 25. Words Importing Death—To What Period Referred, 502.
 - a. Words Referring to Death Simply—Death Treated as a Contingent Event, 502.
 - (1) When the Gift Is Immediate, 502.
 - (2) When the Gift Is Postponed, 504.
 - b. Words Referring to Death Coupled with a Contingency, 504.
- 26. Successive and Concurrent Interests, 507.
 - a. Devise to a Class in Tail, 507.
 - b. Gifts to Parent and Children (Compare supra, this title Devise to A or to A for Life, or to A and His Heirs, and if He Die Without Issue Over; also Gift to A and His Children—Rule in Wild's Case), 508.
 - c. Gifts to Parent and Issue (See ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 879), 509.
- 27. Joint Tenants and Tenants in Common (See JOINT TENANTS, vol. 11, p. 1057), 509.
- 28. Tenants by Entireties (See JOINT TENANTS, vol. 11, p. 1069), 510.
- 29. Interests Undisposed of, 510.
 - a. Title of Heirs and Next of Kin, 510.
 - b. Title of Executor to Residue Undisposed of (See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, vol. 7, p. 236), 512.
 - c. Unexhausted Interest in Lands Devised for Special Purposes, 512.
 - d. Charges on Realty—Proceeds of Land Directed to Be Sold (See LEGACIES, vol. 13, p. 42), 512.
 - e. Charges on Mixed Funds (See LEGACIES, vol. 13, p. 45), 512.
 - f. Devolution of Increase in Rentals Devised to Charity—Thelford School Case, 513.
- 30. Doctrine of Lapse (See LEGACIES AND DEVISES, vol. 13, p. 34), 515.
- 31. Administration (See DEBTS OF DECEDENTS, vol. 5, p. 206; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, vol. 7, p. 165), 515.
- 32. Election (See ELECTION, vol. 6, p. 247), 515.
- 33. Conversion (See EQUITABLE CONVERSION, vol. 6, p. 664), 515.
- 34. Executor's Trusts (See TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES, vol. 27, p. 1), 515.

I. DEFINITION.—A “will,” “last will,” or more accurately, “last will and testament,” may be defined, in the present condition of the common and statute law, as the legal declaration of a man’s intention which he wills to be performed after his death, touching either the disposition of his property, the guardianship of his children, or the administration of his estate.¹

1. A will is defined by Blackstone to be “the legal declaration of a man’s intention which he wills to be performed after his death.” 2 Bl. Com. 499, cited with approval in Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 309; Frew v. Clarke, 80 Pa. St. 178. The characteristic features of this, as well as of the definition in the text, are, that the declaration must be legal, i. e., if oral it must be as prescribed by the rules regulating nuncupative wills, as to which see NUNCUPATIVE WILLS, vol. 16, p. 1006; and that if written it must conform to the requirements of the governing statute. Hence, it has been said that the word “will” has a technical meaning and implies an instrument

II. HISTORY AND ORIGIN.—The right of testamentary disposition, as an incident of the right of property, seems to have been recognized in some form or other, by almost all races who have executed with prescribed formalities, to take effect after death, subject to alteration, cancellation, or revocation at the volition of the maker. See 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 16, notes by Randolph & Talcott. See infra, this title, What Constitutes a Will—Distinguishing Characteristics.

A will has also been defined to be "any instrument whereby a person makes a disposition of his property to take effect after his death." Cover v. Stem, 67 Md. 449; Carey v. Dennis, 13 Md. 1.

This view is also adopted by Redfield, who says that testamentary power for all practical purposes is confined in most American states to the disposition of property and the accidental control of the donees, consequent upon the conditions and limitations annexed to the bequest. 1 Redf. on Wills (4th ed.) 5. Now while it is undoubtedly true that any instrument intended to dispose of the testator's property after death, provided the statutory formalities are observed, may operate as a will (Lawson's Rights, Remedies and Practice 3139, citing Wall v. Wall, 30 Miss. 91; 64 Am. Dec. 147; Babb v. Harrison, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 111; 70 Am. Dec. 203), yet it seems clear that the term today applies equally to instruments framed exclusively with a view to appointing executors, leaving the property to pass under the Statute of Distributions as though no will had been made, Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 1, note 2; Barber v. Barber, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 72; Miller v. Miller, 32 La. Ann. 437; as well as to testamentary instruments appointing guardians. Wardwell v. Wardwell, 9 Allen (Mass.) 518; Ex p. Ilchester, 7 Ves. 367. Such also seems to be the meaning of the term under 1 Vict., ch. 26. See Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 8, note 3, and appendix.

Merely Disinheriting Son.—An instrument which appoints no executor, and merely excludes one of testator's sons from participation in the estate, without making any other disposition of the property, has been held not entitled to probate. Coffman v. Coffman, 85 Va. 459.

Informal Revocation.—It should also be observed that it has been held that an informal writing, letter or memorandum, which merely revokes a former testamentary disposition, is not entitled to probate. Goods of Fraser, L. R., 2 P. & M. 40. But compare Goods of Hicks, L. R., 1 P. & M. 683; Laughton v. Atkins, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 535; Goods of Durance, L. R., 2 P. & M. 406; Brenchley v. Still, 2 Rob. 162.

On the other hand, a codicil not containing any disposition of property has been held entitled to probate. Brenchley v. Still, 2 Rob. 162.

Synonymy of "Will," "Testament," "Last Will and Testament."—At the present day these terms are practically synonymous. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 2.

Distinction Between "Testament" and "Devise."—"Testament" has sometimes been confined to dispositions of personalty by will; while "devise" has been the attributed denomination of similar dispositions of realty. This distinction, however, might now be ignored, without serious lack of precision. See 4 Kent's Com. (13th ed.) 501; Redf. on Wills (4th ed.), p. 6.

"Will" Includes "Codicils."—The word "will," in modern legislation, includes codicils as the generic term, the specific and statutory provisions in regard to the mode of executing wills, and personal capacity of testator, apply to codicils. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 8; Bayley v. Bailey, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 245; Deering's Pol. Code Cal., § 17, p. 5; California Civ. Code, § 14, p. 5.

Second Will Destroyed by Mistake.—Where the subsequent will is destroyed under a mistaken impression that the former will is thereby revived, it would seem that the contents of the second will might be proved, and as proved have effect. Powell v. Powell, L. R., 1 P. & M. 209; Brown v. Brown, 8 El. & Bl. 876; Wood v. Wood, L. R., 1 P. & M. 309.

It is held that the contents of such will, destroyed under the misconception that a former will is revived by the act of destruction, as established by evidence, must show clearly that the first will was thereby revoked. See Cutto v. Gilbert, 9 Moo. P. C. C. 131. This seems slightly inconsistent with the principle of "intent."

advanced above the savage stage of development.¹ In England, the right of bequeathing chattels, real and personal, seems to have existed from the earliest times,² although the power, unless the testator died without either wife or issue, was subject to their right to "reasonable parts;" for by the common law, as it stood according to Glanvil in the reign of Henry II., a man's goods were divided into three equal parts; one of which went to his issue or lineal descendants, another to his wife, and the third was at his own disposal; if he died without a wife he might then dispose of one moiety and the other went to his children, and so e converso; if he had no children, the wife was entitled to one moiety and he might bequeath the other; but if he died without either wife or issue, the whole was at his own disposal. The shares of the wife and issue were called "reasonable parts," and the writ de rationabili parte bonorum was given to recover them from the executors.³ Early legislation led gradually to the abolition of the doctrine of reasonable parts in various countries,⁴ until finally the Statute of 1 Vict., ch. 26 (A. D. 1837), removed all restraints from the testamentary disposition of personalty.⁵

After the introduction of feuds into England, and prior to the passage of the Statute of Wills, 32 Hen. VIII., there was no power, but in a few exceptional cases, to devise real estate save through the medium of a devise to uses enforced in chancery,⁶ and hence when the Statute of Uses was passed, 27 Hen. VIII., ch. 10, which converted all uses into legal estates, real estate became again incapable of being devised. To remedy this the Statute of Wills, 32 Hen. VIII., ch. 1 (explained by 32 Hen. VIII., ch. 5), 1. See Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), §§ 12, 13.

2. 2 Bl. Com. 491.

3. 1 Wm. on Exrs. (9th ed.) 2; 2 Bl. Com. 491, 492; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 14.

"It must indeed be remarked that there has been a controversy whether this was the general law of the land, or only such as obtained by custom in particular places. Fitzherbert, in his commentary on the writ de rationabili parte bonorum, contends that the distribution, which excludes the testamentary power from a certain portion of the personal estate, was in his time the common law of the land, and therefore needed not a special custom to support it. Co. Litt. 176 b, note (6), by Hargrave. And Mr. Justice Blackstone, 2 Bl. Com. 492, expresses a strong opinion to the same effect, citing Glanvil, Bracton, Magna Charta, the Year Books, and a passage from Sir Henry Finch; the last of which authorities expressly lays it down, in the reign of Charles I., to be the general law of the land. But, on the other hand, Lord Coke says that it appears by the Register, and many of our books, that there must be a custom, alleged in some county, etc., to entitle the wife and children to the writ de rationabili parte bonorum, and that so it had been resolved in Parliament." 1 Wms. on Exrs. (8th ed.), bk. 1, ch. 1.

4. 2 Bl. Com. 492, 493.

5. "And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for every person to devise, bequeath, or dispose of, by his will, executed in manner hereinafter required, all real estate and all personal estate which he shall be entitled to, either at law or in equity, at the time of his death, and which, if not so devised, bequeathed, or disposed of, would devolve upon the heir-at-law, or customary heir of him, or if he became entitled by descent, of his ancestor, or upon his executor or administrator." 1 Vict., ch. 26.

6. REMAINDERS, vol. 20, p. 908.

was passed, which enabled a testator to devise all his lands held in free and common socage and two-thirds of that held in Knight's Service; and by the passage of Statute 12 Car. 2, ch. 24, which converted nearly all lands into free and common socage tenure, lands held in Knight's Service became devisable without restriction.¹

In the United States, as neither feudal tenure nor the doctrine of reasonable parts has ever distinctly obtained, the rule is that one may dispose of all his real and personal property by will duly executed with prescribed formalities.²

III. BY WHAT LAW REGULATED.—See CONFLICT OF LAWS, vol. 3, p. 630.

IV. CLASSIFICATION.—All testamentary dispositions may be classified as follows:

1. Written Testaments or Ordinary Wills.—These present the characteristics of the above definition and no others.

2. Nuncupative Wills.—See NUNCUPATIVE WILLS, vol. 16, p. 1006.

3. Mystic Testaments.—A mystic testament consists of a written testament inclosed and sealed in the presence of witnesses. Under the law of Louisiana, much of which is derived from the civil law from French and Spanish sources, such instruments have peculiar efficacy.³

4. Holographic or Olographic Testaments.—A holographic or olographic will is one written, dated, and signed entirely by the testator's own hand, and, for this reason, certain formalities which must attend the execution of a will not so prepared, the chief of which is attestation by witness, are dispensed with.⁴ The attes-

1. Bl. Com. 152; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 15.

2. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 16.

3. The following are the provisions of the Louisiana Civil Code on the subject. "The mystic or secret testament, otherwise called the close testament, is made in the following manner: The testator must sign his dispositions, whether he has written them himself, or has caused them to be written by another person. The paper containing these dispositions, or the paper serving as their envelope, must be closed and sealed. The testator shall present it thus closed and sealed to the notary and to seven witnesses, or he shall cause it to be closed and sealed in their presence; then he shall declare to the notary in the presence of the witnesses that that paper contains his testament written by himself, or by another by his direction, and signed by him, the testator. The notary shall then draw up the act of superscription, which shall be written on that paper, or on the sheet that serves as its envelope, and that act shall be signed by the testator and by the notary and the witnesses. All that is above prescribed shall be done without interruption or turning aside to other acts; and in case the testator, by reason of any hindrance that has happened since the signing of the testament, cannot sign the act of superscription, mention shall be made of the declaration made by him thereof, without its being necessary in that case to increase the number of witnesses. Those who know not how or are not able to write, and those who know not how, or are not able to sign their names, cannot make dispositions in the form of the mystic will. If any one of the witnesses to the act of superscription knows not how to sign, express mention shall be made thereof. In all cases the act must be signed by at least two witnesses." Louisiana Civ. Code, art. 1584-1588.

4. 2 Bouv. Law Dict. "Testament" (15th ed.) 722; Louisiana Civ. Code, art. 1581, 1588; 4 Kent's Com. (13th ed) 519, 520; Williams v. Hardy, 15 La. Ann. 286. See Wilbourn v. Shell, 59 Miss. 205; 42 Am. Rep. 363; In re Soher's Estate, 78 Cal. 477; Toebbe v. Williams, 80 Ky. 664.

Instance of Document Held to Be a Holographic Will.—The following document, written, signed, and dated, in the hand of J. M., was held to be valid as his holographic will, or as a codicil thereto: "$100,000. New Orleans, Jan. 25, 1848. Four years from and after my death, I hereby authorize and direct (and will) my executors to pay unto F. one hundred thousand dollars. John McDonogh." Pena v. New Orleans, 13 La. Ann. 86; 71 Am. Dec. 506.

Instances of Documents Held Not to Be Holographic Wills.—A decedent had two drawers, in one of which he kept his notes, deeds, and other valuable papers, carefully arranged, together with his money and other valuable effects; and in the other he kept some papers of little value, carelessly deposited with some effects of very small value. It was held that a holograph script, found in the latter place, could not be proved as a will, under the statute, for the articles found with the script could not justly be called "the valuable papers or effects" of the decedent. Little v. Lockman, 4 Jones (N. Car.) 494.

An instrument in the handwriting of a decedent, written on a sheet of letter paper, the body of the writing commencing with the decedent's name on the first page and ending about the middle of the next, the paper being folded so that the third page was outside, with the words "I's will" indorsed on the back, at about the middle of the third page when the paper was unfolded, in the handwriting of the deceased, with the name of the deceased not signed at the end of the writing, but with a date attached, and after the date a clause appointing an executor, the instrument not professing to dispose of the entire estate of the decedent, is not a good holographic will, and cannot be admitted to probate. Roy v. Roy, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 418; 84 Am. Dec. 696.

A written document providing that "this is to serifye that ie levet to mey wife Real and persnal and she to dispose for them as she wis" is properly construed as if it read: This is to certify that I leave to my wife real and personal property, and she to dispose of them as she wishes; and as thus read shows a testamentary intent, and such document, if wholly written, dated, and signed by the testator, is entitled to probate as an olographic will. Mitchell v. Donohue, 100 Cal. 202.

Presumption Against Document's Being a Holographic Will.—In Crutcher v. Crutcher, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 377, it is held that the Act of 1784, ch. 10, providing that when any will may be found amongst the valuable papers or effects of a person deceased, and it shall be in the handwriting of such person, and his name subscribed thereto, or inserted in some part of such will, it shall be sufficient to convey an estate in lands, prescribes a special case, which, being complied with, will make a will valid without a signature or attesting witnesses, so far as authentication is concerned; that the mode of authentication being complied with, the question arises whether the paper propounded was intended by the party to be his will; and the absence of the testator's signature, or if there is an attesting clause, and no attesting witnesses, if it does not contain a disposition of all the estate of the party, or if he made from time to time alterations without appointing executors or coming to a conclusion, or if the paper appears in the form of loose memoranda or notes, a presumption arises from any of these circumstances that the writer did not intend the paper to be and operate as his last will; but such presumption may be removed by satisfactory proof.

In Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, Texas, California, Dakota, Montana, Utah, and Mississippi, a holographic will, wholly written and subscribed by testator, need not be attested by witnesses. Virginia Code (1873), ch. 118, § 4; West Virginia Laws (1882), ch. 84, § 3; North Carolina Code (1883), § 2136; Kentucky Gen. Stat. (1883), ch. 113, § 5; Baker v. Dobyns, 4 Dana (Ky.) 220; Tennessee Code (1884), § 3004; Arkansas Gen. Stat. (1884), § 6492; Texas Rev. Stat. (1879), §§ 1847, 4859, 4860; California Civ. Code, § 6277; Dakota Prob. Code, § 21, Civ. Code, § 691; Montana Prob. Code, § 439; Mississippi Code (1880), § 1262; Idaho Rev. Stat. (1887), § 5728; Arizona Rev. Stat. (1887), §§ 3234, 3235.

Requisites of Holographic Will.—In North Carolina and Tennessee, the will is not good unless the name of the testator is subscribed or inserted, and the instrument found among valuable tation of subscribing witnesses at the bottom, however, does not mar it, as their signatures form no part of the will.¹ For the same reason an unsigned attestation clause may be disregarded.² The name of the testator at the commencement of the paper has been held an equivocal act, and insufficient as a signature, unless it appears affirmatively from something on the face of the paper that it was so meant,³ nor is the fact that the paper is indorsed in the testator's handwriting as his will—as "Roy's Will," that being the testator's name—sufficient.⁴ A will consisting of a printed form, with the blanks filled in with the testator's handwriting, has been held not a holographic will and no part of it good.⁵ The papers or effects of the deceased, or lodged in the house of another for safe keeping. North Carolina Code (1883), § 2136; Tennessee Code (1884), § 3004. See Sawyer v. Sawyer, 7 Jones (N. Car.) 134; Hughes v. Smith, 64 N. Car. 493; Hill v. Bell, Phill. (N. Car.) 122; 93 Am. Dec. 583; Winstead v. Bowman, 68 N. Car. 170; Marr v. Marr, 2 Head. (Tenn.) 303; Hooper v. McQuary, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 136.

Proof of Testator's Chirography.—In North Carolina, Tennessee, and Arkansas, the handwriting must be proved to be that of the testator by three credible witnesses who believe such will and every part of it, to be in his handwriting. North Carolina Code (1883), § 2136; Tennessee Code (1884), § 3004. See Outlaw v. Hurdle, 1 Jones (N. Car.) 150.

In Texas, two are enough. Texas Rev. Stat., §§ 1847, 4859, 4860.

Revoking Power.—Arkansas.—In this state it is provided that no holographic will is good, in bar of a will in ordinary form; that is, a will executed and attested as prescribed. Arkansas Dig. (1884), § 6492. See Rogers v. Diamond, 13 Ark. 474; Abraham v. Wilkins, 17 Ark. 292; Vines v. Clingfoot, 21 Ark. 309; Ex p. Horner, 27 Ark. 443.

In other states such wills may be proved in the same manner as other private writings. Montana Probate Code, § 19; Idaho Rev. Stat. (1887), § 5728; Arizona Rev. Stat. (1887), § 979.

In California and Idaho, such will may be made either in or out of the state. California Civ. Code, § 6277; Idaho Rev. Stat. (1887), § 5728.

It has been held in Louisiana that a person who is blind may make a valid olographic testament. State v. Martin, 2 La. Ann. 667.

1. 4 Kent's Com. (13th ed.) 519, 520;

Andrews v. Andrews, 12 Martin (La.) 713; Knight v. Smith, 3 Martin (La.) 163; Langley v. Langley, 12 La. 114; Brown v. Beaver, 3 Jones (N. Car.) 516; 67 Am. Dec. 255; Roth's Succession, 31 La. Ann. 315. See In re Soher's Estate, 78 Cal. 477; Perkins v. Jones, 84 Va. 358.

2. Hill v. Bell, Phill. (N. Car.) 122; 93 Am. Dec. 583; Guthrie v. Owen, 36 Am. Dec. 318, n. See Allen v. Jeter, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 672.

3. Position of Testator's Name.—Ramsey v. Ramsey, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 664; 70 Am. Dec. 438; Roy v. Roy, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 418; 84 Am. Dec. 696. But see Johnson's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 5.

Thus in Ramsey v. Ramsey, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 664; 70 Am. Dec. 438, where a holograph will commenced "I, Thomas Ramsey, of Charlotte, do hereby make my last will and testament in manner and form following," but the testator's signature did not appear elsewhere, the court in refusing probate used much the same language as appears in the text.

In North Carolina and Tennessee, the name may be either subscribed or inserted. North Carolina Code (1883), § 2136; Tennessee Code (1884), § 3004; Tate v. Tate, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 465.

Position of Date.—The date may be placed below the signature. Succession of Fuqua, 27 La. Ann. 273.

The date may, in the absence of any designation by law of the particular place in which it is to be put on a holographic will, be placed at the head or foot, or in the body of the instrument. Zerega v. Percival, 46 La. Ann. 590.

4. Roy v. Roy, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 418; 84 Am. Dec. 696; Plumstead's Appeal, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 545.

5. In re Rand's Estate, 61 Cal. 468; 44 Am. Rep. 555; In re Billing's Estate, 64 Cal. 427.

date is an important part of every holographic will and consists of the year, month, and day, the omission of any one of which is fatal.¹

5. Contingent Wills.—A contingent or conditional will is one so drawn as to become operative only upon the happening or not happening, or upon the existence or non-existence, of a certain set of circumstances during a certain period of time, so that if the contingency fails or occurs the will is or is not entitled to probate as the case may be.² But there are two points to be settled before any will can be refused probate upon the ground that it is

In McMichael v. Bankston, 24 La. Ann. 451; however, an holographic will in which two words appeared not to be in the testator's handwriting, was sustained on the ground that their presence or absence could have no material effect upon its meaning.

Olographic Will in Pencil.—It was held in Philbrick v. Spangler, 15 La. Ann. 46, that an olographic will in pencil is valid.

1. Fuentes v. Gaines, 25 La. Ann. 85; In re Martin's Estate, 58 Cal. 530. See Clarke v. Ransom, 50 Cal. 595; In re Billing's Estate, 64 Cal. 427. But see Clark's Succession, 11 La. Ann. 125; Gaines v. Lizardi, 3 Woods (U. S.) 77.

Where an olographic will was dated at the commencement, and, after making various dispositions, was signed by the testator, and he subsequently added another clause and again signed it, the instrument appearing to be congruous and continuous, it will be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that it was finished at one time, and is clothed with the forms required for its validity. Lagrange v. Merle, 5 La. Ann. 278; 52 Am. Dec. 589.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th Am. ed.) 17; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 11; Redf. on Wills (4th ed.) 177; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.) 285; Lugg v. Lugg, 2 Salk. 592; S. C., 1 Ld. Raym. 441; Parsons v. Lanoe, 1 Ves. 190; Sinclair v. Hone, 6 Ves. 607; Roberts v. Roberts, 2 S. & T. 337; In re Porter, L. R., 2 P. & M. 22; In re Robinson, L. R., 2 P. & M. 171; Lindsay v. Lindsay, L. R., 2 P. & M. 459; In re Thorne, 4 S. & T. 36; Tarver v. Tarver, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 174; Damon v. Damon, 8 Allen (Mass.), 192; Ex p. Lindsay, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 204; Thompson v. Connor, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 366; Frederick's Appeal, 52 Pa. St. 338; 91 Am. Dec. 159; Turner v. Scott, 51 Pa. St. 126; Todd's Will, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 145; Wagner v. M'Don- ald, 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 346; Maxwell v. Maxwell, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 101. See also Dougherty v. Dougherty, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 25; Jacks v. Henderson, 1 De-saus. (S. Car.) 543.

In Todd's Will, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 145, it appeared that the testator, in contemplation of a journey, began an informal testamentary paper thus: "My wish, desire, and intention now is, that if I should not return (which I will, no preventing Providence) what I own shall be divided as follows," etc. It was held in this case that an instrument limited by a condition as to its operation could not be admitted to probate as a will, after the failure of the contingency on the happening of which it was to take effect, and hence that where the testator returned from his journey (no Providence preventing) and subsequently died, that the instrument should not be admitted to probate.

An absent husband wrote to his wife expressing uncertainty as to whether he should survive the dangers of his journey, concluding: "If I never get back home, I leave you everything I have in the world. The property I got by my first wife, I wish you to return everything to her father." It was held that this was a contingent will, which would become a will by the happening of the condition, but that, in the entire failure of such condition, the document would never become a will. Maxwell v. Maxwell, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 101.

A paper was exhibited for record as the last will of C. W., proved to have been signed by him at a time when he was about to leave the state of his residence. It was written somewhat in the form of a letter and said: "If I should not come to you again, my son M. shall pay, etc." Evidence was given that C. W. went to Kentucky and re-contingent or conditional and the condition has failed: First, whether the contingency is referred to as the occasion of making the will or as the condition upon which the instrument is to become operative,¹ or in other words, whether the intention of the testator is to make the validity of the will dependent upon the condition, or merely to state the circumstances and inducements which led him to make a testamentary provision;² and secondly, if the language clearly imports a condition, whether it applies to turned, and that he lived for several weeks thereafter. The writing was refused probate. Wagner v. McDonald, 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 346.

Will Operating as Escrow.—In Sewell v. Slingluff, 57 Md. 538, evidence of the alleged parol declarations of the testatrix at the time of the execution of her will, that it should become inoperative on the happening of certain events, was held inadmissible. The court observed that the reasons which apply to other instruments as escrows, had no applicability to wills.

1 Redf. on Wills (4th ed.) 177; Likefield v. Likefield, 82 Ky. 591; 56 Am. Rep. 908; Tarver v. Tarver, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 174; Damon v. Damon, 8 Allen (Mass.) 192.

2 Hoar, J., in Damon v. Damon, 8 Allen (Mass.) 194; French v. French, 14 W. Va. 458; Kelleher v. Kernan, 60 Md. 440; In re Barton's Estate, 52 Cal. 538. Thus if the testator makes his will conditional upon his death during a particular period which he survives, the will does not take effect. In re Porter, L. R., 2 P. & M. 22; In re Robinson, 2 P. & M. 171; Lindsay v. Lindsay, L. R., 2 P. & M. 459. See In re Thorne, 4 S. & T. 36; 34 L. J. P. 131.

"On the other hand, if the possibility of death during a particular period is given as the reason or motive why the testator makes his will, it is not contingent upon the happening of the death during that period. In re Dobson, L. R., 1 P. & M. 88; In re Martin, L. R., 1 P. & M. 380; In re Mayd, 29 W. R. 214." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 11, 12.

Language Merely Expressive of Circumstances Under Which Will Was Made.

—The following expressions have been held merely expressive of the circumstances under which the will was made, and not conditional: "In the event of my death whilst serving in this horrid climate, or any accident happening to me." In re Thorne, 4 S. & T. 36. "In case of any fatal accident happening to me, being about to travel by railway, I hereby leave." In re Dobson, L. R., 1 P. & M. 88. "In case of my death on the way." In re Mayd, 6 Prob. Div. 17. "Being about to take a long journey, and knowing the uncertainty of life." Tarver v. Tarver, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 174. "To provide for possible contingencies." Kelleher v. Kernan, 60 Md. 440. "Let all men know hereby, if I get drowned this morning, March 7, 1872, that I bequeath," etc. French v. French, 14 W. Va. 458. "According to my present intention, should anything happen to me before I reach my friends in St. Louis." Ex p. Lindsay, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 204. So, also, where the will began: "Being physically weak in health, have obtained permission to cease from all duty for a few days, etc.," and then proceeded, "and in the event of my death occurring during such time, I do hereby will and bequeath." Goods of Martin, L. R., 1 P. & M. 380.

Language Importing a Condition.—The following expressions have been held to create a condition upon the failure of which the will is not entitled to probate: Where a mariner heads his will with the caption, "Instructions to be followed if I die at sea or abroad," Lindsay v. Lindsay, L. R., 2 P. & M. 459; or where one writes, "If I die before my return from Ireland," see Parsons v. Lanoe, 1 Ves. 189; or, "If I never get back home, I leave you everything I have in the world." Maxwell v. Maxwell, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 101.

So in Kentucky, where a will devising real estate read: "As I intend starting in a few days for the State of Missouri, and should anything happen that I should not return alive, my wish is," etc. Dougherty v. Dougherty, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 25.

And in Missouri, where the will read: "I this day start for Kentucky; I may never get back. If it should be my misfortune, I give my property, etc." Robnett v. Ashlock, 49 Mo. 171.

and affects the whole will or only some of its provisions.¹ The tendency of the later and better considered cases is to construe the language, if possible, as merely setting forth the circumstances which induced the testator to make a testamentary provision, rather than as creating a condition upon which alone it is to become operative,² and even where the language clearly imports a condition, the tendency is to restrain its operation to particular provisions, rather than to allow it to affect the entire instrument.³

In both instances the testator survived the journey between the two states and his will failed in consequence.

Again, where the will began: "I am going to town with my drill, and am not feeling good, and in case I should not get back, do as I say on this paper," and the testator went to town, became very ill there but was brought home, where he soon died of the same illness, it was held that the paper could not be admitted to probate. Morrow's Appeal, 116 Pa. St. 440. See further Broadus v. Rosson, 3 Leigh (Va.) 12; Wagner v. M'Donald, 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 346; French v. French, 14 W. Va. 458, and cases cited.

1. Damon v. Damon, 8 Allen (Mass.) 194; Ex p. Lindsay, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 204.

2. Strauss v. Schmidt, 3 Ph. 209; Ex p. Lindsay, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 206; French v. French, 14 W. Va. 458; Kelleher v. Kernan, 60 Md. 440; In re Barton's Estate, 52 Cal. 538. See cases collected in two preceding notes.

Probate of Will Doubtful in Terms—Subsequent Construction.—In Ex p. Lindsay, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 209, the court said: "If the will be admitted to probate, it will still remain a matter of construction whether the bequests are made dependent upon a condition or contingency. If it be denied probate, that question cannot be brought before a court of construction. If, therefore, in a case of this kind, there be room for reasonable doubt as to the contingent character of the instrument, if there are not clear and unquestionable terms of contingency, the probate judge is justified in a sentence of probate on the formal proof, so as to leave the determination of its conditional nature for subsequent construction and interpretation. In this instance, to say the least, there is room for reasonable doubt. The words 'According to my present intention, should anything happen to me before I reach my friends in St. Louis, I wish to make a correct disposal of the three hundred dollars in the hands of Mr. Harrison.' may express rather the occasion of making the instrument than a clear condition on which the disposition was to take effect. She does not say that she gives only in case anything should happen, but expresses a general desire to make 'a correct disposal' of her property, naturally introducing the reason or motive operating. The term 'should' in this connection, does not necessarily import condition or contingency as to the subject-matter of the instrument, but may have been designed to express the idea that lest or for fear 'anything should happen,' etc., she proposed to make a will. It is used by way of introduction, and not in the clause of gift. The will is inartificially drawn; and where language is employed without exactness or precision, close and literal interpretation may very easily carry us wide of the intention. I am, therefore, of opinion that the will should be admitted to proof, and its construction be left for future consideration."

3. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), §§ 285, 286; Damon v. Damon, 8 Allen (Mass.) 192; Ex p. Lindsay, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 204.

Condition Restricted to a Portion Only.

—In Damon v. Damon, 8 Allen (Mass.) 192, a testator commenced his will as follows: "I, J. W. Damon, being about to go to Cuba, and knowing the danger of voyages, do make this as my last will and testament, in manner and form following: "First, if by casualty or otherwise I should lose my life during this voyage, I give and bequeath to my wife," etc., and afterwards gave independent bequests, and spoke of the instrument as his last will and testament. He made the voyage and returned in safety, and afterward died. It was held that the will should be admitted to probate, the court, by Hoar, J., who said: "There seems to be no reason upon principle why an instrument cannot be made which is to take effect as a will only on the happening of a contingency named in it. As every devise or legacy, and the appointment of an executor may be made conditional, if the same condition applies to all, it may be as well annexed to the entire instrument as to a single provision; and the happening of the condition can then be ascertained when the will is offered for probate. And so it has been held in various cases which have been cited at the bar. . . . We are unable to see that, on any sound principle of construction, the language used in this will can be taken to express merely the cause and inducement of making it. The introductory clause is complete in itself, in a form quite common, and states distinctly the motive of the testator in making the will. 'I, J. W. Damon, of . . . being in sound mind and body, and being about to go to Cuba, and knowing the dangers of voyages, do hereby make this as my last will and testament, in manner and form following.' So far, what is said applies to the whole instrument. Then come the particular dispositions: 'First, If by casualty or otherwise I should lose my life during this voyage, I give and bequeath to my wife Ann,' etc. The condition is thus grammatically, and according to the common use of phraseology, attached to and qualifies the particular bequest. He gives a certain piece of property to his wife, if he loses his life during the voyage. There is no gift to her without that qualification. Suppose any other condition had been expressed—'If I die before I reach a certain age,' or 'before a certain house is finished,' or 'if the legatee survives A;,' could it be doubted that it would make the bequest conditional? The word 'first,' preceding the condition and the gift, has a tendency to show that the testator is expressing a particular qualification and not a general purpose. To change the word 'if' into 'lest' would be to make a change in the meaning on grounds purely conjectural. The other reasons urged for the opinion that the whole will was made 'lest the testator should die during the voyage,' namely, the appointment of his wife as accountant to settle his affairs in Cuba, 'and all other places where I may have business at the time of my decease,' he having no business elsewhere than in Cuba and Charlestown when the will

was made, and the repetition of the phrase 'this my last will and testament,' whatever weight might be given to them if the sole question were whether the whole will must fail if he accomplished the voyage in safety, are deprived of all force if the condition affects but a single clause.

"And upon the second question proposed, we are of opinion that the condition does not affect any other than the first clause of the will, and that the will is therefore entitled to probate, having been duly executed.

"The case most nearly analogous, to be found among the adjudged cases, is that of Parsons v. Lanoe, cited from 1 Ves. 189, but also to be found in Ambl. 557. Each of these reports is apparently imperfect and fragmentary; but, by taking both, a pretty correct idea of the case can be obtained. The report in Ambler is the best, so far as it gives the will itself more at length; and some of the expressions attributed to Lord Hardwicke in Vesey, to which it is hard to give a sensible meaning, are not found in it. As there recited, the will began thus: 'I, Charles De Lanoe, of . . . do make and appoint this to be my last will and testament, in manner following: i.e. Impri-mis. In case I should die before I return from the journey I intend, God willing, shortly to undertake for Ireland, my will and desire is, that my house and lands at Farley Hill . . . be all sold,' etc. Each subsequent clause containing a bequest referred expressly to this sale, and provided for a payment out of it; the final bequest being of the residue of the money arising from the sale, with all the remainder of his estate, real and personal, to his wife, whom he appointed executrix. The suit was a bill in equity for the payment of one of the legacies, and to procure a sale of the real estate for that purpose. The testator was childless when the will was made, and returned from Ireland, and had children born to him afterward. According to the report in Ambler, Lord Hardwicke decided that the condition was not so inserted as in express terms to make the whole will conditional; but that beyond all controversy it made the devise as to the sale conditional; and that all the subsequent dispositions were made to depend upon the sale, and so were connected with the condition. He did not advert to the appointment of an

If, however, the testator has married since the will was made, or has had children born thereafter, for whom the will makes no provision, the rule of construction is reversed in equity and any words are laid hold of which will make the instrument contingent and conditional.¹ The better opinion seems to be that parol evidence that the testator has recognized the will as valid and subsisting after the condition has failed, should be excluded unless the act of recognition amounts to a re-execution or republication within the meaning of the Statute of Wills.² But when a will written as executrix; and all that was essential to the decision was, that the legacy to the plaintiff was upon a condition which had failed. He proceeded to discuss the effect of the birth of the children as a revocation of the will, but gave no opinion upon it, though intimating some views of his own respecting it. And it is manifest from the context that the remark which Vesey attributes to him, that his conclusion on the second question 'greatly strengthens the construction upon the first,' was misunderstood by the reporter; and that he could have only referred to the satisfaction which the court felt in coming to the decision which was made upon the construction of the will, in view of the result which a different decision would have caused, by disinheriting the children. Lord Hardwicke further held that no collateral proof of declarations of the testator respecting the will, not amounting to a republication, were admissible to control the effect of the condition.

"In the case at bar, the condition stands very much as in Parsons v. Lanoe, Ambl. 557. But the second and third clauses in the will are entirely independent of the first, and do not refer to it in any manner. They contain distinct legacies to collateral relatives. The will does not purport to make any disposition of personal property, unless the property referred to 'on the island of Cuba' may be construed as including some.

"The cases cited at the argument, with the exception of Parsons v. Lanoe, Ambl. 557, afford but little aid in coming to the decision at which we have arrived, and are chiefly valuable as showing that courts do not incline to regard a will as conditional where it can be reasonably held that the testator was merely expressing his inducement to make it, however inaccurate his use of language might be, if strictly construed. But no authority has been found which would justify us in rejecting this will as wholly conditional."

R resided and owned some estate in A county, Kentucky. While on a visit to Missouri he made a will, a portion of which was as follows: "It is my wish that all the notes and accounts found among my papers (vs.) my brothers, should be destroyed or handed over to them. Should I never return, I also desire that each of them should have two hundred dollars in addition, and the remainder of my property divided equally between the heirs of F and J, at their respective ages of 18, should it be deemed judicious to do so." The remainder of the paper provides that M should have indulgence on the amount due for a farm, and that two persons, naming them, should attend to his affairs. It was held that the words "should I never return," are confined to the disposition of the notes and accounts. Massie v. Griffin, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 364.

1. Lord Hardwicke, in Parsons v. Lanoe, 2 Ambl. 562; 1 Ves. 192; Jacks v. Henderson, 1 Desaus. (S. Car.) 556. But see observations of Hoar, J., in Damon v. Damon, 3 Allen (Mass.) 196, upon Parsons v. Lanoe, 1 Ves. 192; Ambl. 561.

2. Parsons v. Lanoe, 2 Ambl. 560; Goods of Winn, 2 S. & T. 147; Roberts v. Roberts, 2 S. & T. 337; Goods of Cawthron, 3 S. & T. 417; Dougherty v. Dougherty, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 25.

In England, before the modern wills act of 1837, which provides that no will or codicil or any part thereof, which shall be in any manner revoked, shall be revived otherwise than by the re-execution thereof, or by a codicil executed in manner hereinbefore required, and showing an intention to revive the same, the principle in the text was applied only to devises of realty, in regard to which Lord Hardwicke said, in Parsons v. Lanoe, 1 Ves. 191: "The penning of the will then being so, collateral or parol proof cannot be if conditional upon a journey is re-executed, after the testator's return, the condition ceases, and the will may operate fully by remaining uncanceled.¹ It need hardly be observed that an absolute will duly executed animo testandi cannot be shown by extrinsic evidence to have been intended by the testator to take effect only upon a contingency which has failed.² When on the death of the testator the event is still in suspense, general probate will at once be granted.³

6. Alternative Wills.—Alternative wills are instruments so expressed that the contingency upon which each is to become operative is the alternative of that upon which the other is to become operative. As if a testator, after executing two wills of different dates, should declare by a codicil to the second will, that if he died before a certain date the earlier instrument should be taken as his last will and testament; otherwise, the later.⁴

7. Wills Operative at the Election of a Third Person.—Although a

taken into consideration, which would be dangerous; and, what the court, since the Statute of Frauds, is not warranted to do; for nothing will set it up but some act done by him (testator) after that event (the failure of the condition) to republish the will or defeat the condition." But as the statute did not prevent parol republication of bequests of personalty, evidence of subsequent recognition and adherence was admissible. Strauss v. Schmidt, 3 Ph. 218; Burton v. Collingwood, 4 Hagg. 176.

But under the statute 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 92, the doctrine laid down by Lord Hardwicke, in Parsons v. Lanoe, 1 Ves. 192, is equally applicable to all wills executed since its passage. Goods of Winn, 2 S. & T. 147; Roberts v. Roberts, 2 S. & T. 337.

Similar provisions exist in many of the United States. Virginia Code, ch. 118, § 9; West Virginia Laws (1882), ch. 84, § 8; Kentucky Gen. Stat., ch. 113, § 11.

In Georgia, a parol republication in the presence of the original witnesses is good. Georgia Code, § 2478.

See further, on the subject, French v. French, 14 W. Va. 460; Kelleher v. Kernan, 60 Md. 440.

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 287; Goods of Cawthron, 3 S. & T. 417.

On the other hand, the due execution of a new and inconsistent will would supersede the prior contingent will. Goods of Ward, 4 Hagg. 179.

2. Sewell v. Slingluff, 57 Md. 537. In this case, evidence offered to show that the will was intended by a testatrix to be probated only in case she died without issue, was excluded.

3. In re Cooper, 1 Deane 9. See In re Bangham, 1 Pro. Div. 429.

4. Thus, in Hamilton's Estate, 74 Pa. St. 69, a testator made a will dated November 20, 1871; he made another dated January 13, 1873; he made a "codicil to my last will and testament," dated "this —day of January, 1873." By the codicil, after referring to the law relating to bequests to charities, he provided, "Now I declare said will of 20th November, 1871, to be my last will should I die before the 1st of March, 1873, otherwise, the will of 13th January, 1873, shall be my last will." He died on the 23d of January, 1873. It was held that the paper of November, 1871, was his will; Williams, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It is clear that the testamentary paper of January 13, 1873, admitted to probate by the register, cannot be regarded as the will of James Hamilton. It is not his will, for the contingency upon which it was to take effect never happened. Todd's Will, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 145. It was a provisional will, and was only to become operative if he did not die before the 1st of March, 1873; if he did, it was to have no force or effect. He died on the 23d of January, 1873, and therefore, by the express provisions of the codicil to which it is subject, it did not take effect as his will. If, then, it never had any force or validity as a will, did it revoke the will of the 20th of November, 1871, which was also admitted to probate by the register? It did not revoke it in testator cannot delegate to another power either to make or to revoke his will after his death, yet he may provide that a paper in form testamentary shall become operative or not, at the election of a third person. In such case the testamentary character of the paper is dependent upon the election of the third person, and it is not entitled to probate without his assent.¹

express terms, for it contains no revoking clause. It did not revoke it by implication, for the contingency upon which it was to take effect never happened. If it did not take effect as a will, it did not take effect at all, and was as powerless to revoke the prior will, as if it had never been made. But if it had contained a revoking clause, it does not follow that it would have repealed the former will. The fair construction in such case would be that the clause was intended only to operate if the paper took effect as a will; but if not, then it was to have no effect. Rudy v. Ulrich, 69 Pa. St. 177; 8 Am. Rep. 238. If at the time the testator executed the paper of the 13th of January, 1873, he did not intend that it should be his will if he died before the 1st of March, then it is clear that it did not revoke the will of the 20th of November, 1871. The codicil shows that he did not intend that it should be his will if he died before that time. It is true that the codicil has no other date than that of the month and year; but, in the absence of all evidence as to the precise time of its execution, the presumption is that it was executed at the same time with the paper of which it was intended to be part. But whether it was executed at that time or on a subsequent day, its effect on the paper is the same. It is an addition or supplement to it, and the whole must be construed together as one instrument. Thus construed, can there be a doubt that the will of the 13th of January, 1873, was intended to be provisional, and that it was not to take effect if the testator died before the 1st of March following? The fallacy of the appellants' argument lies in the assumption that the will of the 20th of November, 1871, was revoked ipso facto by the execution of the will of the 13th of January, 1873. But it was not revoked unless the testator intended to revoke it, and in the face of the declaration in the codicil, no inference that he intended to revoke it can possibly arise. There is no pretense that the codicil was intended as an addition or supplement to the prior will. It was manifestly intended to be a part of the latter will, and the sole purpose of its sixth item was to convert what would otherwise have been an absolute into a conditional will. It changed the character of the instrument and prevented it from operating as a revocation of the former will. What rule or policy of law, then, prevents us from giving to it the effect which the testator intended that it should have? Why should it be so construed as to defeat the end for which it was designed? Whether the testator's gifts of charity stand or fall, it is clear that the will of the 20th of November, 1871, must be regarded as his will. If not, then he left no will; but so to hold would shock all sense of right and justice. From what time, then, does it speak? It was never republished, for it was never revoked; and, therefore, it speaks from its date. And, if so, its bequests of charity are not avoided by the statute of 26th April, 1855, which forbids such gifts within one month of the testator's decease."

1. In Goods v. Smith, L. R., 1 P. & M. 717, the testator wrote a codicil with his own hand, which concluded as follows: "I give my wife the option of adding this codicil to my will or not, as she may think proper or necessary." It was held that the validity of this paper was conditional on the assent of the wife, and that as she elected not to avail herself of its provisions, it ought not to be included in the probate; Lord Penzance said: "The codicil in question contains this clause: 'I give to my wife the option of adding this codicil to my will or not, as she may think proper or necessary.' Now the proposition is clear that the mere fact that a paper is in the form of a will, will not necessarily show that it is testamentary. There must have been in the execution of it an animus testandi; the testator must have intended that the paper shall operate as a will. There have been cases in which persons have signed and executed, with the formalities required

8. Wills Intended to Take Effect in Execution of a Power—(See POWERS, vol. 18, p. 877). A testamentary disposition, intended to operate as the exercise of a power, is not necessarily dependent on the existence of the power, if the testator has a sufficient authority over the subject-matter, independent of the power,¹ or a power not expressly referred to.² If an intention to dispose of the property coexists with sufficient power to do so, which is actually exercised, the source or nature of the dispositive power is immaterial.³

9. Joint and Mutual Wills.—A joint will is, as the name implies, one single instrument made by two or more testators, and, if properly executed by each, and intended to take effect upon the death of each, is as much entitled to probate upon the death of each as if each had made a separate will.⁴ But a joint will made by two persons to take effect after the death of both will not be admitted to probate during the life of either.⁵

by law, papers in all outward respects wills, but which, it has afterward been proved to the satisfaction of the court, were executed in joke or for some collateral object. What the testator has tried to do in this case is, he has endeavored to leave it to his wife to say whether or not this testamentary paper shall be operative. He has declared it to be operative or not, according to a certain event, namely, his wife's determination. The court will be anxious to carry out his wishes, if it be able to do so within the provisions of the law; and the question is, whether the object of the testator is illegal. I think not. It is true that a testator cannot confide to another the right to make a will for him, and it is equally true that he cannot leave to another a power to revoke his will after his death, because the statute says that wills shall be revoked only in the manner prescribed by it, and if a will be destroyed by some person other than the testator, it must be destroyed in the presence of the testator, and by his direction, but there is nothing in the statute to prevent a man from saying that the question whether a paper shall be operative or otherwise shall depend upon an event to happen after his death. Neither common sense nor the words of the statute are opposed to such a proposition. . . . I think the intention of the testator in this case was lawful, and as his wife has exercised her option by refusing to recognize the second codicil as testamentary, I decree probate of the will and first codicil ex vi."

1. Southall v. Jones, 1 S. & T. 298; Sing v. Leslie, 2 H. & M. 68; Waldron v. Chasteney, 2 Blatchf. (U. S.) 62. A will made by a married woman under a power need not refer to it. Heyer v. Burger, 1 Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 1.

2. In re Wilmot, 29 Beav. 644; Bruce v. Bruce, L. R., 11 Eq. 371.

3. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *17. Compare Beauclerk v. James, 34 Ch. Div. 160.

4. Flood on Wills 431; Goods of Stracy, Deane 6; Goods of Miskelly, 4 Ir. R. Eq. 62; Goods of Lovegrove, 2 S. & T. 453; Matter of Diez's Will, 50 N. Y. 88; Dufour v. Pereira, 1 Dick. 419; Ex p. Day, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 476; Evans v. Smith, 28 Ga. 98; 73 Am. Rep. 751; Betts v. Harper, 39 Ohio St. 641; 48 Am. Rep. 477; Hill v. Harding, 92 Ky. 76; Schumaker v. Schmidt, 44 Ala. 454; 4 Am. Rep. 135; Lewis v. Scofield, 26 Conn. 452; 68 Am. Dec. 404; Mosser v. Mosser, 32 Ala. 551; Black v. Richards, 95 Ind. 184; Wyche v. Clapp, 43 Tex. 544. Compare Clayton v. Liverman, 2 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 558; Walker v. Walker, 14 Ohio St. 157; 82 Am. Dec. 474.

Joint Wills by Husband and Wife.—As to the execution of joint wills by husband and wife, see Allen v. Allen, 28 Kan. 18; March v. Huyter, 50 Tex. 243; Rogers, Appellant, 11 Me. 303; Matter of Diez's Will, 50 N. Y. 88.

5. In re Raine, 1 S. & T. 144. See Schumaker v. Schmidt, 44 Ala. 454; 4 Am. Rep. 135; Betts v. Harper, 39 Ohio St. 639; 48 Am. Rep. 477.

In Arkansas, a joint will, to take

A joint and mutual or reciprocal will is an instrument by which each testator bequeaths his property to the other.¹ Where a joint will is expressed to take effect conditionally or upon a contingency, and the contingency does not happen, the joint will is inoperative even to revoke a previous will.² A joint will is revocable at any time by either testator or by the survivor.³

A joint and mutual or reciprocal will is revocable during the joint lives by either testator, so far as relates to his own disposition, upon giving notice to the other, but becomes irrevocable after the death of one of them if the survivor takes advantage of the provisions made by the other.⁴

V. WHAT CONSTITUTES A WILL—1. Distinguishing Characteristics.—The distinguishing features of all genuine testamentary instruments, whatever their form, are, first, that they are written animo testandi, and second, are of their own nature ambulatory or revocable during the testator's life. The requisite that the instrument be written animo testandi does not mean that the testator meant to write his will when he sat down to write it, but that he intended the instrument to be operative, as distinguished from a paper written in jest, or from a mere memorandum of instructions, and to effect by it such a disposition of his property as would be in its legal effect testamentary.⁵ A will differs from other instruments in that it is of itself ambulatory or revocable; for though a effect upon the death of both testators, is invalid. Hershy v. Clark, 35 Ark. 17; 37 Am. Rep. 1.

1. Dufour v. Pereira, 1 Dick. 419; Walpole v. Oxford, 3 Ves. 401; Denysen v. Mostert, L. R., 4 P. C. 236; Dias v. DeLIVERA, L. R., 5 App. Cas. 123; Evans v. Smith, 28 Ga. 98; 73 Am. Dec. 751; Lewis v. Scofield, 26 Conn. 452; 68 Am. Dec. 404; Matter of Diez's Will, 50 N. Y. 88; Cawley's Estate, 136 Pa. St. 628.

Where two sisters, M. and G., executed a duly attested instrument, substantially as follows: "Know all men that we, M. and G., do covenant and agree, that for the love we bear to each other, whichever of us shall be the longest lived, shall be the heir of the other," it was held that this was a good will. Evans v. Smith, 28 Ga. 98; 73 Am. Dec. 751.

Under the Louisiana Code, "unity of confection" is prohibited, but as to how far this applies, see Wood v. Roane, 35 La. Ann. 865.

2. Goods of Hugo, 2 Pro. Div. 73.

3. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 12; citing Hobson v. Blackburn, 1 Add. 274; Goods of Stracy, Deane 6; Goods of Lovegrove, 2 S. & T. 453.

4. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 12;

Dufour v. Pereira, 1 Dick. 419; 3 Ves. 416; Walpole v. Oxford, 3 Ves. 402; Denysen v. Mostert, L. R., 4 P. C. 236; Dias v. DeLIVERA, L. R., 5 App. Cas. 123. And see, in this connection, the American cases of Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 456; Wyche v. Clapp, 43 Tex. 543; Cawley's Estate, 136 Pa. St. 628; Izard v. Middleton, 1 Desaus. Eq. (S. Car.) 116; Breathitt v. Whittaker, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 534; Gould v. Mansfield, 103 Mass. 408; 4 Am. Rep. 573; Schumaker v. Schmidt, 44 Ala. 454; 4 Am. Rep. 135.

Persons may, however, make joint wills which are revocable at any time by either of them, or by the survivor. Hobson v. Blackburn, 1 Add. 274; Goods of Stracy, Deane 6; Goods of Lovegrove, 2 S. & T. 453; Hill v. Harding, 92 Ky. 76.

As to enforcing agreements to make joint wills, see Sherman v. Scott, 27 Hun (N. Y.) 331; Towle v. Wood, 60 N. H. 434; 49 Am. Rep. 326.

5. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 272; Redf. on Wills (4th ed.) 171; Dunn v. Mobile Bank, 2 Ala. 152; Walker v. Jones, 23 Ala. 448; Mosser v. Mosser, 32 Ala. 551; Hester v. Young, 2 Ga. 31; Jackson v. Culpepper, 3 Ga. 569; Symmes v. Arnold, 10 Ga. 506; John- son v. Yancey, 20 Ga. 707; 65 Am. Dec. 646; Hall v. Bragg, 28 Ga. 330; Swett v. Boardman, 1 Mass. 258; 2 Am. Dec. 16; Plater v. Groome, 3 Md. 134; Claggett v. Hawkins, 11 Md. 381; Carey v. Dennis, 13 Md. 1; Boofter v. Rogers, 9 Gill (Md.) 44; 52 Am. Dec. 680; Combs v. Jolly, 3 N. J. Eq. 625; Allison v. Allison, 4 Hawks (N. Car.) 141; Frederick's Appeal, 52 Pa. St. 338; 91 Am. Dec. 159; Singleton v. Bremer, 4 McCord (S. Car.) 12; 17 Am. Rep. 699; Ingram v. Porter, 4 McCord (S. Car.) 198; Lyles v. Lyles, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 531; Babb v. Harrison, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 111; 70 Am. Dec. 203; Ragsdale v. Booker, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 348; Watkins v. Dean, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 321; 31 Am. Dec. 583; Millican v. Millican, 24 Tex. 426; Plumstead's Appeal, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 545; Houser v. Moore, 31 Pa. St. 346; Morsell v. Ogden, 24 Md. 377; Crutcher v. Crutcher, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 377. See also Murry v. Murry, 6 Watts (Pa.) 353; Hocker v. Hocker, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 277; Fort v. Fort, 3 Dev. (N. Car.) 19; Blocher v. Hostetter, 2 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 288.

In Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. Jr. 231, Buller, J., said: "Whether the testator would have called this a deed or will, is one question; whether it shall operate in law as a deed or will, is a distinct question . . . that is to be governed by the provisions in the instrument."

What Constitutes a Will.—In Patterson v. English, 71 Pa. St. 458, the court, by Williams, J., said: "The main question in this case is, should the writing in controversy have been submitted to the jury to determine whether or not it is the will of Collins E. Patterson, deceased. "It consists of six different items written with a lead pencil, under the date of January 12, 1871, on the last four pages of the decedent's memorandum book, entitled 'Merchant's Account Book and Buyer's Guide,' found the next day after he died, in his private drawer, in a desk belonging to the plaintiff, David M. Rickabaugh, with whom he lived. These items are wholly disconnected and separated from each other by spaces of greater or less width, and a line drawn between them, with the name of C. E. Patterson, written with a lead pencil, immediately below the last item. They are all in the decedent's handwriting, but the date is not, nor does it appear by whom it was written. The genuineness of the signature is denied, but the jury have found that it is in the decedent's own proper handwriting. Did the deceased, then, in writing down these detached items, and signing them in the manner he did, intend them to be his will, and to take effect as such after his death? They are not in the form of a will, and he nowhere declares them to be his will. They are not preceded or followed by the usual formalities of a will. There are no words of gift or bequest in either of the items, nor do any such words precede or follow them. What intrinsic evidence is there, then, arising from the face of the paper, or the words themselves, that the decedent wrote and intended them as his will? If a will is an instrument by which a person makes a disposition of his property, to take effect after his decease, what is there in these disconnected memoranda evincive of the decedent's intention to make such a disposition of his property? It is true that no formal words are necessary in order to make a valid will; the form of the instrument is immaterial, if its substance is testamentary. But if the instrument is not testamentary in form or substance, what intrinsic evidence is there that it was intended as a will? A gift or bequest after death is of the very essence of a will, and determines a writing, whatever its form, to be testamentary. Whether a writing is a will or not, does not depend upon the maker's declaring it to be a will at the time he executes it, but upon its contents. But how can an instrument or writing be regarded as a will if the maker does not declare it to be, and the contents do not show that it is, his will? To constitute a valid will of personalty the writing must be either complete on its face, or, if incomplete or defective, it must appear that it was intended by the writer to operate as his will in its unfinished and incomplete state. But how does it appear that the incomplete memoranda in this case were intended to operate as a will? There is nothing on the face of the paper or in the words themselves to indicate such intent, nor is there anything from which it can be inferred that any gift was intended except the words 'to be paid,' in the first, second and fourth items. But when were the amounts specified in these items to be paid? In the lifetime of the writer or after his decease? There is nothing in the language to show when they were to be paid. These items may have been disposition by deed may postpone the possession or enjoyment, or even the vesting, until the death of the grantor or settlor, yet the postponement in such case is produced by express terms, and does not result from the nature of the instrument.¹

intended as instructions for his will or as memoranda of gifts he intended to make in his lifetime. The mere words 'to be paid' do not amount to a testamentary bequest of the sums mentioned, nor show that they were to be paid after his death. But how is it with regard to the items which the plaintiffs allege were intended as bequests to them? They may have been memoranda of the amounts which the decedent had paid, or which he intended to pay, the plaintiffs for the services which they had rendered him while he was sick. There is not one word in either of them which clearly indicates that he intended them as testamentary bequests. There is then no intrinsic evidence that the decedent, in writing down the items in question in his memorandum book, intended them as his will."

Drafts of a will and three deeds, of which only two of the deeds were executed and none delivered, where the deceased had declared that together they should constitute a prospective settlement of his property, cannot be admitted to probate by his will, the proof showing that he stated to the draughtsman of these papers that when he delivered the deeds, he would execute the will, and that he had ample opportunity before his death, to have done so. Clagett v. Hawkins, 11 Md. 381.

Diagram Annexed to Will.—A testator caused his real estate to be surveyed and divided into as many portions as it would admit of, and valued each part proportionately; by his will he devised to several of his children, each a part, charged with the payment to the other children of such owelty as would establish equality among them all; as there was not real estate enough to give each child a part when divided, the sum of $2,184.87, the ascertained value of each purpart, was to be paid by those who took land to each of those for whom there was no land; to his will he added a diagram of the partition he had made of his real estate, and declared in writing that he published that diagram as part of his will. To his daughter A he devised no land, but gave her a pecuniary legacy to the full amount of the value assigned to each purpart. On the diagram was laid out a lot marked A's, which was not included in the lines of any of the purparts devised to the other children. It was held that this was not a devise of the lot in question to A, but that the testator died intestate in respect thereof. Houser v. Moore, 31 Pa. St. 346.

"Scienter."—In some cases it has been laid down that an instrument cannot be admitted to probate as a will unless the testator knew the instrument to be his will, and intended it as such. Swett v. Boardman, 1 Mass. 262; 2 Am. Dec. 16; Combs v. Jolly, 3 N. J. Eq. 625. See Lyles v. Lyles, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 531; Means v. Means, 5 Strobb. (S. Car.) 167; In re Wood's Estate, 36 Cal. 75; Toebe v. Williams, 80 Ky. 661; Waite v. Frisbie, 48 Minn. 420; Tabler v. Tabler, 62 Md. 601. But in the absence of statutes requiring publication, it may be doubted whether this means more than that the testator must be shown to have intended to make such an effective disposition of his property as would be, in its legal effect, testamentary.

1. "Thus, if a man, by deed, limit lands to the use of himself for life, with remainder to the use of A in fee, the effect upon the usufructuary enjoyment is precisely the same as if he should, by his will, make an immediate devise of such lands to A in fee; and yet the case fully illustrates the distinction in question; for, in the former instance, A, immediately on the execution of the deed, becomes entitled to a remainder in fee, though it is not to take effect in possession until the decease of the settlor, while, in the latter, he would take no interest whatever until the decease of the testator should have called the instrument into operation." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th Am. ed.) *17. See further Goods of Robinson, L. R., 1 P. & M. 171; Comer v. Comer, 120 Ill. 425; Meck's Appeal, 97 Pa. St. 313; Miller v. Holt, 68 Mo. 584; Armstrong v. Armstrong, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 357; Nichols v. Chandler, 55 Ga. 369; Thompson v. Johnson, 19 Ala. 59. See further, as to the distinction between wills and other dispositive instruments, Mosser v. Mosser, 32 Ala. 551; Gillham v. Mustin, 42 Ala. 365; Massey v. Huntingdon, 118 Ill. 80; Edwards v. Smith, 35 Miss. 200; Castor v. Jones, 86 Ind. 289; Lines v. Lines, 142 Pa. St. 150; In re Skerrett's Estate, 67 Cal. 585; Seals v. Pierce, 83 Ga. 787; Babb v. Harrison, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 111; 70 Am. Dec. 203; Cover v. Stem, 67 Md. 449; Leathers v. Greenacre, 53 Me. 562; Watkins v. Dean, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 321; 31 Am. Dec. 583; Towle v. Wood, 60 N. H. 434; 49 Am. Rep. 326; Reagan v. Stanley, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 316. As to instruments which merely disinherit, see infra, this title, Interests Undisposed of—Title of Heirs and Next of Kin.

2. Informal Instruments—a. ENGLISH CASES.—Before the English Wills Act of 1837, 1 Vict., ch. 26, which prescribes a particular mode of attestation and execution, the rule adopted by the English ecclesiastical courts, in construing informal instruments disposing of the personal property of the deceased, was that any dispositive instrument designed not to take effect until the maker's decease, though assuming the form of a disposition inter vivos, more especially if incapable of operation in the intended form, was to be regarded as testamentary.¹ Hence, marriage articles,² letters,³ notes payable by executors to avoid the legacy duty,⁴ the assignment of a bond by indorsement,⁵ receipts for stock, indorsed bills,⁶ and checks on a banker, have been admitted to probate.⁷ In some cases, the court refused to apply the principle unless the instrument was in its nature revocable.⁸ But if the instrument was not testamentary either in form or in substance

Will Rendered Irrevocable by Execution of a Trust Deed.—A will may be rendered irrevocable by the execution of a deed of trust for the uses of the will, as to the dispositions then made and fixed, but as to after acquired property, its effect as a will, with the attribute of revocability, is not altered or impaired. Dawson v. Dawson, 1 Cheves Eq. (S. Car.) 148.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *24.

2. Marnell v. Walton, 2 Hagg. 247.

3. Drybutter v. Hodges, 2 Hagg. 247. See Goods of Mundy, 7 Jur. N. S. 52; Passmore v. Passmore, 1 Ph. 218; Anderson v. Pryor, 10 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 620; Grattan v. Appleton, 3 Story (U. S.) 755; Morrell v. Dickey, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 153.

A, being about to sail for the West Indies, where he afterward died, addressed the following letter to B: "A thousand accidents may occur to me, which might deprive my sisters of that protection which it would be my study to afford; and, in that event, I must beg that you will attend to putting them in possession of two-thirds of what I am worth, appropriating the remaining third to Miss C . . . and her child, in any manner that may appear most proper." It was held that the paper should be received and treated as a will. Morrell v. Dickey, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 153.

A letter written in his handwriting by which a person expressed his desires as to the disposition of his property in case of his death was held to have been properly admitted to probate as his will. See Porter v. Turner, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 108. But a letter by which he stated his willingness to assist a certain brother to whom he gave nothing by the former letter, to the extent of his whole property to get him out of his difficulties, was held not to be a testamentary paper. Anderson v. Pryor, 10 Smed. & M. Miss. 620.

4. Maxee v. Shute, 2 Hagg. 247. See Jones v. Nicolay, 2 Robt. 288; 14 Jur. 675; In re Marsden, 1 S. & T. 542.

5. Musgrave v. Down, 2 Hagg. 247.

The payee of a note indorsed it as follows: "If I am not living at the time this note is paid, I order the contents to be paid to A;" which indorsement he signed. He died before the note was paid. It was held that the indorsement was testamentary, and entitled to probate as a will. Hunt v. Hunt, 4 N. H. 434; 17 Am. Dec. 434.

6. Sabine v. Goate, 2 Hagg. 247.

7. Bartholomew v. Henley, 2 Ph. 317.

8. Goods of Robinson, L. R., 1 P. & M. 384; Patch v. Shore, 2 D. & S. 589.

(none of the gifts in it being expressed in testamentary language, or being in terms postponed to the death of the maker), and if no collateral evidence was adduced to show that it was intended as a will, it was excluded from probate.¹ Thus probate was refused of a letter addressed by the deceased to a friend, directing the sale of stock in the public funds, and distribution of the proceeds, on the ground that it referred to an immediate and not a posthumous sale.² Inasmuch, however, as devises of realty under the Statute of Frauds had to be signed by the testator and attested by three credible witnesses, such construction was inadmissible, unless the instrument was signed and attested as required by the act;³ and as by the English Wills Act of 1837, 1 Vict., ch. 26, signature and attestation were made essential to a valid bequest of personalty, a similar restriction was placed upon the application of the above principles in regard to that species of property.⁴

b. AMERICAN CASES.—In those states in which no particular form of execution, attestation, or acknowledgment is required by the local statute, the principle adopted by the English ecclesiastical courts is substantially recognized, so that it may be laid down as a general rule that in such states, any instrument which effects a disposition of property, to take effect after the death of the maker, and which is in its nature revocable, conferring no rights in presenti, but to take effect in futuro, will be entitled to probate;⁵ but that if the local statute prescribes certain formalities of execution, the instrument will not be entitled to probate, unless the requirements of the statute have been complied with, although its dispositions be testamentary in character; or, in other words, the test as to whether or not the dispositions of the instrument are testamentary, is the same in both jurisdictions; but even if testamentary, it cannot be admitted to probate unless the formalities of execution, attestation, and acknowledgment prescribed by the local statute have been complied with.⁶ Thus, the existing requirements of the local statute not being violated thereby, bonds, bills of

1. Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *24; King's Proctor v. Daines, 3 Hagg. 231; Langley v. Thomas, 26 L. J. Ch. 609.

2. Glynn v. Oglander, 2 Hagg. 428. See also Griffin v. Ferard, 1 Pa. St. 97; Nicholls v. Nicholls, 2 Ph. 180.

3. Powell on Devises (3d ed.) 27.

4. Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *31.

5. Reagan v. Stanley, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 316; Watts v. Public Administrator, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 168; 1 Paige (N. Y.) 347; In re Wood's Estate, 36 Cal. 75; Witherspoon v. Witherspoon, 2 McCord (S. Car.) 520; Robeson v. Kea, 4 Dev. (N. Car.) 301; Turner v. Scott, 51 Pa. St. 126; Book v. Book, 104 Pa. St. 240; Frederick's Appeal, 52 Pa. St. 338; 91 Am. Dec. 159; Frew v. Clarke, 80 Pa. St. 170. In none of which states were the requirements of the existing statutes violated by admitting the paper to probate.

6. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 267. See Gibson v. VanSyckle, 47 Mich. 439; Cover v. Stem, 67 Md. 449.

"A paper which is evidently of a testamentary character, which was intended to operate as a will, and which is wholly invalid cannot be turned into a declaration of trust, so as to operate as a will and defeat the statute prescribing how the will of a married woman shall be executed." Paxton, J. in Long's Appeal, 86 Pa. St. 204; McCarty v. Waterman, 84 Ind. 550.

Void as to Realty. Valid as to Personalty.—Where a will disposing of both real and personal estate is invalid for exchange, contracts, diaries, letters and other informal instruments have been held testamentary.¹ The following indorsement, addressed to A's wife on the back of a business letter addressed to A and his wife: "After my death you are to have forty thousand dollars; this you are to have, will or no will—take care of this until my death," was held testamentary.² On the other hand, a mere not complying with the statutory requisites for the testamentary disposition of realty, it may, nevertheless, be good as a will of personalty. Hilliard v. Binford, 10 Ala. 977. In such a case, the provisions as to the real estate will be disregarded, the testator, so far as legal effect is concerned, dying intestate as to the realty. Hilliard v. Binford, 10 Ala. 977. Lake v. Warner, 34 Conn. 483; Guthrie v. Owen, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 202; 36 Am. Dec. 311.

1. Hunt v. Hunt, 4 N. H. 434; 17 Am. Dec. 434; Jackson v. Jackson, 6 Dana (Ky.) 257; Johnson v. Yancey, 20 Ga. 707; 65 Am. Dec. 646; Carey v. Dennis, 13 Md. 1; Reagan v. Stanley, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 316; Matter of Beebe, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 43; Knox's Estate, 131 Pa. St. 220; Brown v. Eaton, 91 N. Car. 26; Fosselman v. Elder, 98 Pa. St. 159; Schad's Appeal, 88 Pa. St. 111; Scott's Estate, 147 Pa. St. 89; Fouché's Estate, 147 Pa. St. 395; Leathers v. Greenacre, 53 Mo. 561; Cowley v. Knapp, 42 N. J. L. 207; Kelleher v. Kernan, 60 Md. 440; Byers v. Hoppe, 61 Md. 206; 48 Am. Rep. 89; Belcher's Will, 66 N. Car. 51; In re Wood's Estate, 36 Cal. 75; In re Skerrett's Estate, 67 Cal. 585; Barney v. Hays, 11 Mont. 571. Compare Shields v. Mifflin, 3 Yates (Pa.) 389.

Informal Instruments Held Testamentary.—In re Skerrett's Estate, 67 Cal. 585, two instruments in the handwriting of the deceased, attached together, and found among his papers, one being in the form of a letter signed by him and addressed to his sister, and the other purporting to be a copy of a deed of gift from the former to the latter, were held, it appearing on the face of the letter that the property described in the deed was intended by the deceased as a provision for the sister after his death, to be testamentary, and admissible to probate. In this case the court, by Myrick, J., said: "The instrument, taken as an entirety, should have been admitted. It was written entirely by the hand of the deceased; it was signed by him, and a date appears at the commencement. Neither the copy of the deed nor the letter, taken by itself, constitute a will; the one is not testamentary in its character; the other has no date; but taking them together as the deceased left them, forming one document, it is complete. The first part furnishes the date, and the latter the testamentary character. We think the following words clearly show an animus testandi, viz.: 'We all know life is uncertain, and we don't know the moment we may be called away. . . . I therefore want you to know you are provided for under any circumstances. . . . My intention is to provide for you while I live, the same as I have always done; and hereafter, if it should please God to call me away, you will have your own property to depend on, sufficient to make you independent while you live.' Doubtless the deceased had it in his mind, when he executed the deed to send it to his sister at some time, thus vesting the title in her in his life time; but for some reason he retained it, perhaps so that he could sell the property if he should desire, but that he intended she should have the property upon his death, if not sold by him, is to us very clear. Such being the case, and the instrument being executed with the formalities required by law, it is entitled to be admitted to probate."

A document framed in its commencement like a power of attorney, but attested by the witnesses, and authorizing two persons mentioned therein to administer on his estate, and dispose of or retain his estate for the benefit of his heirs, is a good will, and the persons designated are authorized to act as executors and dispose of the testator's real estate. Rose v. Quick, 30 Pa. St. 225. See further, upon the subject a note appended to Burlington University v. Barrett, 92 Am. Dec. 383.

2. Byers v. Hoppe, 61 Md. 207; 48 Am. Rep. 89. In this case the court, by Miller, J., said: "In our opinion these concluding sentences: 'And Ann, memorandum of advancements, not executed with the formalities prescribed by the statute, is not entitled to probate;¹ nor is an antenuptial agreement giving the wife power to dispose of certain real and personal property by will, although under seal and duly attested, entitled to probate as a testamentary paper.² Mere brevity and informality of expression will not exclude the instrument from probate, provided it be executed with the formalities prescribed by the local statute. Thus an instrument which merely appoints an executor,³ or leaves the testator's property "for distribution under the laws of the state," has been upheld as testamentary.⁴ In Pennsylvania, subscribing witnesses are not required and various informal papers have been sustained as in effect testamentary.⁵

after my death you are to have forty thousand dollars; this you are to have, will or no will; take care of this until my death,' accompanied with the direction, 'To Eliza Ann Byers,' evince just as effectually, in legal contemplation, that the writer wrote them animus testandi, as if he had said in terms, 'I hereby will and bequeath to Eliza Ann Byers forty thousand dollars, to be paid to her at my death out of my personal estate.' There is nothing to indicate that he intended to make this bequest by a will to be thereafter executed, and that it was not to take effect unless such a will was made. The plain terms are: 'You are to have forty thousand dollars after my death,' not by a will which I intend to make giving you that sum, but, 'you are to have it, will or no will;' and he then directs her to 'take care of this until my death,' that is, to keep this writing as the instrument which makes and evidences the gift. It is also an instrument complete on its face, and being written and signed by the testator it possesses all the requisites of a valid will of personal property. There is nothing incomplete or unfinished about it. It exhibits no incomplete formality which the testator may have supposed was essential to its validity. No blanks are left as to the amount intended to be given, or the party intended to be benefited, nor does it contain a clause appointing an executor with a blank left for the name, or an attestation clause without witnesses, or any similar imperfection. It is not necessary to the validity of a will that it should contain the appointment of an executor, or that it should dispose of all the testator's estate, real or personal, nor does the omission to make such appointment or the failure to dispose of the entire estate, afford any evidence whatever of an absence of the animus testandi, where the instrument is complete on its face, and professes in direct and explicit terms to dispose of only a part of the testator's property."

1. Sims v. Sims, 39 Ga. 117; 99 Am. Dec. 450.

2. Michael v. Baker, 12 Md. 158; 71 Am. Dec. 593.

3. Barber v. Barber, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 72.

4. Lucas v. Parsons, 24 Ga. 640; 71 Am. Dec. 147.

The following instrument, "I wish five thousand dollars to go to John C. Coe in the event of my dying intestate, and the balance of my property to go to Robert Beatie, to be disposed of by him as his judgment may dictate," if properly executed and witnessed, is testamentary in its character, and is a will. In re Wood's Estate, 36 Cal. 75. See In re Barton's Estate, 52 Cal. 538.

5. Clingan v. Mitcheltree, 31 Pa. St. 25; Carson's Appeal, 59 Pa. St. 496; Harvard v. Davis, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 418. See also Hight v. Wilson, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 94; Rohrer v. Stehman, 1 Watts (Pa.) 463.

Thus, a paper, in form a power of attorney, authorizing two persons therein named to administer on the party's estate, and to sell and dispose of, or retain, his property, as they should think proper, for the greatest benefit of his heirs, after his decease, is a good will; and the persons therein named are fully empowered as executors to sell the real estate of the testator. Rose v. Quick, 30 Pa. St. 225. In this case the court, by Porter, J., said: "This paper is a

3. Deeds Distinguished from Wills.—Upon the principle of the preceding section, an instrument in the form of a deed is testamentary if it confers no interest in presenti, is revocable at pleasure, and is not to take effect till the death of the maker;¹ and, if will. It is in writing. It is signed by the testator at the end thereof. It has been proved by the oath of two witnesses. It is to take effect after his death. It starts like a power of attorney, but soon loses that character. It describes the bodily and mental condition of the writer, in the usual phraseology of wills. Its directions are given expressly for the benefit of his heirs after his decease. He confers on the persons whom he nominates, full powers as executors, by imposing the duties which the law would impose if he had simply named them as executors; for to act fully, promptly, and prudently with the property of a dead man for the benefit of his heirs, is the substance of an executor's duty. He directs the administration of his estate, real and personal, and authorizes its sale or retention according to the discretion of the appointed agents. He might have employed more words, and, in this, professional counsel might have assisted him; but no part of his intention is left unexpressed. Of its character as a will, the paper contains intrinsic evidence; and, therefore, the case finds no precedent in the decisions cited in the argument respecting memoranda, indorsements, and letters which required other evidence to help them out."

So on the authority of Frew v. Clarke, 80 Pa. St. 170, an assignment of a life insurance policy "to my wife M. after my death, when she can do with it according to her best will, without partiality towards her children," has been held testamentary. Schad's Appeal, 88 Pa. St. 111.

A testatrix executed a will in 1878, in due form, by which she bequeathed various legacies to a niece, Isabella Fosselman who lived with her. She afterward died suddenly in January, 1880. Among her papers was found a sealed envelope indorsed in her handwriting thus: "Dear Bella, this is for you to open." The contents of the envelope were a promissory note for $2,000 and the following paper, also in the testatrix's handwriting: "Lewistown, Oct. 2, 1879. My wish is for you to draw this 2,000 dollars for your use, should I die sudden, Elizabeth Fossel-man." An amicable issue having been framed between Isabella Fosselman and the testatrix's executor to determine the ownership of the promissory note, it was held that the indorsement on the envelope and the contents thereof constituted together a valid testamentary disposition of the note to the plaintiff in the issue, operating as a codicil to the testatrix's will, and that therefore the plaintiff was entitled to judgment. Fosselman v. Elder, 98 Pa. St. 159.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th Am. ed.) 18; Lawson's Rights, Remedies and Practice, § 3141; Hixon v. Wytham, 1 Ch. Cas. 248; Finch 195; Green v. Proude, 3 Keb. 310; 1 Mod. 117; Henderson v. Farbridge, 1 Russ. 479; Peacock v. Monk, 1 Ves. 127; Cock v. Cooke, L. R., 1 P. & M. 241; In re Coles, L. R., 2 P. & M. 362; Robertson v. Smith, L. R., 2 P. & M. 43; Goods of Marsden, 1 S. & T. 542; Milnes v. Foden, 15 Prob. Div. 105; Doe v. Cross, 8 Q. B. 714; Frew v. Clarke, 80 Pa. St. 170; Rose v. Quick, 30 Pa. St. 225; Frederick's Appeal, 52 Pa. St. 338; 91 Am. Dec. 159; Carey v. Dennis, 13 Md. 1; Jordan v. Jordan, 65 Ala. 301; Gillham v. Mustin, 42 Ala. 365; Daniel v. Hill, 52 Ala. 430; Millican v. Millican, 24 Tex. 426; Johnson v. Yancey, 20 Ga. 707; 65 Am. Dec. 646; Hall v. Bragg, 28 Ga. 330; Sperber v. Balsler, 66 Ga. 317; Miller v. Holt, 68 Mo. 584; Reed v. Hazleton, 37 Kan. 321; Armstrong v. Armstrong, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 357; In re Lautenschlager, 80 Mich. 285; Crocker v. Smith, 94 Ala. 295; Compare Hinkle v. Landis, 131 Pa. St. 573; Meck's Appeal, 97 Pa. St. 313; Turner v. Scott, 51 Pa. St. 126; Ritters' Appeal, 59 Pa. St. 9; Stewart v. Stewart, 5 Conn. 317; Gage v. Gage, 12 N. H. 371; Wagner v. McDonald, 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 346; Henington v. Bradford, Walk. (Miss.) 520; Jones v. Morgan, 13 Ga. 515; Allison v. Allison, 4 Hawks (N. Car.) 141; Evans v. Lauderdale, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 73; Wheeler v. Durant, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 452; Jacks v. Henderson, 1 Desaus. (S. Car.) 543; Jugram v. Porter, 4 McCord (S. Car.) 198; Millidge v. Lamar, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.)

617; Sartor v. Sartor, 39 Miss. 760; Golding v. Golding, 24 Ala. 122; Crain v. Crain, 21 Tex. 790; Hart v. Rust, 46 Tex. 556; Sharp v. Hall, 86 Ala. 110; Hall v. Burkham, 59 Ala. 349; Williams v. Tolbert, 66 Ga. 127; Castor v. Jones, 86 Ind. 289; Massey v. Huntington, 118 Ill. 80; Seals v. Pierce, 83 Ga. 787; Redfield v. Bellette, 14 Ark. 148.

Directing Personal Representatives to Pay, Etc.—In Frew v. Clarke, 80 Pa. St. 170, an instrument in the following form was held testamentary: "Know all men by these presents, that I, James McCully, . . . do order and direct my administrators or executors, in case of my death, to pay to Robert D. Clarke, the sum of $75,000, as a token of my regard for him and to commemorate the long friendship existing between us. Witness my hand and seal this 17th day of April, A. D., 1872. James McCully." [SEAL.]

In this case the court, by Mercer, J., said: "A will is defined to be the legal declaration of a man's intentions, which he wills to be performed after his death. 2 Bl. Com. 500; Bouv. Law Dict.; 1 Jarm. on Wills 11. An instrument in any form, whether a deed, poll, or indenture, if the obvious purpose is not to take place till after the death of the person making it, shall operate as a will. Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. Jr. 204. It may be by an indorsement on a note: Hunt v. Hunt, 4 N. H. 434; 17 Am. Dec. 434; or by letter: Morrell v. Dickey, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 153. Whatever be the form of the instrument, if it vests no present interest, but only directs what is to be done after the death of the maker, it is testamentary. Turner v. Scott, 51 Pa. St. 126. The essence of the definition is, that it is a disposition to take effect after death. Nor does it matter that the person intended to make a note instead of a will. If he used language which the law holds to be testamentary, his intention is to be gathered from the legal import of the words he employed. Redf. on Wills 5; Turner v. Scott, 51 Pa. St. 126. No form of words is necessary to make a valid will. The form of the instrument is immaterial, if its substance is testamentary. Patterson v. English, 71 Pa. St. 458. See also Rose v. Quick, 30 Pa. St. 225; Frederick's Appeal, 52 Pa. St. 338; 91 Am. Dec. 159. This instrument is in writing. It is signed at the end thereof. It contains no admission of indebtedness. It furnishes no evidence of a debt. It contains no promise to pay. It vested no present interest. It was not to take effect until after the death of McCully. In the meantime he could revoke it at his pleasure. It therefore possessed all the essential characteristics of a will, and was undoubtedly testamentary in its character."

An instrument in the following form was made and delivered to the person therein named: "Md., September 4, 1884. At my death, my estate or my executor pay to July Ann Cover three thousand dollars. David Engel, of P. Witness: Columbus Cover." [SEAL.]

In an action of debt on this instrument, as a writing obligatory, after the death of the maker, against his executor, it was held to be a testamentary paper and not an obligation for the payment of money, and that no recovery could be had thereon. Cover v. Stem, 67 Md. 449. The court, by Alvey, C. J., said: "It is contended, on the part of the appellant, that this instrument is a bill obligatory, and imports a legal obligation of the maker, the time of payment only being deferred until after his death, when his administrator or executor was directed to pay the amount. While, on the other hand, it is contended by the appellee that the instrument has all the characteristics of a testamentary paper, and did not, in any proper sense, create a legal obligation upon the maker, such as that of a bond or single bill. What the consideration may have been to induce the maker to pass such an instrument, does not appear. But it is insisted that the seal to the instrument imports a sufficient consideration for the obligation of the maker; and this, as a general proposition, is certainly true as applied to bonds and deeds generally. But still the question here is, whether the instrument declared on be in its nature a bill obligatory, binding and conclusive upon the maker, or whether it be a mere posthumous disposition of three thousand dollars, part of his estate, to be paid by his executor, as any other pecuniary legacy given by the testator. An obligation is defined to be a deed in writing, whereby one man doth bind himself to another to pay a sum of money, or do some other thing. Shep. Touch., tit. 'Obligation' p. 367. The same definition is given in Com. Dig., tit. 'Obligation' (B), and in Bacon's Abr., tit. 'Obligation' (B). It is true, no precise form of words is necessary to create a bond or obligation. Therefore, any memorandum in writing under seal, whereby a debt is acknowledged to be owing, will obligate the party to pay; for it is said that any words which prove a man to be a debtor, if they be under seal, will charge him with the payment of the money. Core's Case, Dyer 226; Shep. Touch. 368, 369, 370, and Bac. Abr., 'Obligation' (B), and the examples there given of what form of words will be sufficient to create a valid obligation. It is, however, laid down in Bac. Abr., 'Obligation' (B), as essentially necessary to create a valid obligation, that words be employed to declare the intention of the party, and which must clearly denote his being bound; 'because such obligation is only in the nature of a contract, or a security for the performance of a contract, which ought to be construed according to the intention of the parties.' In other words, there must be terms employed to create a debitum in presenti though the solvendum may be in futuro, and even after the death of the obligor. It would seem to be clear that the relation of debtor and creditor must be created and subsist in the lifetime of the parties to the instrument, though the time of payment may be deferred until after the death of one of the parties. Shep. Touch. 368, 369; Hannon v. State, 9 Gill (Md.) 446; Carey v. Dennis, 13 Md. 1; Sto. Pro. Notes, § 27. Here, in the instrument before us, there are no words that create a debitum in presenti; there are no words that create the relation of debtor and creditor in the lifetime of the parties to the instrument; but the words employed simply import a posthumous disposition of a part of the estate of the maker of the instrument, and nothing more. . . . By the terms of the instrument in question, the three thousand dollars are simply directed to be paid out of his estate by his executor. No language could be more expressive of a testamentary purpose." Compare Shields v. Irwin, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 389.

Mutual Agreement.—Two sisters, Jincey and Patsey, executed an instrument, which was in substance as follows: "Know all men, that we, Jincey and Patsey, do 'covenant and agree' that, for the love we bear to each other, whichever of us may be the longest lived shall be the heir of the other." It was held that the instrument was a will. Evans v. Smith, 28 Ga. 98; 73

Am. Dec. 751. The court, in this case, by Benning, J., said: "The consideration of each sister is her love for the other—not this agreement of the other. The making of the instrument by the one sister, is not the consideration for the making of it by the other. No; the making of it by the one, is an act entirely independent of the making of it by the other. The case is, in substance, precisely the same as it would have been if each sister had executed a separate paper, and had said in that paper just what makes her part in the joint paper. The mere words, I say, authorize this conclusion. Suppose, then, that each sister had executed a separate instrument, and in it had expressed the same ideas which she expressed in the joint instrument, would these instruments not be wills? What would there be to prevent them from being wills—assuming, of course, that they were properly attested, and were otherwise regular as to form? Nothing, as far as we can see. They would be instruments merely in consideration of love; therefore, they would be revocable at pleasure; they would be instruments not to take effect until the death of their respective makers; therefore they would not be deeds, for deeds take effect at their execution. Then, they would be wills, or they would be nothing."

Illustration of Conveyance Held Testamentary.—In the trial of an action of ejectment, the defendants in support of their title offered in evidence as a deed, an instrument of writing in the following language:

"State of Mississippi,) Franklin county.)

"This deed of conveyance, made and entered into by and between John W. Reynolds, of the first part, and Sarah A. Reynolds, of the second part, both of the above county and state, witnesseth: That for and in consideration of the love and affection I have for my wife, Sarah A. Reynolds, and also in consideration of the sum of four hundred dollars to me in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, I have this day granted, bargained, and sold, and by these presents do grant, bargain, sell, and convey unto the said Sarah A. Reynolds, her heirs and assigns, all of my right, title, and interest in and to the following described tract of land, to wit [the land described being the same as that sued for], situated in the above county and state, and all my personal property that I now own or may own at the time of my death, to my said wife, Sarah A. Reynolds, her heirs and assigns, to have and to hold forever; upon the following conditions, however, and none other, that I reserve the right to alter, change, or entirely abolish this deed if I so desire during my life, and that I retain all of the said property during my life, and have the control of the same, and that this deed do not take effect until after my death, and that after my death my wife, Sarah A. Reynolds, pay all of my debts, and the remainder over paying my debts to be hers and her assigns' forever.

"Given under my hand and seal this, the 3d day of February, 1879.

[SEAL.] "JOHN W. REYNOLDS."

This instrument was, on the day of its date, acknowledged as a deed. The plaintiff objected to its admission in evidence "on the ground that it was a paper testamentary in character and not a deed, and that it was bad as a will because not attested or probated." The court sustained the objection and excluded the alleged deed. Held not to be error. Cunningham v. Davis, 62 Miss. 366, the court, by Campbell, C. J., saying: "In form the instrument is a deed. It was so called by the maker. It was acknowledged as such by him before a justice of the peace. Its character must be determined from its several provisions. If by it any present interest was vested it should be held to be a deed. If it was not to have any operation or effect until the death of the maker it could not be treated as a deed, although it was so named, and is in form a deed. The provision in these words, 'And that this deed do not take effect until after my death,' coupled with the direction that the object of the bounty of the maker of the instrument should pay all his debts and have only the remainder of his property, convinces us that the paper was testamentary in its character."

Illustration of Instrument Held Not Testamentary.—In Williams v. Tolbert, 66 Ga. 127, a paper in the following form was held not to be testamentary: "This indenture, made this, the 14th day of February, 1879, between Elijah Williams, of the one part, and Elizabeth Cheatham, of the other, witnesseth, that the said Elijah, for and in consideration of the natural love and affection which he bears to his daughter, Elizabeth, has given, granted and conveyed (on the terms and limitations hereinafter expressed), and does by these presents give, grant and convey unto the said Elizabeth for life with remainder to her children, all that tract of land situate, etc. . . . A plat of the same is hereto annexed for a fuller description of the same, and it is hereby expressly stipulated and agreed between the parties to this deed of gift, that the said Elijah reserves to himself a life estate in the tract of land herein and hereby conveyed, to have, use, occupy, and enjoy the same during his natural life, and to take and enjoy the rents, issues and profits of the same during his life only." The said paper then closed with the words of a fee-simple deed, the usual warranty of title and the attestation of an ordinary deed, except that there were two witnesses besides the justice of the peace. In this case the court, by Crawford, J., said: "The line of separation between what constitutes a deed and a will is sometimes so shadowy as to make it extremely doubtful whether it is the one or the other. The law of this state prescribes a rule by which the courts are to be governed, but even that is neither infallible nor satisfactory. It declares that in all cases, to determine the character of an instrument, whether it is testamentary or not, the test is the intention of the maker, from the whole instrument, read in the light of surrounding circumstances. If the intention be to convey a present estate, though the possession be postponed until after his death, the instrument is a deed; if an interest accruing and having an effect after his death, it is a will. . . . Does this paper convey a present interest to Elizabeth Cheatham? It declares itself an indenture, made and entered into between the parties; it gives, grants and conveys; the grantee is to have and to hold forever in fee simple; the title is warranted; it purports to be signed, sealed, and delivered. What is there, then, to take it out of the ordinary signification and legal effect of these words? That clause by which he reserves the use and occupation, and the right to take the rents during his life? If this were eliminated, of course there would be no question about it. But is this reservation at all inconsistent with the conveyance of a present estate so far as title is concerned, though the posses-executed, acknowledged, and attested with the formalities prescribed by the local wills act, is operative.¹ An instrument in the form of a deed, purporting to convey an undivided interest in what the grantor dies seised of, may be a will.² So instruments in the form of deeds inter partes, purporting to convey property to trustees, but providing that the trusts should not take effect till after the death of the donor, have been held testamentary.³ But the mere fact that an instrument cannot take effect as a deed does not show that it is testamentary,⁴ although if the requirements of the local wills act have been complied with, that fact is to be taken into consideration in determining the intent of the maker.⁵

sion be postponed until after the death of the grantor? We think not. Besides, in the reservation itself is to be found the words: 'It is hereby expressly stipulated and agreed between the parties to this deed of gift that the said Elijah is to have in the tract of land herein and hereby conveyed,' etc. The above is not the language of a will, nor that where the conveyance is intended to operate as one. Indeed, the whole terms of the instrument indicate the intention to pass the title to the property at once to the donee, and not to retain it in the donor. He retains the right to use it and take the rents only, but nowhere indicates any reservation of title. And this is the principle ruled in Daniel v. Veal, 32 Ga. 589, and reaffirmed upon a paper containing almost the identical words, in Bass v. Bass, 52 Ga. 531. Nor is it at all affected by the ruling in Nichols v. Chandler, 55 Ga. 369, but is in perfect harmony therewith."

Where an instrument purporting to convey property to trustees absolutely, contains all the characteristics of a deed, it will not be construed a writing testamentary, simply because one of the trusts embraced in it is for the use of the property by the grantor during her life. Cumming v. Cumming, 3 Ga. 460. See also Boling v. Boling, 22 Ala. 826; Jackson v. Culpepper, 3 Ga. 569; Lightfoot v. Colgen, 5 Munf. (Va.) 42.

1. Cunningham v. Davis, 62 Miss. 366; Boling v. Boling, 22 Ala. 826; Cover v. Stem, 67 Md. 449; Moye v. Kittrell, 29 Ga. 677.

An instrument reciting services rendered the maker by another in terms granting the latter certain premises reserving to the maker their use, occupation, and control during his life, the possession of the conveyance to be retained by him for the same time and then delivered to the grantee, is invalid as a deed, but if executed with the formalities requisite to a will may operate as a testamentary disposition of the estate. Kelly v. Richardson (Ala. 1893), 13 So. Rep. 785.

2. Watkins v. Dean, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 321; 31 Am. Dec. 583; Stevenson v. Huddleson, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 299; Brewer v. Baxter, 41 Ga. 212; 5 Am. Rep. 530; Gage v. Gage, 12 N. H. 371.

3. Goods of Morgan, L. R., 1 P. & M. 214. See also In re Knight, 2 Hagg. 554; Shingler v. Pemberton, 4 Hagg. 356.

4. In re Skerrett's Estate, 67 Cal. 585; Lightfoot v. Colgin, 5 Munf. (Va.) 42; Edwards v. Smith, 35 Miss. 197; Dawson v. Dawson, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 34.

Thus, an instrument purporting to be a deed or gift, but inoperative for want of delivery, cannot, in the absence of proper evidence that a testamentary disposition was intended, be admitted to probate as a will. In re Skerrett's Estate, 67 Cal. 585.

5. This doctrine is maintained in Crain v. Crain, 21 Tex. 790, and Thompson v. Johnson, 19 Ala. 59.

Where a father made deeds to his son of the principal part of his estate, to the exclusion of other children, who, in their petition to avoid the same, charged that they were not bona fide conveyances, but inofficious wills, intended to take effect after the death of the father, these deeds being declared void as in fraud of the law securing to children a portion of the parent's estate, and not for actual fraud in procuring them, are good for the one-fourth, of which the father had the right to dispose in addition to the distributive share to which such son was entitled. Crain v. Crain, 21 Tex. 790.

4. Whether an Instrument May Operate Partly as a Deed and Partly as a Will.—One part of an instrument may operate in presenti as a deed, and another in futuro as a will, as where one going on a journey, by an instrument in the form of a power of attorney, appointed his mother to receive the rent of his lands for her own use until his return, and, in the event of his death, “thereby assigned and delivered to her the sole claim to his lands.”¹

5. Wills Distinguished from Gifts Mortis Causa.—A will differs from a gift mortis causa in that the latter, instead of purporting to be an intended disposition of property to take effect after death, purports to be an immediate transfer and must be accompanied by delivery;² hence a document intended to take effect as a will, which is void for want of attestation, cannot be sustained as a Alteration of Deed by Subsequent Will.

—A deed, valid and operative, may not be subsequently explained or altered by a will. Where a testator had previously by deed conveyed property in trust for his daughter and her issue, in such manner as to divest himself of all power and control over the property carried by it, his subsequent will, though duly executed, could not operate upon the property then no longer his. Purcell v. Purcell, Riley Eq. (S. Car.) 282.

The will of B, executed May 16, 1838, was admitted to probate on the 18th September of the same year. The executors of this will, afterward, on the 20th November following, offered for probate a deed duly executed and recorded, dated 18th September, 1832, by which their testator conveyed to them, his two sons, “one-half of all the personal estate of which he might die possessed.” In June, 1839, after process of citation to all parties interested, the orphans’ court admitted this deed to record, as a testamentary paper. On the 20th May, 1845, B, and his then wife, one of the heirs and devisees of the testator, filed in the said orphans’ court a petition, praying, that the probate of the said deed might be revoked and recalled. Upon appeal from the order of the said court dismissing this petition, it was held that this deed was not a testamentary paper, and that the order of the orphans’ court, ordering it to be received as such was null and void. Robey v. Hannon, 6 Gill (Md.) 463.

A father, resident in Texas, made conveyance of most of his estate to a child; but the gift was not completed by delivery. It was held that the deed could operate as a will, and that it would transfer the title to so much of the estate as the father could dispose of by will (i. e. one-fourth), and that the grantee would be entitled to an equal portion of the residue of his father’s estate with the other children. Crain v. Crain, 21 Tex. 790.

1. Doe v. Cross, 8 Q. B. 714. See Taylor v. Kelly, 31 Ala. 59; 68 Am. Dec. 150; Reed v. Hazleton, 37 Kan. 321; Robinson v. Schly, 6 Ga. 515; Dudley v. Mallery, 4 Ga. 52; Dawson v. Dawson, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 34; Burlington University v. Barrett, 22 Iowa 61; 92 Am. Dec. 376. But compare Thompson v. Johnson, 19 Ala. 59.

Where a party executed a will, which he afterward incorporated into a deed conveying his property to the parties named in the will, to be enjoyed by the grantees according to the tenor of the will, and subsequently executed codicils, it was held, that the will was incorporated with the deed only as to property then existing, of which it was a valid disposition, in presenti, but still remained a will as to all other property which it could affect, and was subject to modification by codicils which might dispose of the income of the property so conveyed since. The disposition by deed was to take effect in possession only at the testator’s decease. Dawson v. Dawson, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 34.

Instrument Partially Testamentary.—

A paper may be testamentary in design as to part of the property and so admissible to probate; but incomplete in design as to another part, and so far inoperative. Devecmon v. Devecmon, 43 Md. 335.

2. See GIFTS, vol. 8, p. 1347.

gift mortis causa,¹ nor can a void gift mortis causa be sustained as a valid will of personalty.²

6. Memorandum of Instructions.—A duly executed instrument described as instructions for a will, may have effect as a will, if it appears that it was intended to take effect in the absence of a more formal instrument;³ otherwise, however, if it be merely a preliminary draft or minute not designed to take effect as a will,⁴

1. In re Hughes, W. N. (1888) 163.

2. Girts, vol. 8, p. 1350. See Basket v. Hassell, 108 U. S. 267.

3. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 11; citing Bone v. Spear, 1, Philkin 345; Towe v. Castle, 1 Curt. 303, 2 Moo. P. C. 133; Barwick v. Mullings, 2 Hagg. 225; Hattatt v. Hattatt, 4 Hagg. 211; Arndt v. Arndt, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 263. As to unsigned testamentary instruments in the absence of statutory regulation, see McLean v. McLean, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 452; Public Administrator v. Watts, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 347, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 168.

4. Coventry v. Williams, 3 Cush. 787; Aurand v. Witt, 9 Pa. St. 54; Wall v. Wall, 123 Pa. St. 545; Lungren v. Swartzwelder, 44 Md. 482; see Sharp v. Sharp, 2 Leigh (Va.) 249; Hocker v. Hocker, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 277.

But in Booster v. Rogers, 9 Gill (Md.) 44; 52 Am. Dec. 680, it was held that a paper, though not a last will and testament at the time it is written, may be made such afterwards by adoption; that a paper, though intended merely as an instrument of instructions or a memorandum, to enable the scrivener to prepare the will, will be admitted to probate, if the more formal will be left unfinished by reason of any act which the law pronounces to be the act of God. There must, however, be a continuance of the intention of the deceased, down to the time when the act of God intervened and prevented the execution of the formal instrument. An immediate or sudden death is not required, if according to the proof, the jury are satisfied that there was no change of intention in regard to the provisions of the will.

In Lungren v. Swartzwelder, 44 Md. 482, it appeared that a paper was found in a safe at the decedent's store, in a pocketbook, with some notes and certificates of bank and other stocks. The heading of the paper was, "Hagerstown, August 11th, 1875, what I own is as follows." Beneath followed a list of his houses and stock, and memoranda of sums to be paid to various persons, out of the sales of certain of his houses, the whole concluding as follows: "I appoint for my administrators H. W., of Cumberland, Maryland, and F. A. H., of Hagerstown, Maryland" (Signed) "P. S." The paper was proved to have been written and signed by the deceased, and there was nothing to show that it was not signed on the day of its date. He died on the 14th of December, 1875, aged about seventy-two years. As regards his mental and bodily condition, there was no proof tending to show that he was prevented by sudden sickness, or anything which the law would pronounce an act of God, from perfecting it, or executing a formal will, for more than three months after the date of the paper. It was held that the paper in itself contained no indication that the writer intended it should be, and wrote it for his last will and testament, and in the absence of evidence of some acts or declarations clearly showing that he intended the paper, as it stood, to be his will, or subsequently recognized or adopted it as such, it could not be admitted to probate. The court, by Miller, J., said: "It appears from the proof that the paper before us was written and signed by the deceased, and there is nothing to show it was signed on a different day from its date. He died about the 14th of December, 1875, aged about seventy-two years, and had never been married. He had been engaged in the hardware business, was an intelligent, prosperous, and good business man, and left real estate consisting of a dwelling house and warehouses in Hagerstown, valued at about thirty thousand dollars, besides personal property. After the date of this paper and during the autumn, his health was feeble, but he was still able to go to his store and attend to his business. His mental faculties remained unimpaired, and he was capable of executing a valid deed until at least a few days before his death. As respects his mental even though duly executed;¹ or be wanting in the formalities of execution and attestation prescribed by the local statute.²

and bodily condition, there is no proof tending to show he was prevented by sudden sickness, or anything which the law would pronounce an act of God, from perfecting it, or executing a formal will capable of passing his real as well as personal estate, for more than three months after the date of this paper. It cannot, therefore, be upheld as a will upon that ground. It was found in his safe at his store, in a pocket-book with some notes and certificates of bank and other stocks. But this fact of itself does not make it a will. The place of deposit and the care with which it was kept, are merely circumstances to be considered and weighed with all the other facts of the case, in solving the question whether the party intended it as his will or not. In the absence of proof to the contrary we must assume the paper was written and signed on the day it bears date. The questions then for us to determine are, did he write it animo testandi, that is, did he then intend the paper as it stood, to be his will without alteration and without looking to anything further to be done in order to perfect it? or did he afterwards recognize and adopt it as his will? To give a satisfactory answer to these questions we must first look to the paper itself and the intrinsic evidence it furnishes. What is it and what does it profess to be? It nowhere on its face professes to be the will of the writer. The major part of it is simply a statement of what he owned, in form and in fact an inventory, or a schedule of his property. That is followed by three clauses indicating who should receive portions of it (and as to one of these he had not made up his mind as to the amount, and as to another, was undecided whether he would give him anything) by a will to be thereafter executed. He would give to one two thousand dollars, out of the proceeds of the sale of his house. To his brother's widow he would give one or perhaps two thousand dollars, after, that is, out of the sale of property on the square. It then says his houses are to be sold and the proceeds 'paid over to the respective parties named in my will,' that is, the parties named in the will which I may or intend to execute, and then is added

'perhaps J. W., if he quits drinking liquor,' that is, I may give J. W. a portion if he reforms his habits. There is no residuary clause, and nothing is said respecting any disposition of the stocks and bonds scheduled in the former part of the paper, and no disposition indicated, except by a will to be thereafter made, of the great bulk of the proceeds of his real estate. It seems to us impossible for anyone to read this paper and say the writer of it intended it should be, and wrote it for his last will and testament. So far as it refers to any intended testamentary disposition of his property it indicates a mind in as hesitating and undecided a state as could well be imagined. It does not rise to the dignity of memoranda or instructions to a scrivener for the preparation of a will. He knew, or if he did not, he was informed by his attorney after the date of this paper, that three witnesses were essential to a valid will of real estate, and was furnished with the form of such an instrument, and yet so far as this paper contains any possible intimation of testamentary wishes, it refers to that species of property alone, and is not attested by a single witness. Unless, therefore, we can find evidence of some acts or declarations clearly showing that he intended this paper as it stood to be his will, or subsequently recognized or adopted it as such, it cannot be admitted to probate."

1. Ferguson-Davie v. Ferguson-Davie, 15 Prob. Div. 109. In this case a testatrix having duly executed a will, subsequently executed a paper drawn up by her husband with her full concurrence, which was headed "This is not meant as a legal will, but as guide." It was held that the paper was not a valid testamentary document, and that probate must be refused. See Hocker v. Hocker, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 277. Compare Toebbe v. Williams, 80 Ky. 661.

Variance of Subsequent Will from Memorandum.—It has been held that in so far as the will varies from the instructions, it is inoperative if executed upon the assurance that it complied with them. Waite v. Frisbie, 45 Minn. 361.

2. 1 Redf. on Wills (4th ed.), p. 225; Vernam v. Spencer, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.)

16; Ruoff's Appeal, 26 Pa. St. 219; Wall v. Wall, 123 Pa. St. 545.

In Vernam v. Spencer, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 16, the testator, in the presence of two witnesses attending at his request, signed the instrument at the foot, and died in the attempt to sign again in the margin. It was held, that the provision of the statute requiring the attestation of the subscribing witnesses had not been complied with, and that the instrument was not valid as a last will and testament, not being complete at the testator's decease. The testator being still occupied in authenticating the instrument at the moment of the attack, there was no testamentary declaration or rogation of the witnesses. Bradford, Sur., said: "Had the witnesses subscribed in the testator's lifetime and in his presence, and without objection, there would have been enough in all the circumstances to justify sentence of probate, notwithstanding the absence of a formal testamentary declaration and request to the witnesses to attest. Not that I consider the statute to require the witnesses to sign in the testator's actual presence or view, but the fact that the testator has seen them sign and acquiesces therein, often aids the proof of testamentary declaration and request, and gives weight and substance to informal and casual declarations. But in the present case, although the testator had subscribed the will at the seal, he was still engaged in signing his name in the margin, when his power of consciousness ceased. Though he had written all the law required him to write, he had not written all he proposed to write, and he expired before he accomplished his purpose. There was no finality even in his action; and much less had he arrived at that stage when the document was to be turned over to the witnesses for attestation. He had requested two persons to attend, in order to be witnesses, but he had not yet requested them to witness and attest the will, for he had not yet reached that point—he was still occupied in authenticating the instrument, and before it had left his hands he was seized with death. That event arrested the transaction in an imperfect and unfinished condition. I do not think, therefore, that under the circumstances the testator declared the instrument he was signing to be his last will and testament, or that he had requested the persons present to subscribe that instrument as witnesses. The help given to informal statements by the signature of the witnesses in the testator's presence and with his approbation, is wanting.

"But if the facts showed a complete act on the part of the testator, so far as related to his own subscription, the testamentary declaration and the request to the proposed witnesses to attest, and then an interruption of the affair by death, could the witnesses subscribe after his decease, so as to give the will validity? The statute requires the will to be subscribed by at least two attesting witnesses—can that act be performed after the death of the principal? At the moment of death the law disposes of his estate, either by descent or in conformity to his last will, if there be one. To interrupt the descent there must be a valid will. The will speaks at the instant of death. If without vitality then, what can ever give it vitality? If the will now under consideration took effect on the testator's decease, then his property passed by an unattested instrument, and the Statute of Wills is set at naught. It did not take effect then, but on the subscription of the witnesses, six weeks afterwards, took effect, as of the time of the death by way of relation, it follows that the act of the witnesses operated to divest the heirs of property descended, and to vest it in devisees, under an instrument not perfected in the lifetime of the ancestor. If the witnesses can perform that act an hour, or six weeks after the decedent has expired, they can do so a year after. Can the devolution of his estate depend upon them or their volition? If not, then they may be compelled to sign, although if the decedent were living they could refuse.

"To the due execution of a will, several ceremonial parts are necessary, and one just as necessary as another. There is no will until they are all completed. The absence of any one ceremony destroys the unity. These ceremonies are acts. The mere intention to have them all performed is not sufficient, but the intention must be effectuated in fact. If accident intervene to prevent their performance, the intention cannot be taken in lieu of performance, or instead of the act. Nor is it enough to say the decedent has done all he could do, or all that he was called upon to do in his own person, and therefore the will is valid. Such a doctrine would make a will good,

7. Extraneous Papers—Incorporation by Reference.—If a will executed and witnessed as required by the local statute, incorporates into itself by reference, any document or paper not so executed and witnessed, whether the paper referred to be in the form of a will or codicil, or of a deed or indenture, or of a mere list or memorandum, the paper so referred to, if it was in existence at the time of the execution of the will, and is identified by clear and satisfactory proof, as the paper referred to therein, takes effect as part of the will and should be admitted to probate as such.¹ But when the parties requested to subscribe as witnesses refused—which they might do from justifiable and conscientious motives. In the execution of the last will and testament nothing rests entirely in intention—and the act of the witnesses is just as essential as the act of the testator.

“Nor do the parties requested to attend as witnesses contract to become witnesses. Till they sign, whether they shall become attesting witnesses or not, rests in their and the testator's absolute discretion. They may at the last instant perceive some reason for not authenticating the document. Till they sign, whether he shall complete the will, or whether they shall become attesting witnesses or not, is in the testator's absolute discretion. At the last moment his intention to perfect the will is still ambulatory; and even after a formal request to them to sign he may change his mind as to making a will at all, or may perceive some reason for preferring other witnesses. The request to the witnesses to attest is itself revocable till acted on. Death revokes it. At the time the witnesses sign, they must sign under a present existing request. The request is their authority, and they must act under a present subsisting authority. They derive all their right and power to subscribe from the testator's present volition and consent. When he ceases to exist, their power is withdrawn. Every derivative power depending on the will of the author dies with him, unless extended in express terms beyond his death.

“But I do not think the testator had in the present case done all the law required him to do. To make a valid will, it was just as necessary for him to procure before his death the attestation and subscription of two witnesses, as it was for him to have the will drawn and subscribed. The testator is the prime mover, to devise his property he needs to see completed certain forms during his lifetime; and if by the intervention of Providence he does not live to see them all accomplished, the act is not completed. If Mr. Spencer had lived, the will now before me, in the state in which it was offered for probate, could not have been taken as a good will. The instant before his death it was not a valid will. The moment he died it was not a valid will—and then how could that which was not valid and perfect during life, and at death, become valid six weeks after he expired? Again, though the attestation in the testator's exact view is not necessary, still the attestation is in a certain sense part of the testator's act, and a ceremonial part of the will. The whole will is his act. The witnesses are mere aids or instruments in performing it. The attestation is part of the execution; it is dependent on the testator's request, though not on his presence, and when the witnesses sign they do so for the testator, and as his agents.”

Failure to Comply with Statutory Requirements.—If the record shows that the requirements of the statute were not observed, the decree of probate is an absolute nullity. Wall v. Wall, 123 Pa. St. 545.

1. Gray, C. J., in Newton v. Seamans' Friend Soc., 130 Mass. 91; 39 Am. Rep. 433; Wms. Exrs. 97; Haberg-ham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. Jr. 204; Singleton v. Tomlinson, L. R., 3 App. Cas. 404; Bizzey v. Flight, 3 Ch. Div. 269; Goods of Sibthorp, L. R., 1 P. & M. 106; Van Straubenzee v. Monck, 3 S. & T. 6, 32 L. J. Prob. 21; Goods of Sunderland, L. R., 1 P. & M. 198; Goods of Pascall, L. R., 1 P. & M. 606; Lucas v. Brooks, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 436; In re Shillaber's Estate, 74 Cal. 144; In re Soher's Estate, 78 Cal. 477; Hall v. Hill, 6 La. Ann. 745; Hone v. Van Schaick, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 488; Bullock v. Bullock, 2 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 307; Milledge v. Lamar, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 617; Fesler v. Simpson, 58 Ind. 83; Fickle

v. Snepp, 97 Ind. 289; 49 Am. Rep. 449; Beall v. Cunningham, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 390; 39 Am. Dec. 469; Harvy v. Chonteau, 14 Mo. 587; 55 Am. Dec. 120; Tonnele v. Hall, 4 N. Y. 140; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369; Chambers v. McDaniel, 6 Ired. (N. Car.) 226; Zimmerman v. Zimmerman, 23 Pa. St. 375; Baker's Appeal, 107 Pa. St. 381; 52 Am. Rep. 478; Johnson v. Clarkson, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 305; Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 439. But compare Myer's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 205; Crosby v. Mason, 32 Conn. 482; Phelps v. Robbins, 40 Conn. 250.

In conformity with this doctrine, a will void for want of proper attestation has been validated by a subsequent codicil properly attested, which refers to the will and states that it is to be taken as a part thereof. In re Murfield's Will, 74 Iowa, 479.

But in Sharp v. Wallace, 83 Ky. 584, it was held that an unattested codicil, although wholly in the handwriting of the testatrix, could not bring into operation as a will a paper which was neither in the handwriting of the testatrix nor attested as required by the statute. The court, by Lewis, J., said: "The question presented to us for consideration is, whether the instrument purporting to be a codicil, which was wholly written and subscribed by her, and, therefore, itself executed in one of the modes prescribed by the general statutes, has the effect to set up and give validity to the paper dated January, 1867. Clearly the reference made in the codicil to the preceding instrument is definite and certain enough to identify it. It must be also admitted that she intended the two as her will, and believed they would be valid as such; and if the codicil had been subscribed or acknowledged by her in the presence of two credible witnesses, who subscribed their names thereto in her presence, it would, according to the construction heretofore given to the Statute of Wills by this court, have had the effect to give validity to the preceding unfinished instrument as her will; for that question was thoroughly considered in the case of Beall v. Cunningham, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 390; 39 Am. Dec. 469, may be now regarded settled. In that case the following language was used:

"A codicil is a part of the will to which it is attached or refers, and both must be taken and construed together as one instrument. The codicil recognizes the existence of the original, changing it in part and affirming it in those parts in which it is not altered; and hence it has been well established that a codicil executed with the solemnities required by the statute for passing lands is a republication of a will, and both taken together make but one will, and that such republication will have the effect to pass lands acquired after the date of the will, but before the date of the codicil, or to revive and give force and operation to a revoked will."

"It was contended by counsel in that case, that though a codicil duly executed might operate as a republication of a revoked will which had been duly executed, it could not have the effect to bring into operation as a will a paper which had never been signed or executed as such. But said the court: 'We can see no difference in principle in the cases. . . . If the codicil can so ingraft itself upon and draw within its operative influence a revoked will as to amount to a republication, we cannot perceive why it may not ingraft itself upon and draw within its operative influence any instrument which the testator may treat as his will, so as to amount to a republication of the whole as his will.' In Davis v. Taul, 6 Dana (Ky.) 51, it was held that 'when a codicil operates as a republication of the will, the whole is to be construed together as if the will had been then written and executed.' And in Armstrong v. Armstrong, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 269, the court said: 'A codicil is in legal effect a republication of a will, and the whole is to be construed together as if the will had been executed at the date of the codicil.' It will be perceived that in case of the republication of a revoked will in virtue of a codicil, the two are to be construed together, as if the will had been executed at the date of the codicil, and where the preceding instrument has never been completed, it and the codicil, which has the effect to give it validity that it never before had, must be taken together and make but one will, not merely for the purpose of construction but as to their execution; and it seems to us such must be the logical and necessary result of imparting to the codicil the legal effect of making valid as a will an instrument having no efficacy without. But section 5, chapter 113, general statutes, provides that 'no will shall be valid unless it is in writing with the name of the testator subscribed thereto by himself, or by some other person in his presence, or by his direction, and, moreover, if not wholly written by the testator, the subscription shall be made or the will acknowledged by him in the presence of at least two credible witnesses, who shall subscribe the will with their names in the presence of the witnesses.'

"The object of the statute providing the manner in which a will shall be executed to render it valid, is to insure identity and prevent imposition and fraud. And though a substantial compliance with it is all that is required, no court is authorized to admit to probate an instrument as the last will of a deceased person in violation of its express language, however well founded may be the belief it was intended by him as his will. Taking the codicil and preceding unfinished instrument together as but one will, as it seems to us we are bound to do, it was not executed in either of the modes required by the statute, not having been wholly written by the testatrix, nor subscribed or acknowledged by her in the presence of attesting witnesses. It is true a document may, for the purpose of identification of an object or person mentioned in a will, or to elucidate and explain the intention of a testator, be referred to and made part thereof; but we are unable to perceive how any instrument, testamentary in its character, but not fully and properly executed as a will, can be made efficacious as such under our statute by mere reference in a codicil not itself subscribed or acknowledged before attesting witnesses."

In Jarm. on Wills (5th Am. ed.), p. 90, it is written in reference to the incorporation of a document in the probate of a will by reference that "three things are necessary: first, that the will should refer to some document as then in existence; secondly, proof that the document propounded for probate, was, in fact, written before the will was made; and thirdly, proof of the identity of such document with that referred to in the will."

Description of Instrument Referred to.—It has been held that a clause which "ratifies and confirms a deed, dated, etc., and made between, etc.," is sufficient to incorporate the instrument referred to. Sheldon v. Sheldon, 1 Rob. 81, 3 No. Cas. 254, 8 Jur. 877; Bizzey v. Flight, L. R., 3 Ch. Div. 269. But see Goods of Hubbard, L. R., 1 P. & M. 53.

The expression in the donor's will viz.: "I give and bequeath to my son P, in addition to what I had given him by deed of gift," certain notes, etc., is not a sufficiently definite reference to the deed, which was invalid, for want of delivery, to incorporate it into the will and thereby pass the land. Bailey v. Bailey, 7 Jones (N. Car.) 44.

Instrument Referred to Should Be Then in Existence.—A reference to a document as "made or to be made" affords ground for the presumption that the document had not already been made. In re Skair, 5 No. Cas. 57; In re Astell, 5 No. Cas. 489 n. See also In re Hake-will, 1 Deane 14; 2 Jur. N. S. 168; and In re Countess of Pembroke, 1 S. & T. 250; 1 Deane 182; 2 Jur. N. S. 526, is perhaps referable to this ground.

A reference to persons or things "hereinafter named" is not so clear a reference to any document as then existing as to incorporate writings that follow the signature of the testator and of the witnesses, although it be proved that in fact such writings were in existence before the will was executed. Goods of Watkins, L. R., 1 P. & M. 19; Goods of Brewis, 33 L. J. Prob. 124; In re Dallow, L. R., 1 P. & M. 189.

Likewise, a reference to "the annexed schedule" is not sufficiently specific to incorporate, without more matter subsequent to the signing and attestation. Lord Cairns in Singleton v. Tomlinson, L. R., 3 App. Cas. 414. Here the schedule was not written, but endorsed, being on the fourth side of a sheet of paper on which the will was written. See also In re Ash, 1 Deane 14; 2 Jur. N. S. 526.

By the execution of a valid codicil, a document may be incorporated which was made between the time of the execution of the will, and that of the codicil, as a codicil may republish the will, and make it speak as at the date of the codicil. In re Hunt, 2 Rob. 622; Goods of Truro, L. R., 1 P. & M. 201. But if a will refers to a paper as afterward to be executed, a later codicil making no reference back cannot suffice to incorporate such paper. Goods of Matthias, 3 S. & T. 100.

Evidence to Establish Identity of Document Referred to.—Where the description of the document referred to is not perfectly distinct, yet if it is in terms sufficiently definite to render it capable of identification, extrinsic evidence is admissible, together with such internal evidence as may be found in the document itself, to supply the

if the paper was not in existence when the will was executed, but is to be hereafter prepared and executed, no reference in the existing will can give it any valid testamentary effect, independently of its own proper execution in conformity with the local statute. Hence the testator cannot reserve a power to dispose of property at a future time, by what is tantamount to a will informally executed.¹ Where a will refers to a memorandum which cannot be found upon the testator's decease, the will may take effect without it, either on the presumption that the paper was intentionally destroyed with a view to revoking it, or because an apparent testamentary disposition is not to be disappointed because other dispositions have failed.²

necessary proof. Thus in Allen v. Maddock, 11 Moore, P. C. C. 427, an unexecuted will was held to have been incorporated in a duly executed codicil by the heading: "This is a codicil to my last will and testament" no other document having been found to answer to the reference. See also In re Countess of Durham, 3 Curt. 57, 1 No. Cas. 365, 6 Jur. 176; In re Pewtner, 4 No. Cas. 479; In re Darby, 4 No. Cas. 427, 10 Jur. 164; Jorden v. Jorden, 2 No. Cas. 388; In re Dickens, 3 Curt. 60, 1 No. Cas. 398; Goods of Almonino, 1 S. & T. 508, 29 L. J. P. 46; In re Willesford, 3 Curt. 77, 1 No. Cas. 404; In re Bacon, 3 No. Cas. 644; Goods of Mercer, L. R., 2 P. & M. 91; Goods of Greves, 1 S. & T. 250, 28 L. J. P. 18 (where the evidence of identity failed). But see In re Edwards, 6 No. Cas. 306; Collier v. Langebear, 1 No. Cas. 369; In re Sotheron, 2 Curt. 831, 1 No. Cas. 73, would not now be followed.

Where a document headed "instructions for the will of J. Wood," disposed of the residue "in such manner as I shall direct by my will to be indorsed hereon," and the testator afterward made a will, which, though not indorsed on the "instructions" was expressed to be made in "pursuance of the instructions for his will," no other instructions being found, it was held that the "instructions" in question were incorporated in the will. Wood v. Goodlake, 4 Monthly Law Mag. 155, 1 No. Cas. 144. Compare Goods of Pascall, L. R., 1 P. & M. 606; Goods of Gill, L. R., 2 P. & M. 6.

Presumption of Identity.—Where the reference in the will to the document sought to be incorporated into the probate is specific as to date, heading, and other particulars, and if the document propounded agrees in these particulars with the description contained in the will, its previous existence and identity will, in the absence of circumstances or evidence tending to a contrary conclusion, be assumed. Swete v. Pidsley, 6 No. Cas. 190.

In Ford v. Ford, 70 Wis. 19, schedules referred to in the will and attached thereto, were construed with it as one instrument.

So notes made by a testator, payable at his death, when folded up with the will, referred to, and clearly identified therein, and remaining in his possession at his death, have been held to form a part of the will. Fickle v. Snapp, 97 Ind. 289; 49 Am. Rep. 449.

Reference to a Void Instrument.—There is no doubt that a valid bequest or devise may be made by reference to an invalid instrument. Thus, where a testator in his will stated that he had given his son one thousand dollars by note, for his full share of his estate, and ordered his executor to pay the legacy above mentioned within one year after his death, it was held that this was a valid legacy for one thousand dollars, though the note was not valid. Loring v. Sumner, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 98.

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 281, citing Johnson v. Ball, 5 De G. & L. 85; Crocker v. Hertford, 4 Moo. P. C. 339; Thayer v. Wellington, 9 Allen (Mass.) 213; 85 Am. Dec. 753; Langdon v. Astor, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 477; 16 N. Y. 9. See Grabill v. Barr, 5 Pa. St. 441; 47 Am. Dec. 418; Magoohan's Appeal, 117 Pa. St. 238.

In some states the courts are very reluctant to admit as wills any extraneous unattested paper, whose purport is to dispose, and not merely to explain, describe, or arrange the details under the formal instrument. Phelps v. Robbins, 40 Conn. 250; Thompson v. Quimby, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 449.

2. Wood v. Sawyer, Phill. (N. Car.)

8. Wills Written on Several Sheets of Paper.—A will may be written on several sheets of paper; it is sufficient, if the different parts are connected by their internal sense, coherence, or adaptation.¹

9. Evidence of Testamentary Intention.—Evidence is admissible to show that a deed or other instrument of gift which on the face of it is not testamentary, was not intended to operate until the death of the person executing it;² to show that an instrument, 251; Dickinson v. Stidolph, 11 C. B., N. S. 341; Thompson v. Quimby, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 449.

A testator by a testamentary paper, purporting to be a codicil to his last will and testament, bequeathed his balance at his banker's to his wife. No will could be found, although a will was proved to have been in existence, and in the testator's possession previous to the date of the codicil. The court was of opinion, looking at the provisions of the codicil, that the testator intended it to be independent of the will, and therefore admitted it to probate until such time as the will should be found. Goods of Greig, L. R., 1 P. & M. 72.

1. Wikoff's Appeal, 15 Pa. St. 281; 53 Am. Dec. 597; Matter of Dayger, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 127. See Marsh v. Marsh, 1 S. & T. 528; Jones v. Habersham, 63 Ga. 146; Ginder v. Farnum, 10 Pa. St. 98. See also Van Wert v. Benedict, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 114; Porter v. Turner, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 108.

Where there was no suspicion of unfairness, a writing on a separate sheet of paper, not signed by the testator, but connected by the sense and the dependence of one part upon the other with a second sheet, the last page of which was properly signed and attested, and which, when offered for probate, was recognized by the witnesses, was held by the court to be a part of the will. Martin v. Hamlin, 4 Strobb. (S. Car.) 188; 53 Am. Dec. 673.

The presumption is that papers bound or fastened together, coherent in sense, and constituting the will as formed after the testator's death, were so bound or fastened, and constituted the will when it was attested. Marsh v. Marsh, 1 S. & T. 528.

The will of the deceased had been engrossed by a law stationer on fifteen brief sheets of paper, consecutively numbered. On the sixteenth sheet the testator had written a codicil, and on the eighteenth and last, a schedule of property referred to in the will. On the death of the testator, it was found that the original fourth sheet had been removed and placed loose in his desk, and that the original seventeenth sheet had been used by the testator in substitution of the fourth. The several sheets were tied together with tape. It was held, that the legal presumption that papers bound together and constituting the will, as found at testator's death, were so bound together at the time of execution and attestation was not rebutted by the circumstances of the case. Rees v. Rees, L. R., 3 P. & M. 84.

2. Theobald on Wills 11; citing Cooke v. Cock, L. R., 1 P. & M. 241; Robertson v. Smith, L. R., 20 P. & M. 43; In re Coles, L. R., 2 P. & M. 362; Goods of Webb, 3 S. & T. 482; Goods of English, 3 S. & T. 586; Robertson v. Dunn, 2 Murph. (N. Car.) 133; 5 Am. Dec. 525.

An instrument which was in form a deed contained the following clause: "For the love and affection which I have for my wife, I give unto her all my property, real and personal, during her widowhood; and if she marries, it is all to go back to my niece Sally;" and there was nothing else in the instrument which showed unequivocally whether the maker intended it to take effect before or after his death. It was held that it was doubtful, from the expression "I give . . . during widowhood," whether the maker intended to give an interest in presenti, or only after his decease, but that upon consideration that he gave all of his estate, it was highly improbable that he intended the gift to take effect before his death, and it was therefore a will. Sartor v. Sartor, 39 Miss. 760.

Where it was doubtful whether the instrument offered in evidence was a deed or a will, it was held that the facts of its execution and delivery and the declarations of the maker at the time, together with the instrument, should be permitted to go to the jury. Herrington v. Bradford, Walk. Miss. 520.

on the face of it testamentary, was not written animo testandi; ¹ but not to show that the operation of a will, absolute in its terms, depends upon a condition.²

VI. FORMAL REQUISITES—1. Signature—a. ENGLISH RULE.—In England, wills of personalty made before January 1, 1838, when the Statute of 1 Vict., ch. 26, came into operation, were valid without the signature of the testator, and, whether the will was in the handwriting of the testator or of some other person duly authorized by him, the rule was the same.³ Although the presumption in such cases was against testamentary papers not actually executed by the testator,⁴ yet such presumption was feeble, and easily repelled by satisfactory evidence that the non-execution might be ascribed to some other cause than an abandonment of

1. Nicholls v. Nicholls, 20 Ph. 180; Goods of Norworthy, 11 Jur. N. S. 570; Lister v. Smith, 3 S. & T. 282; Whyte v. Pollok, L. R., 7 App. Cas. 400.

Testamentary Intent.—"The momentous consequences of permitting parol evidence thus to outweigh the sanction of a solemn act are obvious. It has a tendency to place all wills at the mercy of a parol story that the testator did not mean what he said. On the other hand, if the fact is plainly and conclusively made out, that the paper which appears to be the record of a testamentary act, was in reality the offspring of a jest, or the result of a contrivance to effect some collateral object, and never seriously intended as a disposition of property, it is not reasonable that the court should turn it into an effective instrument. And such no doubt is the law. There must be the animus testandi. In Nicholls v. Nicholls, 2 Ph. 180, the court refused probate to a will regularly executed, which was proved to have been intended only as a specimen of the brevity of expression of which a will was capable. And in Trevelyan v. Trevelyan, 1 Ph. 149, the court admitted evidence and entertained the question whether the document was seriously intended or not. In both cases the court held that evidence was admissible of the animus testandi. And to the same effect is the authority of Swinb., pt. 1, § 3. and of Shep. Touch. 404. The analogies of the common law point the same way. A deed delivered as an escrow, though regularly executed, is not binding. And in Pym v. Campbell, 6 El. & Bl. 370, the Queen's Bench held that a regular agreement signed by the party might be avoided by parol evidence that at the time of its signature it was understood that it should not operate unless a certain event happened. There can therefore be no doubt of the result in point of law if the fact is once established. But here I must remark that the court ought not, I think, to permit the fact to be taken as established, unless the evidence is very cogent and conclusive. It is a misfortune attending the determination of fact by a jury, that their verdict recognizes and expresses no degree of clearness in proof. They are sworn to find one way or the other, and they do so sometimes on proof amounting almost to demonstration, at others on a mere balance of testimony; sometimes upon written admissions and independent facts proved by disinterested parties, sometimes on conflicting oaths or a nice preponderance of credibility. And it is difficult to impress them with the enormous weight which attaches to the document itself as evidence of the animus with which it was made. This weight it becomes the court to appreciate, and to guard with jealousy the sanction of a solemn act." Lister v. Smith, 3 S. & T. 288.

2. Sewell v. Slingsluff, 57 Md. 537.

3. 1 Wms. on Exrs. (9th ed.) 94; Salmon v. Hays, 4 Hagg. 382. See Forbes v. Gorbon, 3 Ph. 628; Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 240; Gaskins v. Gaskins, 3 Ired. (N. Car.) 158; Public Administrator v. Watts, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 347; 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 168; McLean v. McLean, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 452.

4. Scott v. Rhodes, 1 Ph. 12; Abbott v. Peters, 4 Hagg. 380; Montefiore v. Montefiore, 2 Add. 358; Bragge v. Dyer, 3 Hagg. 380; McLean v. McLean, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 452.

the intention therein expressed;¹ as by showing that the execution was prevented by act of God,² or that the deceased intended it to operate in its present state and without doing any further act in order to give it testamentary effect.³ The principle only applied, however, to unexecuted, as distinguished from imperfect papers, and hence was inapplicable if the body of the instrument was unfinished and incomplete, unless it was clearly proved by the party setting up the instrument that the deceased had come to a final resolution respecting it as far as it went.⁴

On the other hand, devises of realty were required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing signed by the testator or some other person in his presence and by his express direction.⁵ As the statute did not require the signature to be subscribed, it was held that a will in the testator's own handwriting commencing, "I, John Stiles, do declare this to be my last will," etc., was sufficiently "signed" within the statute, although not subscribed with his name.⁶ The Statute 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 9, which applies to all wills made, re-executed or republished after January 1, 1838, provides that no will of either real or personal estate shall be valid unless in writing and "signed at the foot thereof by the testator or by some other person in his presence and by his direction."⁷

b. AMERICAN RULE.—In nearly all of the states of the Union, statutes exist providing that all wills, whether of real or personal estate, must be in writing and signed by the testator,⁸ or by

1. Montefiore v. Montefiore, 2 Add. 357; Gaskins v. Gaskins, 3 Ired. (N. Car.) 158; Public Administrator v. Watts, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 347; McLean v. McLean, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 452.

2. Masterman v. Maberly, 2 Hagg. 235; Scott v. Rhodes, 1 Ph. 12; Gaskins v. Gaskins, 3 Ired. (N. Car.) 158; Plater v. Groome, 3 Md. 134.

Supervening insanity has been held sufficient to account for non-execution. Hoby v. Hoby, 1 Hagg. 146; Fulleck v. Allinson, 3 Hagg. 527.

3. Roose v. Mouldsdale, 1 Add. 131.

For instances in which testamentary effect has been given to finished papers remaining unexecuted, see Barburton v. Burrows, 1 Add. 383; Masterman v. Maberly, 2 Hagg. 235; Goods of Lamb, 4 Notes of Cas. 561; Scott v. Rhodes, 1 Ph. 12; Read v. Phillips, 21 Ph. 122; Thomas v. Wall, 3 Ph. 23; Friswell v. Moore, 3 Ph. 135.

4. Wms. on Exrs. (8th Eng. ed.), pt. I, bk. II, ch. II, § I; Montefiore v. Montefiore, 2 Add. 358. See also Robeson v. Kea, 4 Dev. (N. Car.) 301; Plater v. Groome, 3 Md. 134. Compare Frierson v. Beall, 7 Ga. 438; 29 Car. II., ch. 3, § 19.

5. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 300; 29 Car. II., ch. 3, § 19.

6. 1 Wms. on Exrs. (9th ed.) 107; Cook v. Parsons, Pre. Ch. 184; Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 249.

7. 1 Wms. on Exrs. (9th ed.) 107.

8. See the statutes of the various states.

In Ex p. Leonard, 39 S. Car. 518, it was held that where the person directed to sign the will for the testatrix subscribed her name to it before coming into her presence and the presence of the witnesses, but, when in her presence and that of the witnesses, wrote beneath her name his name, preceded by the word "by" and followed by the words "by request," he sufficiently signed for the testatrix in her presence and that of the witnesses.

In New York, a will is signed by the testatrix if her name is written by one of the attesting witnesses at the testatrix's request, who accompanies the request with a mention of her name in full. In re Stevens' Will (Surrogate Ct.), 3 N. Y. Supp. 131; 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 262.

A paper drawn at the instance of the deceased as his will, but never signed or some other person by the testator's express direction and in his presence; in Pennsylvania this last may not be done, unless the testator is prevented from signing himself by the extremity of his last sickness. In Indiana, it is sufficient if the will be signed by another with the testator's consent, in his presence; and in Arkansas sufficient, if done at the testator's request, whether in his presence or not; so also in New Mexico, if he is unable to sign himself or does not know how.

c. CONSTRUCTION OF ENGLISH AND AMERICAN STATUTES.—

In states in which the place of signature is not designated by statute, the rule established is substantially that adopted under the English Statute of Frauds, upon which such acts are based, and the place of signature is of secondary consequence, provided that wherever the testator may have chosen to place his name, he meant it to stand for his final signature, and thereby authenticate the entire instrument as propounded.¹ In states in which the seen by him, admitted to probate on the affidavit of two witnesses, stating that he ordered the preparation of the paper but died before he could execute it, does not comply with the Act of Pennsylvania 1833, making provision that a will must be signed by the testator, or by some person in his presence at his express direction, unless prevented by the extremity of his last illness; and such a paper is void though the probate decree remains unappealed from for more than five years. Wall v. Wall, 123 Pa. St. 545.

Where a will is written on three pages, and signed at the bottom of the second page, and a disposition of the estate is made on the third page, the will is not properly executed, and should not be admitted to probate. Frazier's Estate, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 306.

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 312. See Hall v. Hall, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 373; Armstrong v. Armstrong, 29 Ala. 538; Ramsey v. Ramsey, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 664; 70 Am. Dec. 438; Upchurch v. Upchurch, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 102; Kirkpatrick's Will, 22 N. J. Eq. 463; Matter of Booth's Will, 127 N. Y. 109; Allen v. Everett, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 371; Mile's Will, 4 Dana (Ky.) 1.

In Adams v. Field, 21 Vt. 256, the will commenced in these words: "I, Samuel Adams," etc., and was wholly in the handwriting of the testator, but written at different times, and contained the usual testimonium clause, but was not subscribed by the testator at the foot. It appeared that the testator produced the instrument in the presence of three witnesses, and declared it to be his will, and requested them to witness it, and that they did attest it in the presence of the testator and of each other. It was held, that the testator thereby adopted the instrument, as it was then signed, as his will, and that the will thereby became complete, the same as if the testator had originally written his name at the commencement, with the intent that it should serve as a signature to the will, and that it was a sufficient signing of the will, within the meaning of the statute of that state.

In some cases it has been held that this intent must appear on the face of the will. See Rosser v. Franklin, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 1; 52 Am. Dec. 97; Waller v. Waller, 1 Gratt. (Va.) 454; 42 Am. Dec. 564; Denton v. Franklin, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 28; Jolly's Will, 5 N. J. Eq. 456; Graham v. Graham, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 219; Ray v. Hill, 3 Strobb. (S. Car.) 297; 49 Am. Dec. 647.

Under the Virginia Code (1887), § 2514, which provides that "no will shall be valid unless it be in writing and signed by the testator or by some other person in his presence, and by his direction, in such manner as to make it manifest that the name is intended to be as a signature," it was held that a will wholly in the testator's handwriting, beginning: "I, A. W., of the county of H., declare this to be my last will and testament," but nowhere else containing the testator's name, and inclosed in a sealed envelope on which was written, in the testator's handwriting, "My Will local statute requires the testator's signature to be at the end of the will or subscribed thereto, it has been held that the signature must be sufficiently near the end of the written matter to prevent interpolations in the intervening space,¹ and that if any testamentary provision is placed after the signature, the whole instrument is to be excluded from probate.²

—A. W.,” was not signed by the testator. Warwick v. Warwick, 86 Va. 596. The court said: “The signing required by the statute must manifestly appear to be intended as a signature from the face of the instrument, which must appear, by internal evidence, equally convincing as the signing at the foot or end. . . . The finality of the testamentary intent must be ascertained from the face of the paper, and extrinsic evidence is not admissible either to prove or disprove it. The signing of a will, to be a sufficient signing under the statute, must be such as, upon the face of the instrument, appears to have been intended to give it authenticity. It must appear that the name was regarded as a signature, and that the instrument was complete without further signature; and the paper itself must show this, for the statute requires that the will shall be so signed—that is, signed in a manner to make it manifest that the name was intended as a signature. It is an equivocal act, as is well settled, to insert the name at the top or beginning, and extrinsic evidence is not employed to effect, either pro or con, the question of finality of intention, when this internal evidence, to be afforded by the face of the paper, is wanting.”

In Alabama, it has been held under a statute similar to the Statute of Frauds, that the testator's name at the beginning of a will dictated by himself, is to be regarded as a sufficient signing by another at his request. Armstrong v. Armstrong, 29 Ala. 538.

1. Soward v. Soward, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 126. Such also appears to have been the English rule prior to the passage of 15 & 16 Vict., ch. 24; Willis v. Lowe, 5 No. Cas. 432; Smee v. Bryer, 6 Moo. P. C. 404.

Under the statute law of Missouri, a will written by an attorney at the request of a friend, out of the presence of the testator, and not subscribed, is not “signed” within the meaning of the statute although the name of the testator appears in the exordium or body of the will, and is invalid, although expressly assented to by him and duly attested in his presence. The statute is imperative, and the “signing” therein referred to must be construed to mean the affixing of the testator's name at the bottom of the will, either in his own handwriting or that of some one else by his direction. Catlett v. Catlett, 55 Mo. 330.

In Baker v. Baker (Ohio, 1894), 37 N. E. Rep. 125, it was held that where a testator, in what purports to be his last will and testament, appoints his sister-in-law executrix thereof, and before he signs the instrument writes thereon, after the attestation clause, the words “my sister-in-law is not required to give bond when probated,” and thereafter, in the presence of the subscribing witnesses, signs the instrument above those words, it will be a signing by the testator at the end thereof as required by the Ohio Revised Statutes.

2. Matter of Hewitt's Will, 91 N. Y. 261; Matter of O'Neill's Will, 91 N. Y. 516; Matter of Conway's Will, 124 N. Y. 455; Hays v. Harden, 6 Pa. St. 409; Wikoff's Appeal, 15 Pa. St. 291; 53 Am. Dec. 597; Baker's Appeal, 107 Pa. St. 381; 52 Am. Rep. 478. See Fouché's Estate, 147 Pa. St. 395.

In Hays v. Harden, 6 Pa. St. 413, Gibson, C. J., said: “Signing at the end of a will was required by the statute to prevent the evasion of its provisions that followed the English Statute of Frauds, which the judges held to be satisfied wherever the testator's name, in his own handwriting, was found in the introductory or any other part of the instrument. Besides, as all the devises in a will constitute one instrument, signing at the end of it serves to show that the whole disposition of the testator's estate was finished and not in embryo, which the want of a formal act of authentication had before left room to doubt. The argument, that all which precedes the signature, having once been formally executed, should remain stable, and that the additional matter alone should be rejected, is plausible

In England and Pennsylvania, it has been held that a will signed at the end of the obviously inherent sense, though not at the end in point of space, is "signed at the end thereof" within the meaning of the act, and hence portions below the signature, connected by asterisks or reference with portions preceding it, do not invalidate the instrument;¹ in New York, it has been held but unsound. It is evident that the testator considered the whole to be one will; and we have no reason to believe he would have wished any part of it to stand if the whole did not. We must bear in mind that every executed will is revocable in the testator's lifetime; and when devises are subjoined to it, it is evident that the original paper does not contain the testator's whole counsel. A codicil, being distinct and supplemental, stands on different ground; for where it is itself executed according to the statute, it casts no doubt or uncertainty on the state of the testator's mind as to what preceded it. It is better, therefore, that an informal addition should operate as a statutory revocation of the whole than that a plain injunction should be frittered away by exceptions. The statute is a most wholesome one; and while we refrain from carrying its provisions beyond the views of the framers of it, we must not err on the other side."

Under the statute of Pennsylvania of 1833, providing that "every will shall be in writing, and, unless the person making the same shall be prevented by the extremity of his last sickness, shall be signed by him at the end thereof," a will signed and containing, after the signature, and before the attestation, the words, "I will that C. and H. be my executors," is void. Wineland's Appeal, 118 Pa. St. 37.

Testator after his signature wrote the following clause: "For the satisfaction of all concerned, and others: For many years I made my home and residence with my brother, residing on my farm, township as above; while laboring under the infirmities of life, his treatment towards me was of such a nature as to compel me to leave the house and find an asylum in the house of my nephew, Abraham Hays, as above; in consideration of his hospitality towards me, I will and bequeath to him the above described farm." This was subscribed by witnesses, but was not signed by the testator. It was held testamentary and sufficient to exclude the whole instrument from probate. Hays v. Harden, 6 Pa. St. 409.

On the other hand, the words, "This will was commenced in the year of our Lord, 1843, and added to as occasion required," written below the signature and attestation, have been held immaterial. Wikoff's Appeal, 15 Pa. St. 291; 53 Am. Dec. 597. The court, by Gibson, C. J., said: "The matter in it bore neither on the contents of the will nor on its interpretation. It was not testamentary; and it was no more a part of the will than was the label on the back of it. 'This will,' subjoined the testatrix, 'was commenced in the year of our Lord, 1843, and added to as occasion required.' Very different the additional matter in Hays v. Harden, 6 Pa. St. 409, which consisted, not only of reasons for a precedent devise which might have influenced the construction of it, but an additional substantive devise, which showed that the preceding part had not disclosed the testator's whole counsel."

Position of Date.—The will is not invalidated by the fact that the signature precedes the date. Flood v. Pragoff, 79 Ky. 607.

1. Goods of Birt, 24 L. T. R. 142; Baker's Appeal, 107 Pa. St. 381; 52 Am. Rep. 478.

In Baker's Appeal, 107 Pa. St. 381; 52 Am. Rep. 478, a will was written on the first and third pages of a sheet of paper, and signed at the end of the third page. In a devise to A., written on the third page, numbered "4th," certain words describing the property devised were erased, and the words "See next page" were there interlined. On the fourth page of the same sheet of paper was written an unsigned clause, numbered "4th" making a bequest to A., and also additional bequests to other beneficiaries. The scrivener who drew the will testified that the erasure and interlineation were made by him at testator's direction, and he identified the writing on the fourth page as the subject of the said reference in the will, and as having been written by him at the testator's direction prior to the signing by the testator. It was held that the writing on the fourth page was to be read into the will as constituting the fourth clause thereof, and that the entire instrument, with said clause incorporated therein, should be admitted to probate as the testator's will. In this case the court, by Clark, J., said: "The sixth section of the Act of 8th April, 1833, P. L. 249, provides that 'every will shall be in writing, and, unless the person making the same shall be prevented by the extremity of his last sickness, shall be signed by him, at the end thereof,' etc. The construction, which had been previously given to the act of 1705, made this provision necessary; the plain purpose of the legislature, in requiring the signature of the testator to be written at the end of the will, was to assimilate wills, in the mode of their execution, to other instruments for the transmission of title, to furnish a more certain and satisfactory means of authentication, and thus to distinguish what might be mere incomplete memoranda, from that which certainly declared the full and final purposes of the testator respecting his property. That this was, at least, the primary and principal object of the statute of 1833 is abundantly shown, not only in the report of the commissioners but in numerous decisions of this court since its passage. Strickler v. Groves, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 386; Hays v. Harden, 6 Pa. St. 409. It is the animus testandi, therefore, which is manifested by the testator's signature to a will, and unless signing be prevented by an absolute inability, the fact of a completed testamentary disposition cannot otherwise appear.

"The will of George Baker is commenced upon the first, and is formally concluded upon the third page of a folio of foolscap paper. The fourth page of the paper, however, contains another, and further testamentary provision, and, as the signature to the will is at the end of what is written on the third page, it is urged on the one side that it is not signed, according to the statutory requirement, at the end thereof; on the other side, it is contended that what is written on the fourth page is, by clear reference, incorporated into the body of the will, and that although the signature is not at the end of the writing, in point of space, yet if the item on the fourth page be drawn into its appropriate and clearly intended connection, on the third, the signature will then appear at the end of the will in point of fact.

"It will not, we think, be seriously questioned, notwithstanding the provisions of the Act of 1833, that any relevant paper or writing, attached or detached, if there be no reasonable question as to its identity, or of its existence at the execution of a will, may be so referred to therein, as thereby to become incorporate with the provisions. No case in Pennsylvania has been cited by counsel, with the exception perhaps of Hauberger v. Root, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 437, in which this rule is expressly asserted; nor, in the somewhat hasty search we have made, do we find any in which the precise point is presented, but in England, and in the courts of some of the states, under similar statutes, the doctrine is distinctly declared.

"In Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. Jr. 223, which was a case decided under the Statute of Frauds, Wilson, J., sitting with Lord Chancellor Laughborough, says: 'I believe it is true, and I have found no case to the contrary, that if a testator in his will refer expressly to any paper already written, and has so described it that there can be no doubt of the identity, and the will is executed in the presence of three witnesses, that paper, whether executed or not, makes part of the will; and such reference is the same as if he had incorporated it, because words of relation have a stronger operation than any other.' This case was followed in Re Countess of Durham, 3 Curt. 366, and in many other cases, both in the civil and ecclesiastical courts of England, and it cannot be doubted that such was the rule in the authentication and probate of wills, under the Statute of Frauds. By the Statutes of 7 Will. IV., and 1 Vict., ch. 26, however, all previous provisions, as to execution and attestation of wills, were repealed, and it was thereby enacted that no will should be valid, unless in writing and executed as therein provided, and one of the requisites was that it should be signed at the foot or end thereof by the testator, or by some other person in his presence and by his direction. In Willis v. Lowe, 5 No. Cases 428, and in Smee v. Bryer, 6 Moo. P. C. C. 404, however, it was held that the signature must be so affixed at the end of the will, as to leave no blank that the principles deduced from the English decisions are inapplicable, and that the signature must be at the physical end.¹ In space for any interpolation between the end of the will and the signature. This was found to produce such extensive injustice, that by the Statute 15 and 16 Vict., ch. 24, the legislature interfered to alter the law so established; but in this amendatory statute it is expressly provided that no signature shall be operative, to give effect to any disposition or direction which is underneath or which follows it, nor to any disposition or direction inserted after the signature shall be made. Upon these provisions of the statute law of England, the case of Allen v. Maddock, 11 Moo. P. C. C. 426, was decided; in that case, after an extended reference to all the English authorities, and a full discussion of the subject, it was held that an unattested paper, which would have been incorporated in an attested will or codicil, executed according to the Statute of Frauds, is now in the same manner incorporated, if the will or codicil is executed according to the requirements of the Wills Act, 1 Vict., ch. 26. That where there is a reference in a duly executed testamentary instrument to another testamentary instrument, imperfectly executed, but by such terms as to make it capable of identification, it is necessarily a subject for the admission of parol evidence as to its identity, and such parol evidence is not excluded by the 1 Vict., ch. 26. The judgment in Allen v. Maddock, 11 Moo. P. C. C. 427, was delivered by Lord Kingsdown, who says: 'It was not contended in this case, nor, so far as we are aware, has it been contended in any case, since the Wills Act of 1837 (1 Vict.), that no reference, however distinct, is now sufficient to incorporate another testamentary paper in the paper duly executed as a will or codicil; but the question has always been, what reference in the valid paper is sufficient to let in evidence to identify the invalid?' The doctrine declared in Allen v. Maddock, 11 Moo. P. C. C. 427, has not, we believe, in any respect, been modified, changed or doubted. It is followed in many subsequent cases, and is frequently referred to as containing a clear and elaborate exposition of the law on the subject. Goods of Almonino, 29 L. J. P. 46; Goods of White,

30 L. J. P. 55; In re Birt, 24 L. T. R. 142."

In Fouché's Estate, 147 Pa. St. 395, it was held that a will was not invalidated by the fact that the testator's signature was not written under some calculations in figures beneath the will, which formed no part of it.

In Goods of Thomas Greenwood (1892), P. 7, the will contained no nomination of executors in the body of it, but at the bottom, below the attestation clause, were the words, "executors, W. G. and C. S." There was an asterisk before these words and an asterisk before the word "executor" wherever it occurred in the will. It was proved that these words were written before the execution of the will. After the execution, the testator directed the name of C. S., who was an attesting witness as well as executor, to be erased and the name of W. S. to be written over the erasure. The will was not re-executed after these alterations had been made. It was held that the nomination of executors might be included in the probate, but that the name of C. S. must be restored both as executor and attesting witness.

In Goods of Anstee, (1893), P. 283, the signature of the testator and the attesting witnesses appeared at the bottom of the first page of a will, immediately after an unfinished sentence, which was completed overleaf on the second page. It was held that probate might be granted of the first page of the will.

1. Matter of Conway's Will, 124 N. Y. 455; Demett v. Taylor, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 561; M'Guire v. Kerr, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 244; Butler v. Benson, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 526; Lewis v. Lewis, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 17; Robins v. Coryell, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 556. See also Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 67 N. Y. 409, reversing Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 290.

In drawing an instrument presented for probate as a will, a blank form was used, the whole of which was upon one side of the paper. A blank was left for the dispositions to be made, preceded by the words "I give, devise and bequeath my property as follows." This blank was filled up by three complete devises; at the end of the last was underlined, in parenthesis, the words "carried to back of will." Upon the back of the sheet was written the word "continued;" following it were various bequests, and then the words "signature on face of the will." The signature of the testator appeared at the end of the testimonium clause on the face of the paper, and those of the witnesses under the attestation clause. It was held (Bradley, Haight, and Brown, JJ., dissenting), that there was not such a subscription and signing by the testator and witnesses "at the end of the will" as is required by the statute; and, therefore, that the instrument was improperly admitted to probate. Matter of Conway's Will, 124 N. Y. 455. In this case, the court, by Parker, J., said: "Reference is made to the rule stated in 1 Williams on Executors (9th ed.), at page 139, 'If a testator in a will or codicil, or other testamentary paper duly executed, refers to an existing unattested will or other paper, the instrument so referred to becomes a part of the will,' and other authorities tending to the same direction being cited, it is asserted that within the principle thus established 'a testator may write substantial portions of his will upon the margin of the document, or upon the back of the paper, or upon the paper annexed to the will, if such provisions are referred to in the body of the instrument and connected therewith by means of asterisks, words, or symbols indicating their relation to the provisions on the face of the paper.'

"A brief reference to the state of the law relating to the execution of wills in England will make it apparent that neither the decisions of its courts nor the rules deduced therefrom by English text writers can be made applicable to cases arising under our statute.

"Prior to January 1, 1838, no solemnities were necessary for the making of a will of personal estate. Wills were admitted to probate which did not contain either the signature or seal of the testator, and were in the handwriting of some other person. While the Statute of Frauds provided the formalities of signature and attestation necessary for a devise of lands, by statute (1 Vict., ch. 26, § 9), it was provided 'That no will shall be valid unless it shall be in writing and executed in manner hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, it shall be signed at the foot or end thereof by the testator, or by some other person in his presence and by his direction, and such signature shall be made or acknowledged by the testator in the presence of two or more witnesses present at the same time, and such witnesses shall attest and shall subscribe the will in the presence of the testator, but no form of attestation shall be necessary.' This act took effect January 1, 1838. A new ground of contest in the courts was now presented as to what should be considered a signing of the will at the end or foot thereof. In 1 Williamson Exrs. (9th ed.) 108, it is said that the tendency was at first in the direction of a liberal construction of this part of the statute, but afterwards it was deemed necessary to take a more rigid view of the enactment on the ground that it was intended to prevent any addition being made to the will after the deceased had executed it. Accordingly probate was refused in a great number of cases. This result, not at all surprising, in view of the fact that, prior to 1838, testamentary dispositions of personality were frequently given effect where the testator had not even signed or authorized the signing of the writing, led to the passage of the statute (15 Vict., ch. 24) entitled 'An act for the amendment of the laws with respect to wills,' passed June 17, 1852. Section 1 provides as follows: 'Where, by an act passed in the first year of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, entitled an act for the amendment of the laws with respect to wills, it is enacted that no will shall be valid unless it shall be signed at the foot or end thereof by the testator, or by some other person in his presence and by his direction, every will shall, so far only as regards the position of the signature of the testator or of the person signing for him, as aforesaid, be deemed to be valid within the said enactment as explained by this act, if the signature shall be so placed at, or after, or following, or under, or beside, or opposite to the end of the will, that it shall be apparent on the face of the will that the testator intended to give effect by such, his signature to the writing signed as his will; and that no such will shall be affected by the circumstance that the signature shall not follow, or be immediately after the foot or end of the will, or by the circumstance that a blank space shall intervene between the concluding word of the will and the signature, or by the circumstance that the signature placed among the words of the testimonium clause or clause of Pennsylvania, it has been held that a clause appointing executors, following the signature, invalidates the instrument.¹ In California, the will is good, except the appointing clause.² In New York, it has been held that such a clause does not invalidate the instrument, unless it was inserted before signing.³ When a statute requires the will to be signed "at the end" and witnessed, and the testator alone signed, and afterwards called for his will "to attestation shall follow, or be after or under the clause of attestation, either with or without the blank space intervening, or shall follow or be after, or under, or beside the names, or one of the names, of the subscribing witnesses, or by the circumstance that the signature shall be on a side or page or other portion of the paper or papers containing the will whereon no clause or paragraph or disposing part of the will shall be written above the signature, or by the circumstance that there shall appear to be sufficient space on or at the bottom of the preceding side or page or other portion of the same paper on which the will is written to contain the signature; and the enumeration of the above circumstances shall not restrict the generality of the above enactment, but no signature under the said act or this act shall be operative to give effect to any disposition or direction which is underneath or which follows it, nor shall it give effect to any disposition or direction inserted after the signature shall be made.' Clearly it needs no other argument than is furnished by a statement of the practice in England respecting the probate of wills prior to 1838, and a reading of the amendment of 1852, to demonstrate the inapplicability of English decisions to a question like that before us. By statute the English courts are commanded to consider the intent of the testator in determining whether there was a due execution. With us, it is the intention of the legislature and not that of the testator, which controls such a question."

Where a map, to which several references were made in the body of a will, was attached thereto below the signatures of the testator and witnesses, the map was deemed to be constructively inserted in the will where such references were made, and the will was, therefore, held to be properly executed at the end of the will, in conformity to the statute. Tonnele v. Hall, 4 N. Y. 140.

1. Wineland's Appeal, 118 Pa. St. 37.

The court, by Paxson, C. J., here said: "It cannot be said that the clause appointing the executors is no part of a will. It is an important part, though not always essential. It cannot be brushed aside as mere idle words to which no meaning is to be attached. Nor can they be rejected, and so much of the will be probated as stands above the signature. As was said by Chief Justice Gibson, in Hays v. Harden, 6 Pa. St. 413: 'It is better, therefore, that an informal addition should operate as a statutory revocation of the whole than that a plain injunction should be frittered away by exceptions.' I am aware that our act of 1833 closely resembles the Statute of 1 Vict., ch. 26, and that some English authorities seem to sanction the doctrine contended for by the appellees. It is said in 1 Williams Executors (9th ed.) 112, note d, in commenting upon the above Statute of Vict. and its supplement of 15 Vict., ch. 24, that 'in order to get rid of the objection that the will was not signed at the foot or end thereof, the court in some cases has thought itself justified in regarding a portion running below the signature as forming no part of the will, and granting probate exclusive of that portion. Our act of 1833, as well as the Stat. of Vict. are in part borrowed from the British Statute of Frauds, two sections of which have been so evaded by judicial construction as to be practically repealed. We do not propose that the Act of 1833 shall meet with the same fate. The legislature has laid down a rule so plain that it cannot be evaded without a clear violation of its terms. No room is left for judicial construction or interpretation. It says a will must be signed at the end thereof, and that's the end of it.' See also In re Baird's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. Rep. 514.

2. McCullough's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 76.

3. Matter of Jacobson, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 298. See Brady v. McCrosson, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 431.

finish it," added a bequest, and then had the witnesses sign, without signing again himself, the whole will was held invalid.¹ A subscription after the attestation clause, is a signing at the "end of the will" within the meaning of the statute, as the testator by so signing is considered as making the attestation clause a part of the will.² Where the will is written on several sheets of paper, one signature is sufficient. In such case, the order in which the sheets are found at the testator's death is presumed to be the same as when the will was executed.³ Where the different clauses of a will have been written at different times, one signature and attestation is sufficient for all.⁴ So where the testator signs the will on several sheets, or in different places, the last signature, if at the end of the will, is the efficient one.⁵ Under the Pennsylvania statute, in order to sustain, as a will, a paper to which the decedent did not sign his name, it must be proved by two witnesses, not only that he was prevented by the extremity of his last sickness from signing himself, but also that he was prevented by the same cause from requesting someone to sign his name for him and in his presence,⁶ and the testator's continued inability to sign the will, with his repeated application to others to sign for him, and their refusal, is not a compliance with the act.⁷

d. SIGNATURE DISTINGUISHED FROM EXECUTION.—The word execution is sometimes used to indicate the act of signing, as distinguished from attestation;⁸ strictly speaking, however, execution includes all formal requisites essential to the validity of the instrument.⁹

e. REQUISITES OF VALID SIGNATURE.—The first essential of a valid signature is that the name or mark be put upon the paper, or subsequently adopted, with the intent of finally authenticating the instrument so that no further signature on the maker's part

1. Glancy v. Glancy, 17 Ohio St. 134.

2. Younger v. Duffie, 94 N. Y. 535; 46 Am. Rep. 156; Matter of Acker, 5 Dem. (N. Y.) 19; Matter of Landy's Will, 78 Hun (N. Y.) 479. See Matter of Cohen's Will, 1 Tuck. (N. Y.) 286. But compare Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 67 N. Y. 409. So, also, where the statute merely requires that the will be signed by the testator. Hallowell v. Hallowell, 88 Ind. 251.

3. Rees v. Rees, L. R., 3 P. & M. 84; Marsh v. Marsh, 1 S. & T. 528; Wikoff's Appeal, 15 Pa. St. 281; 53 Am. Dec. 597; Ginder v. Farnum, 10 Pa. St. 98; Ela v. Edwards, 16 Gray (Mass.) 91; Martin v. Hamlin, 4 Strobb. (S. Car.) 188; 53 Am. Dec. 673.

4. Goods of Catrall, 3 S. & T. 419.

5. Evan's Appeal, 58 Pa. St. 238.

6. Ruoff's Appeal, 26 Pa. St. 219;

Dunlop v. Dunlop, 10 Watts (Pa.) 153; Asay v. Hoover, 5 Pa. St. 21; 14 Am. Dec. 713; Grabill v. Barr, 5 Pa. St. 441; 47 Am. Dec. 418; Prickett's Estate, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 306.

7. Stricker v. Groves, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 386.

8. See Jarm. on Wills, ch. 6; Beach on Wills, ch. 3; Everhart v. Everhart, 34 Fed. Rep. 82; Matter of Booth's Will, 127 N. Y. 109.

9. In Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 302, n. 1, the following language is used: "The Statute 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 9, sanctions this use of the word. It declares that no will shall be valid unless in writing, 'and executed in manner hereinafter mentioned;' and then proceeds to describe the details of signing, acknowledging, and attesting the will."

is contemplated.¹ The making of a mark with intent to authenticate the instrument has been held a sufficient signing within the meaning of the statute, even though the testator's inability to write had not been established,² and although his name did

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 79; Right v. Price, Dougl. 241; Ramsey v. Ramsey, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 664; 70 Am. Dec. 438; Dunlop v. Dunlop, 10 Watts (Pa.) 153. See Matter of Booth's Will, 127 N. Y. 109; Warwick v. Warwick, 86 Va. 596; Armstrong v. Armstrong, 29 Ala. 538.

The name of a testator at the commencement of a holograph will is an equivocal act, and unless it appears affirmatively from something on the face of the paper that it was intended as his signature, it is not a sufficient signing under the statute. Ramsey v. Ramsey, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 664; 70 Am. Dec. 438. See Matter of Booth's Will, 127 N. Y. 109.

2. Baker v. Denning, 8 Ad. & El. 94; Guthrie v. Price, 23 Ark. 396; Smith v. Dolby, 4 Harr. (Del.) 350; Nickerson v. Buck, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 332; Chase v. Kittredge, 11 Allen (Mass.) 53; 87 Am. Rep. 687; Higgins v. Carlton, 28 Md. 115; 92 Am. Dec. 666; St. Louis Hospital Assoc. v. Williams, 19 Mo. 609; Watts v. Public Administrator, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 168; Butler v. Benson, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 526; Burford v. Burford, 29 Pa. St. 221; Flannery's Will, 24 Pa. St. 502; Pool v. Buffum, 3 Oregon 438; In re Guilfoyle's Will, 96 Cal. 598. See also McCarty v. Hoffman, 23 Pa. St. 507; Greenough v. Greenough, 11 Pa. St. 489; 51 Am. Dec. 567; Ray v. Hill, 3 Strobb. (S. Car.) 297; 49 Am. Dec. 647.

In Pennsylvania, signature by mark was expressly authorized by Act of Jan. 27, 1848, P. L. 16. Knox's Estate, 131 Pa. St. 229.

In Everhart v. Everhart, 34 Fed. Rep. 85, the testimony showed that M. Everhart requested one of the witnesses to write his will, which he did, as dictated by said Everhart; that when it was written said Everhart attempted to sign it, but from physical debility was unable to do so, though in the attempt made a small mark or scratch on the paper, and failed to do more; that he said he made and published the paper as his last will and testament. It was held insufficient. The court said: "The paper writing shows a small mark or scratch on the left-hand corner, but no name attached to it. There are also two small marks or dots on another part of the paper, very dim, and look as though made with the point of a pencil, and not at the usual place for signing such a paper, by the party executing it. The name of M. Everhart only appears in the commencement of the paper, which it is evident was not intended as a signature of the testator. The draughtsman was not requested to sign the testator's name, and the testator's effort to sign the paper himself shows he did not recognize the signature made in the commencement of the writing by the draughtsman as his signature. The place where made, and the character of the small marks and dots, furnish no evidence that they were made as a substitute for the signature of the testator. It is true that a testator may sign his will by making a mark, but he must intend the mark as a substitute for his name; and when there is no name written, or anything indicating who made the mark, and especially when the mark is made at an unusual place for the signature, it ought to require very satisfactory evidence that the mark was intended by the testator as his signature, or as a substitute for it."

In St. Louis Hospital Assoc. v. Williams, 19 Mo. 609, it was held that if in addition to the mark made by the testator his name is signed to the will by another, at his request, the will is void unless the person subscribing the testator's name signs his own name as a witness and states that he wrote the testator's name at his request, as required by an act concerning wills in the state of Missouri. See Northcutt v. Northcutt, 20 Mo. 266. See also McGee v. Porter, 14 Mo. 611; 55 Am. Dec. 129. See also the following Pennsylvania cases: Greenough v. Greenough, 11 Pa. St. 489; 51 Am. Dec. 567; Assay v. Hoover, 5 Pa. St. 21; 14 Am. Dec. 713; Grabill v. Barr, 5 Pa. St. 444; 47 Am. Dec. 418.

In Main v. Ryder, 84 Pa. St. 217, it was held that the fact that the testator knew how to write did not invalidate the execution of a will by making his mark.

not appear on the face of the will.¹ So where the testator affixed his initials,² or christian name,³ or even assumed name, since such

1. In re Bryce, 2 Curt. 325.

2. In re Savory, 15 Jur. 1042.

3. Knox's Estate, 131 Pa. St. 220.

What Constitutes a Signature.—In Knox's Estate, 131 Pa. St. 230, the court, by Mitchell, J., said: "The precise case of a signature by the first name only, does not appear to have arisen either in England or in the United States; but the principles on which the decisions already referred to were based, especially those in regard to signing by initials only, are equally applicable to the present case, and additional force is given to them by the decisions as to what constitutes a binding signature to a contract under the same or analogous statutes. Browne, on the Statute of Frauds, § 362, states the rule thus: 'In cases where the initials only of the party are signed, it is quite clear that, with the aid of parol evidence which is admitted to apply to them, the signature is to be held valid.' And see Palmer v. Stephens, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 478; Sandborn v. Flagler, 9 Allen (Mass.) 474; Weston v. Myers, 33 Ill. 432; Salmon Falls Mfg. Co. v. Goddard, 14 How. (N. Y.) 446; Chichester v. Cobb, 14 L. T. N. S. 433. Though we find no precise precedent, yet the analogies are all favorable, rather than otherwise, to the sufficiency of a signing by first name only, if it meets the other requirements of the act. These are matters depending on circumstances which will be considered further on. Looking beyond the decisions to the general use of language, what is understood by signing, and signature? Webster defines to sign as to 'affix a signature to; to ratify by hand or seal; to subscribe in one's own handwriting;' and signature as 'a sign, stamp, or mark impressed; . . . especially the name of any person written with his own hand, employed to signify that the writing which precedes accords with his wishes or intentions; a sign manual.' All the definitions include a mark, and no dictionary limits a signature to a written name. There can be no doubt that historically, and down to very modern times, the ordinary signature was the mark of the cross; and there is perhaps as little question that in the general diffusion at the present day, the ordinary use of the word implies the written name. But this implication is not even yet necessary and universal. The man who cannot write is now happily an exception in our commonwealth, but he has not yet entirely disappeared and in popular language he is still said to 'sign,' though he makes only his mark. Thus, in Assay v. Hoover, 5 Pa. St. 26; 14 Am. Dec. 713, the witness says: 'The name was written after the will was read to her, and after she had signed it. . . . She was reclining in bed when she signed it,' although the signature the witness was testifying to was only a mark. But, even in the now usual acceptation of a written name, signature still does not imply the whole name. Custom controls the rule of names, and so it does the rule of signatures. The title by which a man calls himself and is known in the community, is his name, as in Main v. Ryder, 84 Pa. St. 217, whether it be the one he inherited or had originally given him or not. So the form which a man customarily uses to identify and bind himself in writing is his signature, whatever shape he may choose to give it. There is no requirement that it shall be legible, though legibility is one of the prime objects of writing. It is sufficient if it be such as he usually signs, and the signatures of neither Rufus Choate nor General Spinner could be rejected, though no man, unaided, could discover what the ragged marks made by either of these two eminent personages were intended to represent. Nor is there any fixed requirement how much of the full name shall be written. Custom varies with time and place, and habit with the whim of the individual. Sovereigns write only their first names, and the sovereign of Spain, more royally still, signs his decrees only, 'I, the King' (Yo el Rey). English peers now sign their titles only, though they be geographical names, like Devon or Stafford, as broad as a county. The great Bacon wrote his name, Fr. Verulam, and the ordinary signature of the poet-philosopher of fishermen was Iz: Wa:. In the fifty-six signatures of the most solemn instrument of modern times, the Declaration of Independence, we find every variety from Th. Jeffer-

name would be taken as a mark;¹ or stamped his name;² or affixed a seal stamped with his initials and pronounced it his "hand and seal."³ An imperfect or indistinct subscription of the testator's name may be regarded as his mark.⁴ It is immaterial that a wrong name was written against the mark,⁵ or that the testator was also wrongly named in the body of the will,⁶ or that the testator's hand was guided by another in signing⁷ or making his mark.⁸ Sealing is not son to the unmistakably identified Charles Carroll, of Carrollton. In the present day it is not uncommon for business men to have a signature for checks and banking purposes somewhat different from that used in their ordinary business, and in familiar correspondence, signature by initials, or nick-name, or diminutive, is probably the general practice.

"What, therefore, shall constitute a sufficient signature must depend largely on the custom of the time and place, the habit of the individual, and the the circumstances of each particular case. As already seen, the English and some American cases hold that a signature by initials only, or otherwise informal and short of the full name, may be a valid execution of a will or a contract, if the intent to execute is apparent. To this requirement our statute adds that the signature must be at the end, as evidence that the intent is present, actual, and completed. On this point of the completed act, the use of the ordinary form of signature is persuasive evidence, and the absence of it may be of weight in the other scale. As was suggested by the learned judge below, if a will drawn with formality, or in terms that indicate the aid of counsel, or the intent to comply with all the forms of law, be signed with initials or first name only, doubt would certainly be raised as to the completed purpose of the testator to execute it, and if then it appeared that his habit was to sign his name in full, the doubt might become certainty; while, on the other hand, if it were shown that he usually, or even frequently, signed business or other important papers in the same way, the doubt might be dissipated. As in all cases where the intent is the test, there can be no hard and fast legal rule as to form. The statute requires that the signature shall be at the end, and that requirement must be met without regard to intention, but what shall constitute a signature must be determined in each case by the circumstances."

1. In re Redding, 2 Rob. 339; 14 Jur. 1052; In re Glover, 11 Jur. 1022.

2. Jenkyne v. Galsford, 3 S. & T. 93. In this case a testator, toward the end of his life, had his usual signature engraved, so that it might be stamped on letters and other documents requiring his signature. He made two codicils, each of which was so stamped with his name by another person, in his presence and by his direction. It was held a due execution of the codicils under the Statute of Wills.

3. Goods of Emerson, L. R., 9 Ir. L. R. 443.

4. Hartwell v. McMaster, 4 Redf. (N. Y.) 389. See also Phate's Estate, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 644.

5. Bailey v. Bailey, 35 Ala. 687; In re Clark, 1 S. & T. 22; Long v. Zook, 13 Pa. St. 400; Knox's Estate, 131 Pa. St. 229.

6. Misnomer of Testator. — In re Dowse, 31 L. J. Prob. 172. In this case Thomas Dowse executed by mark a will in which the testator was described as John Dowse, and against his mark was written: "The mark of John Dowse." The court being satisfied that Thomas Dowse was the person who made the mark, and that he did so animus testandi, granted probate.

7. Stevens v. Vancleve, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 262; Vandruff v. Rinehart, 29 Pa. St. 232; In re Shotwell's Estate, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 444; VanHanswyck v. Wiese, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 494; Fritz v. Turner, 46 N. J. Eq. 515; McMechen v. McMechen, 17 W. Va. 684; 41 Am. Rep. 682. In such case the signature is the act of the testator and not of the person guiding his hand. Vines v. Clingfost, 21 Ark. 309; Vandruff v. Rinehart, 29 Pa. St. 232; Trezevant v. Rains (Tex. 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 567.

8. Wilson v. Beddard, 12 Sim. 28; Nickerson v. Buck, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 332; VanHanswyck v. Wiese, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 494; Jackson v. VanDusen, 5

signing,¹ and, except in Nevada, is unnecessary,² although proper, to allay doubt where powers touching real estate are expressly given.³ In England, and in many of the states of the Union, the will may be signed by some other person by the testator's express direction and in his presence.⁴ In Pennsylvania, a testator must sign himself, unless prevented by the extremity of his last sickness.⁵ In New Jersey, where the statute requires that "the signature shall be made by the testator or the making thereof acknowledged by him in the presence of two witnesses," signature by another is held insufficient.⁶

Johns. (N. Y.) 144; 4 Am. Dec. 330; Vandruft v. Rinehart, 29 Pa. St. 232; Cozen's Will, 61 Pa. St. 196; Upchurch v. Upchurch, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 102.

Request of Assistance.—It is not necessary to prove an express request for such assistance. The act is his own with the assistance of another, and not that of another under authority from him. Cozen's Will, 61 Pa. St. 201.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 78; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.) 309; Smith v. Evans, 1 Wils. 313; Wright v. Wakeford, 17 Ves. 434; Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 452.

2. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2641. In New Hampshire, wills need no longer be sealed. Act Sept. 30, 1887. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, 1st Sup., § 2641.

3. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 309.

4. See supra, this title, Formal Requisites—Signature—English Rule; American Rule. See further Butler v. Benson, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 527; Matter of Carroll's Succession, 28 La. Ann. 388; Riley v. Riley, 36 Ala. 496; Armstrong v. Armstrong, 29 Ala. 538; In re Cornelius' Will, 14 Ark. 675; Abraham v. Wilkins, 17 Ark. 292; Sutton v. Sutton, 5 How. (Del.) 459; Rigg v. Wilton, 13 Ill. 15; McGee v. Porter, 14 Mo. 611; 55 Am. Dec. 129; Northcutt v. Northcutt, 20 Mo. 266; Simpson v. Simpson, 27 Mo. 288; St. Louis Hospital Assoc. v. Williams, 19 Mo. 609; Pool v. Bufum, 3 Oregon 438; Jenkins' Will, 43 Wis. 610. Compare Higgins v. Carlton, 28 Md. 117; 92 Am. Dec. 666.

In Waite v. Frisbie, 45 Minn. 361. Gillfillan, C. J., said: "The direction to sign must precede the act of signing. Mere knowledge by the testator that another has signed, or is signing, without previous direction, and assent to or acquiescence in it, to be inferred from looks, or a nod of the head, or motion of the hand, or other ambiguous token, is not enough. We do not mean that the express direction must be in words. A person unable to speak may sometimes convey his wish that another sign his name as unequivocally by gestures as though he spoke the words, but the meaning of such gestures must be as clear and unambiguous as the words; and the act of signing must be in obedience to the direction thus conveyed. It follows from what we have said that mere assent or acquiescence, implied by, or to be inferred from, looks or gestures, when another suggests that A or B sign the name, is not such an express direction as the statute requires." See also Greenough v. Greenough, 11 Pa. St. 489; 51 Am. Dec. 567.

5. Vernon v. Kirk, 30 Pa. St. 223.

In Vosburg's Will, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 243, it was held that the fact that a testator procured his signature to be made to his will by another person, when he was able to write his own signature, will not invalidate the will, under Act Pennsylvania April 8, 1833 (Purd. Dig. (11th ed.) 1710), which permits such signature for the testator "by some person in his presence, and by his express direction;" but it is a suspicious circumstance, which, when fraud is averred, will justify the order of an issue to determine whether the will was properly executed. See also Barr v. Graybill, 13 Pa. St. 395.

6. In re McElwaine, 18 N. J. Eq. 499.

In this case the court said: "In general, the maxim qui facit per alium, facit per se governs, and makes a signing by an agent a signing by the principal. But this act says the signature shall be made by the testator, or the making thereof acknowledged by him; it does not speak of acknowledging or adopting the signature, but of the making thereof. The fifth section of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II., ch. 3), which was in force in this state until the act of 1713-14, required that wills should be signed by the testator, 'or by some other person in his presence, and by his express direction.' The statute of this state, of 1713-14, and also that of 1851, in declaring the manner in which wills should be executed, have omitted these words, and must be held to have had an object in the omission. Again, the Statute of 1 Vict. 26, ch. 9, from which our statute of 1851 is mainly taken, contains the same provisions as the Statute of Frauds, 'or by some other person, in his presence, and by his direction.' The English Statute of Frauds, in which this language was first used, in other parts of it, carefully provides for the signing by an agent 'lawfully authorized;' and in one section, by an agent 'lawfully authorized by writing.' That language has been adopted in this state, in all the re-enactments of those provisions of the Statute of Frauds; while in every statute relating to wills, the provision that will may be signed by some one for the testator, was omitted. In the construction of the New York statutes, which in like manner omitted this provision, their courts held that the omission in the principal section would have made the inference legitimate and unavoidable, that they intended to alter the law, and disallow such subscription or signature in the presence and by the direction of the testator, had not another section of the same act provided for the manner in which another person might sign the testator's name to the will, by his direction. Robins v. Coryell, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 559; Chaffee v. Baptist Missionary Convention, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 91; 40 Am. Dec. 225. The words of the Act of 1851, and also of the Act of 1850, are stronger than those of the statutes 29 Car. II., or 1 Vict., in England; they are 'the signature shall be made by the testator, or the making thereof acknowledged by the testator.' While thus providing more carefully for the execution of a will, it must be supposed that they intended, by omitting the words in the English acts, to require, in all cases, some actual signature by the testator himself, and not to allow his name to be signed by anyone, without the safeguards required of its being done by some person, in his presence, and by his express direction. Otherwise, a will written and signed for a testator, without his knowledge, or a substituted copy of one, already signed with a good imitation of his hand, might be shown him, and if he acknowledged the signature before two witnesses, and declared it to be his will, it would be executed according to the statute. The signing required by this statute must be held to be some signature, making some mark or signum upon the paper so as to identify and give efficacy to it by some act, and not by words merely."

In states in which signature by another is allowed, the other person may be one of the subscribing witnesses,¹ and it is immaterial that he signed his own name instead of the name of the testator.²

This seems to be the meaning given to the word sign in the English Statute of Frauds, and other like statutes, in the cases where the question arose whether making a mark with the hand guided by another, was held a sufficient signing. Wilson v. Beddard, 12 Sim. 28; Stevens v. Vancleve, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 269; Meehan v. Rourke, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 393.

"In Stevens v. Vancleve, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 269, Justice Washington holds that the will which was executed by writing his name, his hand being guided by another at his express request, was executed in strict conformity with the English Statute of Frauds, which he assumed, perhaps wrongly, was in force in this state. There would have been no occasion to resort to this reasoning or assumption, if the signing required by the statute of this state, or the English Statute of Frauds, could as well be done by another for him, as by the testator himself. If signing by the testator included signing by another, the addition in the English statute is superfluous; and if intended only to regulate the signing by another, it would have been added in another form." Compare Smith v. Harris, 1 Rob. 262.

1. In re Bayley, 1 Curt. 914; Smith v. Harris, 1 Rob. 262; Herbert v. Berrier, 81 Ind. 1; Riley v. Riley, 36 Ala. 496; Robins v. Coryell, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 556. See Pool v. Buffum, 3 Oregon 438.

2. So held at least under 1 Vict., ch. 26, in a case where the other person

A subscription "A B for C D at his request" has been held sufficient.¹ The signature of another, to be valid, must be intended as final, and hence it has been held that if the name of the testator be subscribed by another at his request and in his presence, but with the intention of afterwards executing it himself by mark, the execution will not be valid if he fails to affix his mark.²

signed his own name after the words "Signed on behalf of the testator, in his presence and by his direction, by me." In re Clark, 2 Curt. 329. And a like ruling would probably be sustained under corresponding statutes in the United States. Vernon v. Kirk, 30 Pa. St. 218; Abraham v. Wilkins, 17 Ark. 292.

1. Vernon v. Kirk, 30 Pa. St. 218; Abraham v. Wilkins, 17 Ark. 292.

In Vernon v. Kirk, 30 Pa. St. 222, the court, by Strong, J., said: "It was only by judicial construction that our Statute of Wills, passed April 8, 1833, was made to require at the end of the will, the testator's signature by his name. Our act was taken from the British statute, 29 Charles II., § 2, under which it had repeatedly been decided that a signature by a mark was sufficient. When, therefore, the legislature adopted words having a recognized judicial signification, it might fairly have been presumed that they intended by the words that sense in which they were understood at the time of adoption. It is probable that they looked less to the mode of the signature, than to its place, which they required to be at the end of the will. This appears still more probable, when it is observed that if the design was to require a signature by the name of the testator, then the power of making a will was denied to all who could not write; for if a mark was not a signature, within the meaning of the statute, then those unable to write could not sign, and signing by another was permitted only when inability to sign was caused by the extremity of the last sickness. This seems to have been overlooked when Barr v. Graybill, 13 Pa. St. 395; Asay v. Hoover, 5 Pa. St. 21; 14 Am. Dec. 713, and other kindred cases were decided. As already said, the purpose of the legislature seems rather to have been to designate the place where the signature should be, to wit, at the end of the will, than to prescribe the manner in which it should be made. It was to remedy the mischief, then prevalent, of setting up as a testamentary disposition an imperfect, unfinished paper. This was accomplished by requiring the signature, whatever it might be, whether by the testator, or by another at his request, to be at the end of the writing, thus evidencing that the testamentary purpose was complete. It was not, as was supposed in the earlier cases, to furnish, in the handwriting evidence of identity, and protection against fraud; for the name might be signed by the testator or by another at his request, in which last case no such proof is deducible from the handwriting. The authentication of the instrument was left to witnesses. The Act of January 27th, 1848, P. L. 16, was designed only to correct the mistaken construction of the Act of 1833; and now, while the place of the signature is rigidly defined, its mode is left unfettered. If, therefore, the testatrix requested Ezekiel Norman to sign the paper as her will, and he complied with her request, in the manner already described, the requirements of the Act of Assembly were fulfilled, and, in form, the will was sufficiently executed."

2. Main v. Ryder, 84 Pa. St. 217. In this case the court, by Mercur, J., said: "It appears to have been executed by the testator making his mark or cross at the end thereof. It has two subscribing witnesses, and is wholly regular on its face. It is contended that the Act of 1848 applies only to cases where the testator is unable to write his name by reason of want of education, and does not excuse the absence of the signature of one who is able to write. We discover nothing in the act sustaining that view. It makes no mention of insufficient education or of physical inability. It declares that form of execution as sufficient in all cases. The manifest object of the act is to permit a will to be signed as any other written instrument may be signed. Hence, in Vandruft v. Rinehart, 29 Pa. St. 232, it was held that if one is unable, from palsy or other cause, to make his signature or

Where the person requested to sign for the testator did so by writing at the foot "This will was read and approved by C. F. B., by E. C., in presence of, etc.," followed by the signatures of the witnesses, the will was held good.¹ Where the statute requires the will to be signed by the other person in the testator's presence, a signature or mark affixed while he was unconscious, is incapable of subsequent ratification without re-execution.² Where mutual wills are executed by several testators, it is essential that each sign his own; and where two sisters made mutual wills and each by mistake signed the will of the other, both were held invalid.³

mark to his will, another person may steady his hand and aid him in so doing. If so done by the assistance of another it is the testator's own act. So in Cozen's Will, 61 Pa. St. 196, the testator was paralyzed, and said he was unable to write, but would put his mark to the will. He was raised in bed; a pen was put into his hand, which was held by another while he made his mark. This was held to be a valid execution of the will. In the case we are now considering, it appears by the evidence of Thorpe, who drew the will, that he handed it to the testator, who was lying in bed, to sign. The latter said, 'You sign it.' Case or Stanton said, 'Yes, he can make his mark just as well.' Case and Stanton each testified substantially corroborating Thorpe, and added that Miner made the further remark that he had written his name, but did not know as he could do it then, or did not know but he could do it again. Thereupon Thorpe wrote Miner's name, not in a manner indicating that it was to stand as Miner's fully executed signature, but preparatory to his making his mark.

Thorpe wrote it 'Daniel ^{his} Miner.'
mark.

"In that portion of the charge covered by the eighth assignment the court said: 'We therefore charge you that if Thorpe wrote Daniel Miner's name to the will in Miner's presence and by his express directions, and Miner made the attempt to make his mark, but failed to complete the mark, or to make it in the manner required by the statute, still the will is sufficiently executed if these facts are proved by two witnesses, who were present at the time, although Miner, when he directed his name to be signed, intended to make his mark also, and Thorpe, when he wrote the name, intended that Miner should make his mark.'

"This, we think, was clearly error.

It assumes that although the testator directed his name to be written with the view of adding his mark, and thus making his signature, yet the will is completely executed before the mark is made. This cannot be so. It gives to an unexecuted intention the same effect as if fully executed. It gives to the statute a construction not sanctioned by its letter or its spirit. It is undoubtedly true the statute does provide, if the testator's name is subscribed by his direction and authority, it is a valid execution of the will. That, however, is when the testator has directed his name to be written as his complete signature. If so directed and intended, it becomes sufficient in itself. In such case the testator would not have intended to make any signature with his own hand, and none would be required. The learned judge holds the will may be sufficiently executed, although the testator failed to make his mark 'in the manner required by the statute,' and when neither the testator nor the scrivener had done any act which either intended as a full execution of the will, and when the will would show on its face that it was not fully executed." Compare Rosser v. Franklin, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 1; 52 Am. Dec. 97.

Missouri.—As to the formalities prescribed by the code, where one signs the testator's name at his request, see St. Louis Hospital Assoc. v. Williams, 19 Mo. 609; St. Louis Hospital Assoc. v. Wegman, 21 Mo. 17; Northcutt v. Northcutt, 20 Mo. 266; McGee v. Porter, 14 Mo. 611; 55 Am. Dec. 129; Simpson v. Simpson, 27 Mo. 288.

1. Jenkyns v. Galsford, 32 L. J. P. 122.

2. Dunlop v. Dunlop, 10 Watts (Pa.) 153.

3. Anonymous, 14 Jur. 402; Goods of Hunt, L. R., 3 P. & M. 250. See also In re Alter's Will, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 529.

The signature may be on a piece of paper stuck or tied on at the end of the will and containing nothing but the signature and attestation;¹ but in such case the fact that the piece of paper was so attached before execution must be proved.² A signature, whether by name or mark, satisfies the statute, notwithstanding the fact that the testator's name does not appear in the body of the instrument.³ Where the testator is blind or illiterate, it must be shown that he was acquainted with the contents of the will before he signed it, for in such case, the presumption that one who executes an instrument knows and approves its contents, does not arise.⁴

2. Publication.—Publication is the formal declaration or acknowledgment by the testator, in the presence of the subscribing witnesses, at the time of subscription, that the instrument they are called upon to attest is his last will and testament, and is only necessary when expressly required by statute,⁵ as is the case in

1. Goods of Horsford, L.R., 3 P. & M. 211; Cooke v. Lambert, 32 L. J. P. 93.

2. Goods of West, 32 L. J. P. 182.

3. In re Bryce, 2 Curt. 325.

4. Wms. on Exrs. 19; In re Axford, 1 S. & T. 540; Barton v. Robins, 3 Ph. 455, note (b.); Martin v. Mitchell, 28 Ga. 382; Wampler v. Wampler, 9 Md. 540; Worthington v. Klemm, 144 Mass. 167; Day v. Day, 3 N. J. Eq. 549. See also Matter of Bull, 111 N. Y. 624.

In Wampler v. Wampler, 9 Md. 540, it was held that the will of a blind man, duly executed and attested, and proved to have been dictated by, and read to, the testator, is entitled to probate, though not read to him by, or in the presence of, the attesting witnesses.

In New York, it has been held that reading the will to the testator before execution, in the presence of subscribing witnesses, fulfills the requirements of the local statute. Moore v. Moore, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 261.

In Georgia and Alabama, the will need not be read in the presence of the witnesses. Martin v. Mitchell, 28 Ga. 382; Wampler v. Wampler, 9 Md. 540.

If the contents are correctly made known to the testator, it is not necessary to show that there was any formal reading. Edwards v. Fincham, 3 Curt. 63; 4 Moo. P. C. 198; Hess' Appeal, 43 Pa. St. 73; Boyd v. Cook, 3 Leigh (Va.) 32. See also King v. Kinsey, 74 N. Car. 261; Matter of Crumb's Will, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 478.

5. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 80, note by Bigelow, citing Osborn v. Cook, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 532; 59 Am. Dec. 155; Adams v. Field, 21 Vt. 256; Dean v.

Dean, 27 Vt. 746; Watson v. Pipes, 32 Miss. 451; Verdier v. Verdier, 8 Rich. (S. Car.) 135; Huff v. Huff, 41 Ga. 696. See Beane v. Yerby, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 239; Cilley v. Cilley, 34 Me. 162; Canada's Appeal, 47 Conn. 450; Meurer's Will, 44 Wis. 392; 28 Am. Rep. 591. See also In re Porter, 9 Mackey (D. C.) 493.

Indiana.—Under the statute of Indiana, which provides "that no will, except a nuncupative will, shall effect any estate, unless it be in writing, signed by the testator, or by some one in his presence, with his consent, and attested and subscribed in his presence by two or more competent witnesses," it is not necessary to a due execution of a will that the testator should in any manner indicate to the witnesses who are called upon to attest the same, that the instrument or document thus to be executed and attested is the will of the party executing the same. Brown v. McAlister, 34 Ind. 375. See also Turner v. Cook, 36 Ind. 129.

Publication Unnecessary, Apart from Statutory Enactments.—The writing, signing, and attesting of a will are, of themselves, a sufficient publication of the same, when a formal declaration is not required by statute. Bond v. Seawell, 3 Burr. 1775; Moodie v. Reid, 7 Taunt. 355; In re Hulse's Will, 52 Iowa 662; Ray v. Walton, 2 A.K. Marsh. (Ky.) 71; Small v. Small, 4 Me. 220; 16 Am. Dec. 253; Cilley v. Cilley, 34 Me. 162; Osborn v. Cook, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 532; 59 Am. Dec. 153; Black v. Ellis, 3 Hill (S. Car.) 68; Dean v.

some states.¹ Publication differs from acknowledgment in that it is not merely a substitute for signing in the presence of attesting witnesses, but accompanies the final execution of the will under all circumstances.² To satisfy the statutory requirement, the testator must in some way communicate, by words, signs, or conduct, to the attesting witnesses, at the time they are called upon to subscribe as witnesses, that the instrument they are called upon to attest is his last will and testament and so recognized by him.³ A well-drawn attestation clause should begin

Dean, 27 Vt. 746; Allen v. Griffin, 69 Wis. 529.

1. See local statutes.

In matter of Dale's Will (Supreme Court), 9 N. Y. Supp. 396; 56 Hun (N. Y.) 169, it was held that under 3 New York Rev. Stat. (6th ed.), p. 63, § 38, providing that the testator, at the time of subscribing his will, or of acknowledging the same, "shall declare the instrument so subscribed to be his last will and testament," a will is not entitled to probate, though in the testator's handwriting, where the testimony of the subscribing witnesses shows that the testator purposely withheld from them the fact that the document which they were attesting was his will.

Where the witnesses were called by the decedent to sign the paper lying before him, as witnesses, and not informed of the nature of it, the want of a declaration by the testator to a subscribing witness, required by statute, is not supplied by the fact that the witnesses surmised that it was a codicil to his will. Matter of Harris' Will, 1 Tuck. (N. Y.) 293.

2. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 326. See Matter of Simmon's Will (Supreme Ct.), 9 N. Y. Supp. 352; Fusiller's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 40; Den v. Mitton, 12 N. J. L. 70; Ludlow v. Ludlow, 36 N. J. Eq. 597; Heyer v. Burger, 1 Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 1.

A nuncupative testament, under private signature, must be written by the testator himself or by any other person from his dictation; or even by one of the witnesses, in the presence of five witnesses residing in the place where the will is received, or of seven witnesses residing out of that place. Or it will suffice if, in the presence of the same number of witnesses, the testator presents the paper, on which he has written his testament, or caused it to be written out of their presence, declaring to them that the paper contains his last will.

Louisiana Civil Code (1889), art. 1581. Under this article it has been held unnecessary for the testator to deliver the will to the witnesses with his own hand, and no particular words or set form of speech is necessary to constitute a declaration that the instrument is the testator's will. It is sufficient if the will, having been written by another at the request of the testator and out of the presence of the witnesses, shall have been read aloud by one of the witnesses in the presence and hearing of the testator and of the other witnesses, and is then held towards the testator by the writer of it who asks, "Is this paper that has just been read your will?" and the testator answers, "It is," and it is then signed by the testator and is attested by the witnesses in his and their presence. The object of the law is to guard against a false instrument being exhibited instead of the true will, and that object is accomplished by the formalities above recited. Bourke v. Wilson, 38 La. Ann. 320.

3. Rogers v. Diamond, 13 Ark. 474; Upchurch v. Upchurch, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 102; In re Maxwell, 8 N. J. Eq. 251; Mundy v. Mundy, 15 N. J. Eq. 290; Turnure v. Turnure, 35 N. J. Eq. 439; Ludlow v. Ludlow, 35 N. J. Eq. 480; Baskin v. Baskin, 36 N. Y. 416; Ludlow v. Ludlow, 36 N. J. Eq. 597; Hildreth v. Marshall, 51 N. J. Eq. 241; Den v. Mitton, 12 N. J. L. 70; Elkin-ton v. Brick, 44 N. J. Eq. 154; Robbins v. Robbins, 50 N. J. Eq. 742; Darnell v. Buzby, 50 N. J. Eq. 725; Seymour v. Van Wyck, 6 N. Y. 120; Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220; Coffin v. Coffin, 23 N. Y. 9; 80 Am. Dec. 235; Gilbert v. Knox, 52 N. Y. 125; Thompson v. Stevens, 62 N. Y. 634; Matter of Beckett, 103 N. Y. 167; Matter of Hunt, 110 N. Y. 278; Doe v. Roe, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 200; Seguire v. Seguire, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 385; Whitbeck v. Patterson, 10

Barb. (N. Y.) 608; Torrey v. Bowen, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 304; Burritt v. Silliman, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 198; Baskin v. Baskin, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 200; Abbey v. Christy, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 276; Auburn Theological Seminary v. Calhoun, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 381; E p. Beers*, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 163; Wilson v. Hetterich, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 427; Carle v. Underhill, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 101; Rieben v. Hicks, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 353; Tunison v. Tunison, 4 Bradf. (N. Y.) 138; Gombault v. Public Administrator, 4 Bradf. (N. Y.) 226; Brown v. De Selding, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 10; Porteus v. Holm, 4 Dem. (N. Y.) 14; Heyer v. Burger, 1 Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 1; Hollenbeck v. Van Valkenburgh, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 281; Darling v. Arthur, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 84; Thompson v. Leastedt, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 395; Remsen v. Brinckerhoof, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 488; Hunn v. Case, 1 Redf. (N. Y.) 307; Van Hooser v. Van Hooser, 1 Redf. (N. Y.) 365; Van Hoffman v. Ward, 4 Redf. (N. Y.) 244; Remsen v. Brinckerhoff, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 325; 37 Am. Dec. 251; Bagley v. Blackman, 2 Lans. (N. Y.) 41; Belding v. Leichardt, 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 52; Eelbeck v. Granberry, 2 Hayw. (N. Car.) 232; 2 Am. Dec. 624; Hogan v. Grosvenor, 10 Met. (Mass.) 54; 43 Am. Dec. 414; Loy v. Kennedy, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 399.

In Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220, the words "I declare the within to be my will and deed" were held insufficient, the court, by Allen, J., saying: "To satisfy the statute the testator must in some manner communicate to the attesting witnesses, at the time they are called to sign as witnesses, the information that the instrument then present is of a testamentary character, and that he then recognizes it as his will and intends to give it effect as such. It must be declared to be his last will and testament by some assertion or some clear assent in words or signs, and the declaration must be unequivocal. (Brinckerhoof v. Remsen, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 488; Rutherford v. Rutherford, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 33; 43 Am. Dec. 644.) The policy and object of the statute require this, and nothing short of this will prevent the mischief and fraud which were designed to be reached by it. It will not suffice that the witnesses have elsewhere and from other sources learned that the document which they are called to attest is a will, or that they suspect or infer from the circumstances and occasion that such is the character of the paper. The fact must in some manner, although no particular form of words is required, be declared by the testator in their presence, that they may not only know the fact, but that they may know it from him, and that he understands it, and, at the time of its execution, which includes publication, designs to give effect to it as his will, and to this, among other things, they are required by statute to attest. Every fact is important in view of the position of the attesting witnesses. They should be satisfied that the instrument is in truth the last will and testament of the party, and is executed and published as such, and that he is of sound and disposing mind and memory, and in all respects competent to perform the act. The law simply prescribes those forms which it was supposed were best calculated to enable the witnesses to fulfill their office and attest the due execution of the will. The declaration that the instrument was his free will and deed, was equivocal, and would be satisfied by a deed executed voluntarily. It did not necessarily inform the witnesses that it was a will by excluding every other instrument from the mind. From the expression they could not know that the testator did not suppose the instrument was a deed. It is a very common form of acknowledgment of the execution of a deed to acknowledge it as the 'free act and deed' of the party, and the expression of the decedent varied but little from this form."

But it is not essential to the due publication of a will that the testator shall declare in express terms in the presence of the subscribing witnesses that the instrument is his last will; it is sufficient if he in some way makes known to them, by acts or conduct, if not by words, that it is intended and understood by him to be his will. Where, therefore, a testator whose vocal organs were paralyzed, subscribed the will in the presence of the witnesses, and by his conduct made known to them its nature, and requested their attestation, it was held that there was a substantial compliance with the statute sufficient to entitle the will to probate. In Lane v. Lane, 95 N. Y. 404, the court, by Danforth, J., said: "It is well settled that the necessary publication may be discovered by circumstances as well as words (Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220), and inferred from the conduct and acts of the testator and that of the attesting witnesses in his presence, as well as established by their direct and positive evidence. Even a person both deaf and dumb may by writing or signs make his will and declare it. The testator in this case was in full possession of all his senses. He could both see and hear, and was not dumb. Partial paralysis of the vocal organs prevented him from uttering words, but he made sounds intelligible to those familiar with him, and signs which, to some extent, all could interpret. There was no difficulty with his understanding. The uncontradicted evidence shows that he set about making his will in a serious and determined manner. He went with his wife and son from his own to the house of the scrivener, Nichols, and there, Nichols says, 'his wife, speaking in his presence, informed me that Mr. Lane wanted me to write his will, and I did so in his presence.' As the scrivener wrote each section, he read it aloud to the testator, who nodded approval each time. While writing, something was said about a witness for the will, and, says Nichols, 'I suggested Wakelee, and Lane assenting, he was sent for and came.' . . . 'I introduced Wakelee to Lane, and informed him that I was writing Mr. Lane's will, and we had sent for him as a witness.' This was before the will was completed, and after it had occurred, Nichols finished writing, and then the testator, took it and read it himself. As this happened while the will was in preparation, it is obvious that Wakelee was present when it was finished, and when the last of it was read to the testator, and also while he himself read it. The testator and both witnesses all sat at one table when the will was subscribed and witnessed.

"This was done by the testator immediately after reading it; and in the presence of each and both witnesses; they saw him read the will and subscribe it. He 'shoved' the will to Nichols, who signed it and then got up and Wakelee sat down 'in Nichols' chair' and signed it. The testator left the will with Nichols several months, and then, by his directions he gave it to Mrs. Lane.

"From the situation of the parties, and the circumstances surrounding them, it seems to us that the jury were fully justified in saying that the testator made the required declaration to Nichols, and we think their verdict should have been the same as to

Wakelee. They were present and together during both events of executing and attesting the will, and the conduct of the testator upon that occasion amounted to a declaration that the instrument was his will and testament. Such also is the meaning of the attestation clause, and this, upon such a question, may be referred to Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369; Chaffee v. Baptist Missionary Convention, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 85; 40 Am. Dec. 225. It is not in the usual form, but recites that 'as witnesses to this last will and testament of Frederick F. Lane, we have signed our names . . . by his request, in his presence, and in the presence of each other.' The request covers the act of the parties, and embodies a description of the instrument when declaring the character in which the witnesses attest it. It is as if the testator had said, I request you to sign as witnesses to my will. Two facts are involved, a statement of the paper, and a desire on his part. Such declaration may also be inferred from his conduct. He knew the paper was his will; he had directed its preparation; it was written in his presence, read to him and read by him. He had desired Wakelee's presence to witness the will, and, sitting by him, and by the other witness, after signing it, passes it to one for signature, and sees first that one to whom he had declared the paper to be his will, and then the other, sign as attesting witnesses. For what purpose and with what intelligence this was done the jury have found; they say that at the time of the execution of the paper writing purporting to be the last will and testament of Frederick F. Lane, he fully comprehended the effect of his said act in so subscribing the same, and that (i. e., the effect of the act) of the subscribing witnesses thereto. They have said, moreover, that 'he then understood that this paper was his last will and testament,' and that the witnesses subscribed 'said paper purporting to be said will, as attesting witnesses, at the request of the testator.'

"We find no room for doubt or mistake. The testator knew, and the witnesses understood from his acts and conduct, as he intended they should, that the instrument then executed was his will. The statute upon this point exacts nothing more, and it is not denied by the respondent that on every other there was strict compliance with its terms. We find then that the testator subscribed the will in the presence of the witnesses, made known to them its nature, and requested their attestation. On his part nothing more was required, and on their part was attestation of the will at his request. Thus every safeguard prescribed by statute against improvidence and fraud was substantially observed."

Where both the subscribing witnesses to a will testified that they saw the testatrix sign the will, and that they became subscribing witnesses at her request, and one of them stated that a short time before the testatrix signed it, it had been put into her hands to read; that she read it, and then requested some one else to read it, and that S. then read it aloud in the presence of the testatrix and the witnesses; that about an hour afterwards the testatrix requested to have the will brought that she might sign it, and, on its being brought, she signed it, the subscribing witnesses attaching their signatures, upon her suggestion and at her request; and that the other subscribing witness testified that after the reading of the will the testatrix said "Bring me the will and I will write my name;" that after her signature had been completed, and those of the attesting witnesses had been attached, she declared she was glad it was done with and off her mind; and the will was thereupon folded up and handed to G. for safe keeping. It was held that this was a valid publication and execution of the will. Nipper v. Groesbeck, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 670.

In matter of McKenna's Will (Surrogate Ct.), 4 N. Y. Supp. 458, the lawyer who prepared the will of the decedent testified that he drew it according to orders, read it to the decedent, and asked him if it was right, and the decedent said that it was; that a third person was then called in as a witness, and the lawyer told the decedent to sign the will in their presence, which he did; that the decedent was then asked if he signed, sealed, published, and declared the paper to be his will, and requested them to sign their names as witnesses, and he said, "I do;" that the witnesses then signed their names and residences; and that he then handed the will to the decedent's wife. The other witness contradicted some of this testimony, but she manifested much hostility to the proponent, and admitted that she did not at the time regard the matter as of any importance. It was held that the will was properly executed.

In Denny v. Pinney, 60 Vt. 524, the testatrix and attesting witnesses severally signed a will in the presence of each other; and the scrivener announced to the witnesses, in the presence of the testatrix, that it was her will, and requested them to sign as witnesses, though the testatrix did not personally say it was her will. This was held a sufficient publication.

In Louisiana, to constitute a presentation of a will in the sense of the code, it is not necessary that it should be delivered to the witnesses by the testator with his own hand, and no particular words or set form of speech is necessary to constitute a declaration that the instrument is the testator's will.

It is sufficient if the will, having been written by another at the request of the testator and out of the presence of the witnesses, shall have been read aloud by one of the witnesses in the presence and hearing of the testator and of the other witnesses, and is then held towards the testator by the writer of it who asks, "Is this paper that has just been read your will?" and the testator answers, "It is," and it is then signed by the testator and is attested by the witnesses in his and their presence. Bourke v. Wilson, 38 La. Ann. 321.

The testator's requesting one of the witnesses to read the will, which was done; and then declaring that it was his will, was held, a sufficient presenting of the will to the witnesses to satisfy the requirements of the Louisiana statute. Buntin v. Johnson, 28 La. Ann. 796.

The answer "yes" to a question put as to one's testamentary intentions, was held as unequivocal manifestation of purpose as a declaration in full, formal words would be. Harrington v. Stees, 82 Ill. 50.

Where a testator is asked if the instrument is his will, and he answers in the affirmative, it is a sufficient declaration. Reeve v. Crosby, 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 74; Coffin v. Coffin, 23 N. Y. 15; 80 Am. Dec. 235; Matter of Voorhis' Will, 125 N. Y. 765. Compare Matter of Look's Will (Surrogate Ct.), 5 N. Y. Supp. 50; Larabee v. Ballard, 1 Dem. (N. Y.) 496. See also Pfarr v. Belmont, 39 La. Ann. 294.

So a declaration by the scrivener, in the presence of the testator, to the witness, "This is the will of A B and he desires you to witness it," has been held sufficient. Mundy v. Mundy, 15

"Signed, sealed, published, and declared," and, even if unnecessary, it is natural and prudent for the testator to make formal publication before the witnesses when they attest.¹ The failure of the witnesses to remember whether publication was made, does not defeat the will when the attestation clause recites the fact.² Publication may be established by the testimony of one attesting wit-

N. J. Eq. 290. See Elkinton v. Brick, 44 N. J. Eq. 154.

In Matter of Kane's Will (Surrogate Ct.), 20 N. Y. Supp. 123, it was held that the publication of a will is sufficiently established where it appears that the testatrix acknowledged to the witnesses that she had heard the will read, and it was signed by the attesting witnesses in the testatrix's presence, though at the request of the scrivener.

The words, "Will you witness my will?" or, "I want you to witness my will," addressed by the decedent to and heard by both the subscribing witnesses, constitutes a sufficient acknowledgment, declaration, and rogation. Matter of Harder's Will, 1 Tuck. (N. Y.) 426.

Where, after the testator had signed the will in the presence of the witnesses, one of them, in the presence of the other, asked if the paper was all right, and the testator replied, "That is all right, John, that is my will," it was held that the instrument was sufficiently declared to be the testator's last will. Ayres v. Ayres, 43 N. J. Eq. 566.

The declaration may be made to the attesting witnesses separately. Barry v. Brown, 2 Dem. (N. Y.) 309; Hoysradt v. Kingman, 22 N. Y. 372.

Holographic Wills.—While holographic wills are not excepted from the terms of the statute requiring and prescribing the method of publication, in case of such a will, criticism of the terms and manner of what is claimed to be a sufficient publication need not be so close or severe as where the question as to whether the testator knew that he was executing a will depends solely upon the fact of publication. In any case a substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient; the necessary information to the subscribing witnesses, as to the character of the instrument, may be given in any manner which conveys to their minds the testator's consciousness that it is a will. It is not essential to a valid publication that the words of publication be at the time complete in and of themselves. It is sufficient if the declaration is made definite and complete by reference on the part of the testator to a former conversation between him and the witness. Where, at the time of the execution of a will written by the testatrix, she said to one of the witnesses, "This is the paper I spoke to you about signing," referring to former conversations between them in which she had stated that she was going to make a will which she wished the witness to sign as a witness, and which the latter had promised to do, it was held this was a sufficient publication as to that witness. The other witness had been a witness to a former will which the testatrix had explicitly declared to be her will. She had also been advised by the testatrix that she desired to make an alteration therein, because of the sickness of A., the principal beneficiary. Being sent for by the testatrix she found her with the alleged will before her, and was asked by her if she would sign it on account of the sickness of A., the testatrix adding that she was sorry to trouble the witness "again to sign the paper." This was held a sufficient publication. Matter of Beckett's Will, 103 N. Y. 167. Matter of Dale's Will, 56 Hun (N. Y.) 169; Matter of Hunt, 110 N. Y. 281.

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 326.

2. Remsen v. Brinckershoff, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 325; 37 Am. Dec. 251.

But where the attestation clause was not read to or by the witnesses, of whom one did not remember that the character of the instrument was stated, while the other testified positively that the word "will" was not mentioned at the interview, although L. swore that he asked the decedent, in the witnesses' presence, whether he wished them to witness his "last will and testament," and received an affirmative answer, which conversation, however, was not shown to have been heard by the witnesses, it was held that probate must be refused for want of due publication. McCord v. Lounsbury, 5 Dem. (N. Y.) 68.

ness in opposition to the other, the presumption being in its favor.¹ In New Jersey, it has been held essential to good pleading to aver that the will was duly published by the testator in the presence of the required number of witnesses, although the contrary appears to have been the practice in England.² Whether the will

1. Auburn Theological Seminary v. Calhoun, 25 N. Y. 422.

2. Morehouse v. Cotheal, 21 N. J. L. 488. In this case the court, by Green, C. J., said: "The declaration avers that the will was in writing, but not that it was signed and published by the testator, in the presence of three subscribing witnesses. The authorities are very generally agreed that, in pleading a will, it must be pleaded to be in writing, pursuant to the Statute of Wills, 32 Hen. VIII. Anonymous, 2 Salk. 519, pl. 17; Birch v. Bellamy, 12 Mod. 540; 1 Saund. 276, note; 2 Bac. Abr. 'Stat.,' L. 3; Stephen's Plead. 332; Gould's Plead. IV., § 47. And both the early and the latter precedents conform to this requirement. The rule is stated to be, that when a statute makes writing necessary to a common-law matter, where writing was not necessary at common law, you need not plead the thing to be in writing; but where a thing is originally made by statute, and required to be in writing, you must plead it, with all the circumstances required by the act.

"If the principle be sound (and I do not find it anywhere questioned), it would seem to be equally necessary to state all the circumstances required by the original act, not only—but all the circumstances required by subsequent acts upon the same subject.

"We find it, accordingly, laid down that where the power to do an act was originally granted by a statute, it must be shown in pleading that the act was done according to the direction of the statute, and of every subsequent statute relative to the subject. If a will of lands be pleaded, it must be shown that the will is in writing, as by the 32d Hen. VIII., ch. 1 (by which power to make such will was first given) is directed. And it must likewise be shown that the requisites made necessary to the validity of such will by the 20th Car. II., ch. 3, have been complied with. Bac. Abr. 'Statutes,' L. 3.

"The same reasons," says Judge Gould, "which require a devise to be pleaded as being in writing, render it equally necessary to allege an observance of all the other requisites prescribed by statute as essential to its validity." These requisites being expressly made as indispensable to the validity of such instruments as writing itself. And hence, he who now pleads a devise, must aver not only that it is in writing, as provided by the Statute of Wills (32 Hen. VIII.), but also that it is signed and attested according to the provision of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II., ch. 2, § 5). For this latter enactment relating to the same subject-matter as that of the Statute of Wills, and being in effect only supplementary to it, is to be taken notice of in pleading, as if it formed a part of the elder statute. Gould's Pl. ch. IV., § 48.

"These authorities, standing uncontradicted, would seem to be decisive of the question, and yet it is worthy of notice that with a single exception, to be found in 2 Chitty 591, the precedents in the English books simply aver the will to be writing, without mention of the requisites prescribed by the statute of Charles. Greene v. Cole, 1 Saund. 250; 2 Saund. 234; 1 Lilly's Ent. 207; 3 Went. Pl. 492; 3 Chitty's Pl. 1361.

"The earlier and more authoritative precedents, to be found in Saunders, are prior in point of time to the Statute of Frauds, and of course shed no light directly upon the question; and yet it is remarkable that so distinguished and accurate a pleader as Sergeant Williams, in his notes to these precedents, written after the enactment of the Statute of Frauds, should have made no allusion whatever to the important changes introduced by this statute, if he regarded the statute as rendering the averment necessary. His statement that it is necessary to aver that the will is in writing, as required by the Statute of Wills, and his entire silence in respect to the requisites of the Statute of Frauds, would seem to be indicative of his opinion upon the point.

"In Everard v. Patterson, 6 Taunt. 645, one of the counsel is reported as saying, in argument, that 'though in an anonymous case it was once said that in pleading a will of land, it was necessary to show it was executed according was published before or after the subscribing witnesses signed it, is immaterial, provided publication and subscription are on the same occasion.¹

3. Acknowledgment.—Before the passage of 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 9, which applies to wills made after January 1, 1838, subscribing to the statute, because a will is wholly the creature of a statute, yet it is unnecessary so to do, and the practice is universally contrary.' 'To which' the report adds 'the court assented.'

"In a note to 2 Chitty's Pl. 591, it is said that it is not necessary in pleading a will to state that the solemnities required by the statutes against frauds have been observed, and the case of Davis v. Reeves, Vern. & Scriv. 497, is cited in support of the position.

"Whatever doubts may be created by this conflict of opinion as to the proper practice under the English statutes, none I think, can exist under our act. In this state the same statute, and the same clause of the statute, which requires the will to be in writing, requires also that it should be signed and published in the presence of three subscribing witnesses. If it be necessary to aver in pleading the existence of the one requisite, it must be equally essential to aver the existence of the other. Both authority and precedent concur in this conclusion, that it is essential in good pleading to aver the will of real estate to be in writing, and I am of opinion that it is equally essential to aver that the will was signed and published by the testator, in the presence of three subscribing witnesses. If this were a new question I should be disposed to hold the declaration good, and adopting the views of an eminent legal tribunal upon an analogous point to say that it is enough in pleading to aver that the land was devised by will, without averring that the will was executed in pursuance of the requirements of the statute, because it could not be such a will as to pass the title, unless it conformed to all the requirements of the statute. Elliott v. Cowper, 1 Stra. 609.

"But I cannot disregard the uniform practice of two hundred years, and sitting here I do not feel myself at liberty to say anything calculated to disturb it.

"Upon this point I am of opinion that judgment must be for the demurrant."

1. Doe v. Roe, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 200; Jackson v. Jackson, 39 N. Y. 153; Matter of Collins, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 20. See

Matter of Dale's Will, 56 Hun (N. Y.) 169; Walsh v. Laffan, 2 Dem. (N. Y.) 498.

The clear intent of the statute, so far as respects publication, is that the testator shall not sign the will at one time or on one occasion, and at another time, or on another occasion, declare it to be his will. Both must be done at the same time, on the same occasion; but which shall be done first in the order of time—whether the testator shall declare the instrument he is about to sign to be his last will and testament, or shall first subscribe the paper, and then make the declaration of his purpose—is immaterial. It is enough that the two things are not done at different times. Doe v. Roe, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 200. See also Gamble v. Gamble, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 373.

The decedent who was ill was asked by L. what he intended to do with his money, and he replied that he would leave a certain sum to his sister. L. withdrew from the room, wrote a short will, signed the decedent's name, and, together with C., signed the paper as witnesses, returned, and read it aloud to the decedent, who, thereupon, signed his name. The whole paper was read, inclusive of the names of the attesting witnesses, and both the reading and the signature by the decedent were in the presence of the witnesses. It was held that the instrument was validly executed as a last will and testament. The witnesses may be said to have signed at the decedent's request, when, their names having been read over to him and seen by him, he signed the document. The reading aloud followed by the act of signature, constituted a testamentary declaration. The particular order of the several requisites to the valid execution of a testament is not at all material, provided they be done at the same time and as part of the same transaction. What is the same time and the same transaction is the subject of judicial determination, in each particular case, depending upon the facts, and incapable of being governed by any general rule. Vaughan v. Burford, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 78.

witnesses were unnecessary to the validity of wills of personalty.¹ In regard to devises of realty, the Statute of Frauds² required that a will of lands should be signed by the devisor, or by some other person, in his presence and by his express direction, and "attested and subscribed in his presence by three or four credible witnesses."³ Under this provision it was held unnecessary for the testator actually to sign the will in the presence of the subscribing witnesses, but that any acknowledgment before them, either of the will⁴ or the signature, made their attestation and subscription complete; and furthermore, that a due acknowledgment in fact did not require the use of the words "This is my will," or "This is my signature," or other equivalent expression, provided the testator's conduct was such as to amount, in common understanding and reasonable construction, to an acknowledgment that the instrument was his will or that the signature was his, although the witnesses did not see the signature and were not aware of the nature of the instrument.⁵ The fact that the attestation clause distinctly

1. Wms. on Exrs. (8th Eng. ed.), pt. I, bk. II, ch. II, § II; Brett v. Brett, 3 Add. 224.

2. 29 Car. II., ch. 3, § 5.

3. Wms. on Exrs. (9th ed.) 116.

4. Ellis v. Smith, 1 Ves. Jr. 11; Addy v. Grix, 8 Ves. Jr. 504; Morison v. Tournour, 18 Ves. Jr. 175.

5. White v. British Museum, 6 Bing. 310. See Johnson v. Johnson, 1 C. & M. 140; Wright v. Wright, 5 M. & P. 319; 7 Bing. 457; Butler v. Benson, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 526; Raudebough v. Shelley, 6 Ohio St. 307; Buckhout v. Fisher, 4 Dem. (N. Y.) 277; In re Porter, 9 Mackey (D. C.) 493.

In White v. British Museum, 6 Bing. 310, it was held that a will of lands subscribed by three witnesses, in the presence and at the request of the testator, was sufficiently attested within the Statute of Frauds, although none of the witnesses saw the testator's signature, and only one of them knew what the paper was. In this case the court, by Tindal, C. J., said: "It has been held in so many cases that it must now be taken to be settled law, that it is unnecessary for the testator actually to sign the will in the presence of the three witnesses who subscribe the same; but that any acknowledgment before the witnesses that it is his signature, or any declaration before them that it is his will, is equivalent to an actual signature in their presence, and makes the attestation and subscription of the witnesses complete. . . . The objection, therefore, to the execution of the present will, does not rest upon the fact that it was not signed by W. White in their presence; but that with respect to two of the witnesses, Hormslow and Bristow, there was no acknowledgment of his signature, nor any declaration that it was his will; but that they signed their names in entire ignorance of the nature of the instrument, or of the object for which their names were written. And it is argued that if such subscription of their names satisfies the intention of the statute, the word attested will have no force whatever, and may be considered as if it had never been inserted.

"The question, however, appears to us to be, whether, upon this special verdict, the finding of the jury establishes, although not an acknowledgment in words, yet an acknowledgment in fact, by the devisor to the subscribing witnesses, that this instrument was his will? For if, by what the devisor has done, he must, in common understanding and reasonable construction, be taken to have acknowledged the instrument to be his will, we think the attestation of the will must be considered as complete, and that this case falls within the principle and authority of that of Ellis v. Smith, 1 Ves. Jr. 11.

"In the execution of wills, as well as that of deeds, the maxim will hold good 'non quod dictum, sed quod factum est, inspicitur.'

"Now, in the first place, there is no doubt upon the identity of the instru-sets forth that the instrument is the testator's will has been held in itself a sufficient acknowledgment, although the witnesses did not see the signature, and were not otherwise informed as to the nature of the instrument.¹ Under the Statute 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 9, which provides that "the signature shall be made or acknowledged by the testator," it has been held that there is no sufficient acknowledgment unless the witnesses either saw or might have seen ment. The paper in question is the very paper writing which was produced by the testator to the three witnesses. The great object of the direction of the statute, that witnesses shall subscribe in the presence of the deviser, was to prevent the possibility of the witnesses returning to his hands any other instrument than the very instrument which he delivered to them to attest. This object has been attained in the present case, and the identity of the instrument is beyond dispute. In the next place, it appears from the special verdict that the deviser was conscious himself that this instrument was his will. For the verdict finds that he was of sound and disposing mind, both at the time he signed it himself, and also at the time when the witnesses subscribed their names.

"But further it appears from the inspection of the instrument set out in the special verdict, that the signature of the three names could not possibly inure to charge themselves, or any other person, and could not have been done for any other purpose, whatever, than simply to make them witnesses to the will. And, lastly, it appears, from the same inspection, that immediately above the names of the witnesses there was written, in the handwriting of the testator, these words, 'In the presence of us as witnesses thereto,' which do amount to a clear and unequivocal indication of the testator's intention that they should be witnesses to his will.

"When, therefore, we find the testator knew this instrument to be his will; that he produced it to the three persons and asked them to sign the same; that he intended them to sign it as witnesses; that they subscribed their names in his presence, and returned the same identical instrument to him, we think the testator did acknowledge in fact, though not in words, to the three witnesses, that the will was his. For whatever might have been the doubt upon the true construction of the statute, if the case were res integra, yet, as the law is now fully settled that the testator need not sign his name in the presence of the witnesses, but that a bare acknowledgment of his handwriting is a sufficient signature to make their attestation and subscription good within the statute, though such acknowledgment conveys no intimation whatever, or means of knowledge, either of the nature of the instrument, or the object of the signing, we think the facts of the present case place the testator and the witnesses in the same situation as they stood where such oral acknowledgment of signature has been made, and we do, therefore, upon the principle of those decisions, hold the execution of the will in question to be good within the statute."

In Dudleys v. Dudleys, 3 Leigh (Va.) 436, the testator's will was written for him by R. P., who testified that he also signed the testator's name thereto, in the presence of, and at the request of the testator, and then subscribed his own name as a witness in the testator's presence; and another witness, B. H., testified that some years afterwards, the witness being at the testator's house, it was suggested to the testator that that was a favorable time to have that will witnessed; the testator assented; the paper in question was produced; the witness took it near to the testator, and inquired whether he acknowledged it; the testator said he did, upon which, this witness subscribed as a witness in the testator's presence. It was held that, the acknowledgment of the paper by the testator to the second witness was a recognition of the signature thereto as his own, and evidence from which a court of probate might well infer that the testator's signature to the will was written by his authority; and so there were two witnesses to the execution of the will, as required by the statute.

1. Eelbeck v. Granberry, 2 Hayw. (N. Car.) 232; 2 Am. Dec. 624; Wright v. Wright, 5 M. & P. 319 n. But see Matter of Van Geison, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 5, criticised in Matter of Graham, 30 N. Y. St. Rep. 292.

the signature,¹ although the testator expressly declared that the paper to be attested by them is his will,² but that where the testator produces the will with his signature on the face of it visibly

1. Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *108; In re Harrison, 2 Curt. 863; Ilott v. Genge, 3 Curt. 160; 4 Moo. P. C. C. 265; In re Swinford, L. R., 1 P. & D. 631; Morrill v. Douglass, L. R., 3 P. & M. 1; Pearson v. Pearson, L. R., 2 P. & M. 451.

2. Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *108; Hudson v. Parker, 1 Rob. 14; 8 Jur. 786; Shaw v. Neville, 1 Jur. N. S. 408; Goods of Gunstan, 7 Prob. Div. 102.

Two persons, present at the same time, subscribed a paper at the request and in the presence of a party who told them it was his will. They did not see him sign it, nor did he acknowledge any signature, the writing on the paper being concealed from them. It was held, that the 9th section of 1 Vict., ch. 26, had not been complied with. Hudson v. Parker, 8 Jur. 786. The court, by Dr. Lushington, said: "Now, before reading the words of that statute applicable to the present case, it may be expedient to consider what are the rules of construction to be used as guides in ascertaining its meaning. The first and cardinal rule is this: Is there any plain and evident meaning arising from the words used, taking them in their ordinary acceptation in conjunction with known rules of grammar? If there be no difficulty in arriving at a rational meaning in conformity to these principles, there is nothing more to be done; for nothing is more contrary to sound reason or safe principle, than to attempt, by the exercise of ingenuity, to attach to words a far-fetched meaning contrary to common sense and common perception. If there be any doubt after applying these simple rules, in ascertaining the intention of the legislature, the next step is, upon consideration of the whole statute, to determine its character, and especially whether it be remedial or not, and then cautiously to use the rules which authority has prescribed as the truest expositors of a statute of that character. Thirdly, it is expedient, where there have been no decisions as to the statute in question, to examine with care decisions which have taken place as to preceding statutes in pari materia; but great caution is necessary in the use of such last materials, for the minutest diversity of words may make a distinction, or such decisions may be founded on erroneous principles, and, if so, however sanctioned by use, are not to be implicitly followed. There are, of course, many other known rules of construction, which, as occasions arise, may advantageously be followed; but, for the present purpose, those referred to may suffice. The words of which we now wish to understand the meaning are the following: 'Such signature shall be made or acknowledged by the testator in the presence of two or more witnesses present at the same time.' The previous part of the clause having required the signature to be affixed 'at the foot of the will,' the section goes on, 'and such witnesses shall attest and shall subscribe the will in the presence of the testator, but no form of attestation shall be necessary.' First, then, as to the plain meaning of these words, 'that the signature of the testator shall be made in the presence of two witnesses;' will the statute be satisfied if the signature be made in their presence, if they are in ignorance of the fact? I am of opinion, under such circumstances, that the statute is not complied with. It is obvious that the solution of this question must mainly depend on the meaning which the legislature intended to convey by the use of the word 'presence' in this and in the other clauses of the statute. What could possibly be the object of the legislature, except that the witnesses should see and be conscious of the act done, and be able to prove it by their own evidence? If the witnesses are not to be mentally as well as bodily present, they might be asleep, or intoxicated, or of unsound mind. Again, how is the signature so made to be proved, except by parol evidence?—to exclude which was one great object of the statute. In support of this view of the question, let us call to mind how the word 'presence' is received in its common acceptation.

"Loquendum est ut vulgus, says Lord Coke (4 Rep. 47). If, in the course of common conversation, a person wishes to support the truth of a statement, does he not say, 'Such a one was present, and he will vouch for the truth?'

If a statement be questioned, does not a person say, 'I was present, and can attest its correctness?' And does not the whole world understand by this mental, not bodily, presence? Would not a contrary construction lead to absurdity, and defeat the plain intention of the statute? Then, if the witnesses are to be cognizant of the making of the signature when the execution is in that form, must they not see and be cognizant of the signature when the will is to be executed in the alternative form, by acknowledging the signature? The alternative form of execution by acknowledgment is to answer the same purpose; it is to be equivalent in effect to actual signing; and ought not the acknowledged signature to be proved by the same mode of evidence, namely, by the subscribing witnesses? What is the plain meaning of acknowledging a signature in the presence of witnesses? What do the words import but this: 'Here is my name written, I acknowledge that name so written to have been written by me,—bear witness?' How is it possible that the witnesses should swear that any signature was acknowledged unless they saw it? They might swear that the testator said he acknowledged a signature, but they could not depose to the fact that there was an existing signature to be acknowledged. It is quite true that acknowledgment may be expressed in any words which will adequately convey that idea, if the signature be proved to have been then existent; no particular form of expression is required either by the word 'acknowledge,' or by the exigency of the act to be done. It would be quite sufficient to say, 'that is my will,'—the signature being there, and seen at the time,—for such words do import an owning thereof. Indeed, it may be done by any other words which naturally include within their true meaning acknowledgment and approbation. Still further to elucidate the question, . . . will proceed to consider the remaining part of the section: 'Such witnesses shall attest, and shall subscribe the will in the presence of the testator.' Here are two things which the witnesses are to do, they are to attest, and they are to subscribe; mark the words,—shall attest, and shall subscribe; the word 'shall' is repeated. Subscription alone will not do,—it will not satisfy the statute; and it is a well established rule that you are to give, if possible, a rational meaning to every word of a statute. Then, if 'attest' means something more than subscription, what does it mean? 'To attest,' is to bear witness to a fact. Take a common example: A notary public attests a protest, he bears witness not to the statements in that protest, but to the fact of the making of those statements; so I conceive the witnesses in a will bear witness to all that the statute requires attesting witnesses to attest, namely, that the signature was made or acknowledged in their presence. The statute does say, 'That no form of attestation shall be necessary;' still the witnesses must attest, although the outward work of attestation may be subscription only. If more be wanted to explain the meaning of the word 'attest,' the old form of attestation clause will show that it comprehended more than bare subscription of the will itself. It has been held, in the execution of a power, that subscription is merely the form of bearing witness to the facts required by the instrument creating the power; it was so held in Doe v. Burdett, 7 Scott N. C. 66. If this be so, how shall a witness attest who never was cognizant of the signature of the testator, or whether it was made before or after his own subscription? Now, lest this should appear a harsh construction of the statute, let us look to its whole purview, in order to ascertain its legal character. I apprehend that it is a remedial statute, standing on the same principles as the Statute of Frauds, which, as its name denotes, was passed partly for the object of preventing the setting up of fraudulent wills of real estate. The present statute was intended to effect the same object as to wills of personal estate, and to secure further objects, especially that the testamentary act to be done should be deliberate, and that no doubt should exist as to its finality. The safeguards provided by the act are contained in the 9th section. To relax such provisions would be to break up the foundation of the statute, which, being a remedial statute, must according to the soundest rules of construction, be so interpreted as to prevent the evil and advance the remedy. Upon what principle could this be done? It is said, by the equity of the statute,—by the substitution of supposed equivalents. Perhaps I do not altogether comprehend so accurately as I might do what is meant by the equity of the statute; it may be apparent to the witnesses, and requests them to subscribe it, an express acknowledgment of the signature itself is unnecessary.¹

something which the ordinary meaning of its words does not express, something which the legislature has not said, but which they might have said had they so intended, and which some persons are, therefore, inclined to put into the statute, because they think that, had attention been called to it, the legislature would have done so. I must here express my cordial concurrence in the opinion of Lord Tenterden, in the case cited by Dr. Nicholl; the very words it is not necessary to state at length, but it is quite clear that Lord Tenterden was satisfied in his own mind of the infinite mischief which has resulted from judges, in the constructions which have been put on various statutes, departing from the plain import of words, in order to soften the rigor of particular enactments, which appeared harsh and strict when applied to particular cases. That opinion is of great value, and it is not the opinion of Lord Tenterden alone, but of many high legal authorities, who have at various times expressed their disapprobation of such a mode of construction. I next proceed to inquire, whether the decisions under the Statute of Frauds, and those which have taken place under this present Statute of Wills, militate against, and how far such decisions ought to control, my opinion. In the first place, the decisions under the Statute of Frauds which have any reference to this case arise upon a section of an act differently worded in some respects, and, so far as this difference makes a distinction, I am clearly exonerated from the duty of following them. In the next place, where these decisions are founded on great and acknowledged principles, it would be folly and presumption to depart from them; but, if the force and efficacy of the Statute of Frauds has, step by step, been departed from by a series of decisions, each departing from the plain import of the act, and if such departure, although fettering the judgments of great legal authorities, has been lamented by them as encroachments upon the statute, I am not prepared to say, that, in the exposition of the present statute, such decisions are now absolutely binding. If the contrary were the case, what would it be but to perpetuate a mode of construction which so many of the lights of the law have lamented and deplored, as being counter to the soundest rules for the construction of statutes? What would it be but to shut the door upon experience, and to canonize error; and, instead of improvement, to combine the failures of the past with the failures of the present? It would be to adhere to the admitted errors of those who have gone before, and to adopt one of the most fallacious modes of solving difficulties."

This case was approved and followed in Goods of Gunstan, 7 Prob. Div. 102, where it was held that to constitute a sufficient acknowledgment, within section 9 of the Wills Act, the witnesses must at the time of the acknowledgment see, or have the opportunity of seeing, the signature of the testator, and, if such is not the case it is immaterial whether the signature is, in fact, there at the time of attestation, or whether the testator says that the paper to be attested is his will, or that his signature is inside the paper.

Whether the witnesses either actually saw the signature, or had the opportunity of seeing it, is to be determined by the court from the circumstances of the particular case, in the absence of positive evidence one way or the other. Goods of Huckvale, L. R., 1 P. & D. 375; Goods of Gunstan, 7 Prob. Div. 102; Gwillim v. Gwillim, 3 S. & T. 200; Cooper v. Bockett, 4 Moo. P. C. C. 419. Compare Goods of Hammond, 3 S. & T. 90; Goods of Archer, L. R., 2 P. & M. 252.

1. 1 Wms. on Exrs. (9th Eng. ed.) 122; Gaze v. Gaze, 3 Curt. 451; Blake v. Knight, 3 Curt. 547; Keigwin v. Keigwin, 3 Curt. 611; In re Davis, 3 Curt. 748; In re Ashmore, 3 Curt. 756; In re Bosanquet, 2 Rob. 577; In re Dinmore, 2 Rob. 641; Goods of Huckvale, L. R., 1 P. & D. 378; Daintree v. Butcher, 13 Prob. Div. 102.

The following decisions have been made with regard to acknowledgment under the Victorian statute:

"(a) The signature to be acknowledged may be made by the testator, or by another for him. In re Regan, 1 Curt. 908.

"(b) A testator, whether speechless or not, may acknowledge his signature by gestures. In re Davies, 2 Rob. 337.

In nearly all the states of the union, acknowledgment is the recognized substitute for signing in the presence of the witnesses,¹ and where the will was signed by another than the testator, it has been

And see Parker v. Parker, Milw. Ir. Eccl. Rep. 545.

"(c) There is no sufficient acknowledgment unless the witnesses either saw or might have seen the signature. (In re Harrison, 2 Curt. 863; Ilott v. Genge, 3 Curt. 160; 4 Moo. P. C. C. 265; 8 Jur. 323; Goods of Swinford, L. R., 1 P. & D. 631. And see Faulds v. Jackson, 6 No. Cas. Sup. 1,) not even though the testator should expressly declare that the paper to be attested by them is his will. Hudson v. Parker, 1 Rob. 14; 8 Jur. 786; Shaw v. Neville, 1 Jur. N. S. 408; Beckett v. Howe, L. R., 2 P. & D. 1, is contra: sed qu.

"(d) When the witnesses either saw or might have seen the signature, an express acknowledgment of the signature itself is not necessary, a mere statement that the paper is his will, In re Davis, 3 Curt. 748; In re Ashmore, 3 Curt. 756; 7 Jur. 1045; Gwillim v. Gwillim, 3 S. & T. 200; 29 L. J. P. 31; Goods of Huckvale, L. R., 1 P. & D. 375; or a direction to them to put their names under his, In re Philpot, 3 No. Cas. 2; Gaze v. Gaze, 3 Curt. 451; 7 Jur. 803. (And see other cases cited by Lord St. Leonard's R. P. Stat., p. 338 et seq.; Wms. on Exrs., pt. I, bk. II, ch. II, § II;) or even a request by the testator, Keigwin v. Keigwin, 3 Curt. 607; 7 Jur. 840; or by some person in his presence, In re Bosanquet, 2 Rob. 577; Faulds v. Jackson, 6 No. Cas. Sup. 1; In re Jones, 1 Deane 3; 1 Jur. N. S. 1096; Inglesant v. Inglesant, L. R., 3 P. & D. 172. But see Morritt v. Douglass, L. R., 3 P. & D. 1, to sign the paper, is sufficient.

"(e) When the signature is seen or expressly acknowledged, it is not material that the witnesses are not told that the instrument is a will. Keigwin v. Keigwin, 3 Curt. 607; 7 Jur. 840; Faulds v. Jackson, 6 No. Cas. Sup. 1; or are deceived into thinking that it is a deed. Sugd. R. P. Stat., p. 340. But see the observations of Sir H. J. Fust in Willis v. Lowe, 5 No. Cas. 432.

"(f) It is of course sufficient, on a re-execution, merely to acknowledge the signature made on a former execution. In re Dewell, 17 Jur. 1130." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *108.

1. Chase v. Kittredge, 11 Allen

(Mass.) 49; 87 Am. Rep. 687; Ela v. Edwards, 16 Gray (Mass.) 91; Sechrest v. Edwards, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 163; Reed v. Watson, 27 Ind. 443; Adams v. Field, 21 Vt. 256; Cravens v. Faulconer, 28 Mo. 19; Parramore v. Taylor, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 220; Rosser v. Franklin, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 1; 52 Am. Dec. 97; Webb v. Fleming, 30 Ga. 808; 76 Am. Dec. 675; Yoe v. McCord, 74 Ill. 33; Crowley v. Crowley, 80 Ill. 469; Abraham v. Wilkins, 17 Ark. 292; Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220; Canada's Appeal, 47 Conn. 450; In re Convey's Will, 52 Iowa 197; Stirling v. Stirling, 64 Md. 144; Welch v. Adams, 63 N. H. 344; 56 Am. Rep. 521; Allen v. Griffin, 69 Wis. 529; Deering's Cal. Civ. Code, § 1276. See Crittenden's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 50; Taney's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 210; Allison v. Allison, 46 Ill. 61; 92 Am. Dec. 237; Eelbeck v. Granberry, 2 Hayw. (N. Car.) 232; 2 Am. Dec. 624; Baskin v. Baskin, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 200; Van Hooser v. Van Hooser, 1 Redf. (N. Y.) 365; Beane v. Yerley, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 239; Sutton v. Sutton, 5 Harr. (Del.) 459; Rigg v. Wilton, 13 Ill. 15; Beall v. Mann, 5 Ga. 456; Gaither v. Gaither, 20 Ga. 709; Vernon v. Kirk, 30 Pa. St. 218; Denton v. Franklin, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 28; Nickerson v. Buck, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 332; Butler v. Benson, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 526; Robins v. Coryell, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 556.

In Roberts v. Welch, 46 Vt. 164, it was held that although it is not necessary that the testator should sign the will in the presence of the witnesses, and it would be enough that he declared the instrument which the witnesses were called to attest, to be his will, or his instrument, which he wished them to attest, yet it is necessary that the subscribing witnesses should know the character of the act which they are called upon to perform; and that, by affixing their names to the instrument, they are thereby attesting the execution thereof by the testator.

In Matter of Simmon's Will (Supreme Ct.), 9 N. Y. Supp. 352, it was held that under 3 New York Rev. Stat. (7th ed.), p. 2285, § 40, requiring a testator to sign his will in the presence of the attesting witnesses, or to acknowledge the signature to each of them, and held unnecessary that the testator should state in his acknowledgment that the other person signed the instrument at his request.¹ In some states, as is the case in Massachusetts and others, in which the local statute is framed upon the Statute of Frauds, the English decisions under that act are of authority, and it has been held that the validity of the acknowledgment will depend upon the conduct of the testator, rather than his language, and that anything which amounts in common understanding and reasonable construction to an acknowledgment that the instrument is his will or the signature is his, is sufficient, although the witnesses did not know what the paper was, and did not see the signature.² In to declare at the time that the instrument subscribed is his last will, probate of a will is properly revoked when the name of the testator was not signed in the presence of either of the attesting witnesses, and he did not acknowledge the signature to be his to either of them, and did not declare the instrument to be his last will and testament beyond answering "Yes" to the question of one of the witnesses as to whether the testator and his wife were making their wills.

In Matter of Merchant's Will, 1 Tuck. (N. Y.) 151, it was held, that though the signature to the will was not written with the testator's own hand, it was competent for him, under the statute, to have made it his, and to have "subscribed" the document, in contemplation of law, by acknowledging his name written there by another person. The testator need not have touched the paper with his own hand or with the point of his own pen, if the subscription of his name thereto be adopted by his acknowledgment and declaration.

Utah.—Signing and acknowledging in the presence of witnesses are both necessary. Comp. Laws (1888), § 2651.

Pennsylvania.—The statute in this state requires the will to be "proved by oaths or affirmations" of two or more competent witnesses, and neither subscription nor acknowledgment is necessary. Purd. Dig. (11th ed.), p. 1710, ¶ 6.

New Jersey.—See In re Alpaugh, 23 N. J. Eq. 507; Combs v. Jolly, 3 N. J. Eq. 625; Den v. Mitton, 12 N. J. L. 70; Mickle v. Matlack, 17 N. J. L. 86; Ludlow v. Ludlow, 35 N. J. Eq. 480; In re McElwaine, 18 N. J. Eq. 449.

In Illinois, it is immaterial whether the attesting witnesses were present when the testator signed the will, if he acknowledged it as his will and requested them to sign as witnesses. Holloway v. Galloway, 51 Ill. 159.

1. Haynes v. Haynes, 33 Ohio St. 598; 31 Am. Rep. 579. See Rosser v. Franklin, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 1; 52 Am. Dec. 97.

2. Hogan v. Grosvenor, 10 Met. (Mass.) 56; 43 Am. Dec. 414; Osborn v. Cook, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 532; 59 Am. Dec. 155; Ela v. Edwards, 16 Gray (Mass.) 92; Tilden v. Tilden, 13 Gray (Mass.) 110; Allison v. Allison, 46 Ill. 61; 92 Am. Dec. 237; Turner v. Cook, 36 Ind. 129; Canada's Appeal, 47 Conn. 450; Flood v. Pragoff, 79 Ky. 607; Allen v. Griffin, 69 Wis. 529; Haynes v. Haynes, 33 Ohio St. 598; 31 Am. Rep. 579. See Adams v. Norris, 23 How. (U. S.) 353; Raudebaugh v. Shelley, 6 Ohio St. 307; Leverett v. Carlisle, 19 Ala. 80; Nickerson v. Buck, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 332.

In Canada's Appeal, 47 Conn. 450, the trial judge charged that if the subscribing witness, "from the effects of intoxication, or from any other cause, was ignorant of the nature and character of the instrument he was signing, and was not informed and did not know that it was intended as a will, but ignorantly put his name to it merely because he was told to do so, without comprehending the nature and character of the transaction, the document was not legally executed as a will." This was held to be error, the court, by Pardee, J., saying: "The statute requires a will to be 'in writing, subscribed by the testator, and attested by three witnesses, all of them subscribing in his presence and in the presence of each other.' The charge declares the law to be, that the signature of a testator to a will is not duly attested unless at the time of attestation the attesting witness knows that the instrument is a will. This attributes too much meaning to the word 'attestation;' more than has been given to it by courts which have been called upon to define it where used in similar statutes. . . . The primary reason for the presence of the witness is not that he has known the testator long or intimately; not that he is required to use or have any skill in detecting the presence of insanity or other forms of mental disease or weakness; not that he is to have any opportunity for discovering the fraudulent scheme which has culminated in the act of the testator. If the presence of one or three witnesses provides any degree of security against the procurement of a will from a competent testator by fraud, or against the procurement of one from a testator without mental capacity, it is an incidental benefit; it was not in the mind of the law; that only intended that the witness should be able, with a great degree of certainty at all times, possibly at a great length of time after his attestation, to testify that the testator put his name upon the identical piece of paper upon which he placed his own. He identifies the paper by the conjunction of the two signatures, not the character of the contents; only the paper, whatever the contents may prove to be."

New York, where the statute requires subscription in the presence of the attesting witnesses "or an acknowledgment of the making of the same to them," it has been held, in analogy to the English

The fact that the testator produced his will with his name upon it for attestation, and requested the witnesses to sign it, has been held sufficient. Green v. Crain, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 252; Denton v. Franklin, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 28; Small v. Small, 4 Me. 220; 16 Am. Dec. 253; Tilden v. Tilden, 13 Gray (Mass.) 110; Nickerson v. Buck, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 342; Rucker v. Lambdin, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 230; Rav v. Walton, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 74; Higgins v. Carlton, 28 Md. 117; 92 Am. Dec. 666; Eelbeck v. Granberry, 2 Hayw. (N. Car.) 232.

But in Luper v. Werts, 19 Oregon 122, it was held that mere silence was insufficient.

Illinois.—The Illinois statute does not require the acknowledgment of a will by the testator to be in language. Any act, which indicates the same thing with unmistakable certainty, is sufficient; nor is it necessary that the attesting witnesses to a will should actually see the testator sign it; it is a sufficient acknowledgment of it by him, where, in the hearing of the testator and the witnesses, the attesting clause is read, reciting that he had executed the instrument as his will, and the testator thereupon handed the subscribing witnesses the pen, and saw them sign as such, although the testator uttered not a word during the whole time the witnesses were present. In matters of this character, clear and explicit acts are to be regarded, rather than mere form. Allison v. Allison, 46 Ill. 61; 92 Am. Dec. 237.

Missouri.—Under a statute which is nearly a transcript of the Statute of Frauds, it has been held that there must be some declaration by the testator that the paper was his will, and a communication made by him to the witnesses that he desires them to attest it as such. But this need not be verbal. An act or a sign is enough. If the scrivener says this to the witnesses in the presence of the testator, it will do. The witnesses must know that it is the will of the testator, and witness it at his request. Odenwaelder v. Schorr, 8 Mo. App. 458. See also Grimm v. Tittman, 113 Mo. 56.

South Carolina.—Where the will was attested by the three subscribing witnesses at different times, the one of the three who attested in the presence but not very near the testatrix, did not see her sign the will, nor hear her acknowledge her signature. It was held that the will was not proved. Tucker v. Oxner, 12 Rich. (S. Car.) 141.

Vermont.—It is not necessary that a testator should sign his will in the presence of the subscribing witness thereto. It is sufficient if he declares the instrument which the witnesses are called upon to attest to be his will, which he wishes them to attest. But it is necessary that the witnesses know the character of the act which they are called upon to perform, and that, by affixing their names to instrument, they are thereby attesting the execution thereof by the testator. They must subscribe their names animo testandi, and in the presence of each other. Roberts v. Welch, 46 Vt. 164.

decisions under the Statute of Victoria, that the witness must either see or have the opportunity of seeing the signature,¹ but

1. Matter of MacKay's Will, 110 N. Y. 611; Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220. See Baskin v. Baskin, 36 N. Y. 416; Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 67 N. Y. 409.

Where, therefore, it appeared that, at the time of the alleged publication of an instrument presented for probate as a last will, the decedent stated to the witnesses that he had sent for them to sign his last will; that he then presented the instrument, stating that it was his will and was all ready awaiting their signatures, but he handed it to the witnesses so folded that they could not, and they did not, see his signature or any part thereof except the attestation clause, it was held that the will was not properly executed. Matter of MacKay's Will, 110 N. Y. 611. In this case the court, by Earl, J., said: "There would undoubtedly have been a formal execution of the will in compliance with the statutes if the witnesses had, at the time, seen the signature of the testator to the will. Subscribing witnesses to a will are required by law, for the purpose of attesting and identifying the signature of the testator, and that they cannot do unless at the time of the attestation they see it. And so it has been held in this court. In Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 221, where the alleged will was not subscribed by the testator in the presence of the witnesses, and when they signed their names to it, it was so folded that they could not see whether it was signed by him or not, and the only acknowledgment or declaration made by him to them or in their presence as to the instrument was: 'I declare the within to be my will and deed,' it was held that this was not a sufficient acknowledgment of his subscription to the witnesses, within the statute. In that case Allen, J., writing the opinion, said: 'A signature neither seen, identified, or in any manner referred to as a separate and distinct thing, cannot, in any just sense, be said to be acknowledged by a reference to the entire instrument by name to which the signature may or may not be at the time subscribed.' In Mitchell v. Mitchell, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 97; affirmed, in this court, in 77 N. Y. 596, the deceased came into a store where two persons were and produced a paper and said: 'I have a paper which I want you to sign.' One of the persons took the paper and saw what it was and the signature of the deceased. The testator then said: 'This is my will, I want you to witness it.' Both of the persons thereupon signed the paper as witnesses under the attestation clause. The deceased then took the paper and said: 'I declare this to be my last will and testament,' and delivered it to one of the witnesses for safe-keeping. At the time when this took place, the paper had the name of the deceased at the end thereof. It was held that the will was not properly executed for the reason that one of the witnesses did not see the testator's signature, and as to that witness there was not a sufficient acknowledgment of the signature or a proper attestation. It is true that in Willis v. Mott, 36 N. Y. 491, Davies, C. J., writing the opinion of the court, said that 'the statute does not require that the testator shall exhibit his subscription to the will at the time he makes the acknowledgment. It would, therefore, follow that when the subscription is acknowledged to an attesting witness it is not essential that the signature be exhibited to the witness.' This is a mere dictum, unnecessary to the decision in that case, and, therefore, cannot have weight as authority. The formalities prescribed by the statute are safeguards thrown around the testator to prevent fraud and imposition. To this end the witness should either see the testator subscribe his name, or he should, the signature being visible to him and to them, acknowledge it to be his signature. Otherwise imposition might be possible and sometimes the purpose of the statute might be frustrated."

Where the subscription to a will was not made by the testatrix in the presence of the attesting witnesses, nor of either of them; neither was it acknowledged by her to them, or either of them; and to one of the attesting witnesses there was no declaration by the testatrix, or anyone in her presence, that the instrument was her will, it was held that the requirements of the statute in respect to execution were neither formally nor substantially complied that when a testator produces a paper to which he has personally affixed his signature, plainly apparent, requests the witnesses to attest it, and declares it to be his last will and testament, it is a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute.¹ In New Jersey, there is a similar provision which would probably receive a like construction.²

4. Sealing.—Sealing, except in Nevada, where the statute provides that the will shall be sealed by the testator's seal,³ is unnecessary,⁴ unless the will is executed by virtue of a power with. Baker v. Woodbridge, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 261.

After testator had signed his will, he went with the draftsman to the store of one of the attesting witnesses, where, after he had declared it to be his will, he laid it on a table for the witnesses to sign. The will was folded, but in such way that the signature, as well as the attestation clause, was in sight of the witnesses. The attestation clause recited the testator's acknowledgment of his signature to both the witnesses, but (16 years having elapsed) neither witness was certain that the testator did so acknowledge it. The draftsman, however, swore positively that he did. It was held that it was properly executed. Matter of Lantry's Will (Supreme Ct.), 5 N. Y. Supp. 501.

1. Baskin v. Baskin, 36 N. Y. 416; Gilbert v. Knox, 52 N. Y. 125; Matter of Look (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 208; Matter of Austin, 45 Hun (N. Y.) 1. Compare Matter of Van Geison, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 5; Matter of Simmon's Will (Supreme Ct.), 9 N. Y. Supp. 352; Matter of Trenor's Estate (Surrogate Ct.), 4 N. Y. Supp. 466.

In Baskin v. Baskin, 36 N. Y. 418, Porter, J. said: "The subscription and publication of a testamentary instrument are independent facts, each of which is essential to its complete execution. (2 New York Rev. Stat. 63, § 40.) The requirement that the first shall be made or acknowledged in the presence of each of the witnesses who attest it, is to identify and authenticate the instrument as one subscribed by the party. The requirement of publication in presence of each is to prevent imposition upon the testator by procuring him to execute and acknowledge a will or codicil, under pretense that it is a paper of a different nature. The two prerequisites are distinct in their nature, as well as their purpose, and an omission to comply with either is fatal to the validity of the instrument. There must be satisfactory proof of the subscription and publication of the will in the presence of two witnesses. In respect to the subscription, it is sufficient that it be either made, or acknowledged, in the presence of those who attest it. If it be unsigned, it is no will; and in that case, publication and attestation are alike unavailing. If signed by another than the testator, and the signature be purposely concealed from his view and that of the attesting witnesses, the mere publication of the instrument as his last will and testament cannot fairly be deemed an acknowledgment that the unseen subscription was made by his direction. Chaffee v. Baptist Missionary Convention, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 91; 40 Am. Dec. 225; Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220; Rutherford v. Rutherford, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 33; 43 Am. Dec. 644. When, however, the testator produces a paper, to which he has personally affixed his signature, requests the witnesses to attest it, and declares it to be his last will and testament, he does all that the law requires. It is enough that he verifies the subscription as authentic, without reference to the form in which the acknowledgment is made; and there could be no more unequivocal acknowledgment of a signature thus affixed, than presenting it to the witnesses for attestation, and publishing the paper so subscribed as his will." See also Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 67 N. Y. 409.

2. Ludlow v. Ludlow, 35 N. J. Eq. 489. Compare Booth v. Timoney, 3 Dem. (N. Y.) 416; 6 N. Y. Supp. 41.

3. Nevada Gen. Stat. (1886), § 3002.

A similar provision once existed in New Hampshire, but has been repealed. Gen. Laws (1878), ch. 193, § 6; Act. of Sept. 30, 1887.

4. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 78; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 309; Ketchum v. Stearns, 8 Mo. App. 66; Doe v. Pattison, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 355; requiring such paper to be under hand and seal, in which case it is essential to a valid execution of the power.¹

Sealing is not signing, and does not cure the want of signature by testator² or subscription by witnesses.³

5. Attestation and Subscription—a. DISTINGUISHED.—Attestation consists in the act of witnessing the performance of the statutory requirements to valid execution. Subscription is the signing of the witnesses' names upon the same paper, for the sole purpose of identification, and implies that attestation has been performed. The one is mental, the other mechanical; there may be perfect attestation without subscription.⁴

b*. IN THE ABSENCE OF LEGISLATION.—In the absence of legislation, attestation and subscription are unnecessary.⁵

Matter of Diez's Will, 50 N. Y. 88; Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 452. See Wright v. Wakeford, 17 Ves. 434; Williams v. Burnett, Wright (Ohio) 53; Smith v. Evans, 1 Wils. 313; Platt v. McCullough, 1 McLean (U. S.) 69; Grubbs v. McDonald, 91 Pa. St. 236; Avery v. Pixley, 4 Mass. 460; Hight v. Wilson, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 94; Rohrer v. Stehman, 1 Watts (Pa.) 442.

1. Dormer v. Thurland, 2 P. Wms. 506. See Hight v. Wilson, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 94; Arndt v. Arndt, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 256; Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 439; POWERS, vol. 18, p. 920 et seq.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 78; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 307; Smith v. Evans, 1 Wils. 313; Wright v. Wakeford, 17 Ves. 434; Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 452.

3. Goods of Byrd, 3 Curt. 117.

Tearing off Seal—Revocation.—Tearing off the seal has been held to work a revocation. Avery v. Pixley, 4 Mass. 462.

4. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 109, 110; Ricketts v. Loftus, 4 Y. & C. 519; Swift v. Wiley, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 117. See Hudson v. Parker, 1 Rob. 14; 8 Jur. 788; Burdett v. Spilsbury, 10 Cl. & F. 340; Freshfield v. Reed, 9 M. & W. 404; Gerrish v. Nason, 22 Me. 441; 39 Am. Dec. 589; Reed v. Watson, 27 Ind. 448.

Attestation and Subscription Distinguished.—In Swift v. Wiley, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 117, Robertson, C. J., said: "To attest the publication of a paper as a last will, and to subscribe to that paper the names of the witnesses, are very different things, and are required for obviously distinct and different ends. Attestation is the act of the senses, subscription is the act of the hand; the one is mental, the other mechanical, and to attest a will is to know that it was published as such, and to certify the facts required to constitute an actual and legal publication; but to subscribe a paper published as a will, is only to write on the same paper the names of the witnesses, for the sole purpose of identification. There may be a perfect attestation in fact, without subscription."

Where by the terms of a power the instrument by which it is executed is to be sealed and delivered in the presence of, and attested by, two or more credible witnesses, it is sufficient prima facie evidence of attestation if on the instrument there appears an indorsement to the effect that it has been sealed and delivered in the presence of two persons, although such two persons are not named as witnesses, either in the body of the instrument or the attestation. Ricketts v. Loftus, 4 Y. & C. 519.

5. Such at least is the case in Pennsylvania, under a statute which requires the will to be "proved by the oaths or affirmations of two or more competent witnesses." Purd. Dig. (11th ed.) 1710, ¶ 6, and notes. Rohrer v. Stehman, 1 Watts (Pa.) 463.

In Frew v. Clarke, 80 Pa. St. 170, it was held sufficient to prove the signature, although there were no subscribing witnesses, and only one of the witnesses called had actually seen the testator sign.

Moreover, the witnesses who prove the will need not be those who signed it. Rohrer v. Stehman, 1 Watts (Pa.) 463; Hight v. Wilson, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 94; Arndt v. Arndt, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 256.

In England, prior to the passage of 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 9, in 1837, wills of personality required neither attestation nor

c. EFFECT OF LEGISLATION.—Under the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II, ch. 3, § 5, a will of lands must be “attested and subscribed in the presence of the deviser by three or four credible witnesses.”¹ The Statute of Victoria, 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 9, extended the same rule to wills of personalty by providing that no will made on or after January 1, 1838, should be valid unless the signature be “made or acknowledged by the testator in the presence of two or more witnesses present at the same time,” who are to attest and subscribe the will “in the presence of the testator,” no particular form of attestation, however, being necessary.² In all the states of the Union except Pennsylvania, the local statute requires wills of real or personal property to be attested and subscribed by witnesses to pass any estate.³ In most states, with the exception of New York and New Jersey, whose wills acts bear a strong analogy to the Statute of Victoria, the local wills act seems framed upon the model of the Statute of Frauds, rather subscription. High, Appellant, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 515; Leathers v. Greenacre, 53 Me. 561; Parker v. Brown, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 554.

And this is the law in the United States in the absence of statutes to the contrary. McGrews v. McGrews, 1 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 30; Ex p. Henry, 24 Ala. 638; Hilliard v. Binford, 10 Ala. 977; Mealing v. Pace, 14 Ga. 596; Leathers v. Greenacre, 53 Me. 561; High, Appellant, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 515; Marston v. Marston, 17 N. H. 503; 43 Am. Dec. 611; Brown v. Shand, 1 McCord (S. Car.) 409; McGee v. McCants, 1 McCord (S. Car.) 517. See also Lake v. Warner, 34 Conn. 483; Plater v. Grome, 3 Md. 142; Guthrie v. Owen, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 207; 36 Am. Dec. 311.

In regard to such wills it is said: “Wills and codicils of personal estate need not any witness of their publication. See Allen v. Hill, Gieb. Rep. 260; Wright v. Walthoe, and other cases cited in Simbrey v. Mason, Comyns’ Rep. 452; Cunningham v. Ross, 2 Cas. temp. Lee 478. Custody is a sufficient publication of them, Miller v. Brown, 2 Hagg. 211; although it is safer and more prudent, and leaves less in the breast of the ecclesiastical judge, if they be published in the presence of witnesses. 2 Bl. Com. 502. Indeed, some of the older authorities have been supposed to lay it down that such a publication before two sufficient witnesses is absolutely necessary. 1 Roberts on Wills 183. But on a closer inspection of the passages cited, as containing such a doctrine, it should seem that in some, Bracton, lib. 2, f. 61; Fleta, lib. 2, f. 125, such publication is only recommended; while in others, Swimb. pt. 1, § 3, pl. 13; Godolph. pt. 1, ch. 21, § 1, it is meant not that the will must be proved by two witnesses present at its publication, but that two witnesses are necessary for the due proof of a testament, as they are for the proof of any other fact by the rules of the civil law. Still less are any subscribing witnesses necessary for the giving full force and effect to a mere testament. Brett v. Brett, 3 Add. 224.” Wms. on Exrs. (8th ed.), pt. I, bk. II, ch. II, § II.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (8th ed.) 77.

2. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), Appendix, p. 691.

3. Lawson Rights, Rem. & Pr., vol. 6, § 3173; Stimson’s Am. Stat. Law 2644; 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 77 note 1, by Randolph and Talcott; Sutton v. Sutton, 5 Harr. (Del.) 459; Owens v. Bennett, 5 Harr. (Del.) 367; Hooks v. Stamper, 18 Ga. 471; Rigg v. Wilton, 13 Ill. 15; Doe v. Pattison, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 355; In re Boyens, 23 Iowa 354; Devecmon v. Devecmon, 43 Md. 335; Rose v. Allen, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 23; Davis v. Davis, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 546. Compare Rossetter v. Simmons, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 452.

A will of personalty wholly in the handwriting of the testator, and subscribed by him, is valid in the District of Columbia, without the attestation of subscribing witnesses or other formality. McIntire v. McIntire, 8 Mackey (D. C.) 482. See also Morris v. Morton (Ky. 1892), 20 S. W. Rep. 287.

than the Victorian Statute.¹ In regard to the number of witnesses required and slight variations in detail, the local statute should be consulted.²

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 77, note 1; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 319. And see the statutes of the various states.

2. Instances Where the Strictness of the Law Has Been Relaxed as to Number of Subscribing Witnesses.—In Maryland it has been held that where a will made two years and a half after the enactment of an act of parliament relating to frauds and perjuries of 29 Charles II., was not executed in the presence of the prescribed number of witnesses, it was not thereby rendered invalid, since it was executed before the publication of the statute in that province, and before the making of the Act of Assembly directing the manner of pleading the laws of England in the commissary's court, and also in the infancy of the country, when evidences were harder to come by than now. Clayland v. Pearce, 1 Harr. & M. (Md.) 29. See also Castro v. Castro, 6 Cal. 158, where the strictness of the rules of the civil law was relaxed in favor of remote districts.

A will made in the country in the presence of only four witnesses residing in the place is valid, where, from the violence of the testator's sickness and the distance at which other credible witnesses resided, a larger number could not be obtained. Henriette v. Duplessis, 3 La. Ann. 658; Graves v. Graves, 10 La. Ann. 212.

Where More than Required Number Subscribe.—Where the statute requires only two subscribing witnesses, a will subscribed by three, one of whom is incompetent, is valid. Ackless v. Seekright, 1 Ill. 76. See also Carroll v. Norton, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 291.

Whether All Subscribing Witnesses Need Be Called at Probate.—In the absence of special statutory requirement, less than the required number of subscribing witnesses may suffice to establish the bill at probate. Thus, in Virginia, though the statute requires at least two witnesses to a will, it may be proved by one of them, he proving the attestation of the other. Lamberts v. Cooper, 29 Gratt. (Va.) 61.

So, in Connecticut, where the statute requires three witnesses, the court said, in Field's Appeal, 36 Conn. 279: "To prove the execution of the will merely, the statute does not expressly require the examination of all the witnesses, nor do we think such requirement is necessarily implied. It is true the statute authorizing the proof of wills at the time of their execution, or afterwards, before the death of the testator, seems to require that all the witnesses should be sworn; but that is a special provision, applying only to such cases, and was not designed as a rule to govern the action of the court of probate or the superior court. Nor does the fact that three competent witnesses are required, authorize the inference that all must be produced and examined. The argument in behalf of the appellants, in this part of the case, seems to confound the attestation with the method of proving the attestation. The attestation is only complete when made by three witnesses. When so made, it may be proved, upon common-law principles, by one credible witness. We see no reason or propriety, therefore, in requiring the testimony of all the witnesses for the purpose of proving the mere act of signing and attesting the will."

It has been held that a will with two witnesses is sufficient to pass real property in Kentucky, but the will may be proved by the evidence of one. Davis v. Mason, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 503; Harper v. Wilson, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 465; Griffith v. Griffith, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 511.

In Mickle v. Matlack, 17 N. J. L. 86, it was held that although three subscribing witnesses are necessary to the attestation of will of real estate in New Jersey, one of them is sufficient to prove its execution.

See further, on this point, Lindsay v. M'Cormack, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 229; 12 Am. Dec. 387; Turner v. Turner, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 101; Hall v. Sims, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 509; Overall v. Overall, 1 Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 501; Welch v. Welch, 2 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 83; 15 Am. Dec. 126; Walker v. Hunter, 17 Ga. 364; Barney v. Chittenden, 2 Greene (Iowa) 165; Crusoe v. Butler, 36 Miss. 150; Graham v. O'Fallon, 3 Mo. 507; Jackson v. Thompson, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 178; McKeen v. Frost, 46 Me. 239; Deakins v. Hollis, 7 Gill & J. (Md.)

d. EFFECT OF UNSIGNED ATTESTATION CLAUSE IN JURISDICTIONS IN WHICH SUBSCRIPTION IS UNNECESSARY.—In jurisdictions in which subscribing witnesses are not essential to the validity of the will, an unsigned attestation clause raises a presumption that the testamentary intention never took full effect.¹ This presumption, however, is based upon the theory that the incomplete execution shows an incomplete purpose, and may be repelled by slight evidence showing that the testator did in fact intend it to operate without an attestation, or was prevented by act of God from completing the instrument to which his mind had fully and finally assented.²

311; Whitenack v. Stryker, 2 N. J. Eq. 8; Bailey v. Stiles, 2 N. J. Eq. 220; Wyckoff v. Wyckoff, 16 N. J. Eq. 401; Den v. Mitton, 12 N. J. Eq. 70; Jackson v. Van Dyke, 1 N. J. L. 29; Harrison v. Burgess, 1 Hawks (N. Car.) 384; Doe v. Springs, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 180; Brown v. Beaver, 3 Jones (N. Car.) 516; 67 Am. Dec. 255; Hight v. Wilson, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 94; Watkins v. Watkins, 13 Rich. (S. Car.) 66. Compare Jackson v. Vickory, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 406; 19 Am. Dec. 522; Evans v. Evans, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 402; Lewis v. Maris, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 278; Hylton v. Brown, 1 Wash. (U. S.) 298; Weigel v. Weigel, 5 Watts (Pa.) 486; Hock v. Hock, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 47.

The practice of the ecclesiastical courts, however, was to require at least two witnesses to prove a will of personality. Wms. on Exrs. (8th ed.), pt. I, bk. II, ch. II, § II.

In Pennsylvania, the will must be proved by two witnesses, under the act of April 8, 1833. Purd. Dig. (11th ed.) 1710, § 6; Rossetter v. Simmons, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 452.

In Mississippi, it has been held that a will of personality may be proved by one witness. Kirk v. State, 13 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 406.

So in Tennessee, if there be no contest as to its validity. Rogers v. Winton, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 178.

It was held in Worsham v. Worsham, 5 Leigh (Va.) 589, that in Virginia, before the Statute of 1834-35, ch. 60, a testament of personal estate might be well proved by a single witness.

In Massachusetts, the testimony of one of the subscribing witnesses is sufficient to justify probate, if it appears to the satisfaction of the court that no one interested in the estate objects. Massachusetts Pub. Stat. (1882), ch. 129, § 1. But in case of contest, all required by the statute must be produced. Chase v. Lincoln, 3 Mass. 236.

In New York, it was held that a will executed previously to the revised statutes, although attested by only two witnesses, if the testator died after the statute went into effect, is sufficiently attested as a will of real estate. Lawrence v. Hebbard, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 252.

In South Carolina, it was held that a will executed in the presence of two subscribing witnesses is not such an execution under the statute as will pass real estate, although the penner of the will was present at the execution; and a codicil executed in the presence of two subscribing witnesses, one of whom was different from the two witnesses to the will, does not give effect to the will as to the real estate. Dunlop v. Dunlop, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 305.

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 318; Beaty v. Beaty, 1 Add. 154; Walker v. Walker, 1 Meriv. 503; Scott v. Rhodes, 1 Ph. 19; Harris v. Bedford, 2 Ph. 177; Mathews v. Warner, 4 Ves. 186; Watts v. Public Administrator, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 168. See Jekyll v. Jekyll, 1 Cas. temp. Lee 419.

Holographic Wills.—The principle in the text has been held not to apply to holographic wills. Perkins v. Jones, 84 Va. 361; Brown v. Beaver, 3 Jones (N. Car.) 516; 67 Am. Dec. 255; Harrison v. Burgess, 1 Hawks (N. Car.) 384; Hill v. Bell, Phil. (N. Car.) 122; 93 Am. Dec. 583; contra, Power v. Davis, 3 McArthur (D. C.) 162.

As to the Maryland rule, see Devecmon v. Devecmon, 43 Md. 335; Plater v. Groome, 3 Md. 134; Brown v. Tilden, 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 371; Barnes v. Syester, 14 Md. 509.

If the attestation clause is signed by one witness, the presumption does not arise. In re Soher's Estate, 78 Cal. 477.

2. Buckle v. Buckle, 3 Ph. 323; Stew-

c. ESSENTIALITY OF ATTESTATION CLAUSE.—Provided the will is attested and subscribed as required by the local statute, a formal attestation clause is not essential to its validity.¹ It is sufficient that the witnesses subscribe animo attestandi, under or against the word "witnesses" or other corresponding expression, or simply subscribe their names without any such expression at all.²

art v. Stewart, 2 Moo. P. C. C. 193; Salteman v. Pennington, 3 Moo. P. C. C. 223; Goods of Gerram, 1 Hagg. 550; Goods of Thomas, 1 Hagg. 596; Goods of Edmonds, 1 Hagg. 698; Bragge v. Dyer, 3 Hagg. 207; Pett v. Hake, 3 Cart. 612; Watts v. Public Administrator, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 168.

A Slight Presumption.—The rule is, that the presumption, though slight, must be rebutted by some extrinsic evidence. Wms on Exrs. (8th ed.), pt. I, bk. II, ch. II, § II; Harris v. Bedford, 2 Ph. 178.

The fact that the testamentary paper was found sealed up at the death of the testator, in such a way as to indicate that he did not intend to open it again, has been held sufficient. Buckle v. Buckle, 3 Ph. 323.

Any recognition by the testator will suffice. Goods of Gerram, 1 Hagg. 550; Goods of Vauhagen, 1 Hagg. 478; Goods of Sparrow, 1 Hagg. 479.

A paper was propounded for probate as to personality, in which the testatrix, among other things, directed her executor to sell all her real estate in Washington county, Maryland, and apply the proceeds to the payment of certain specified legacies. It was written in her own hand and signed and sealed by her. There were no dates in it, blanks being left for the purpose, and there was an attestation clause in the usual form, but no witnesses. The paper was written about two years before her death, which occurred about two hours after a sudden attack, during which she was unconscious. She was a woman of intelligence, strong mind and will, of good business habits, and had been specially instructed by counsel as to the necessity of having three witnesses to a will to pass real estate. At the time this paper was written, she had real estate in Washington county, all of which she subsequently sold and disposed of, and was about to execute the necessary papers to consummate, in legal form, the disposition of a part of it, when she was overtaken by the sudden illness which resulted in her death. The paper was indorsed as her will and was found near the top of her traveling trunk, in the room at a hotel where she was staying at the time of her death, and this trunk also contained other papers, her watch, jewelry, and clothing. There was evidence that she had said frequently, that all persons should make wills, and that she intended to make hers, and that, at another time, she said she had made her will, but whether this last declaration had reference to this paper or to one that she had executed some years before, does not clearly appear. It was held that probate of this paper must be refused. An attestation clause without witnesses, makes the paper an unfinished testament, even when the party has signed it, and the presumption of law is against such papers, and though a slight presumption it must be rebutted by extrinsic circumstances before the paper can be admitted to probate. Barnes v. Syester, 14 Md. 507.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *85; Roberts v. Phillips, 4 El. & Bl. 450; Bryan v. White, 5 Eng. L. & Eq. 579. See Leaycraft v. Simmons, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 35; Baskin v. Baskin, 36 N. Y. 416; Jackson v. Jackson, 39 N. Y. 153; Chaffee v. Baptist Missionary Convention, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 85; 40 Am. Dec. 225; Ela v. Edwards, 16 Gray (Mass.) 97; Fatheree v. Lawrence, 33 Miss. 585.

Although the statute expressly requires that the attestation shall be in the presence of the testator, that fact must not necessarily be stated in the attestation, and it is sufficient if it can be proved by the attesting witnesses at the trial. Fatheree v. Lawrence, 33 Miss. 585.

2. Bryan v. White, 2 Robt. (N. Y.) 315; Roberts v. Phillips, 4 El. & Bl. 450; Fry's Will, 2 R. I. 88; Osborn v. Cook, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 532; 59 Am. Dec. 155. See Taylor v. Brodhead, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 624. See also Robinson v. Brewster, 140 Ill. 649.

f. ATTESTATION CLAUSE FOLLOWING OR PRECEDING SIGNATURE.—When the attestation clause follows the signature, it cannot be taken as a part of the will; but if inserted before the signature, it becomes a part of the instrument.¹

g. VALUE OF ATTESTATION CLAUSE AS EVIDENCE.—On the death or absence of subscribing witnesses, the attestation clause becomes prima facie evidence that the will was executed with the formalities therein recited;² while in case of a contest it is very

1. Jackson v. Jackson, 39 N. Y. 153; Younger v. Duffie, 94 N. Y. 540; 46 Am. Rep. 156.

2. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), §§ 346, 347; Jackson v. Jackson, 39 N. Y. 153; Ela v. Edwards, 16 Gray (Mass.) 97. See Tilden v. Tilden, 13 Gray (Mass.) 110; Barnes v. Barnes, 66 Me. 286; Taylor v. Brodhead, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 624; Walsh v. Walsh, 4 Redf. (N. Y.) 165; Matter of Cottrell, 95 N. Y. 329; Matter of Kellum's Will, 52 N. Y. 517; Rugg v. Rugg, 83 N. Y. 592; Matter of Hunt, 42 Hun (N. Y.) 434; In re Alpaugh, 23 N. J. Eq. 507; Farley v. Farley, 50 N. J. Eq. 434; Clarke v. Dunnivant, 10 Leigh (Va.) 14; Welch v. Welch, 9 Rich. (S. Car.) 133; Deupree v. Deupree, 45 Ga. 415.

The presumption of due execution may be rebutted. Rumsey v. Goldsmith, 3 Dem. (N. Y.) 494.

In England, a well-drawn attestation clause reciting proper formalities, enables the executor to obtain probate on his own oath. Wms. on Exrs. 93.

In Chaffee v. Baptist Missionary Convention, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 89; 40 Am. Dec. 225. Walworth, Ch., said: "An attestation clause, showing upon its face that all the forms required by the statute have been complied with, is not absolutely necessary to the validity of a will; as the witnesses will be permitted to prove that the forms were in fact all complied with, although the attestation clause is silent on the subject. Indeed it has been decided that a formality of this kind, not noticed in the attestation clause, may even be presumed by circumstances, after the witnesses to the will are dead. (Croft v. Pawlet, 2 Stra. 1109; Brice v. Smith, Willes 1; Hands v. James, Comyns' Rep. 531.) The statute does not require an attestation clause showing that the proper legal formalities were complied with; and although upon the face of the instrument those formalities are stated to have taken place, the fact may be disproved by the witnesses. But prudence requires that a proper attestation clause should be drawn, showing that all the statute formalities were complied with; not only as presumptive evidence of the fact in case of the death of the witnesses, or where from lapse of time they cannot recollect what did take place, but also for the purpose of showing that the person who prepared the will knew what the requisite formalities were, and therefore gave the proper information to the testator, or saw that they were complied with, if he was present. To impress the more strongly upon the memory of the witnesses the important fact that all the legal forms requisite to a due execution of the will were complied with, at the time when they subscribed their names as witnesses to such execution, the safer course always is to read over the whole of the attestation clause in the presence and hearing of the witnesses and of the testator. And where the person executing the will is not known to the subscribing witnesses to be capable of reading and writing, especially if he executes the will as a marksman, it would be proper that the whole will should be deliberately read over to him in the presence and hearing of the witnesses, and the fact of such reading in his presence should be stated in the attestation clause. Or at least the witnesses ought, by inquiries of the illiterate testator himself, to ascertain the fact that he was fully apprized of the contents of the instrument which he executed and published as his will, as well as that he was of competent understanding to make a testamentary disposition of his property. All these things, however, are matters of precaution and prudence, to prevent any well-founded doubt upon matters of fact; and where they are neglected, it does not necessarily render the will invalid, if the court or jury which is to pass upon the question of its validity is satisfied, upon the whole evidence, that the will was duly exepersuasive evidence that whoever directed the execution understood what formalities were needful and saw them pursued,¹ also the clause serves as a useful memorandum to aid the subscribing witnesses to recall what occurred at the time of execution.² A regular attestation clause shown to have been signed by the witnesses, and corroborated by the circumstances surrounding the execution or other competent evidence, has been held sufficient to establish the execution of a will duly signed by the testator, even against the positive testimony of the subscribing witnesses.³ But where there was nothing but a formal attestation

cuted, and that the testator understood its contents."

In Matter of Cottrell, 95 N. Y. 329, citing Blake v. Knight, 3 Curt. 547; Orser v. Orser, 24 N. Y. 55, the court, by Ruger, C. J., said: "The precise force which should be accorded to a full attestation clause regularly authenticated, is not very clearly defined in the cases, but they all agree in the conclusion that it is entitled to great weight in the determination of the question of fact involved."

1. Walworth, Ch., in Chaffee v. Baptist Missionary Convention, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 85; 40 Am. Dec. 225. See Gwillim v. Gwillim, 3 S. & T. 200; Goods of Huckvale, L. R., 1 P. & D. 375; Matter of Pepoon's Will, 91 N. Y. 255; Matter of Lantry's Will (Supreme Ct.), 5 N. Y. Supp. 501.

2. Roberts v. Phillips, 4 El. & Bl. 457; Taylor v. Brodhead, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 624.

3. Leach v. Bates, 6 No. Cas. 699; Matter of Cottrell, 95 N. Y. 330.

In proceedings for the probate of a will, the two persons purporting to have signed as subscribing witnesses testified that none of the formalities required by the statute in its execution were complied with in their presence, and denied that either of them was present at its execution or signed the attestation clause. Said clause was in due form, and it was proved that it, as well as the body of the will, was wholly in the handwriting of the testator; that the signature to the will was his; that the testator boarded with the alleged subscribing witnesses, who were husband and wife; that he had previously executed in due form another will, to which the husband was a subscribing witness; that the will in question was found among the papers of the testator after his decease; that during his last sickness he declared that his will,

which he described as executed with said persons as witnesses, was either among his papers or in the hands of his executor. Specimens of the handwriting of each of the subscribing witnesses were then put in evidence, and from a comparison thereof with the signatures to the attestation clause experts testified that such signatures were in the handwriting of said subscribing witnesses respectively. The surrogate found that the said witnesses signed the attestation clause, and that the will was properly executed. It was held that the evidence was sufficient to justify the findings, and the same were not reviewable here; that no greater weight could be given to that part of the testimony of the subscribing witnesses, denying that the requisite formalities were performed, than to that denying that they were present and signed, and if they were mistaken as to the latter, it was a reasonable conclusion that they were mistaken as to the former. Matter of Cottrell, 95 N. Y. 330. In this case the court, by Ruger, C. J., said: "The surrogate has found as a fact, upon conflicting yet competent evidence, that the subscribing witnesses to the will in question in fact signed the attestation clause.

"We thus have an holographic will, not only properly signed and executed by the testator, but also signed by the witnesses, and appearing upon its face to be entirely regular, and purporting to have been executed with all of the formalities and in the manner required by the law to make a good and valid will.

"The witnesses to the will have, by signing the attestation clause, certified to facts taking place upon its execution, directly conflicting with the evidence given by them upon the trial. To believe this evidence requires us to suppose that the testator deliberately forged the clause on one side and the adverse testimony of both subscribing witnesses on the other, probate was refused.¹ Where the names of witnesses to his will at a time and under circumstances when it was just as convenient for him to have obtained their genuine signatures thereto. Upon this evidence the surrogate has refused to give credit to their testimony, and must, we think, necessarily have found, for reasons appearing sufficient to him, that none of the evidence given by them was entitled to belief. While no motive or reason appears upon the face of the evidence incorporated in the record before us, for imputing corruption or perjury to the subscribing witnesses in giving such evidence, yet to believe what they testify to on the subject involves consequences so unnatural and improbable that we are constrained to hold that the surrogate was justified in discrediting their testimony.

"The affirmative evidence tending to show an omission on the part of the testator and witnesses to comply with the requirements of the law, in the execution of the will, having been thus discredited by the court below, it only remains to determine whether there was, within the rule, sufficient evidence of the facts to authorize the surrogate to find the due execution of the will.

"It would seem from the language of the code that proof of the handwriting of the testator, and of the subscribing witnesses, to a proper attestation clause, was regarded as the most important and conclusive fact on the trial of an issue as to a proper execution of a will. Such evidence, in connection with other circumstances tending to prove its due execution, would seem, within all the authorities, to justify a decree admitting it to probate, even against the positive evidence of the subscribing witnesses. It was always considered to afford a strong presumption of compliance with the requirements of the statute, in relation to the execution of wills, that they had been conducted under the supervision of experienced persons, familiar not only with the forms required by the law, but also with the importance of a strict adherence thereto. Chambers v. Queen's Proctor, 2 Curt. 415; Matter of Kelum's Will, 52 N. Y. 519; Gove v. Gawen, 3 Curt. 151; Peck v. Cary, 27 N. Y. 9; 84 Am. Dec. 220.

"We think that that presumption also arises in this case. The testator had not only once correctly gone through the ceremony of executing a will, but by drawing the attestation clause in question he had at the time necessarily brought before his mind each one of the conditions imposed by the statute as necessary to its valid execution. It is quite unreasonable to suppose that such a person, having drawn and signed a will, and having added thereto a proper attestation clause, should have provided witnesses therefor, and required them to sign a certificate to the effect that each of the required formalities had then been observed, without also providing for their actual performance. He had knowledge of the necessity of the act required, to the validity of the business he was then transacting, and to hold that he omitted it would oblige us to ascribe to him the intention of performing a vain and useless ceremony, at the expense of time and labor to himself and the commission of a motiveless crime. The presumptions arising from the certificate of the subscribing witnesses, and the supervision of an experienced person that the requisite formalities were complied with, are fortified by the acts and conduct of the testator. Nearly three years elapsed between the date of the will and the death of the testator, and he had, therefore, ample time and opportunity to supply any defects in its execution, if any existed, but at the last moment, when the subject of a will was brought to his attention, he evidently supposed that he had made a valid testamentary disposition of his property. It also appears that it was executed while the testator was living in the family of the alleged witnesses; that one of them had formerly acted in a similar capacity for him, and that they were both persons who, for convenience, as well as from their relations to the testator, would naturally have been selected as witnesses to a will drawn by himself, and whose execution he personally supervised. We think the various circumstances to which we have referred, in connection with the full and regular attestation clause in the handwriting of the testator, proved to have been signed by the witnesses, were sufficient to authorize the finding by the court below establishing the will."

1. Croft v. Croft, 4 S. & T. 10; Woolley v. Woolley, 95 N. Y. 231.

persuasive evidence that whoever directed the execution understood what formalities were needful and saw them pursued,¹ also the clause serves as a useful memorandum to aid the subscribing witnesses to recall what occurred at the time of execution.² A regular attestation clause shown to have been signed by the witnesses, and corroborated by the circumstances surrounding the execution or other competent evidence, has been held sufficient to establish the execution of a will duly signed by the testator, even against the positive testimony of the subscribing witnesses.³ But where there was nothing but a formal attestation

cuted, and that the testator understood its contents."

In Matter of Cottrell, 95 N. Y. 329, citing Blake v. Knight, 3 Curt. 547; Orser v. Orser, 24 N. Y. 55, the court, by Ruger, C. J., said: "The precise force which should be accorded to a full attestation clause regularly authenticated, is not very clearly defined in the cases, but they all agree in the conclusion that it is entitled to great weight in the determination of the question of fact involved."

1. Walworth, Ch., in Chaffee v. Baptist Missionary Convention, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 85; 40 Am. Dec. 225. See Gwillim v. Gwillim, 3 S. & T. 200; Goods of Huckvale, L. R., 1 P. & D. 375; Matter of Pepoon's Will, 91 N. Y. 255; Matter of Lantry's Will (Supreme Ct.), 5 N. Y. Supp. 501.

2. Roberts v. Phillips, 4 El. & Bl. 457; Taylor v. Brodhead, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 624.

3. Leach v. Bates, 6 No. Cas. 699; Matter of Cottrell, 95 N. Y. 330.

In proceedings for the probate of a will, the two persons purporting to have signed as subscribing witnesses testified that none of the formalities required by the statute in its execution were complied with in their presence, and denied that either of them was present at its execution or signed the attestation clause. Said clause was in due form, and it was proved that it, as well as the body of the will, was wholly in the handwriting of the testator; that the signature to the will was his; that the testator boarded with the alleged subscribing witnesses, who were husband and wife; that he had previously executed in due form another will, to which the husband was a subscribing witness; that the will in question was found among the papers of the testator after his decease; that during his last sickness he declared that his will,

which he described as executed with said persons as witnesses, was either among his papers or in the hands of his executor. Specimens of the handwriting of each of the subscribing witnesses were then put in evidence, and from a comparison thereof with the signatures to the attestation clause experts testified that such signatures were in the handwriting of said subscribing witnesses respectively. The surrogate found that the said witnesses signed the attestation clause, and that the will was properly executed. It was held that the evidence was sufficient to justify the findings, and the same were not reviewable here; that no greater weight could be given to that part of the testimony of the subscribing witnesses, denying that the requisite formalities were performed, than to that denying that they were present and signed, and if they were mistaken as to the latter, it was a reasonable conclusion that they were mistaken as to the former. Matter of Cottrell, 95 N. Y. 330. In this case the court, by Ruger, C. J., said: "The surrogate has found as a fact, upon conflicting yet competent evidence, that the subscribing witnesses to the will in question in fact signed the attestation clause.

"We thus have an holographic will, not only properly signed and executed by the testator, but also signed by the witnesses, and appearing upon its face to be entirely regular, and purporting to have been executed with all of the formalities and in the manner required by the law to make a good and valid will.

"The witnesses to the will have, by signing the attestation clause, certified to facts taking place upon its execution, directly conflicting with the evidence given by them upon the trial. To believe this evidence requires us to suppose that the testator deliberately forged the

clause on one side and the adverse testimony of both subscribing witnesses on the other, probate was refused.¹ Where the names of witnesses to his will at a time and under circumstances when it was just as convenient for him to have obtained their genuine signatures thereto. Upon this evidence the surrogate has refused to give credit to their testimony, and must, we think, necessarily have found, for reasons appearing sufficient to him, that none of the evidence given by them was entitled to belief. While no motive or reason appears upon the face of the evidence incorporated in the record before us, for imputing corruption or perjury to the subscribing witnesses in giving such evidence, yet to believe what they testify to on the subject involves consequences so unnatural and improbable that we are constrained to hold that the surrogate was justified in discrediting their testimony.

"The affirmative evidence tending to show an omission on the part of the testator and witnesses to comply with the requirements of the law, in the execution of the will, having been thus discredited by the court below, it only remains to determine whether there was, within the rule, sufficient evidence of the facts to authorize the surrogate to find the due execution of the will.

"It would seem from the language of the code that proof of the handwriting of the testator, and of the subscribing witnesses, to a proper attestation clause, was regarded as the most important and conclusive fact on the trial of an issue as to a proper execution of a will. Such evidence, in connection with other circumstances tending to prove its due execution, would seem, within all the authorities, to justify a decree admitting it to probate, even against the positive evidence of the subscribing witnesses. It was always considered to afford a strong presumption of compliance with the requirements of the statute, in relation to the execution of wills, that they had been conducted under the supervision of experienced persons, familiar not only with the forms required by the law, but also with the importance of a strict adherence thereto. Chambers v. Queen's Proctor, 2 Curt. 415; Matter of Kellum's Will, 52 N. Y. 519; Gove v. Gaven, 3 Curt. 151; Peck v. Cary, 27 N. Y. 9; 84 Am. Dec. 220.

"We think that that presumption also arises in this case. The testator had not only once correctly gone through the ceremony of executing a will, but by drawing the attestation clause in question he had at the time necessarily brought before his mind each one of the conditions imposed by the statute as necessary to its valid execution. It is quite unreasonable to suppose that such a person, having drawn and signed a will, and having added thereto a proper attestation clause, should have provided witnesses therefor, and required them to sign a certificate to the effect that each of the required formalities had then been observed, without also providing for their actual performance. He had knowledge of the necessity of the act required, to the validity of the business he was then transacting, and to hold that he omitted it would oblige us to ascribe to him the intention of performing a vain and useless ceremony, at the expense of time and labor to himself and the commission of a motiveless crime. The presumptions arising from the certificate of the subscribing witnesses, and the supervision of an experienced person that the requisite formalities were complied with, are fortified by the acts and conduct of the testator. Nearly three years elapsed between the date of the will and the death of the testator, and he had, therefore, ample time and opportunity to supply any defects in its execution, if any existed, but at the last moment, when the subject of a will was brought to his attention, he evidently supposed that he had made a valid testamentary disposition of his property. It also appears that it was executed while the testator was living in the family of the alleged witnesses; that one of them had formerly acted in a similar capacity for him, and that they were both persons who, for convenience, as well as from their relations to the testator, would naturally have been selected as witnesses to a will drawn by himself, and whose execution he personally supervised. We think the various circumstances to which we have referred, in connection with the full and regular attestation clause in the handwriting of the testator, proved to have been signed by the witnesses, were sufficient to authorize the finding by the court below establishing the will."

1. Croft v. Croft, 4 S. & T. 10; Woolley v. Woolley, 95 N. Y. 231.

attestation clause is clear and regular, the fact that subscribing witnesses, when called upon to prove the execution of the will, have forgotten the facts recited, is not alone sufficient to overcome the presumption of their truth.¹ So where one of the subscribing witnesses testifies in corroboration of the accuracy of the recitals in the attestation clause, the testimony of the other in suggestion of doubt or of his own want of recollection is not enough to justify the denial of probate.² In no case, however, will the presumption of compliance with the statutory formalities recited arise unless the will appears upon its face to have been duly executed.³

The attestation to the codicil to a will, presented for probate, was in due form, and beneath it were the signatures of the two witnesses, with their places of residence; one of them testified that he did not see the testatrix sign the codicil and did not think she acknowledged to him that she had signed it, that the signature beneath the attestation clause was his; that he did not know, but presumed the clause was there when he signed; that he signed in the presence of the testatrix and of the other witness at her request, and the other witness then signed in his presence; that he was a lawyer and knew it was not customary, unless the instrument was a will, to place the residence of a witness after his name. The other witness testified that one of the signatures following the attestation clause was hers; that she did not remember seeing the testator sign the paper; that the latter did not, in the presence of the witness, acknowledge it to be a codicil to her will, and the witness did not remember her saying anything about it. The witness further testified that she remembered signing and that the other witness was present and signed; that she signed at the request of the testatrix who said: "I have a paper here I want you to sign;" that she put her place of residence after her name, because the other witness told her it was necessary, or because she saw he had added his place of residence; that she knew the testatrix did not state it was a codicil, and that the witness did not know it was, but supposed she knew she was signing as a witness. The testimony was given within a year after the alleged codicil was executed. It was held that the testimony was insufficient to authorize the admission of the codicil to probate. Woolley v. Woolley, 95 N. Y. 231.

1. Meurer's Will, 44 Wis. 302; 28 Am. Rep. 591; O'Hagan's Will, 73

Wis. 78; Rugg v. Rugg, 83 N. Y. 592; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369; Matter of Pepoon's Will, 91 N. Y. 255; Rolla v. Wright, 2 Dem. (N. Y.) 482; Matter of Wright's Estate, 67 How. Pr. (N. Y. Surrogate Ct.) 117; Walsh v. Walsh, 4 Redf. (N. Y.) 165; Peck v. Cary, 27 N. Y. 9; 84 Am. Dec. 220; McCurdy v. Neall, 42 N. J. Eq. 333; Tappen v. Davidson, 27 N. J. Eq. 459. Compare Webb v. Dye, 18 W. Va. 376.

The witnesses to a will, the attestation clause to which was in due form, and which was executed more than fourteen years before the death of the testatrix, testified in substance that they had not a clear recollection of what occurred at the time of the execution, that they must have read or heard read and understood the purport of the attestation clause, as they never signed any document without knowing its contents, and that they would not have signed if the facts stated in said clause had not occurred; one of them also testified that the signatures of the testatrix and the two witnesses were made in the presence of each other, and that he recollected that the said clause was read or that he heard it read. It was held that the evidence justified the admission of the will to probate. Matter of Pepoon's Will, 91 N. Y. 256.

Proof by subscribing witnesses that they signed the will in the testator's presence and at his request, and that he declared it to be his will, although they could not recollect that he signed it in their presence, is sufficient. Leckey v. Cunningham, 56 Pa. St. 370.

2. McCurdy v. Neall, 42 N. J. Eq. 333. See Wright v. Rogers, L. R., 1 P. & M. 678. See also Matter of Bedell's Will (Surrogate Ct.), 12 N. Y. Supp. 96; Matter of Bernsee's Will, 71 Hun (N. Y.) 27.

3. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 347; 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.), § 86.

h. VALUE OF TESTIMONY OF SUBSCRIBING WITNESSES.—The testimony of a subscribing witness, in favor of the validity of the will he attested, is entitled to peculiar consideration; but his testimony against its validity should be viewed with suspicion.¹ While

The presumption is rebutted where it is shown that the names of the subscribing witnesses were fictitious, and in the testator's own handwriting. Goods of Lee, 4 Jur. (N. S.) 790.

1. Wright v. Rogers, L. R., 1 P. & M. 678; Weir v. Fitzgerald, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 42; Matter of Higgin's Will, 94 N. Y. 554; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369; Colvin v. Warford, 20 Md. 357; Abbott v. Abbott, 41 Mich. 540; Cheatham v. Hatcher, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 56; 32 Am. Rep. 650; Hughes v. Hughes, 31 Ala. 519. See Webb v. Dye, 18 W. Va. 376; Marx v. McGlynn, 88 N. Y. 357; Tilden v. Tilden, 13 Gray (Mass.) 110; Stephenson v. Stephenson, 62 Iowa 163; Matter of Nelson's Will (Supreme Ct.), 16 N. Y. Supp. 690; Needham v. Ide, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 510; Lawyer v. Smith, 8 Mich. 411; 77 Am. Dec. 460; Jackson v. Le Grange, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 386; 10 Am. Dec. 237; Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 483; 15 Am. Dec. 395; Orser v. Orser, 24 N. Y. 51; Crispell v. Dubois, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 393; Auburn Theological Seminary v. Calhoun, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 148.

Presumption of Validity of Will.—In proceedings for the probate of the will of H., it appeared that the testator presented the will, which was written by himself, to J., who drew the attestation clause and signed it as a subscribing witness, as did also S. The latter testified that the testator, in answer to questions of J., stated that the instrument was his last will and testament, and thereupon, at his request, the two witnesses signed their names in his presence and in the presence of each other, and that at that time it had been signed by the testator. J. testified he did not recollect all that occurred, but that the testator came to him with a paper which he thought was the one in question, and desired him to witness his will, and in answer to questions put by the witness he acknowledged it to be his last will and testament, and requested the witness and S. to sign, and both did so in the presence of the testator and of each other; that he could not swear the testator said that was his signature. It was held that the evidence sufficiently established the due execution of the will to authorize its admission to probate; and this, although other witnesses who were present contradicted the testimony of the subscribing witnesses. Higgin's Will, 94 N. Y. 554. In this case the court, by Miller, J., said: "It is insisted that the testimony of the subscribing witnesses was contradicted by persons who were present at the time. These witnesses had nothing to do with the execution of the will, were present accidentally, and, the presumption is, did not give the same attention to what transpired as the subscribing witnesses did. Their testimony must be taken, therefore, with considerable allowance and is not entitled to the same weight as the evidence given by those whose business it was, and who were called upon to witness the execution of the will."

In Wright v. Rogers, L. R., 1 P. & M. 678, the deceased signed his will in the presence of two witnesses, an attorney and his clerk, whose names were written at the foot of a full attestation clause. After the death of the deceased, an affidavit was required as to certain interlineations which appeared on the face of the will, and such affidavit was prepared by the clerk on a printed form, the blanks being filled in by him. This affidavit was sworn to by the attorney and contained the usual clause of due execution, more especially that the witnesses had signed their names in the presence of the deceased. After the death of the attorney, the clerk for the first time gave information that the will was not signed by the witnesses in the presence of the deceased, but in the attorney's office, and at the trial gave evidence to the same effect. No other witness, either to disprove or corroborate this statement, was produced. The court, on a review of all the circumstances, declined to act upon the recollection of the surviving witness, and decreed probate of the will, as duly executed.

In Matter of Boardman's Will (Surrogate Ct.), 20 N. Y. Supp. 60, one of the witnesses to the will offered for subscribing witnesses are the most proper to establish the execution of the will, and the failure to call one within reach, is a circumstance worthy of consideration, yet, in case of their death, non-residence, failure to remember the circumstances of the execution, or unfavorable testimony, the will may be established by other evidence.¹

probate, which had been executed ten years before, testified explicitly that the testator signed the will in the presence of both the witnesses, while the other had no definite recollection, but an impression that it was not signed by the testator in their presence, and that he did not observe his signature. It appeared that this witness had written the date of the will immediately preceding the signature of the testator, and could not have failed to observe its absence at the time. It was held that the probate of the will should be allowed.

A subscribing witness ought not to be allowed to testify that the instrument was executed merely to amuse the testator. Stephenson v. Stephenson, 62 Iowa 163.

1. Abbott v. Abbott, 41 Mich. 540; Howard's Will, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 199; 17 Am. Dec. 60; Cheatham v. Hatcher, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 56; 32 Am. Rep. 650; Eliot v. Eliot, 10 Allen (Mass.) 357; Cadams v. Oakley, 2 Dem. (N. Y.) 298; Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220; Reeve v. Crosby, 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 74; Spencer v. Moore, 4 Call (Va.) 423; Givin v. Green, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 99; Beadles v. Alexander, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 604. See also Hight v. Wilson, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 94. Compare Butler v. Benson, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 526; Newhouse v. Godwin, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 236; Wilson v. Hetterick, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 427.

In Abbott v. Abbott, 41 Mich. 542, the court, by Campbell, C. J., said: "We know of no rule of law which makes the probate of a will depend upon the recollection or even the veracity of a subscribing witness. The law, for wise and obvious reasons, requires such instruments to be executed and attested with such precautions as will usually guard against fraud. But if the forgetfulness or falsehood of a subscribing witness can invalidate a will, it would be easy in many cases to use such artifices or corruption as would render the best will nugatory. Their evidence is not conclusive either way, nor does the law presume that they are either more or less truthful than others.

It presumes they had, when they signed, full knowledge of what they were doing, and in case they are dead their attestation when proved is prima facie evidence that all was done as it should be. But in all contested will cases the case is open for general witnesses, and when the testimony is all in, each witness is credited according to the impression he leaves of candor and intelligence, and not according to his being or not being an attesting witness. Our statute does not in terms require all the subscribing witnesses to be sworn on a contest, except inferentially in the probate court. Comp. Law, §4339. This requirement, if it exists, is only implied, and we are not called on now to determine in what cases and to what extent it is imperative. The failure to produce such witnesses in the probate court or on appeal, if the witnesses were within the jurisdiction and could be reasonably produced, would be at least a very suspicious omission, which should have its weight. But where the will has once been admitted to probate, and that order is appealed from, and both witnesses are actually produced in court and examined, the failure to ask a particular question of one witness—when the door is wide open for cross-examination—does not deprive the contestant of the means of bringing out the knowledge or ignorance of such witness, and can do no practical harm to anyone."

Section 2620, New York Code of Civ. Proc., provides: "If all the subscribing witnesses to a written will are, or if a subscribing witness whose testimony is required, is dead, or incompetent, by reason of lunacy or otherwise, to testify, or unable to testify, or if such a subscribing witness is absent from the state, or if such a subscribing witness has forgotten the occurrence, or testifies against the execution of the will, the will may, nevertheless, be established upon proof of the handwriting of the testator and of the subscribing witnesses, and also of such other circumstances as would be sufficient to prove the will upon trial of an action." It was

i. KNOWLEDGE OF WITNESSES AS TO CONTENTS OR NATURE OF PAPER.—The subscribing witnesses need not know the contents of the paper they attest,¹ and, in the absence of statutes requiring publication,² need not even be informed that it is a will.³

j. ATTESTATION AS TO SANITY.—Since from the mere fact of attestation and subscription an inference arises that the subscribing witnesses were of opinion that the testator possessed testamentary capacity at the time of execution,⁴ a formal recital to that effect in the attestation clause may be dispensed with, in the absence of statutory requirements to the contrary.⁵

k. REQUEST TO WITNESSES TO SIGN.—The request to the witnesses to attest and subscribe the will may be implied from the testator's acts, gestures, or conduct, or, in fact, from anything which conveys to the witnesses the idea that he desires them to attest and subscribe the will.⁶ The request may even be made held that where the handwriting of a deceased witness is proven, and that the deceased witness wrote the name of the testatrix, who signed by her mark, and the surviving witness testifies that he saw the testatrix take the pen in her hand, and "sit down to the table and put the pen upon the paper," the execution of the will is sufficiently shown. Matter of Kane's Will (Surrogate Ct.), 20 N. Y. Supp. 123.

In Reeve v. Crosby, 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 77, it was held that on the probate of a will, other testimony than that of the subscribing witnesses might be adduced to prove its execution, although they were neither dead, non-resident, nor insane. See Auburn Theological Seminary v. Calhoun, 25 N. Y. 422; Peebles v. Case, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 226.

A contrary view appears to have been entertained in Graber v. Haaz, 2 Dem. (N. Y.) 216, under New York Code Civ. Proc., §§ 2618-2620.

1. Lawson Rights, Remedies, and Practice, vol. 6, § 3175; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 348; Schouler on Exrs. and Adms., § 75; Flood v. Pragoff, 79 Ky. 607; Higdon's Will, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 444; 22 Am. Dec. 84; Dickie v. Carter, 42 Ill. 376; Bott v. Wood, 56 Miss. 137; Leverett v. Carlisle, 19 Ala. 80; Baker's Appeal, 107 Pa. St. 381; 52 Am. Rep. 478; Linton's Appeal, 104 Pa. St. 228; Turner v. Cook, 36 Ind. 136. See also Allen v. Griffin, 69 Wis. 529.

2. See supra, this title, Formal Requisites—Publication.

3. Flood v. Pragoff, 79 Ky. 607; Osborn v. Cook, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 532; 59

Am. Dec. 155; Turner v. Cook, 36 Ind. 136. Compare Odenwaelder v. Schorr, 8 Mo. App. 458; White v. British Museum, 6 Bing. 310. But see Luper v. Werts, 19 Oregon 122.

See supra, this title, Formal Requisites—Acknowledgment. See also In re Porter, 9 Mackey (D. C.) 493.

4. Heyward v. Hazard, 1 Bay (S. Car.) 349; Withinton v. Withinton, 7 Mo. 592. See Field's Appeal, 26 Conn. 279; Stephenson v. Stephenson, 62 Iowa 163; Rucker v. Lambdin, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 230; Allison v. Allison, 46 Ill. 61; 92 Am. Dec. 237. Compare Whitenack v. Stryker, 2 N. J. Eq. 8; Heyward v. Hazard, 1 Bay (S. Car.) 349, the court said: "The true construction of the law under this head (attestation) had always been, that the act called the attention of the witnesses to the situation of the testator himself; and this particularly relates to his sanity. The witnesses are not called upon by the act to attest the mere factum of signing, but the capacity of the testator. The business, then, of the persons required by the statute to be present at executing a will, is not barely to attest the corporal act of signing, but to try, judge, and determine, whether the testator is compos to sign; that is, of a sound mind, as every will, upon the face of it, imports." But compare supra, this title, Formal Requisites—Acknowledgments.

5. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 349; Murphy v. Murphy, 24 Mo. 526. But see Withinton v. Withinton, 7 Mo. 589.

6. Crittenden's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 54; Higgins v. Carlton, 28 Md.

117; 92 Am. Dec. 666; Moore v. Moore, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 261; Allen's Will, 25 Minn. 39; Rogers v. Diamond, 13 Ark. 474; Allison v. Allison, 46 Ill. 61; 92 Am. Dec. 237; Coffin v. Coffin, 23 N. Y. 9; 80 Am. Dec. 235; Gilbert v. Knox, 52 N. Y. 125; Hutchings v. Cochran, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 295; Odenwaelder v. Schorr, 8 Mo. App. 458; Sequine v. Sequine, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 385; Brown v. De Selding, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 10; Payne v. Payne, 54 Ark. 415; Whitenack v. Stryker, 2 N. J. Eq. 9.

Where a will, prepared by the counsel of the decedent, pursuant to her directions, was handed to her by one of the subscribing witnesses, who stated that he came "to witness her signing her will" and the testatrix, having read it, declared it to be her will, signed it, and both witnesses subscribed their names in her presence, it was held that there was sufficient evidence of a request to the witnesses to attest the instrument. Hutchings v. Cochran, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 295. In this case Bradford, Sur., said: "There was no formal express request. But is it necessary the request required by the statute should be made by word of mouth? Certainly not; the letter of the statute does not define the mode in which the request must be made. It may be communicated by signs, or may be implied from the acts of the parties. When all the circumstances show the design of the testator to execute his will, his knowledge of the character of the instrument, and the purpose for which the witnesses attend, I am clearly of opinion that his signing the instrument, and acknowledging it to be his will, observing the witnesses sign, and then taking the executed paper into his own possession, without objection or comment, sufficiently establish and imply a request to the attesting witnesses to join in the necessary formalities. The request is contained in the present sanction then given to the act, by the conduct of the testator in signing and making the testamentary declaration, and in the recognition of the attestation, not only by acquiescence, but by taking custody of the paper after execution. Any other construction would be narrow, unreasonably literal and technical, and utterly repugnant to that good sense by which the conduct and actions of men should be judged and interpreted."

Accordingly, where one of the witnesses, in the presence and hearing of the other, whose attendance was by the testator's procurement, asked the testator, "do you request me to sign this [the paper lying before them] as your will, as a witness?" and the testator said "yes," it was held sufficient as a request to both the witnesses. Coffin v. Coffin, 23 N. Y. 9; 80 Am. Dec. 235. The court, by Comstock, C. J., said: "The statute requires two witnesses, each of whom must sign his name at the end of the will, at the request of the testator. Confining ourselves to the evidence of these two witnesses, the facts appear to be these: They were present at the testator's house on the day in question by his own procurement, and for the purpose, as there is reason to believe, of witnessing his will. When the instrument was ready for execution and attestation, they were summoned to the room where the matter was transacted. They came there, saw the testator subscribe his name, and signed their names as witnesses. Before doing so, one of them asked the testator if he requested him to sign the will as a witness; to which he answered in the affirmative. Both the witnesses then proceeded to sign; the draftsman denoting the place where their names were to be written. The testator, the draftsman, and the witnesses were all at one table, and in close proximity to each other. The request to attest the will was in answer to the question thus put by one of the witnesses, and no other or different communication was made to the other. Taking this as substantially the true statement of the facts, the objection which has been urged is, that one of the witnesses attested the instrument without any request made by the testator. Now, the statute, it is true, declares that each witness must sign on such request. But the manner and form in which the request must be made, and the evidence by which it must be proved, are not prescribed. We apprehend it is clear that no precise form of words, addressed to each of the witnesses at the very time of the attestation, is required. Any communication importing such request, addressed to one of the witnesses in the presence of the other, and which, by a just construction of all the circumstances, is intended for both, is, we think, sufficient. In this case both the witnesses, by the direction or with the knowledge of the testator, were summoned to attend him for the purpose of attesting his will. They came into his presence accordingly, and, in answer to the inquiry of one of them, in which the singular, instead of a plural, pronoun was used, he desired the attestation to be made. In thus requiring both the witnesses to be present, and in thus answering the interrogatory addressed to him by one of them, we think that he did, in effect, request them both to become the subscribing witnesses to the instrument." For a somewhat similar case, see Brady v. McCrossen, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 431.

by the draftsman, professional adviser, or other person present, provided the testator's intelligent acquiescence distinctly appears.¹

Where a testator said to one of the subscribing witnesses, "Mr. McC. (the scrivener) will want you to be a witness to the will," and the scrivener read the attestation clause to the testator, and asked him whether he wished the persons present to be witnesses to the will, and he said he did, it was held that this was a sufficient request of the witnesses to become such. It is not necessary that a testator should himself formally repeat the words. It is enough if he directly and audibly adopts the language of another, used in his presence and hearing. McDonough v. Loughlin, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 238.

Where the subscribing witnesses to a will were told by another person, in the testator's presence, that they had been called in for the purpose of being witnesses to the execution of the will, and the instrument having the usual attestation clause subjoined, was read to the testator, in their presence, and was then subscribed by the testator, and by the witnesses in the presence of each other, it was held that these facts furnished sufficient evidence of a request by the testator that the witnesses should sign the will; or, at least, that there was sufficient evidence to be submitted to a jury upon the question whether there was a request or not. Doe v. Roe, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 201. See also Gamble v. Gamble, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 373; Meurer's Will, 44 Wis. 392; 28 Am. Rep. 591; Lockwood v. Lockwood (Supreme Ct.), 2 N. Y. Supp. 224.

1. Inglesant v. Inglesant, L. R., 3 P. & M. 172; Peck v. Cary, 27 N. Y. 9; 84 Am. Dec. 220; Gilbert v. Knox, 52 N. Y. 125; Cheatham v. Hatcher, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 56; 32 Am. Rep. 650; Bundy v. McKnight, 48 Ind. 502; Dyer v. Dyer, 87 Ind. 13; Meurer's Will, 44

Wis. 392; 28 Am. Rep. 591; Elkinton v. Brick, 44 N. J. Eq. 154; Whitenack v. Stryker, 2 N. J. Eq. 9; Etchison v. Etchison, 53 Md. 348; Huff v. Huff, 41 Ga. 696.

The words of request or acknowledgment may proceed from another, and will be regarded as those of the testator if the circumstances show that he adopted them, and that the party speaking them was acting for him, with his assent. Gilbert v. Knox, 52 N. Y. 125. See also Matter of Nelson's Will (N. Y. 1894), 36 N. E. Rep. 3.

A testator and three other persons, M., H., and C., being together in the same room, the testator asked M. if he would witness his will, and if H. and C. would do so, also. M. answering that H. and C. had said they would, the testator produced and signed a paper, and declared it to be his will. M. then signed the attestation clause; after which, at the request of the testator, and in his hearing, he asked H. and C. to witness the will, in these words: "Mr. G. (the testator) requests you to witness his will;" the testator making no objection. The will was then signed by H. and C. as witnesses. It was held that the will was well executed. Matter of Gilman, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 364.

In Cheatham v. Hatcher, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 56; 32 Am. Rep. 650, it was said that a request to a witness to subscribe the will, made by a third person in the hearing of the testator, is, in law, the request of the testator, if he is conscious and does not dissent therefrom.

But in Matter of McMulkin, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 347, it appeared from the depositions of B. and C., the subscribing witnesses, that they severally wrote their names as such, on the paper propounded, and that the decedent, in their presence, declared the same to be her will. The deposition of one S., further disclosed the facts that the decedent had acquainted him with her purpose "to settle" some money she had in America, and, on being informed that two witnesses would be necessary, had asked the deponent to find "two responsible workmen" to act in that capacity; that the deponent had waited upon B. and C., obtained their consent to witness the execution, and promised to notify them when to attend, afterward reporting the result to the decedent, who said, "all right." There was no attestation clause. It was held in the absence of evidence that B. and C. had been actually summoned, that their subscription was personally observed or requested by the decedent, or that the latter took charge of, or even saw the paper after execution, probate must be refused for want of proof of the request required by the New York statute.

But in such case the conduct from which his acquiescence is to be inferred requires the strictest scrutiny, for nothing done by others on his behalf, in a fraudulent, overpowering, or clandestine way,

In New Jersey, it has been held that the attestation is deficient if the request is made by another than the testator in the first person. Ludlow v. Ludlow, 35 N. J. Eq. 480. In this case a testator went into a store to execute his will. His brother James was there, and also Mr. Harrison and Mr. Miller. James said to Harrison, in the hearing of the testator, "My brother has been making his will, and I would like to have you witness it," to which Harrison replied, "All right." The decedent, James and Harrison, then went into a small inclosure or desk, with glass around the top, so that inside of it they were visible to others in the store. James said to Harrison, "This is my brother's will, I would like to have you witness it," whereupon the decedent signed it, and Harrison, who saw him sign it, also signed as a witness. James then stepped out of the inclosure, and going to Miller, who was engaged at a counter about ten feet away, said, "Mr. Miller, Mr. Harrison has been kind enough to witness my brother's will, now I want you to," and then Miller went into the inclosure where the decedent remained (Harrison having stepped out to make room for Miller), and signed his name to the will as a witness. Before James asked Miller to sign, the latter did not know that the decedent was signing his will, although he surmised so because James had told him, a few weeks before, that his brother was coming there to execute his will, and that he (James) would like him (Miller) and Harrison to witness it. Miller testified that he thought the decedent heard James request him to witness the will. Miller did not see the decedent sign nor hear him acknowledge his signature to the will. It was held insufficient, the court saying: "Reference was made on the hearing to the construction put upon a statute like ours by the courts of New York, who hold that where a testator produces a paper to which he has personally affixed his signature, requests the witnesses to witness it, and declares it to be his last will and testament, that is all that the law requires, and is a substantial acknowledgment of his signature. Baskin v. Baskin, 36 N. Y. 416; Gilbert v. Knox, 52 N. Y. 125. It is enough to say at this time, in that connection, that while I heartily approve of the principle which underlies and produced that construction—the principle of recognizing a substantial compliance with the statute as sufficient—there is no proof here of any acknowledgment whatever, either by word or in fact. The testator did not make the request, either to Mr. Miller or Mr. Harrison, but his brother did it. His brother, in making the request, in fact spoke in the first person. He said 'I want you,' etc. The testator does not appear to have uttered a single word in the whole matter, either to Harrison or Miller, except as he said 'Good morning,' in return to the salutation of the former. No assistance is to be had in this case from the attestation clause. It is merely 'in the presence of.' And obviously the affidavit made by Mr. Harrison before the surrogate to the effect that Mr. Miller was present when the testator signed the will, is of no importance." But compare Whitenack v. Stryker, 2 N. J. Eq. 9; Elkinton v. Brick, 44 N. J. Eq. 154. But see Ayers v. Ayers, 43 N. J. Eq. 565.

A will was drawn by a justice of the peace who was accustomed to draw such instruments. The testatrix, the two witnesses, and the draftsman were present at its execution. The testatrix, in the presence of the witnesses and of the draftsman, signed her name to the will. She then, in reply to a question put to her by the draftsman, acknowledged the instrument to be her will. This acknowledgment was also in the presence of the witnesses. The draftsman of the will then said to one of the witnesses, "Now, Mr. W.," and handed him the pen in the presence of all. W. signed as a witness and handed the pen to the other witness; he signed also in can stand as the testator's own act, though done in his presence.¹

7. TESTATOR MUST SIGN OR ACKNOWLEDGE BEFORE WITNESSES SUBSCRIBE.—Under the Statute of Victoria, 1 Vict., ch. 26, signature or acknowledgment by the testator must precede subscription by the witnesses,² even though the testator immediately afterward signs the will in their presence,³ or the witnesses place seals opposite their names after the testator has signed,⁴ or formally acknowledged their signatures.⁵ Such is the rule also in New York,⁶ and it is sustained by the weight of authority in the United States, the presence of all. The will was in possession of the testatrix at the time of her death. It was held that the will was duly published and executed. Smith v. Smith, 2 Lans. (N. Y.) 266.

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 329.

In Heath v. Cole, 15 Hun (N. Y.) 103, the court, by Learned, P. J., said: "When a man is in full health and strength, with all his senses in vigor, whatever is said for him and in his presence, may, properly and without danger, be taken to be his act. The declaration that the instrument is the testator's will, and the request to witnesses to sign, may be made by another, under such circumstances, that they are plainly adopted by the testator and become his acts. But, when a man is feeble, and able to speak but faintly, at the very last of a sickness which has lasted eleven years, and within a few hours of his death, then it is necessary to examine more carefully what takes place before him. It will not answer then to assume, without some clear proof, that he adopts the acts of those about him, who pretend to speak for him. In his feeble condition he may be unable to express his dissent, and it is unsafe to take his silence as acquiescence."

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 109; Goods of Olding, 2 Curt. 865; Goods of Byrd, 3 Curt. 117; Charlton v. Hindmarsh, 1 L. & T. 433; 8 H. L. Cas. 160; Goods of Summers, 7 No. Cas. 562; 14 Jur. 791; 2 Rob. 295.

3. Goods of Olding, 2 Curt. 865.

Where a testator and the subscribing witnesses to his will were assembled around the same table at the same time, and all signed the will in the presence of each other, but the subscribing witnesses wrote their names before the testator wrote his, it was held that under the Pennsylvania Statute of Wills, this was a sufficient execution and attestation of the will. Miller v. McNeil, 35 Pa. St. 217; 78 Am. Dec. 333.

4. Goods of Byrd, 3 Curt. 117.

5. Charlton v. Hindmarsh, 1 L. & T. 433; 8 H. L. Cas. 160; Moore v. King, 3 Curt. 243.

In Hindmarsh v. Charlton, 8 H. L. Cas. 160, a testator produced his will to A., and signed it in A.'s presence. A., whose name consisted of four words, the first of which began with "F.," then, in the testator's presence, signed his own name, but by accident left his first initial letter uncrossed, so that it stood as if it was "T." He afterward advised the testator that there ought to be two witnesses to the will, and in the afternoon of the same day, B. being present, the testator produced his will, and showed and acknowledged his signature in the presence of both A. and B. B. then wrote his name, and at his desire A., added the date, and then observed and corrected the first initial of his own name by crossing the T., and so making it F. It was held, affirming the judgment of the probate court, that the will was not duly attested within the 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 9.

So, passing over the signature with a dry pen amounts to no more than an acknowledgment, and does not serve as a subscription. Playne v. Scriven, 1 Rob. 772.

6. New York.—Jackson v. Jackson, 39 N. Y. 153; Rugg v. Rugg, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 383; Matter of McMulkin, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 347; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 97.

It is essential to the due execution of a will in New York, that the witnesses who are to attest the subscription and publication thereof by the testator, should sign the same, after the subscription by him. In respect to the subscription by the testator in the presence of the witnesses, and his declaration that the instrument is his last will irrespective of whether the local statute is framed upon the Statute of Frauds or the Statute of Victoria.¹ In the absence of proof to the contrary, it may be presumed that the testator signed before the witnesses subscribed.²

m. SUBSCRIBING IN PRESENCE OF TESTATOR — ACKNOWLEDGMENT IN PRESENCE OF, SUBSCRIPTION IN ABSENCE.—Under

and testament, which the statute requires to be simultaneous, it is sufficient that they be on the same occasion, and it is not material that the declaration immediately precedes the subscription. Jackson v. Jackson, 39 N. Y. 153.

Thus, where one of the witnesses had commenced to sign as a witness to the instrument without knowing it was a will, and before he completed his signature the testator made the necessary declaration and acknowledgment, and thereupon the witness completed his signature as an attesting witness, it was held to be a sufficient compliance with the statute. Matter of Phillips' Will, 98 N. Y. 267.

1. Chase v. Kittredge, 11 Allen (Mass.) 49; 87 Am. Dec. 687; Duffie v. Corridon, 40 Ga. 122; Chisholm v. Ben, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 409; Reed v. Watson, 27 Ind. 443; Eelbeck v. Granberry, 2 Hayw. (N. Car.) 232; 2 Am. Dec. 624; Fowler v. Stagner, 55 Tex. 393; Brooks v. Woodson, 87 Ga. 379.

In Chase v. Kittredge, 11 Allen (Mass.) 63; 87 Am. Rep. 687, Gray, J., said: "The statute requires that the will shall 'be in writing and signed by the testator,' and shall be attested and subscribed, in the presence of the testator, by three or more competent witnesses." He is not required to write his signature in their presence, but it is his will which they are to attest and subscribe. It must be his will in writing, though he need not declare it to be such. It must therefore be signed by him before it can be attested by the witnesses. He must either sign in their presence, or acknowledge his signature to them, before they can attest it. The statute not only requires them to attest, but to subscribe. It is not sufficient for the witnesses to be called upon to witness the testator's signature, or to stand by while he makes or acknowledges it, and be prepared to testify afterwards to his sanity and due execution of the instrument, but they must subscribe. This subscription is the evidence of their previous attestation, and to preserve the proof of that attestation in case of their death or absence when after the testator's death the will shall be presented for probate. It is as difficult to see how they can subscribe in proof of their attestation before they have attested as it is to see how they can attest before the signature of the testator has made it his written will. The manifest intention of the statute is that, first, the will should be put in writing and signed by the testator; second, his will so written be attested by the witnesses; and third, the witnesses subscribe in his presence in evidence of their attestation to his written will."

A testamentary writing executed by a cross-mark, with no attestation clause, to which the name of the testatrix, with her mark, and the name of the subscribing witnesses, are signed in such order as to furnish no evidence as to which name was signed first, should be refused probate for want of proof that the signing of the testatrix preceded the subscription by the witnesses. In re McMulkin, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 347.

Nevertheless, it should be observed that while the ground upon which the decisions proceeded in the above cases sustains the position in the text, many American cases hold that where the signature by the testator, and the subscriptions by the witnesses formed substantially one transaction, it is not material which preceded the other. O'Brien v. Gallagher, 25 Conn. 229; Sechrest v. Edwards, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 163; Swift v. Wiley, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 114; Upchurch v. Upchurch, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 113; Miller v. McNeill, 35 Pa. St. 217; 78 Am. Dec. 333; Rosser v. Franklin, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 1; 52 Am. Dec. 97. See Sturdivant v. Birchett, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 67; Moale v. Cutting, 59 Md. 519. Effect of subsequent acknowledgment is insufficient to validate a subscription made before the testator signed. Duffie v. Corridon, 40 Ga. 122. See infra, this title, Formal Requisites—Subscribing in Presence of Testator.

2. Allen v. Griffin, 69 Wis. 520. See Matter of Austin, 45 Hun (N. Y.) 1. In Simmons v. Leonard, 91 Tenn.

the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II., ch. 29, and the Statute of Victoria, 1 Vict., ch. 26,¹ and the corresponding statutes in the United States, the witnesses must subscribe in the presence of the testator;² a subsequent acknowledgment in his presence of a subscription made in his absence is insufficient.³ The design of the Legislature in making this requisition was supposed to be that the testator might have ocular evidence of the identity of the instrument subscribed by the witnesses, and hence the generally accepted 183, a subscribing witness to a will testified that he did not know whether the testatrix had signed the paper or not before he witnessed it. He did not see her signature, and no one told him it was on the paper. The testatrix told the witness that she desired him "to sign a will" for her. Afterward a paper was produced from her bureau by a third person, and presented by the latter to the witness for signature. It was held that it did not sufficiently appear that the paper had been signed by the testatrix when the witness subscribed it.

1. Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *87.

2. See the statutes of the various states. For particulars of phraseology the local statute should be consulted. See Rucker v. Lambdin, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 230; Watson v. Pipes, 32 Miss. 451; Rose v. Allen, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 23; Snider v. Burks, 84 Ala. 53; Stirling v. Stirling, 64 Md. 138; Mays v. Mays, 114 Mo. 536.

The object of a statute in requiring a will to be attested by the subscribing witnesses, in the presence of the testator, so far as the form of the attestation is concerned, is to identify the instrument, as that signed and published by the testator, and to prevent fraud and imposition in establishing spurious wills, and at the same time to show the persons, by whom the facts necessary to establish the will can be proven, when the will shall be propounded for probate; and all that is necessary for these purposes is, that the witnesses shall sign their names upon the paper in presence of the testator; and hence, it is well settled, that no particular form of words is necessary to constitute an attestation. Fatheree v. Lawrence, 33 Miss. 586.

New York—Presence of Testator.—The New York Revised Statutes merely provide that there shall be at least two attesting witnesses, each of whom shall sign his name as a witness at the end of the will, at the request of the testator, 2 Rev. Stat. 63, § 40; Birdseye's Edition (1890), vol. 3, p. 3343. Under which it has been held that the subscription need not be in the testator's presence. Lyon v. Smith, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 124; Ruddon v. McDonald, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 352. See Builer v. Benson, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 526; Neugent v. Neugent, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 376.

Arkansas.—The Arkansas statute is a transcript of that of New York, Arkansas Dig. (1883), § 6492; and under it witnesses need not subscribe in the presence of testator. In re Cornelius' Will, 14 Ark. 675. See Abraham v. Wilkins, 17 Ark. 325.

Pennsylvania.—Subscribing witnesses are unnecessary. See supra, this title, Attestation and Subscription—In the Absence of Legislation.

3. Moore v. King, 3 Curt. 243; In re Davis, 3 Curt. 748; In re Chamney, 1 Rob. 757; Charlton v. Hindmarsh, 1 S. & T. 433; 8 H. L. Cas. 160; Playne v. Scriven, 1 Rob. 772; 7 No. Cas. 122; In re Cunningham, 1 S. & S. 132; 29 L. J. Ch. 71; Chase v. Kittredge, 11 Allen (Mass.) 49; 87 Am. Rep. 687; Maynard v. Vinton, 59 Mich. 139; 60 Am. Rep. 276; Den v. Mitton, 12 N. J. L. 70; Combs v. Jolly, 2 N. J. Eq. 625; In re Downie's Will, 42 Wis. 66; Reed v. Watson, 27 Ind. 443; Pawtucket v. Ballow, 15 R. I. 58; Duffie v. Corridon, 40 Ga. 122. See Den v. Matlack, 17 N. J. L. 96; Moale v. Cutting, 59 Md. 510; Rash v. Purnel, 2 Harr. (Del.) 448; Pennel v. Weyant, 2 Harr. (Del.) 506.

Where it was proved by one of the only two subscribing witnesses to a will, offered as a will of real estate, that he was requested by the testator to prepare his will according to his instructions, and he did so, and signed his name as a witness before the testator signed, but not in his presence, and then read the will to the testator, and told him he had signed as a witness, and the testator approved and executed it, and the other witness then signed in presence of the testator, it was held that this was not a valid execution of a will to pass real estate, the statute requiring both the witnesses to sign in the presence of the testator. Ragland v. Huntington, 1 Ired. (N. Car.) 561.

One of the subscribing witnesses to a script, propounded as the last will and testament of the deceased, drew up at his own house the paper writing in question, by a copy which he had, and at the same time wrote the attestation clause and subscribed his name as witness. Afterwards, on the same day, he took the paper over to the testator's house and read the same to him in the presence of the other subscribing witness. After he had finished reading the paper, the testator said he should want him to sign as a witness, when he told him that he had already done so, whereupon the testator said it would not make any difference he supposed, and then signed the paper in the presence of both witnesses, declaring it to be his last will and testament; and turning to the other witness, requested him to subscribe the same as a witness, which he did in the presence of the testator while the testator was looking on. After the testator had signed the will, he handed it to the witness who had subscribed it out of his presence and said: "I acknowledge this to be my will." The witness took it and kept possession of it for a moment, and then handed it to the other witness, who then subscribed it in the presence of the testator. It was held that the will was not executed according to the requirements of the act of assembly, because one of the subscribing witnesses did not sign in the presence of the testator. In re Cox's Will, 1 Jones (N. Car.) 321.

A will is executed by the testator, and certain persons are requested by him to attest it. For convenience, they take it into another room, out of the vision of the testator, and there subscribe their names to the paper as witnesses; and they immediately, within one or two minutes, return to the testator with the paper; and one of them, in the presence of the other, with the paper open in his hand, addresses the testator and says, "here is your will witnessed," and at the same time pointing to the names of the witnesses, which are on the same page and close to the name of the testator. The testator then takes the paper and looks at it as if examining it, and then folds it up, and speaks of it as his will. It was held that under these circumstances, the recognition of their attestation by the witnesses to the testator, is a substantial subscribing of their names as witnesses in his presence. Allen and Daniel, JJ., dissenting. Sturdivant v. Birchett, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 67.

In Chase v. Kittridge, 11 Allen (Mass.) 51; 87 Am. Rep. 687, Gray, J., said: "By the original English statute for the prevention of frauds and perjuries, passed in 1676, it was enacted that 'all devises and bequests of any land or tenements shall be in writing, and signed by the party so devising the same, or by some other person in his presence and by his express directions, and shall be attested and subscribed, in the presence of the said devisor, by three or four credible witnesses, or else they shall be utterly void and of none effect.' Stat. 29 Car. II., ch. 3, § 5. That act did not extend to the Colony of Massachusetts, which had been previously settled, and was not named therein. Loyd v. Mansell, 2 P. Wms. 75. Stat. 25 Geo. II., ch. 6, § 10. But the provision was re-enacted here in the same words in the first year after the Province Charter; and again in 1783, substituting only the words 'three or more' for 'three or four' witnesses. Prov. Stat. 4 W. & M. (ed. 1726), ch. 3, § 3, p. 5; Anc. Chart. 234. Stat. 1783, ch. 24, § 2. It was retained, and extended to personal estate, in 1836, in this form: 'No will' (excepting nuncupative wills) 'shall be effectual to pass any estate, whether real or personal, nor to charge or in any way affect the same, unless it be in writing, and signed by the testator, or by some person in his presence and by his express direction, and attested and subscribed, in the presence of the testator, by three or more competent witnesses.' Massachusetts Rev. Stats., ch. 62, § 6. And the words just quoted have been incorporated, with trifling variations, into the General Statutes, ch. 92, § 6.

"This provision, it will be observed, does not expressly require that the testator should sign in the presence of the witnesses; nor that the witnesses should subscribe in the presence of each other, nor even that they should know that the instrument is a will. Courts will not require formalities which the statutes do not. It is accordingly the well settled construction, both in England and in this commonwealth, that it is sufficient for the testator to acknowledge or recognize his signature in the presence of the witnesses, either together or separately, with no attestation clause beyond the single word 'witness,' and without their knowing what the instrument is. . . . The only case under the Stat. of 29 Car. II., which we have seen, in which it was even contended by counsel that an acknowledgment by a witness, in the presence of the testator, of a signature made in his absence, was equivalent to a subscription in his presence, arose only six years after the passage of the statute; and the point does not appear to have been then decided. Risley v. Temple, Skin. 107. But the difference in the two clauses of the statute, the one not requiring the testator to sign in the presence of the witnesses, while the other expressly required the witness to subscribe in the presence of the testator, soon came to be recognized, and does not appear to have been afterwards lost sight of. Hoil v. Clark, 3 Mod. 220; Lee v. Libb, 1 Show. 69; Dormer v. Thurland, 2 P. Wms. 510; Stonehouse v. Evelyn, 3 P. Wms. 254; Bac. Ab. Wills, D, 2; 2 Bl. Com. 377; 1 Browne's Civ. & Adm. Law, ch. 10, note 27; 1 Roberts on Wills (Am. ed.) 131; Floyer's Proctor's Practice, 127. The Statute of Frauds, while it required a will to be 'attested and subscribed in the presence of the deviser by three or four credible witnesses,' required a revocation to be by a written will, 'or other writing of the deviser, signed in the presence of three or four witnesses.' Stat. 29 Car. II., ch. 3, §§ 5, 6. The court of King's Bench in 1689 were of opinion that a will, to revoke a former will, must be 'signed and subscribed' by the witnesses in the presence of the testator. Eccleston v. Speke, Carth. 81; Comb. 158. And Lord Chancellor Cowper was of the same opinion. Onions v. Tyrer, 1 P. Wms. 344. Lord Hardwicke, Chief Justice Willes, Chief Baron Parker, and Sir John Strange, M. R., when holding, in accordance with earlier and later decisions, that a testator's acknowledgment of his signature before the witnesses was a sufficient signing by him, even of a will revoking an earlier one, and that the words 'signed in the presence of three or four witnesses,' in the section concerning revocations, were limited to the last antecedent, 'other writing,' clearly implied that those words would not be satisfied by acknowledging a signature, instead of actually signing in the presence of the witnesses. Ellis v. Smith, 1 Ves. Jr. 11; 1 Dick. 225. And see 1 Jarm.

on Wills (4th Am. ed.) 153. The English cases in which it has been held that the witnesses to a will are not required, by § 5 of Stat. 29 Car. II., to recite on the paper that they subscribe their names in the presence of the testator, declare that they must actually so sign in his presence. Thus the court of common bench, in 1735, as reported by Lord Chief Baron Comyns, said: 'The witnesses, by the Statute of Frauds, ought to set their names as witnesses in the presence of the testatrix.' Hands v. James, Comyn 532. And in a later case Lord Eldon said, in the House of Lords: 'Your lordships know that it is necessary that the three witnesses should sign in the presence of the testator. If it is proved that they did actually sign in the presence of the testator, the not recording that circumstance will not vitiate the will.' Rancliffe v. Parkyns, 6 Dow. 149.

"A new Statute of Wills was passed in England in 1837, requiring that the signature of a testator to a will, either of real or personal estate, shall be made or acknowledged by him 'in the presence of two or more witnesses present at the same time, and such witnesses shall attest and shall subscribe the will in the presence of the testator.' Stat. 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 9. The decisions under this statute are uniform that one witness does not 'attest and subscribe in the presence of' another, unless he actually affixes his signature in the presence of the other; and these decisions bear directly upon the construction of the same words in the English Stat. of 29 Car. II., and in our own statutes requiring the will to be 'attested and subscribed in the presence of' the testator, by the witnesses. The point was adjudged in the prerogative court of Canterbury by Sir Herbert Jenner Fust in several cases, the last of which, decided after full argument, and recognizing that 'this case must form a leading case of its class,' was strikingly analogous to the present. There the testator signed a codicil in the presence of one witness only, who at his request attested and subscribed it. Afterwards another witness, at the testator's request and in his presence, also attested and subscribed it, the first witness first pointing to her signature and saying, 'There is my signature, and you had better place yours underneath.' In re Allen, 2 Curt. 331; In re Simmonds, 1 No. Cas. 409; 3 Curt. 79; Moore v. King, 3 Curt. 243; 2 No. Cas. 45. In a subsequent case the same able judge said of the witnesses: 'No authority is given to them, as in the instance of the testator, to acknowledge their signatures previously written. The witnesses are to subscribe, in other words they are required, I conceive, to do some act which shall be apparent on the face of the will. To pass over a signature, previously made, with a dry pen amounts, I think, to no more than an acknowledgment of a signature, which in the case of a witness has already been held not to be sufficient. Moore v. King, 3 Curt. 243. Saying and doing are not the same thing.' And he therefore held that upon the re-execution of a will an attesting witness did not 'subscribe' by tracing over his signature with a dry pen, 'as nothing in fact was written.' Playne v. Scriven, 1 Rob. 775; 7 No. Cas. 122. He also decided that it was not an attestation and subscription for a witness to add his residence after his name already subscribed on a previous day. In re Trevanion, 2 Rob. 311. Other decisions of Sir Herbert Jenner Fust are directly to the point that a signature by the testator after the witnesses have signed is insufficient, even if he has previously read the whole will to them, or they add seals to their names after he signs. In the first of these cases, the judge significantly asked, 'Is the paper a will before it is signed by the testator?' In re Olding, 2 Curt. 865; In re Byrd, 3 Curt. 117. In a later case, which was fully argued, he reaffirmed the rule, and gave his reasons more at length, saying, 'The words of the section are very precise, and I think it would be attended with dangerous consequences, if the court were to hold a will valid which has been signed in the presence of two witnesses who have attested it before the signature of the testator was affixed to the will; for where is the court to draw the line? Suppose the witnesses attested one hour before the testator signed, or a day, or a week, or any other time; where is the court to stop if it gave a latitude of construction to this section of the act? Suppose it were one month, or six months, or a twelvemonth, after the testator had signed the will; and whether it be at the time of the transaction, or some time before makes no difference.' Cooper v. Bockett, 3 Curt. 660. Dr. Lushington, sitting in the same court, held it to be a fatal objection to the validity of a will, that 'there is no proof that the signature was affixed prior to the subscription of the witnesses.' Hudson v. Parker, 1 Rob. 39. And Sir John Dodson made a similar decision in Shaw v. Neville, 1 Jur. N. S. 408. . . . If the signature of a witness, made before that of the testator, is allowed to be sufficient upon proof of a later acknowledgment by the witness in the testator's presence, then the witnesses may subscribe an instrument not yet signed by the testator, and in his absence, with the honest intention of acknowledging their subscriptions to him after he shall have signed; his name may be signed at any time afterwards, without any witness to observe and testify whether it is affixed by him or by his authority or not, and, if it is, whether he is sane or insane; and the previous subscription of the witnesses be held after his death to be evidence of a due execution and attestation, when in fact his name is forged, or at least there has been no subscription or acknowledgment by the witnesses in his presence, and so, on the loosest interpretation, no compliance with the statute. . . . The manifest intention of the statute is that, first, the will should be put in writing and signed by the testator; second, his will so written be attested by the witnesses; and third, the witnesses subscribe in his presence in evidence of their attestation to his written will. There is less reason for requiring the testator to sign in the presence of the witnesses than for requiring them to sign in his presence. A testator may alter his will as he pleases at any time before it is formally attested. He may write it out in full and sign it, and it has no effect as a will until duly attested. It is unimportant whether it is or is not signed by the testator until it is produced to the witnesses. It is only important that it should be his will in writing and signed when they attest and subscribe it; and it is equally his will in writing, whether signed in their presence or at some previous time. It is the will of the testator, not of the witnesses. He must know its contents, but they need not. He has the contents, as well as his signature, by which to know that it is the instrument declaring his last wishes in respect to his estate. They need see nothing but his signature and their own. To allow them to acknowledge in his presence their names signed in his absence would open a door to mistake and fraud. If the witnesses might subscribe before tests of presence, are vision and mental apprehension.¹ In the first place it is essential that the testator be mentally capable of recognizing the act which is being performed before him.² When, therefore, the testator, after signing and publishing his will, fell into a state of insensibility before the witnesses subscribed, the attestation was held insufficient.³ The witnesses must also subscribe with the testator's knowledge and consent, and not in a clandestine or fraudulent way, for such subscription is bad, even though in the same room.⁴ The true test of vision is not whether the testator actually saw the witnesses sign, but whether he might have seen them sign, considering his mental and physical condition, and his position at the time of subscription.⁵ Mere contiguity they had attested his signature, and even before he had signed, of what weight could their subscription be as evidence, after their death, that the will had been duly signed and attested? But the controlling consideration is, that the statute in terms requires not only that the witnesses shall attest his will, but that they shall subscribe in his presence. The distinction in this respect between the signature of the testator and the subscription of the witnesses has existed in the statute law both of England and of Massachusetts for nearly two centuries, and been preserved in repeated enactments when other clauses have been altered. The court cannot presume so constant a difference in language to have been unintentional, or disregard it as immaterial. As it appears by the testimony stated in the report that one of the attesting witnesses subscribed his name before the testator signed and in his absence, the instrument offered for probate should have been disallowed."

Georgia.—Where a testator after signing his will in the presence of the subscribing witness, retired to his bed in an adjoining room, before the witnesses had affixed their signatures, it was held that the fact that at the time of attestation the testator was in a different room to that in which the will was signed by the witnesses, raised a presumption that the witnesses did not sign in his presence, as required by the Georgia Act of January 1, 1851, and that a subsequent recognition by the witnesses of their signatures, in the presence of the testator, did not cure the original omission. Lamb v. Girtman, 33 Ga. 289.

Connecticut and Kentucky.—A witness may subscribe his name in the presence of the testator, before the testator himself has signed, and acknowledge his subscription afterward. O'Brien v. Gallagher, 25 Conn. 229; Swift v. Wiley, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 117; Upchurch v. Uphurch, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 113.

Virginia.—An acknowledgment by a witness, in the testator's presence, of a signature affixed in his absence, has been sustained. Sturdivant v. Birchett, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 67; Parramore v. Taylor, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 220.

As to the rule in Michigan, see Cook v. Winchester, 81 Mich. 581.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *87; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 341; 1 Redf. on Wills (4th ed.) 244.

2. Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *87; 1 Redf. Wills (4th ed.) 244. See Hill v. Barge, 12 Ala. 687; Watson v. Pipes, 32 Miss. 451; Hall v. Hall, 18 Ga. 40; Meurer's Will, 44 Wis. 392; 28 Am. Rep. 591; Etchison v. Etchison, 53 Md. 348; Jackson v. Moore, 14 La. Ann. 209.

3. Right v. Price, Doug. 241. See also Vernam v. Spencer, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 16; Sanders v. Stiles, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 1.

4. Longford v. Eyre, 1 P. Wms. 741. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 341.

5. Hill v. Barge, 12 Ala. 687; Robinson v. King, 6 Ga. 539; Lamb v. Girtman, 26 Ga. 625; Reed v. Roberts, 26 Ga. 294; 71 Am. Dec. 210; Hamlin v. Fletcher, 64 Ga. 549; In re Storey's Will, 20 Ill. App. 183; McElfresh v. Guard, 32 Ind. 408; Turner v. Cook, 36 Ind. 136; Howard's Will, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 199; 17 Am. Dec. 60; Edden v. Hardey, 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 61; 16 Am. Dec. 292; Dewey v. Dewey, 1 Met. (Mass.) 349; 35 Am. Dec. 367; Boldry v. Parris, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 433; Allen's Will, 25 Minn. 39; Watson v. Pipes, 32 Miss. 451; Walker v. Walker, 67 Miss. 529; Ruddon v. McDonald, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 352; Jones v. Tuck, 3

Jones (N. Car.) 202; Wright v. Lewis, 5 Rich. (S. Car.) 212; 55 Am. Dec. 714; Ray v. Hill, 3 Strobb. (S. Car.) 297; 49 Am. Dec. 647; Neil v. Neil, 1 Leigh (Va.) 6; Baldwin v. Baldwin, 81 Va. 405; 59 Am. Rep. 669; In re Trimel, 11 Jur. N. S. 248; In re Killiek, 3 S. & T. 578; Doe v. Manifold, 1 M. & S. 294; Norton v. Bassett, 1 D. & S. 259; 3 Jur. N. S. 1084.

If the testator is where, by mere act of volition, he could witness the attestation, the will is sufficiently attested in his presence. Spoonemore v. Cables, 66 Mo. 579. Otherwise, if he is not so placed. In re Downie's Will, 42 Wis. 66.

The witnesses to a will subscribe their names in another room from the testator, who, though lying on a bed, is able to walk about; but the witnesses are directly within the range of his vision, so that he can see all their persons except the forearm and writing hand; these being hid from him by the body of the witness whilst he is subscribing his name; it may be inferred too that he may see the paper as it lies on the bureau or desk where the witnesses subscribe their names. It was held that the witnesses subscribed their names in the presence of the testator, within the meaning of the statute. Nock v. Nock, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 106.

Where the script was attested by witnesses in the same room with the decedent, about eight feet to one side of him, but in a position to be seen by him in the act of attestation if he turned his head half round, and he was able so to turn his head without pain or inconvenience, it was held to be an attestation in the presence of the decedent. Cornelius v. Cornelius, 7 Jones (N. Car.) 593.

So, also, where a will was drawn and witnesses sent for at the request of a testator, and, after signing by him at his request, the witnesses went from the bedroom where he was, into a dining-room, to attest the same, on account of the want of conveniences for doing so in the bedroom, and he knew that the attestation was going on in the dining-room, and approved it, and from the position he occupied in the bed could have seen the witnesses while signing, it was held that the will was attested in the presence of the testator. Ambre v. Weishaar, 74 Ill. 109.

But where the witnesses to a will, after seeing the testator sign, withdrew into an adjoining room for the purpose of signing their names more conveniently, but out of the testator's eyesight, as he lay or stood at the moment of their signing, it was held not to be a good attestation within the meaning of the acts. The testator need not actually see the witnesses sign the will, yet they must have been in a position to let him see their subscribing; which means that they must not withdraw themselves from the continued observance of his senses, although the testator may himself refrain from using such senses. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 1 Spears (S. Car.) 253; 40 Am. Dec. 599.

The requirement of the Michigan statute, that all wills shall be subscribed in the presence of the testator by two or more competent witnesses, is sufficiently complied with if the condition and position of the testator, when his will is attested, with reference to the act of signing by the witnesses, and their locality when signing, is such that he has knowledge of what is going forward, and is mentally observant of the specific act in progress, and, unless he is blind, the signing by the witnesses must occur where the testator, as he is circumstanced, may see them sign if he choose to do so. If, in this state of things, some change in the testator's posture is requisite to bring the action of the witnesses within the scope of his vision, and such movement is not prevented by his physical infirmity, but is caused by an indisposition or indifference on his part to take visual notice of the proceeding, the act of witnessing it is to be considered as done in his presence, and in a case where the undisputed evidence shows this state of facts, it is error to submit this question to the jury. If, however, the testator's ability to see the witnesses subscribe their names is dependent on his ability to make the requisite physical movement, then, if his ailment so operate upon him as to prevent this movement, and on this account he does not see the witnesses subscribe, the will is not witnessed in his presence. Maynard v. Vinton, 59 Mich. 139; 60 Am. Rep. 276.

In Ayres v. Ayres, 43 N. J. Eq. 565, the attesting clause did not state that the witnesses subscribed their names in the presence of the testator, but the proofs established that they signed on a bureau, at the foot of the bed on which the testator lay, so supported that he could see the motion of the pen on the paper, although he could not distinguish the letters the pen was forming, and that is not enough, if the testator, by reason of his position or intervening obstacles, could not see the witnesses subscribe.¹ A subscription made in the same room with the testator is treated as prima facie made in his presence, while a subscription made in another room is treated as prima facie not made in his presence.² But a subscription in another room is good if it can be shown that the testator either saw or might have seen it; as where the witnesses subscribed their names in a room opposite, within the testator's sight, the doors between being thrown open;³ but not where the

the testator's eyes were open during the signing, and that at its conclusion he instructed his uncle, who was named as an executor in the will, to take the custody of the paper. It was held that such signing was sufficient compliance with the requirement of the statute that the witnesses shall sign in the presence of the testator.

1. Hamlin v. Fletcher, 64 Ga. 549; Walker v. Walker, 67 Miss. 529; Neil v. Neil, 1 Leigh (Va.) 22; Doe v. Manifold, 1 M. & S. 294; Colman's Case, 3 Curt. 118; In re Ellis, 2 Curt. 395; Eccleston v. Petty, Carth. 79; 1 Show. 89.

It has been held of no avail that the testator saw the bodies of the witnesses as they wrote, if the will itself was out of sight. Graham v. Graham, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 219. But see Bynum v. Bynum, 11 Ired. (N. Car.) 632; Ayres v. Ayres, 43 N. J. Eq. 565.

2. Morton v. Bassett, D. & S. 259; 3 Curt. 118; Neil v. Neil, 1 Leigh (Va.) 6; Edelen v. Hardey, 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 61; 16 Am. Dec. 292; Lamb v. Girtman, 33 Ga. 289; Mason v. Harrison, 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 480; Doe v. Pickett, 51 Ala. 584; Mandeville v. Parker, 31 N. J. Eq. 242; Ayres v. Ayres, 43 N. J. Eq. 565.

What Constitutes Presence of Testator.—In Neil v. Neil, 1 Leigh (Va.) 28, Cabell, J., said: "Presence is not defined in the statute; but a due attention to the object of the law in requiring it, will lead us to its true meaning. It cannot be synonymous with being in the same room with the testator; for a man may be so situated as to see what is passing in another room as accurately as if it were in the same room; and he may be so situated as to be as incapable of seeing what is transacting in the same room as if it were in a different room. The object of the law will be completely effected, and can only be effected by the testator's being in such a situation, in relation to the will and the witnesses, that he may, if he will, see, from that situation, both the will and the witnesses in the act of attestation. This capacity in the testator is, unquestionably, the test of presence, in all cases of attestation out of the room in which the testator may be; for all the cases show that an attestation out of the room of the testator is held to be in his presence, if he might see it, and not in his presence, if he could not see it. Now, as the reason of the law in requiring an attestation to be in the presence of the testator is precisely the same, whether that attestation be in the same room, or in a different room, the law will apply the same test of presence to both cases. An attestation, therefore, in the same room with the testator, will, as in the case of an attestation in a different room, be held to be in his presence or not in his presence, according to the capacity or want of capacity in the testator to supervise the transaction. There is, however, one important difference between an attestation in the same room, and one not in the same room with the testator; in the absence of all proof, a man is presumed to be able to see what is done in the same room with him, and to be unable to see what is done in a different room. An attestation, therefore, in the same room, is prima facie good; an attestation in a different room, is prima facie bad. But this presumption must yield to positive proof. An attestation, therefore, out of the room of the testator, but proved to be within the scope of his vision, becomes good, as being in his presence; and an attestation in the same room, but proved to be out of the scope of his vision, becomes bad, as not being in his presence. And this is, as I take it, the substance of all the authorities." See Edelen v. Hardey, 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 67; 16 Am. Dec. 292.

3. Davy v. Smith, 3 Salk. 395; Shires

table at which the witnesses subscribed in the adjoining room was so placed that he could not see it, even though the door between stood open.¹ Nor is it enough to subscribe in the same room with the testator, if the latter's relative position or intervening obstacles prevent his perceiving it, and his condition is such that of his own volition he can neither change his position nor remove the obstacle.² Where the testator is blind, it has been held that

v. Glascock, 2 Salk. 688; Tod v. Winchelsea, 2 C. & P. 488; 12 E. C. L. 227; In re Piercy, 1 Rob. 278; In re Trimel, 11 Jur. N. S. 248; Ambre v. Welshaar, 74 Ill. 110; Gallagher v. Kilkeary, 29 Ill. App. 415; Meurer's Will, 44 Wis. 392; 28 Am. Rep. 591; Nock v. Nock, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 106; Bynum v. Bynum, 11 Ired. (N. Car.) 636; McElfresh v. Guard, 32 Ind. 408; Turner v. Cook, 36 Ind. 129. See Wright v. Lewis, 5 Rich. (S. Car.) 212; 55 Am. Dec. 714; Ray v. Hill, 3 Strobb. (S. Car.) 297; 49 Am. Dec. 647; Tucker v. Oxner, 12 Rich. (S. Car.) 141; Cornelius v. Cornelius, 7 Jones (N. Car.) 593; Hill v. Barge, 12 Ala. 687; Moore v. Moore, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 307.

So where the testatrix could see the witnesses through the windows of her carriage and of the attorney's office, the will was held well attested. Casson v. Dade, 1 Bro. C. C. 99.

1. Clark v. Ward, 1 Bro. C. C. 137; Colman's Case, 3 Curt. 118; Morton v. Bassett, D. & S. 259; Tod v. Winchelsea, 2 C. & P. 488; 12 E. C. L. 227; Mandeville v. Parker, 31 N. J. Eq. 242; Edelen v. Hardey, 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 61; 16 Am. Dec. 292. See Lamb v. Girtman, 33 Ga. 289; Boldry v. Parris, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 433; Graham v. Graham, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 219; Jones v. Tuck, 3 Jones (N. Car.) 202; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 1 Spears (S. Car.) 253; 40 Am. Dec. 599; Downie's Will, 42 Wis. 66.

Where the attesting witnesses retired from the room where the testator had signed, and subscribed their names in an adjoining room, and the jury found that from one part of the testator's room a person, by inclining himself forwards with his head out at the door, might have seen the witnesses, but that the testator was not in such a situation in the room that he might by so inclining have seen them, it was held that the will was not duly attested. Doe v. Manifold, 1 M. & S. 294.

Where the witnesses to a will, after seeing the testator sign, withdrew into an adjoining room for the purpose of signing their names more conveniently, but out of the testator's eyesight, as he lay or stood at the moment of their signing, it was held not to be a good attestation within the meaning of the acts. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 1 Spears (S. Car.) 253; 40 Am. Dec. 599. In this case Richardson, J., said: "The witnesses must subscribe their names within the sight of the testator, as he stood, and not as he might or might not stand. . . . Although the testator need not actually see the witnesses sign the will, yet they must have stood in a position to let him see their subscribing; which means, that they must not withdraw themselves from the continued observance of his senses, although the testator may, himself, refrain from using such senses. Such discretion is with him, but not for the witnesses to avoid the opportunity of his so doing." See Jones v. Tuck, 3 Jones (N. Car.) 202; Russell v. Moor Falls, 3 Har. & M. (Md.) 472. 2. Tribe v. Tribe, 1 Rob. 775; Doe v. Therrian, 1 Pugsley & B. (N. Bruns.) 395; Neil v. Neil, 1 Leigh (Va.) 6. See Brooks v. Duffell, 23 Ga. 441; Reed v. Roberts, 26 Ga. 294; 71 Am. Dec. 210. Compare Aikin v. Weckerly, 19 Mich. 482; Maynard v. Vinton, 59 Mich. 139; 60 Am. Rep. 58; Orndoff v. Hummer, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 619.

In Neil v. Neil, 1 Leigh (Va.) 6, it was held that the subscription was bad, if the testator lay in bed with his back to the witnesses, and was unable to turn. Coalter, J., said: "The object of the law, in requiring a will to be attested in the presence of the testator, is to prevent a surreptitious will being substituted and imposed on him for the will he intends to publish. To effect this object, the witnesses and the will must both be in the presence of the testator; he ought to see, or at least be able to see, both. He may, it is true, turn away his eyes, so as not to see what is doing, or he may look on, the whole time. It will rarely happen that the witnesses engaged in the attestation are at the same time watching the testator, to see whether he is looking at them, so as to establish the fact that he saw them attest; and therefore the most that they can be required to prove is, that he was so present to them, and they to him, as that he might, and therefore probably did, see the attestation. Nothing less than this, it seems to me, can satisfy the words and intention of the statute.

"Suppose the witnesses retire to a table standing behind a desk in the testator's chamber, where he, lying sick in his bed, makes his will; and over which desk he can even see the heads of the witnesses, but neither the table, the will, nor the act of attestation; is this a good will within the act? and will it be considered as duly attested, unless it can be shown that they retired there for fraudulent purposes? Is the power to require the witnesses to come from behind the desk and expose their acts to view, though no such requisition be made, equivalent to the power of actually seeing them if he choose to cast his eyes on the scene of action?

"Suppose there is a folding screen, impervious to the sight, round the foot or side of the bed, and the witnesses retire behind that out of his view; is the power to direct it to be folded or shut up, so as to expose the table and witnesses to view, to be substituted for that power to supervise the transaction, which the simple act of casting his eyes on the spot affords? Must it be proved that they retired behind the screen in order to be out of view and for fraudulent purposes?

"Suppose the table, at which the witnesses subscribe, be just within the door of an adjoining room, a few feet from the testator's bed, who has his face to it, and when open, can as plainly see the table, as if it were in his chamber, or more so, there being more light there than is agreeable or proper in the bedroom of the sick; but in order to exclude this disagreeable light from the sick bed, the door is usually kept shut; and, without any real or apparent intention of fraud, it is actually shut at the time of attestation; is the power to require it to be opened, to be substituted for the power to see if the party had chosen to cast his eye that way?

"Could it be said of either of these cases, that as he might have seen, it is fairly to be presumed that he did see, and that consequently no imposition was practiced? The object of the law being to prevent frauds, it prescribes the forms which are to be pursued, and which prima facie are sufficient to guard against fraud. All attestations not coming up to these requisites may be fraudulent, and are in fact so considered in law, without proof of actual fraud; and no proof of actual fairness can avail or supply the requisites of the law. The most credible witnesses who ever lived may prove that they saw the will subscribed, heard it read to the testator and approved of by him; that he requested them to attest; that they all took hold of the will, carried it into another room, having received it from the hands of the testator; that they all continued to hold it, until each attested it; and all returned with it and delivered it to the testator again; yet it is no will of lands unless he could see them attest. Say, that they attested it in the doorway, where their acts could have been seen, had not the door been closed to shut out offensive light from the sick bed; it is no will. According to all the cases, to make it an attestation in the presence, the door must be open; no case goes so far as to affirm that if the testator had had his suspicions awakened, and could have commanded the door to be opened, it is the same thing as if it had been opened.

"It is not to be supposed that testators, especially in their last illness, are suspicious of those around them, or that they are in a frame of mind, if they are of body, to guard, by any unusual effort, against frauds. The law undertakes to guard them. They may still be defrauded. But, if the attestation be according to law, the fraud must be proved; if not, the law avoids the will, as though actual fraud were proved, and no proof of fairness can make it good. The opinion of the judge below, in this case, makes this a good will, although the jury might believe not only that the testator did not actually see the attestation, but that he could not see it, any more than if it had been in another room with the door shut. Had his suspicions been aroused, and had he been turned, it is true he might have seen; and so he might, on being turned over, had the attestation been in an adjoining room, and in a part of it which would have been visible to him when he was so turned over. If the attestation had been in an adjoining room, at a table visible from the bed, had the testator been turned over, but the position of the witnesses must be such that the testator, if he had his eyesight, might have seen them;¹ but the better opinion would seem to be that the subscription should be made where he may take cognizance of the act by his other senses.² In Michigan, not visible to him as he lay unable to turn, this (as I think all the cases show) would not have been a good attestation. The power to have himself turned, and the power to see, if turned, is the same in both cases. Yet, in the one case, it is said to be a will, in the other, not so. A testator, not too ill to get up, acknowledges his will lying on his bed; he continues to lie there, and his will is attested in an adjoining room; he can, by getting up, and sitting on his bedside, and leaning forward, see what is done, and is fully able to do so without assistance, or much bodily pain; but he omits to do it, and the law protects him against any will made in such a situation. But the man who is laid with his back to the table, when his will is attested, and can no more see it, or what is doing, than if he was held there by superior force, unless he calls for assistance, is not protected by the law.

"It is true the cases say that proof of actual seeing is not necessary, the presence being such that he can see if he will; but where is the case which says that it is a good attestation, notwithstanding proof on the other side, that he not only did not see, but could not without assistance, any more than he could see through a panel door what was doing behind it, and which he was unable to open without assistance?

"If the doctrine contended for be tenable, why shall not a will, executed in an adjoining room, be good, where the testator could direct the table to be set out within his view whereat to attest it? Why not, if attested in an obscure corner in the same room, because he might have ordered it to be done in a part of the room where he could see what was doing? The law is not that it shall be attested in his presence, if he thinks it proper to superintend the act himself; otherwise he may trust to the honesty of his friends and the witnesses, to see for him that no fraud is done. No; the law requires him to be present himself, body and mind. If he can, by turning his eye, see what is doing, he will be presumed to have seen it, and no farther proof that he did see is necessary; but if interposing walls or other obstructions render it doubtful whether he could see or not, the power to see must be proved and made apparent; as, that a door or window was open (not that it might have been opened, if requested) and that his position in bed was such, (not might have been such had he desired to be raised or turned) as that he had it in his power, by simply looking on, to see. This is enough, and you need not prove that he actually did see.

"I can see no magic in the four walls of the testator's bed chamber, which shall make him more present at an act of attestation, which in reality he cannot see without calling for assistance, than he is at a similar act performed a few feet from him, which he can see, even without assistance, by a slight change in his position. Neither the law, nor the decisions under it, it seems to me, contemplate any such fictitious presence. If the act be done in the same room, prima facie he is really present; that is, he can really see, and nothing further being shown, he is presumed to have supervised the act. But if it is in a remote corner, though within the four walls, it must be shown that he was so situated, in point of position and light, as that he could see, or it is deemed in law fraudulent and void, without proof of actual intended fraud."

So in Tribe v. Tribe, 1 Rob. 775, a subscription was held bad though in the same room as the testatrix, who lay behind bed curtains which she was unable to draw aside; but in Newton v. Clarke, 2 Curt. 320, a subscription was sustained because the testator could have pushed the curtains aside.

In Reed v. Roberts, 26 Ga. 294; 71 Am. Dec. 210, it was held that the testator must be able to see the witnesses subscribe without changing his position.

1. In re Piercy, 1 Rob. 278; 4 No. Cas. 250.

2. Will of Blind Testator.—As the requirement of the statutes, that a will be subscribed by the attesting witnesses in the presence of the testator, has been construed to mean in the sight of the testator at reasonable proximity, some uncertainty has resulted as to what is a compliance with the statute when the testator is blind. Manifestly, a different construction of the language of the statute is necessary in this case; and the most reasonable, and that which seems to have been adopted in the instances which have been noticed in which this point is actually adjudicated, seems to be that, under such circumstances, the act of subscription by the witnesses must be performed in such manner as to allow the testator, by the exercise of his remaining faculties, to perceive and ascertain that the document attested is the one which has been executed by him.

In Ray v. Hill, 3 Strobb. (S. Car.) 297; 49 Am. Dec. 647, which was a contest over the validity of a will executed by a blind testator, the trial court, in its instructions to the jury, thus construed the provision of the statute requiring the attestation of wills in the presence of the testator, as applicable to a will made by one deprived of the sense of sight: "The words 'in the presence of the testator' are usually, and in reference to ordinary men who can see, defined to mean within his sight at reasonable proximity. To cover the case of the blind man, that definition would be extended so as to be within the observation of the senses at reasonable distance. As, however, the will of one who can see is valid, although he may turn his head away while the witnesses are subscribing, so, in analogy, the will of a blind man is valid if he be aware that the witnesses are attesting and subscribing his will, and have the power, at his discretion, by his touch and other senses, to ascertain that they are subscribing the same paper which he signed, although he may not in fact exert his senses, when nothing hindered him. The question then carefully submitted to the jury (referring to the case under consideration) was whether the witnesses attested and subscribed the will within the reach of the testator's remaining senses, when he was conscious of what they were doing, and might, if he chose, have ascertained that they were subscribing his will. If nothing hindered him, his refraining from touching them and his will, or otherwise ascertaining for himself what they were subscribing, did not affect the validity of the will." The evidence in this case showed that the subscription by the witnesses was within two feet of the maker of the will; so near, in fact, that the testator might have heard the scratching of the pen. It was also testified that the subscription by the witnesses was in such close proximity to the testator that he must have been aware of what was going on. He did not touch the witnesses during the act of subscription, but he might easily have done so. It was held, without hesitation, that all the requirements of the statute which made it necessary that the subscription by witness should take place in the presence of the testator were complied with.

In Reynolds v. Reynolds, 1 Spears (S. Car.) 253; 40 Am. Dec. 599, the opinion of the court, contains the following dictum, touching the execution and attestations of wills made by blind testators: "If, in the case of a blind testator, the witnesses were to withdraw their subscription from the observance of those senses by which, only, the testator could perceive their being present and were subscribing, and such a will were held to be good, the case would be analogous to the one before the court." (Where the will was held bad because attested out of testator's sight.) The judge continued, "I would not say that it is absolutely impossible (although it is so considered by great writers) that even a blind, and deaf and dumb man can make a will. But whenever such a case occurs, the three requisites of all wills must appear; that the testator signed the will, or expressly directed it to be signed for him, and three witnesses attested it in writing, and that the testator had been sensible that they signed their names in his presence. And of these three requisites, if there be any equality in their importance, the last is the most effectual to prevent the substitution of a fraudulent will in the place of the intended genuine will of the testator, which is the immediate object of our acts directing the manner of executing last wills and testaments."

In Riggs v. Riggs, 135 Mass. 238; 46 Am. Rep. 464, a testator, whose sight was unimpaired, was compelled to lie on his bed facing the ceiling, and was incapable of turning his head so as to see what took place at his side. The witnesses signed the will at a table, which was in an adjoining room, and nine feet distant from the testator. The door was open, and the table was in the line of vision of the testator if he had been able to look. He could hear all that was said, and knew and vision, as the exclusive test of presence has been abandoned, in cases in which, though the witnesses sign out of the line of vision, the testator is within hearing distance, understands what is done, and expressly approves the whole transaction.¹ The nature of understood all that was done, and after the witnesses had signed the will, it was handed to him, and he read their names as signed, and said he was glad it was done. A codicil to the will, which was executed while the testator was in the same condition, was attested by the witnesses at a table by the side of the bed, about four feet from his head. It was held that the will and codicil were attested in the "presence" of the testator. The court, by Morton, C. J., said: "It is true that it is stated in many cases that witnesses are not in the presence of a testator unless they are within his sight; but these statements are made with reference to testators who can see. As most men can see, vision is the usual and safest test of presence, but it is not the only test. A man may take note of the presence of another by the other senses, as hearing or touch. Certainly, if two blind men are in the same room, talking together, they are in each other's presence. If two men are in the same room, conversing together, and either or both bandage or close their eyes, they do not cease to be in each other's presence.

"In England, where the tendency of the courts has been to construe the statute with great strictness, it has always been held that a blind man can make a valid will, although of course he cannot see, if he is sensible of the presence of the witnesses through the other senses. In re Piercy, 1 Rob. 278; Fincham v. Edwards, 3 Curt. 63. It would be against the spirit of our statutes to hold that, because a man is blind, or because he is obliged to keep his eyes bandaged, or because, by an injury, he is prevented from using his sight, he is deprived of the right to make a will.

"The statute does not make the test of the validity of a will to be that the testator must see the witnesses subscribe their names; they must subscribe 'in his presence;' but in cases where he has lost or cannot use his sense of sight, if his mind and hearing are not affected, if he is sensible of what is being done, if the witnesses subscribe in the same room, or in such close proximity as to be within the line of vision of one in his position who could see, and within his hearing, they subscribe in his presence; and the will, if otherwise duly executed, is valid. In a case like the one before us, there is much less liability to deception or imposition than there would be in the case of a blind man, because the testator, by holding the will before his eyes, could determine by sight that the will subscribed by the witnesses was the same will executed by him. We are of opinion, therefore, that the codicil was duly attested by the witnesses.

"The facts in regard to the attestation of the original will do not materially differ from those as to the codicil. The witnesses signed the will at a table nine feet distant from the testator, which was not in the same room, but near the door in an adjoining room. The door was open, and the table was within the line of vision of the testator, if he had been able to look, and the witnesses were within his hearing. The testator could hear all that was said, and knew and understood all that was done; and, after the witnesses had signed it, and as a part of the res gestæ, it was handed to the testator, and he read their names as signed, and said he was glad it was done. For the reasons before stated, we are of opinion that this was an attestation in his presence, and was sufficient."

1. In Cook v. Winchester, 81 Mich. 581, the witnesses subscribed in another room, at a table so placed as to be beyond the line of vision of the testatrix, who could not move in bed, but within her hearing, knowledge, and understanding; after which they returned to her room, showed her their signatures, and had the will, which consisted of one sheet of paper, read over, and one of them told her, in the presence of the other, that the will had been signed by them, to which she replied: "It is all right, and just as I want it, the witnesses and everything are all right." It was held that the will was subscribed in the presence of the testatrix. The court said: "In the definition of the phrase 'in the presence of,' due regard must be had to the circumstances of each particular case, as it is well settled by all the authorities the occasion of the witnesses' absence, whether for the ease or at the solicitation of the testator, or otherwise, is immaterial.¹

2. SIMULTANEOUS PRESENCE OF WITNESSES.—Under the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II., ch. 3, which provided merely that the will should be "attested and subscribed in the presence of the devisor, by three or four credible witnesses," it was held that the witnesses need not subscribe in the presence of each other, and that the testator might either sign before one and acknowledge before the others, or acknowledge before each separately without signing before any of them.² Under the Statute of Victoria, 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 9, which provides that the signature shall be "made or acknowledged by the testator in the presence of two or more witnesses present at the same time, and such witnesses shall attest and shall subscribe the will in the presence of the testator, but no form of attestation shall be necessary,"³ it was held that the signature must be made or acknowledged in the presence of the witnesses simultaneously and not at different times,⁴ and that they

that the statute does not require absolutely that the witnessing must be done in the actual sight of the testator, nor yet within the same room with him. If, as before shown, they sign within his hearing, knowledge, and understanding, and so near as not to be substantially away from him, they are considered to be in his presence.

"But we hold that the execution of this will was valid expressly upon the ground that not only was the act of signing by the witnesses within the hearing, knowledge, and understanding of the testatrix, but after such signing the witnesses came back into the room where she was with the will, which was on one sheet of paper; that the will was then again all read over to her by the scrivener, and the names of the witnesses read to her and their signatures shown to her, and she informed by the witnesses, or one of them in the presence of the other, that the will had been signed by them; and that she then said it was all right, 'just as she wanted it; witnesses and everything was all right.' This seems to us to have been a substantial compliance with the statute, and a witnessing in the presence of the testatrix." Compare Sturdivant v. Birchett, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 67.

1. Broderick v. Broderick, 1 P. Wms. 239; Macell v. Temple, 2 Show. 288. Compare Edelen v. Hardey, 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 61; 16 Am. Dec. 292; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 1 Spears (S. Car.) 253; 40 Am. Dec. 599.

2. Ellis v. Smith, 1 Ves. Jr. 11; Wright v. Wright, 7 Bing. 459 n; Grayson v. Atkinson, 2 Ves. 454; Smith v. Codron, 2 Ves. 454.

So, also, in Kentucky, it has been held that under Kentucky Gen. Stat., ch. 113, § 5, which provides that if a will is not "wholly written by the testator the subscription shall be made or the will acknowledged by him in the presence of at least two credible witnesses," the witnesses need not be present together when the acknowledgment is made. Grubbs v. Marshall (Ky. 1890), 13 S. W. Rep. 447.

3. Thompson v. Davitte, 59 Ga. 472.

4. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *109; In re Allen, 2 Curt. 331; In re Simmonds, 3 Curt. 79; Moore v. King, 3 Curt. 243.

In Matter of Look (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 298, a will was subscribed by the testatrix in the presence of one of the attesting witnesses, and was declared by her, in the presence of both of them, to be her last will and testament. The two witnesses subscribed it as such at her request. The signature of the testatrix was plainly visible to the attesting witnesses on the face of the will. It was held a sufficient compliance with 2 New York Rev. Stat., p. 63, § 40, requiring the subscription to be made by the testator in the presence of each of the attesting witnesses, or to be acknowledged by him to have been so made to each of them, and that there shall be at least two attesting witnesses, each of whom shall sign, etc.

In Matter of Bedell's Will (Surrogate must subscribe in the presence of the testator, though not necessarily in the presence of each other.¹ In South Carolina, Vermont, West Virginia, and Utah, statutes exist which require the witnesses to attest and subscribe in the presence of the testator and of each other.² In the absence of such statutory requirement, it is sufficient if each witness attests and subscribes in the presence of the testator.³

Ct.), 12 N. Y. Supp. 96, it was held that the presence of the subscribing witnesses to a will, in the same room with the testatrix at the time she signed, and in positions where they can actually see the testatrix write if they choose to do so, is a sufficient compliance with 2 New York Rev. Stat., marg. p. 63, § 40, subd. 2, which requires a will to be executed in the presence of each of the subscribing witnesses; and the fact that one of them refrained from looking at the testatrix while she was signing, for fear that it would make her nervous, will not make the will void.

In Moore v. King, 3 Curt. 243, a testator signed a codicil in the presence of a witness (his sister), who, at his desire, attested and subscribed it. On a subsequent day, when his sister and another person were present, he desired her to bring him the codicil, and requested the other person present to attest and subscribe it, saying, in the presence of both parties, and pointing to his signature, "This is a codicil signed by myself and by my sister you see; you will oblige me if you will add your signature, two witnesses being necessary." That person then subscribed in the presence of the testator and his sister, the latter, who was standing by him, pointing to her signature, and saying: "There is my signature, you had better place yours underneath," she did not however re-subscribe. It was held that the instrument was not sufficiently attested, under 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 9, Sir H. Jenner Fust saying: "Under the Statute of Frauds it had been held that the witnesses need not be all present at the same time; the signature might be acknowledged to the three or more witnesses at different times; again, by the present act, all doubt on that point is removed, the witnesses must be present 'at the same time.' Now when I clearly find that the object of this act is to remove every possible doubt, thereby taking away all latitude and discretion in the interpretation—and that it expressly provides that the two witnesses, who are to be present at the same time, shall attest and subscribe, can I hold the one may attest and subscribe on one day, and acknowledge his or her signature on a subsequent day? I am inclined to think that the act is not complied with unless both witnesses shall attest and subscribe after the testator's signature shall have been made and acknowledged to them when both are actually present at the same time. If the one witness has previously subscribed the paper, and merely points out her signature when the testator acknowledges his signature in her presence, and in that of the other witness, which latter witness alone then subscribes, that I hold not sufficient; I have no explanation why the first witness did not re-subscribe. The act says the testator may acknowledge his signature, but does not say that the witnesses may acknowledge their subscriptions."

In Green v. Crain, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 252, it was held that this construction was not required by the act, and the court refused to follow it in construing a similar statute.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *110; Faulds v. Jackson, 6 No. Cas. Sup. 1; In re Webb, 1 Deane 1; 1 Jur. N. S. 1096; In re Porter, 9 Mackey (D. C.) 493.

2. South Carolina Gen. Stat. (1882), § 1854; Vermont Rev. Laws (1880), § 2042; West Virginia Code (1887), ch. 77, § 3; Utah Comp. Laws (1888), § 2651. See Roberts v. Welch, 46 Vt. 164.

Formerly similar statutes existed in Connecticut and Virginia, Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2644; but this requirement has been omitted from later revisions, Connecticut Gen. Stat. (1888), § 538; Virginia Code (1887), § 2514. See, as to the earlier statute, Green v. Crain, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 252.

3. Willis v. Mott, 36 N. Y. 486; Matter of Bogart, 67 How. Pr. (N. Y. Surrogate Ct.) 313; Hoysradt v. Kingman, 22 N. Y. 372; Barry v. Brown, 22 Dem. (N. Y.) 309; Conselyea v. Walker, 2 Dem. (N. Y.) 117; Matter of Potter's Will (Surrogate Ct.), 12 N. Y. Supp. 105; Flinn v. Owen, 58 Ill.

o. WHAT IS SUBSCRIPTION — ANIMUS ATTESTANDI — SUBSCRIBING BY MARK, INITIAL, SEAL, STAMP — SUBSCRIBING BY ANOTHER.— Provided the witness puts his name to the paper *animo attestandi*¹ he may subscribe by making his mark,² or he 111; Webb v. Fleming, 30 Ga. 808; 76 Am. Dec. 675; Johnson v. Johnson, 106 Ind. 475; 55 Am. Rep. 762; Eelbeck v. Granberry, 2 Hayw. (N. Car.) 232; 2 Am. Dec. 624; Beane v. Yerby, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 239; Parramore v. Taylor, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 220; Welch v. Adams, 63 N. H. 344; 56 Am. Rep. 521; Dewey v. Dewey, 1 Met. (Mass.) 349; 35 Am. Dec. 367; Chase v. Kittridge, 11 Allen (Mass.) 49; 87 Am. Rep. 687; Hogan v. Grosvenor, 10 Met. (Mass.) 54; Ela v. Edwards, 16 Gray (Mass.) 91; Grubbs v. Marshall (Ky. 1890), 13 S. W. Rep. 447; Simmons v. Leonard, 91 Tenn. 183; Rogers v. Diamond, 13 Ark. 474; Smithe's Will, 52 Wis. 543; Cravens v. Faulconer, 28 Mo. 19; Grimm v. Tittman, 113 Mo. 56; Blanchard v. Blanchard, 32 Vt. 62; 43 Am. Dec. 414; Woodcock v. McDonald, 30 Ala. 411; Hoffman v. Hoffman, 26 Ala. 535; Moore v. Spies, 80 Ala. 130. See Moale v. Cutting, 59 Md. 510.

It was formerly so in Connecticut, Lane's Appeal, 57 Conn. 182; but the late revision, Gen. Stat. (1888), § 538, restores the law as laid down in Gaylor's Appeal, 43 Conn. 82.

In Gilman v. Gilman, 1 Redf. (N. Y.) 354, the desk whereat the testator and one of the subscribing witnesses sat when the testator subscribed the will, and the witness signed, was separated from the desks where the two other witnesses sat by a brick wall or column, four feet broad; but it did not appear that their positions rendered their seeing the testator impossible, or that the two compartments were considered as separate offices. The witness who had already subscribed requested the two other witnesses to witness the will, at the request and in the hearing of the testator, in the words: "Mr. Gilman (the testator) requests you to witness his will." The instrument (already signed by the testator and attested by one of the witnesses) was then signed by the two other witnesses, in the presence of, but without any further request or declaration by, the testator. It was held that the witnesses all signed substantially in the presence of each other, and in the presence of the testator, within the meaning of the statute.

29 C. of L.—15

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), §§ 333, 334; In re Sharman, L. R., 1 P. & M. 661; Goods of Wilson, L. R., 1 P. & M. 269; Dunn v. Dunn, L. R., 1 P. & M. 277; Hindmarsh v. Carlton, 8 H. L. Cas. 160; Pryor v. Pryor, 29 L. J. P. 114; Goods of Duggins, 39 L. J. P. & M. 24; Goods of Maddock, L. R., 3 P. & M. 169; Peake v. Jenkins, 80 Va. 293; Fowler v. Stagner, 55 Tex. 393; Boone v. Lewis, 103 N. Car. 40; Moale v. Cutting, 59 Md. 510.

But if one who subscribed with another purpose in view also intended his signature to serve for attestation as well, the co-existence of the other purpose does not destroy the animo attestandi. Thus, in Griffiths v. Griffiths, L. R., 2 P. & M. 300, the deceased executed his will in the presence of two witnesses, who signed their names in his presence, one opposite the word "executors," the other opposite the word "witness." There was no attestation clause to the will. The deceased intended one of the witnesses to be his executor, and asked him to sign his name in that character. The court held that such person did not sign the will exclusively as executor; but that he also intended by his signature to affirm that the deceased executed the will in his presence, and that consequently the execution was valid.

If the witnesses sign animo attestandi, the validity of the signature is not affected by the fact that it is above instead of below the attestation clause. Moale v. Cutting, 59 Md. 510.

2. Addy v. Grix, 8 Vesey Jr. 504; Harrison v. Harrison, 8 Ves. 185; Goods of Ashmore, 3 Curt. 756; Morris v. Kniffin, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 336; Campbell v. Logan, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 90; Meehan v. Rourke, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 385; Jackson v. Van Dusen, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 144; 4 Am. Dec. 330; Thompson v. Davitte, 59 Ga. 472; Den v. Mitton, 12 N. J. L. 70; Pridgen v. Pridgen, 13 Ired. (N. Car.) 259; Adams v. Chaplin, 1 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 266; Davis v. Semmes, 51 Ark. 48; Garrett v. Heflin, 98 Ala. 615. Compare Ford v. Ford, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 92.

What Mark Is Sufficient.—There need be no peculiarity in the mark of an may subscribe by affixing his initials to the paper,¹ and perhaps by a stamp or device if illiteracy or some other good reason may be given for it,² and if necessary, his hand may even be guided by another.³ A witness may subscribe by a descriptive title, as "servant to A,"⁴ or by a fictitious name,⁵ unless used with intent to personate another.⁶ A marksman's signature is not avoided by the fact that a wrong surname is written against it by mistake.⁷ But where a witness intended to write his full name, and wrote only his Christian name, being too feeble to complete it, the subscription was held insufficient.⁸ The better opinion is that subscription requires some manual act on the part of the witness, apparent on the paper, and hence, unlike the testator, he cannot allow another to write his name.⁹ A witness cannot subscribe by merely attesting witness to a will. It is only necessary that he be able to recognize it and swear to it when called upon to testify. Thompson v. Davitte, 59 Ga. 472.

1. In re Christian, 2 Rob. 110; Jackson v. Van Dusen, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 144; 4 Am. Dec. 330; Adams v. Chaplin, 1 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 266. Otherwise, if merely placed in the margin to identify alterations. In re Martin, 6 No. Cas. 604; 1 Rob. 712; In re Cunningham, 1 S. & S. 132.

2. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 331.

3. Harrison v. Elvin, 3 Q. B. 117; 2 G. & D. 769; In re First, 4 Jur. N. S. 288. In Re Kilcher, 6 No. Cas. 15, it was doubted whether, if the witness could write, it was sufficient for him to touch the top of the pen while another wrote his name.

4. Goods of Sperling, 3 S. & T. 272.

5. In re Olliver, 2 Spinks 57.

6. Pryor v. Pryor, 29 L. J. P. 114.

7. In re Ashmore, 3 Curt. 756.

8. Goods of Maddock, L. R., 3 P. & M. 169. See Winslow's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 124.

In Goods of Maddock, L. R., 3 P. & M. 170, Sir J. Hannen said: "I take it, as a rule, that if a witness makes any mark with an intention thereby to subscribe the will, it will be sufficient. The very imperfect signatures of witnesses and testators to be found in wills are illustrations of this rule. But the statute requires that a party shall intend, by what he does, to subscribe, and in this case I think the witness has failed to do what was necessary. . . . I have come to the conclusion that I must reject this application, being of opinion that the witness did not put the word 'Sam'l' on the paper with the intention at the time that it should be a perfect subscription to the will. Having done something, he broke off without completing the intention. In the case of In the Goods of Sperling, 3 S. & T. 273, the witness did not sign his name, but merely the words 'Servant to Mr. Sperling'; and the court thought the attestation sufficient, by reason that the witness wrote them intending thereby an identification of himself as the person attesting. The act in this case is not sufficient to show such an intention, so as to amount to a subscription to the will."

9. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 82; In re Leverington, 11 Pro. Div. 80; Goods of Duggins, 39 L. J. P. 24; In re White, 2 No. Cas. 461; Playne v. Scriven, 1 Rob. 774; Riley v. Riley, 36 Ala. 496; Horton v. Johnson, 18 Ga. 396.

In some states it has been held that the name of the witness may be written by another at his request, in his presence, and in the presence of the testator. Lord v. Lord, 58 N. H. 7; 42 Am. Rep. 565; Upchurch v. Upchurch, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 102; Jesse v. Parker, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 57; 52 Am. Dec. 102. See Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 439; Matter of Strong's Will (Surrogate Ct.), 16 N. Y. Supp. 104. Compare Ex p. Leroy, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 227.

In Derry's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 202, a witness to a will did not sign his name, being unable to write. The other witness, besides signing as such, wrote the name of his associate witness, and wrote his own name as witness to the associate's mark. It was held that this was a good witnessing of the will.

In Simmons v. Leonard, 91 Tenn. 183, it was held that where the signature of a witness to a will, who is unable to see to write, is written by a third affixing his seal, any more than the testator can sign by so doing.¹

p. WHERE WITNESSES SHOULD SUBSCRIBE — POSITION OF SIGNATURE.—In Arkansas, California, Dakota, Montana, New York and Utah, it is expressly provided by statute that the witnesses shall subscribe at the end of the will.² In Kentucky, the same result is attained through judicial construction of a statute which merely requires the witnesses to attest and subscribe the will, and any unreasonable gap between the signature of the testator and that of the witnesses may avoid the subscription.³ In person at the request of the witness, but is not accompanied by some mark indicating his adoption of the writer's act, the subscription is insufficient.

A witness who signs by a guided hand or mark, signs by his own act, and one witness may help another in this way. Harrison v. Elim, 3 Q. B. 117; Lewis v. Lewis, 2 S. & T. 153; Campbell v. Logan, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 96; Meehan v. Rourke, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 393.

1. In re Byrd, 3 Curt. 117.

2. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2644; Arkansas Dig., § 6492; California Civ. Code, § 6276; Dakota Civ. Code, § 691; Montana Prob. Code, § 438; New York Rev. Stat. (7th ed.), pt. 2, ch. 6, tit. 1, § 40; Utah Biennial Laws (1884), ch. 44, pt. 1, tit. 1, § 6. See Matter of Conway's Will, 124 N. Y. 455; Matter of Case, 4 Dem. (N. Y.) 124.

Under 2 New York Rev. Stat. 63, § 40, the subscribing witnesses of a will, as well as the testator, must put their signatures at the end of the will. Where the signatures of the witnesses, apparently by mistake in turning over the paper, were put on a blank page in the middle of the will, it was held that the will was not duly executed. Matter of Heady's Will, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Surrogate Ct.) 211. But see Hitchcock v. Thompson, 6 Hun (N. Y.) 279.

Where the subscribing witnesses to a will subscribe their names at the end of a memorandum of erasures and interlineations, which is immediately below the attestation clause, this is a sufficient signature by them. The memorandum is merely a part of the certificate, which, taken together, states that the paper as altered was executed by the testator and attested by the witnesses. McDonough v. Loughlin, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 238.

In Matter of Dayger, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 127, the will was written upon four half sheets of note paper, which were fastened together, end to end, with mucilage. Upon one side of this strip of paper the will was written and signed by the testator; all that side, except two lines between the signature and the bottom of the sheet, being used. It also appeared that after the completion of the body of the will, the person preparing it folded this strip of paper with one fold, and then turned it over and wrote the attestation clause upon the other side. After the will was thus prepared, it was signed by the testator in the presence of the attesting witnesses, and then signed by them at the end of the attestation clause. It was held that the witnesses signed at the end of the will within the meaning of that term as used in section 40 of 3 New York Revised Statutes (7th ed.), p. 2285.

An instrument is signed at the end thereof when nothing intervenes between the instrument and the subscription. Accordingly it was held that a codicil was signed by the subscribing witnesses at the end thereof, although there was a blank space of four inches between the signature of the testator and the commencement of the attestation clause. Matter of Gilman, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 364.

In Gilman v. Gilman, 1 Redf. (N. Y.) 354, the will and codicil were written on one side of the page of several sheets, which were folded and tied together in the form of a book, leaving alternate pages blank. The codicil following the will ended at the bottom of a page, where the testator signed his name, leaving no room for the attestation clause and signatures of the witnesses. To carry out the method of writing only on one side of each sheet, the attestation clause and subscription of the witnesses were written on the second page after the testator's signature, leaving an entire blank page between them. It was held that this was a subscription "at the end" within the meaning of the statute.

3. Soward v. Soward, 1 Duv. (Ky.)

the absence of an express statutory provision, however, the general rule is that the witnesses need not sign in any particular place, provided it can be shown that they signed animo attestandi;¹ but

126. In this case a paper purporting to be a will was written on the first, and a little over half of the second page of a sheet of cap paper. The sheet was then folded in the form of a letter so as to inclose the half which contained the writing within the other half. It was sealed with wax, and was afterwards presented by the person who had subscribed it, to three persons, to be by them witnessed as his will; they, at his request, wrote their names on the outside as witnesses, neither of them seeing or knowing the contents. Their names were on the fourth page, or outside of the sheet. It was held that this was not a sufficient attestation under the statute. The court said: "It results from what has been said that a will, to be valid under the fifth section of the present statute of wills, must be in writing, with the name of the testator subscribed thereto, or, in other words, with the name of the testator written at the foot or end thereof. Such, in our judgment, is the clear meaning of the word subscribe as here used; and such was the effect intended to be given it by the makers of the law. The same section further provides that if the will be not wholly written by the testator, 'the subscription shall be made, or the will acknowledged by him in the presence of at least two credible witnesses, who shall subscribe the will with their names in the presence of the testator.' . . . They are to perform this act by writing their names beneath, or at the foot, or close, of the will. No other mode is prescribed, nor is there a case to be found in which a different mode was ever recognized as sufficient. . . . The witnesses did not 'subscribe the will with their names,' in any rational or allowable acceptance of the language. Their names were not written beneath, or at the foot or close of the paper, or anywhere near the place so designated. Between the paper, as subscribed by Soward, and the names of the witnesses, there is an intervening space of nearly two blank pages. So far from subscribing their names to the will, it may be said, with much more propriety and accuracy of speech, that they merely indorsed the paper enveloping and inclosing the will, without any accompanying writing or memorandum to indicate the purpose of the indorsement, or showing any connection whatever between the indorsement and the will. If the paper had been inclosed in a sealed envelope, and the witnesses had written their names on the envelope, it would have been quite as near an approximation to the requirements of the statute. There would also have been just as little room to doubt the identity of the paper in the one case as in the other. And whilst it is true that one of the chief objects of requiring the subscription of the names of the witnesses is to insure identity, it is equally true that another object is to prevent fraudulent additions to, or alterations of, the instrument to be subscribed."

1. Roberts v. Phillips, 4 El. & Bl. 450; Goods of Braddock, 1 Pro. Div. 433; In re Davis, 3 Curt. 748; Moale v. Cutting, 59 Md. 510; Potts v. Felton, 70 Ind. 166; Murray v. Murphy, 39 Miss. 214; Matter of Collins, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 20; Jones v. Habersham, 63 La. 146.

In Goods of Streatley P. (1891) 172, the attesting witnesses to a will signed their names in the margin of the first and second sheets, opposite to certain amendments. It was held following Roberts v. Phillips, 4 El. & Bl. 450, on proof that the witnesses signed with the intention of attesting the testator's signature, that this was a valid subscription within the requirements of section 9 of the Wills Act, and that the will might be admitted to probate.

In Goods of Braddock, 1 Pro. Div. 433, the witnesses to the execution of a codicil signed their names on the back of a will, to which that codicil was attached by a pin. There was evidence which satisfied the court that the will and codicil were pinned together at the time of the execution of the codicil, and that the witnesses intended by their subscription on the back of the will, to attest the signature of the testatrix at the foot of the codicil. It was held that the codicil was entitled to probate. Sir J. Hannen said: "The law does not require that the attestation should be in any particular place, provided that the evidence satisfies the court that the witnesses, in writing their names, had the intention of attesting. But the attestation, if not on the same sheet of paper as the signature of the testator, in determining whether they did so sign, the position of their signatures may be most important.¹

9. SUBSCRIBING ON DIFFERENT PAPER FROM WILL.—The witnesses may subscribe upon a different sheet of paper from that which contains the testator's signature, provided the two sheets are physically connected at the time of subscription. No particular mode of connection is prescribed by law, and hence fastening by tape, eyelets, mucilage, or even a pin, seems unobjectionable.²

7. ATTESTATION OF WILL CONSISTING OF SEVERAL SHEETS—ADDITIONS SUBSEQUENT TO ATTESTATION.—Under the Statute

must be on a paper physically connected with that sheet. No particular mode of affixing one piece of paper to another is prescribed by law, and I cannot say that the fastening of two sheets of paper together by a pin is an insufficient mode of connection, or that it is less effectual than the lawyer's mode of fastening by a tape. Here I am satisfied by the evidence that the papers were connected together, and that, in writing their names on the back of the original will, the witnesses intended to attest the signature of the testatrix at the foot of the codicil."

But where the execution of his last will, by the testator, having been attested by but one witness, such testator afterward, at a different place, and in the absence of such witness, executed an indorsement upon the back of such will, reading, "The within is the basis on which I desire to have my affairs disposed of, should no other will be made by me," which indorsement was attested by another witness, to whom its contents had been made known, and the signatures to such will exhibited, by such testator. It was held in an action to contest the validity and resist the probate of such will, that it had not been executed according to law and was therefore invalid. It was held also, that it could not be established by parol evidence, that the signature of such witness, to such indorsement, was intended by the testator, and executed by such witness, as an attesting of such will. Patterson v. Ransom, 55 Ind. 402.

In Franks v. Chapman, 64 Tex. 159, the witnesses to the will each wrote his name where it occurred in the body of the will, and in the concluding sentence thereof, as follows: "And now, in the presence of H. L. Harrison, G. W. M. Duck, W. M. Smith, who I have requested to act as witnesses, I declare the writing contained in the foregoing ten pages my last will and testament." (Signed) "G. W. Chapman." It was held that the signatures of the witnesses were sufficient, and that it was of no importance that the witnesses who signed the will as such at the request and in the presence of the testator, signed their names in the attestation clause and not after it.

1. Goods of Wilson, L. R., 1 P. & M. 269. See Patterson v. Ransom, 55 Ind. 402.

Where, therefore, a will was written on one page of a foolscap sheet of paper, and the testator's signature appeared at the end of that page, with the words—Witness, William Hatton, and the names of three persons were subscribed, under a memorandum not testamentary, at the top of the second page of the same sheet, the court came to the conclusion that, from the position of the three names and the circumstances of the case, they were not placed there for the purpose of attesting the will, and therefore pronounced the execution to be invalid. Goods of Wilson, L. R., 1 P. & M. 269. Sir J. P. Wilde said: "It is said that the position of the names of the witnesses is immaterial, provided they are in such a position as to show that they were placed there for the purpose of attesting the will. In considering whether persons have subscribed a will as attesting witnesses the position of the signatures may be most material. If they are written under an attestation clause, no difficulty arises, but if they are placed elsewhere, their position may be important, because if they are placed under a particular clause or statement, the inference is that prima facie they were put there to give effect or to testify to the words of the clause or statement."

2. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 346; Goods of Braddock, 1 Pro. Div.

of Frauds, and similar statutes in the United States, it has been held that if a will be written on several disconnected sheets, each sheet need not be shown the witnesses, and the whole is well executed by a single subscription provided all the sheets were in the room,¹ and, in the absence of proof to the contrary, such is the presumption.² Sheets which are bound together and constitute the will at the testator's death, are presumed to have been so bound together at the time of attestation.³ Unattested provisions inserted by the testator after the witnesses have subscribed are not entitled to probate.⁴

5. NOTING INTERLINEATIONS.—To avoid question, interlineations made before execution should be noted in the attestation clause, although the failure to do so does not prevent probate.⁵

6. CERTIFICATE OF ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—A certificate of acknowledgment is superfluous and useless, but may have the effect of converting the magistrate or notary public who takes the acknowledgment, into a subscribing witness.⁶

433; Matter of Collins, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 20.

1. Bond v. Sewell, 3 Burr. 1773; Ela v. Edwards, 16 Gray (Mass.) 99; Gass v. Gass, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 278; Wickoff's Appeal, 15 Pa. St. 281; 53 Am. Dec. 597; Jones v. Habersham, 63 Ga. 146. See Tonnele v. Hall, 4 N. Y. 141.

2. 1 Wms. on Exrs. (9th Eng. ed.) 138.

3. Rees v. Rees, L. R., 3 P. & M. 86; Gregory v. Queen's Proctor, 4 No. Cas. 620; Marsh v. Marsh, 1 S. & T. 528. See Ela v. Edwards, 16 Gray (Mass.) 91; Jones v. Habersham, 63 Ga. 146.

The will of the deceased had been ingrossed by a law stationer on fifteen brief sheets of paper, consecutively numbered. On the sixteenth sheet the testator had written a codicil, and on the eighteenth and last a schedule of the property referred to in the will. On the death of the testator, it was found that the original fourth sheet had been removed and placed loose in his desk, and that the original seventeenth sheet had been used by the testator in substitution of the fourth. The several sheets were tied together with tape. It was held that the legal presumption that papers bound together and constituting the will, as found at testator's death, were so bound together at the time of execution and attestation was not rebutted by the circumstances of the case. Rees v. Rees, L. R., 3 P. & M. 84.

4. Treloar v. Lean, 14 Pro. Div. 49; Stevens v. Stevens, 6 Dem. (N. Y.)

262; 3 N. Y. Supp. 131. See Dyer v. Erving, 2 Dem. (N. Y.) 160; Wetmore v. Carryl, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 544.

5. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 334; Wright v. Wright, 5 Ind. 389.

In Matter of Vorhees, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 162, the testator, who left two sons and three daughters surviving him, gave a fifth part of his estate to each of four of his children by name. In the clause providing for his children was also a bequest to "my daughter Ariadna and her heirs one-fifth of my real and personal estate." Ariadna was the fifth child who was not elsewhere mentioned. It was held that the interlineation should be taken as part of the will, though not noted on the foot of it.

In Matter of Wilcox's Will (Surrogate Ct.), 20 N. Y. Supp. 131, it was held that where a will is altered after execution by interlineation or erasure, if the original language can be ascertained, the will may be admitted to probate and its provisions carried out in disregard of the alteration.

6. Murray v. Murphy, 39 Miss. 214. See Franks v. Chapman, 64 Tex. 159; Payne v. Payne, 54 Ark. 415.

In Murray v. Murphy, 39 Miss. 220, Handy, J., said: "The certificate was intended and signed by Grafton (the magistrate) as an attestation to the execution of the will; and the two other witnesses also signed their names to it for the same purpose, and all in the presence of the testator. Though the certificate is useless, yet the signature of Grafton as a

u. RE-EXECUTION.—Where a first attempt at execution fails, through some informality, care should be taken to perform the solemnity de novo, and not merely to piece out the imperfections of the first attempt.¹ Thus, a witness who has served before should resubscribe, for his acknowledgment of his signature is insufficient.²

v. QUALIFICATIONS OF ATTESTING WITNESSES—(1) "Credible" Witnesses Construed to Mean "Competent" Witnesses.—The term credible witnesses, as used in the Statute of Frauds relative to attesting witnesses to wills, means competent witnesses.³

(2) Who Are Competent Attesting Witnesses.—An attesting witness to a will, in order to possess the requisite competency, should be of such character and have such qualifications as would render his testimony admissible on occasions when the testimony of witnesses is ordinarily received.⁴

subscribing witness, which was the essential thing and that which was intended, is valid. The superfluous certificate cannot invalidate the regular signature, for utile per inutile non vitiatur. And as to the place of signature of the attesting witnesses, all that was necessary for that purpose was, that the witnesses should sign their names upon the paper, in the presence of the testator, in testimony of the fact that it was the paper signed and published by him as his will.⁵

1. In states in which witnesses are not required to sign in the presence of each other (see supra, this title, Attestation and Subscription—Simultaneous Presence of Witnesses) the testator may acknowledge his signature before each separately.

2. Attestation—Subscribing in Presence of Testator—Acknowledgment of Previous Signature.—Going over the signature with a dry pen, or adding the date to the subscription, merely amounts to an acknowledgment. Casement v. Fulton, 5 Moo. P. C. 130; Goods of Maddock, L. R., 3 P. & M. 169; Hindmarsh v. Carlton, 8 H. L. Cas. 160.

3. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), §§ 350, 351, citing Sparhawk v. Sparhawk, 10 Allen (Mass.) 155; Haven v. Hilliard, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 10; Sullivan v. Sullivan, 106 Mass. 474; Eustis v. Parker, 1 N. H. 273; Rucker v. Lambdin, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 230; Hall v. Hall, 18 Ga. 40; Lord v. Lord, 58 N. H. 7; 42 Am. Rep. 565; Warren v. Baxter, 48 Me. 193. See Fuller v. Fuller, 83 Ky. 345; In re Noble's Estate, 22 Ill. App. 535; In re Noble's Will, 124 Ill. 266; Comb's Appeal, 105 Pa. St. 158; Simmons v.

Leonard, 91 Tenn. 183; Vrooman v. Powers, 47 Ohio St. 191; Nixon v. Armstrong, 38 Tex. 296; Brown v. Pridgen, 56 Tex. 124; Hawes v. Humphrey, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 350; Mars-ton, Petitioner, 79 Me. 26; Amory v. Fellowes, 5 Mass. 219; Sears v. Dillingham, 12 Mass. 358; Smalley v. Smalley, 70 Me. 548; Bacon v. Bacon, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 134.

4. See 4 Min. Inst. (2d ed.) 90. In re Holt's Will (Minn. 1893), 57 N. W. Rep. 219.

In Hitchcock v. Shaw, 160 Mass. 140, it was held that the provision of the Public Statutes, ch. 169, § 18, that no person of sufficient understanding should be excluded from giving evidence as a witness, by the express provision of section 21, does not apply to the attesting witnesses, to a will; the competency of such witness is to be determined by the rules of the common law. See also Sparhawk v. Sparhawk, 10 Allen (Mass.) 155; Sullivan v. Sullivan, 106 Mass. 474.

In Robinson v. Savage (Ill. 1888), 15 N. E. Rep. 850, Shope J., in delivering the opinion said: "Credible witnesses," as used in the statute relating to wills, has been construed both in England and this country to mean competent witnesses; that is, such persons are not legally disqualified from testifying in courts of justice, by reason of mental incapacity, interest, or the commission of crime, or other cause excluding them from testifying generally, or rendering them incompetent in respect of the particular subject-matter or in the particular suit."

In Carlton v. Carlton, 40 N. H.

(a) Examples—Children as Attesting Witnesses.—The age of the attesting witness is only important to be considered with reference to the requisite degree of intelligence necessary to competence in the witness. As regards children, no arbitrary and conclusive standard of years can be established, as the degree of understanding

17, Doe, J., respecting the qualifications of attesting witnesses to wills, said: "The Statute of Wills requires 'three or more credible witnesses,' and the well settled construction of this and other similar statutes is, that the witnesses should be competent, or not disqualified, at the time of the attestation of the will, to be sworn and to testify in a court of justice. The argument that attesting witnesses are regarded in law as persons placed around the testator to protect him from fraud, and to judge of his capacity, and are permitted to testify as to the opinions they formed of his capacity, and that it is contrary to the policy of the law to allow so important a trust to be exercised by children, tends to show that, on account of their peculiar rights and duties, they should possess some other qualifications than those which entitle persons to be sworn as witnesses in court; and it might lead to the conclusion that they should be experts in questions of insanity, a result that would often prevent the making of wills. Undoubtedly, the statute was intended to guard against fraud, and to provide means of proving the mental condition of the testator. And one of the objects of requiring the presence of witnesses being to give them an opportunity to ascertain and judge of his capacity, it would seem necessarily to follow that they should be allowed to testify the opinions which they were specially appointed to form. But whatever they are required or authorized to do, they are not required to have any other qualifications than those of ordinary testifying witnesses."

In Windham v. Chetwynd, 1 Burr. 421, a distinction is made by Lord Mansfield, between interest as a disqualification in the case of wills, and in other cases. He said: "Nice objections of a remote interest, which could not be paid or released, though they held in other cases, were not allowed to disqualify a witness in the case of a will; as parishioners might prove a devise to the use of the poor of the parish forever. Townsend v. Row, 2 Sid. 109."

Women as Attesting Witnesses—Louisiana.—In Roth's Succession, 31 La.

Ann. 315, it was held that women were absolutely incapable of acting as valid attesting witnesses to testaments, but that they might be competent witnesses to prove the handwriting of the testator upon the probate of a will when that fact has to be established. Manning, J., who delivered the opinion of the court in this case, said: "The laws touching the capacity of witnesses underwent a sweeping alteration in 1867 (Sess. Acts, p. 143) and again in 1868 (Sess. Acts, p. 269). The act of this last year was incorporated bodily in the Civil Code in 1870 and was substituted to article 2260 of that code, new number, 2281. It enacts that the competent witness of any covenant or fact, whatever it may be, in civil matters, is a person of proper understanding. The same code contains the prohibition of women being witnesses to a will, and the two articles must be construed together or if irreconcilable and naturally repugnant, when the last alone must stand. And they are not irreconcilable."

Witnesses Who Are Deaf, Dumb, or Blind.—In Louisiana, it seems that persons who are deaf, dumb, or blind have been held absolutely incompetent to act as valid attesting witnesses to wills. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law 356. However, the law does not exclude, as attesting witnesses to wills, those whose senses of sight or hearing are merely impaired; but such an infirmity might be taken into consideration respecting the credibility and effect of the testimony of such a witness. Major v. Esneault, 7 La. Ann. 51.

Person Convicted of Forgery.—The fact that one of the subscribing witnesses to a will has been convicted of forgery does not render him incompetent, as a witness, within the meaning of the Statute of Wills requiring the attestation of all wills by "two or more credible witnesses;" evidence of a conviction for crime being admissible merely to impeach the credibility of a witness, and not to disqualify him. Robinson v. Savage (Ill. 1888), 15 N. E. Rep. 850.

which is the test of competency is not developed in all at the same age. It has been held, however, that proof that an attesting witness was only fourteen years of age at the date of the attestation, would make a prima facie case against the due execution of the will, overcoming the presumption of competency which exists with respect to witnesses, until proof is adduced to the contrary.¹

(b) Legatees and Devisees.—Interest being a disqualification at common law, devisees and legatees under a will are regarded as incompetent attesting witnesses thereto, apart from statutory enactments to the contrary.² This interest, however, to operate as a disqual-

1. See Carlton v. Carlton, 40 N. H. 19. In Jones v. Tebbetts, 57 Me. 574, "A minor," said the court, "may be an attesting witness thereto, precisely to the extent that he is a witness generally." In this case one of the attesting witnesses was twenty years of age, who was held to be a competent witness to the execution of the will.

In Louisiana, women of what age soever have been held absolutely incompetent to witness testaments, and their male children who have not attained the age of sixteen years complete have been declared incapable. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law 356.

Prescribed Age by Statute.—Some statutes, however, prescribe the age below which a person may not be a valid attesting witness. Thus, article 4859, Sayles Texas Civil Statutes, provides: "Every last will and testament, except where otherwise provided by law, shall be in writing and signed by the testator, or by some other person, by his direction and in his presence, and shall, if not wholly written by himself, be attested by two or more credible witnesses, above the age of fourteen years, subscribing their names thereto in the presence of the testator."

2. Trotters v. Winchester, 1 Mo. 413; 4 Min. Inst. (2d ed.) 92. See also Haven v. Hilliard, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 10; Sparhawk v. Sparhawk, 10 Allen (Mass.) 157; Fowler v. Stagner, 55 Tex. 397; Nixon v. Armstrong, 38 Tex. 296; Frink v. Pond, 46 N. H. 125; Lord v. Lord, 58 N. H. 7; Clark v. Hoskins, 6 Conn. 106.

Louisiana.—In Hall's Succession, 28 La. Ann. 57, it was held that a legatee cannot be an attesting witness to a will, but he is not incompetent to be called as a witness in proceedings to establish a will, or to testify to any material fact which he may know. Morvant's Succession, 45 La. Ann. 207.

In many of the states the common-law disqualification of witnesses generally, on the ground of interest, has been removed, but, by express exclusion of statute, the law as regards attesting witnesses is allowed to remain unchanged. Sullivan v. Sullivan, 106 Mass. 474; Jones v. Larrabee, 47 Me. 478. But by statute in Maryland, a person interested is not an incompetent witness to a will. Estep v. Morris, 38 Md. 417. And see Kumpe v. Coons, 63 Ala. 448, where it was held that this is the law in Alabama.

Legacy Avoided and Witness Rendered Competent by Statute.—But the law as stated in the text has been greatly modified both in England and in nearly all of the states, by statutes, to the effect that a legacy or devise to an attesting witness, without whose testimony the will may not be otherwise proved, shall be void, but the competency of the attesting witness shall be unaffected. Stat. 25 Geo. II., ch. 6; 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 71, 72; Tempest v. Tempest, 2 K. & J. 635; Denne v. Wood, 4 L. J. Ch. 57; Elliot v. Brent, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 98; Croft v. Croft, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 105; Miltenerberger v. Miltenerberger, 78 Mo. 27; Grimm v. Tittman, 113 Mo. 56; Clark v. Clark, 54 Vt. 489; Clark v. Hoskins, 6 Conn. 106; Fowler v. Stagner, 55 Tex. 398; Nixon v. Armstrong, 38 Tex. 296. Compare Boone v. Lewis, 103 N. Car. 40.

In Cornwell v. Wooley, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 441, it was held that a beneficial provision in a will in favor of the subscribing witnesses, is not rendered void by 2 New York Rev. Stat. 65, § 50, even where such witness was examined as such on the probate, if his examination was unnecessary—e. g., where he was a non-resident, and ification, must be an immediate, certain, and vested interest.¹ Thus, though an attesting witness to a will, by which the interest of a fund was given to a town for the maintenance of a public library, was a taxpayer and inhabitant of the town, such circumstances were held not to impair his competency on the ground of interest.² The policy of the rule excluding devisees and legatees the will was sufficiently proved by the testimony of the other witnesses.

In Texas, the statute requiring the attestation of a will by two or more credible witnesses, and also one declaring a legacy or devise to an attesting witness, if the will cannot be otherwise proved void, and the witness not only allowed but compelled to testify, have been held to simply establish the competency of such witness to testify. Such witness is not, therefore, considered to have been a competent attesting witness, and unless the will is attested by a sufficient number of competent witnesses at the time of the attestation, the whole will is invalid. Fowler v. Stagner, 55 Tex. 398. Compare Nixon v. Armstrong, 38 Tex. 296.

In Elliot v. Brent, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 98, it was held that the statute of 25 Geo. II., ch. 6, § 11, declaring void any legacy or devise to an attesting witness to a will, is not changed, as to its effect upon the legacy or devise, by District of Columbia Rev. Stat., § 876, providing that parties to any suit, or those in whose behalf it is brought or defended, as well as all persons interested in it, shall, with certain exceptions, be competent to testify therein. See Nixon v. Armstrong, 38 Tex. 298; Miltenerberger v. Miltenerberger, 78 Mo. 27.

In some of the states a legatee is rendered competent by statute, if he renounces or refuses to accept his legacy. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2650; Nixon v. Armstrong, 38 Tex. 296; Grimm v. Tittman, 113 Mo. 56; Miltenerberger v. Miltenerberger, 78 Mo. 27.

1. Warren v. Baxter, 48 Me. 193; Lord v. Lord, 58 N. H. 7; Hawes v. Humphrey, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 350.

In Hawes v. Humphrey, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 350, Wilde, J., said: "An interest to disqualify a witness, must be a present vested interest and not uncertain and contingent. And where the interest is of a doubtful nature the objection goes to the credit, and not to the competency, of the witness."

Heir of Devisee.—Though an attesting witness to a will would be the devisee's heir upon the latter's death intestate after the death of the testatrix, he is not interested in the devise within the meaning of the Code of Tennessee, § 3003, which provides that wills shall be subscribed by at least two witnesses, neither of whom shall be interested in the devise. Maxwell v. Hill, 89 Tenn. 584.

Also, where an attesting witness to a will was not only a son of the principal devisee, but received a deed of law from the testator at the time of the execution of the will, he was held a competent witness. Nash v. Reed, 46 Me. 168.

Son of Legatee.—Under Maine Rev. Stat. (1857), ch. 74, § 1, providing that a person of sound mind, etc., may dispose of his real and personal estate by will, "to be witnessed by three credible attesting witnesses, not beneficially interested, etc."—the minor son of a legatee, being executor of the will, is a competent witness to the execution of the instrument. Jones v. Tebbetts, 57 Me. 572.

Creditors—Where the Debts Are Charged by Will.—In England and in most of the states there are statutes providing that creditors whose debts are charged by a will or codicil, shall nevertheless be good subscribing witnesses. Stat. 25 Geo. II., ch. 6, § 2; Act 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 16; Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2648.

Devisees of land in remainder are under Alabama Code (1876), § 3058, competent witnesses to attest the will of their devisor. Kumpe v. Coons, 63 Ala. 448.

A devise of real estate for various special purposes, or a gift of personal estate in trust, is not forfeited, under 2 New York Rev. Stat. 65, by the devisee or legatee becoming a subscribing witness. Pruyn v. Brinkerhoff, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 176.

2. Hitchcock v. Shaw, 160 Mass. 140. For similar decisions supporting the text see Cornwell v. Isham, 1 Day (Conn.) 35; Jones v. Habersham, 63 Ga. 146; Loring v. Park, 7 Gray (Mass.) 42; Northampton v. Smith, 11 Met. (Mass.) 390; Hawes v. Humphrey, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 350; Haven v. Hilliard, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 10; Marston, Petitioner, 79 Me. 25;

as attesting witnesses to wills on the ground of interest, has been held to warrant the position that a devisee or legatee may not be allowed to subscribe the name of some other person at such person's request, on account of the illiteracy or physical disability of the latter, though the person who desires to attest by mark may be a valid attesting witness, whose name, written by some disinterested person, would be sufficient.¹ It has been held, however,

Grimm v. Tittman, 113 Mo. 56; Eustis v. Parker, 1 N. H. 273; Warren v. Baxter, 48 Me. 193; Comb's Appeal, 105 Pa. St. 155. Compare Starr v. Starr, 2 Root (Conn.) 303.

In Hawes v. Humphrey, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 350, it appeared that a large estate was given by will to trustees for the use and benefit of the inhabitants of South Boston, one-half of the income to be applied to the support and maintenance of a certain religious association in South Boston, and the other half to be appropriated to the purpose of establishing a public school in the same place. The attesting witnesses were all inhabitants of South Boston, but it was held that they were competent witnesses. The grounds of the decision were that the payment of taxes for the support of public worship was voluntary and that, while public schools were supported by a general tax on the inhabitants, the court did not know, nor could it be ascertained, that the gift in question would have the effect of reducing the school tax. Wilde, J., said: "No expected participation of the benefits of a public benefaction not affecting property, has ever been held a valid objection against the competency of a witness. It is clear, therefore, that, unless the witnesses are to be relieved from their taxes by this donation, they are competent. It is possible, though not probable, that they may be thus relieved, but neither possibilities nor even probabilities are sufficient to disqualify a witness. As to ministerial taxes, they are paid voluntarily, or rather the liability to pay them is voluntarily assumed, and it may at will be terminated. And as to school taxes, it does not appear, nor is it probable, that they have been or ever will be diminished by this donation. By improving the means of education, witnesses' children and their posterity may be benefited; but this confers no interest on the witnesses. If the whole estate had been given absolutely to their children, still the witnesses would be competent."

In Northampton v. Smith, 11 Met. (Mass.) 390, it was held that a bequest to trustees for the benefit of indigent persons in certain towns, did not make a judge of probate, who was an inhabitant in one of the towns, interested in the probate of the will which contained the bequest, so as to authorize him to transfer the case to a probate court of another county. In delivering the opinion of the court, Shaw, C. J., said: "It is like the principle applying to the case of the competency of a witness; a direct pecuniary interest, however small, on being proved, renders him incompetent; but the strongest interest from sympathy, from interest in the question, and even an expected interest in the property in controversy, not yet vested, does not render him incompetent."

Where a will makes bequests for the benefit of the poor of a county, or to a church and other societies for charitable uses, the fact that the subscribing witnesses are taxpayers in said county, or members of said church and societies, does not render them incompetent. Jones v. Habersham, 63 Ga. 146.

In Loring v. Park, 7 Gray (Mass.) 42, property was given by a will to the trustees of Groton Ministerial Fund, a corporation in trust for the first parish in Groton. An attesting witness to the will was one of the trustees and a member of the parish. It was held that he was nevertheless a competent witness. See Haven v. Hilliard, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 10.

The fact that a person is a member of a particular church and society, worshipping in a certain meeting house, or that he owns a pew in that meeting house, does not of itself disqualify him as a witness to a will containing a legacy to that church and society. Warren v. Baxter, 48 Me. 193.

Likewise, one may be an employee in a charitable institution to which a will gives property, and yet be a "disinterested" witness to the will. Comb's Appeal, 105 Pa. St. 155.

1. See, in this connection, Simmons v. Leonard, 91 Tenn. 183.

that a devisee may, by his own attestation, authenticate the mark of an attesting witness who thus attested the instrument.¹

(c) Husband and Wife.—By the common law, the husband cannot be a competent attesting witness to the wife's will, nor the wife to the husband's will.² Nor, apart from the statutory enactments to that effect, is an attesting witness competent where the husband or wife of such witness takes a devise or legacy under the will.³

(d) Executors.—Under the English Statute of Victoria, it is expressly provided that an executor shall be a competent witness to a will.⁴ And this rule has been adopted in most of the states, an executor's right to commissions being held not to be such an interest as to disqualify him as an attesting witness.⁵

1. Boone v. Lewis, 103 N. Car. 40. In this case it did not appear that the attesting witness to the mark had signed the name of the illiterate attesting witness to the will, nor was this point raised or commented upon.

2. Pease v. Allis, 110 Mass. 157; Dickinson v. Dickinson, 61 Pa. St. 401.

In Dickinson v. Dickinson, 61 Pa. St. 401, it was held that the provision of the Pennsylvania Act of 1848, that the husband shall not be the subscribing witness to his wife's will, is a provision for the proof of the instrument, and not a prohibition against his presence at the execution thereof.

3. Hatfield v. Thorp, 5 B. & Ald. 589; Sullivan v. Sullivan, 106 Mass. 474; Fisher v. Spence (Ill. 1894), 37 N. E. Rep. 314; Giddings v. Turgeon, 58 Vt. 106. Compare Hawkins v. Hawkins, 54 Iowa 443; Bates v. Officer, 70 Iowa 343; In re Holt's Will (Minn. 1893), 57 N. W. Rep. 219.

Devises Annulled by Statute.—Under statute providing that "all beneficial devises, legacies, and gifts, made or given in any will to a subscribing witness, shall be wholly void unless there are three other attesting witnesses to the same," it has been held in some states that a devise to a husband where the wife is an attesting witness is void, the devise to the husband being considered a beneficial devise to the wife, and accordingly the wife is left a competent attesting witness to the will. The same construction is given where the wife is the devisee and the husband is the attesting witness. Jackson v. Woods, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 163; Jackson v. Durland, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 314; Winslow v. Kimball, 25 Me. 493. But see In re Holt's Will (Minn. 1893); 57 N. W. Rep. 219; Fisher v. Spence (Ill. 1894), 37 N. E. Rep. 314; Fortune v. Buck, 23 Conn. 1; Giddings v. Turgeon, 58 Vt. 106; Sullivan v. Sullivan, 106 Mass. 474.

In England, by Act of 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 15, gifts, legacies, and devises to the husband or wife of the attesting witness are expressly avoided. There is a similar provision in Vermont, by act of Nov. 25, 1894. Giddings v. Turgeon, 58 Vt. 106.

4. Act of 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 17. An executor who is entitled to a legacy in that character may be an admissible witness, if he releases his legacy. 2 Curt. 72. And see Bettison v. Bromley, 12 East 250. Compare Allison v. Allison, 4 Hawks (N. Car.) 141.

5. Meyer v. Fogg, 7 Fla. 292; Wyman v. Symmes, 10 Allen (Mass.) 153; Murphy v. Murphy, 24 Mo. 526; Reeve v. Crosby, 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 74; Henderson v. Kenner, 1 Rich. (S. Car.) 474; Overton v. Overton, 4 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 107; Noble v. Burnett, 10 Rich. (S. Car.) 505; Richardson v. Richardson, 35 Vt. 238; Stewart v. Harriman, 56 N. H. 25; Sears v. Dillingham, 12 Mass. 358; Children's Aid Soc. v. Loveridge, 70 N. Y. 387; In re Jordan's Estate, 161 Pa. St. 393. Compare Morton v. Ingram, 11 Ired. (N. Car.) 368; Tucker v. Tucker, 5 Ired. (N. Car.) 161; Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Rich. (S. Car.) 531; Jones v. Larrabee, 47 Me. 474; Snyder v. Bull, 17 Pa. St. 54.

In Jones v. Larrabee, 47 Me. 474, it was held that an executor named in a will, who has declined the trust, is a competent attesting witness. See Snyder v. Bull, 17 Pa. St. 54.

In Morton v. Ingram, 11 Ired. (N. Car.) 368, it was held that an executor's right to commissions is such an interest as disqualifies a witness, and that an executor of a will of personality is not a competent witness of a will, although

(e) Heir.—An heir is a competent subscribing witness when testifying against his own interest. Thus, he may testify in support of a will by which he is disinherited.¹ And it has been also held that he is a competent witness to a will under which he takes a legacy less than his interest would have been without the will.²

(f) Judge of Probate.—The judge of probate may be a valid attesting witness to a will, notwithstanding the fact that the will is to be proved before him.³

he, after the attestation, releases all interest from the will.

In Wilkins v. Taylor, 8 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 291, it was held that while it was not denied that an executor might be a witness to a will devising real estate, he could not be an attesting witness to a will of personalty. See Mathis v. Guffin, 8 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 79.

In Scotland, where the executor was one of the attesting witnesses, it was held that the testament was null as to his appointment, though it would stand in other respects. Tait on Ev. 84.

Compensation in Addition to Commissions.—In Pruyn v. Brinkerhoff, 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 400, it was held that a gift to an executor of a sum of money as compensation for services in addition to commissions, or the appointment of an executor as legatee in trust for the purposes of the will, is not a beneficial provision which is forfeited by his acting as a witness.

Wife of Executor.—In Piper v. Moulton, 72 Me. 155, it was held that the wife of an executor, not beneficially interested under the will, is a credible attesting witness thereto. See Stewart v. Harriman, 56 N. H. 25.

1. Sparhawk v. Sparhawk, 10 Allen (Mass.) 155; Smalley v. Smalley, 70 Me. 545; Allen v. Allen, 2 Overt. (Tenn.) 172. See also Old v. Old, 4 Dev. (N. Car.) 500.

In Sparhawk v. Sparhawk, 10 Allen (Mass.) 157, the court, quoting 1 Greenl. on Ev. (14th ed.), § 410, said that a witness may always be adduced to testify against his interest. Hence, where the heir of the testatrix was an attesting witness to a will which made no provision for him, but on the other hand disposed of property which would have come to him had no will been made, it was held that he was a competent attesting witness.

2. In Smalley v. Smalley, 70 Me. 545, it was held that where an heir at law was given one dollar under a will, his interest as heir being of greater value, he was a competent attesting witness to said will.

Under Statute.—In most of the states there are statutes providing that where a devise or bequest is given to a person who would inherit under the laws of distribution, the will is not invalidated nor the witness rendered incompetent, but such witness will be entitled to only such share of the testator's estate as he would have inherited. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2651; Grimm v. Tittman, 113 Mo. 56. Compare Clark v. Clark, 54 Vt. 489; Maxwell v. Hill, 89 Tenn. 594.

3. In M'Lean v. Barnard, 1 Root (Conn.) 462, it was objected that one of the three subscribing witnesses to a will was, at the time of subscribing his name to the will, and still remained, the judge of probate for the district in which the testator lived, and to whom belonged the probate of the will; but on appeal it was held that the objection was insufficient.

Where an attesting witness to a will was also judge of probate as well as executor, the contention was made that no one person could combine the characters of executor to carry into effect, witness to prove the execution, and judge to approve it. It was proved, however, that before probate the judge had divested himself of the character of executor by resignation, leaving merely the combination of witness and probate judge which was held to be no material impropriety. Ford's Case, 2 Root (Conn.) 232.

If one of the three attesting witnesses to a will be otherwise a competent witness, he is not rendered incompetent because he was at the time of its attestation, and at the time of its probate and allowance, judge of probate for that county. Patten v. Tallman, 27 Me. 17.

Alcalde—Mexican Law.—Where an alcalde was appointed executor in a will, and also signed as an attesting witness, it was held that he was competent to

(3) Time When Competency Must Exist.—At common law, there was some conflict of authority as to whether the requisite competency in the attesting witness must exist at the time of attestation, or when the will is offered for proof.¹ It seems to be well settled now, both in England and in this country, that the witness must be competent at the time of attestation.²

authenticate in his judicial capacity, as he derived no benefit from the testamentary disposition, nor did the law allow any compensation for his services. Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 488.

1. In discussing the qualifications of attesting witnesses to wills, both in connection with the statutes of 29 Car. II., ch. 3, § 5, and also the Virginia Statutes, the author of Minor's Inst. (2d ed.), vol. 2, p. 1024 observed: "The witnesses must be competent. The word employed in the statute 29 Car. II., ch. 3, § 5, and in our statutes down to 1850, was credible. However, it was universally agreed that credible meant no more and no less than competent, so that no progress was made in substituting (as in the later statutes) the one word for the other. But there was a very serious diversity of opinion upon another point, namely, as to the period to which the statute designed to refer the witness as competent, whether to the period when he attested the will, as Lord Camden thought (Hindson v. Hersey (1765), 1 Bro. Adm. & Civ. Laws 284, n. 24; 4 Burn's Ecc. Law 88; Bacon's Abr. Wills (D.) III.), or to the period when he was called to prove it, as Lord Mansfield held (Windham v. Chetwynd, 1 Burr. 414; Lowe v. Jolliffe, 1 W. Bl. 366; Goodtitle v. Welford, Dougl. 141). This doubt the statute does not resolve. It is extremely probable that with us Lord Camden's opinion would prevail. It seems that it does in England. (Holdfast v. Dowsing, 2 Stra. 1254-55; Hatfield v. Thorp, 5 B. & Ald. 589; 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.), 70.)"

In Hindson v. Hersey, 4 Burn's Ecc. Law 27, the testator, by a will made in 1734, devised his land to trustees for the distribution of the rents and profits to four orphans, and aged and infirm people within a particular township. The will was attested by two of the trustees who at the time of the testator's death were seised of tenements in the township for which they paid the poor rate. Before the day of trial, they released their interest to the other trustee and conveyed their tenement within the township to other persons. The majority of the court were of opinion that the will was duly attested to pass the real estate. In this case Lord Camden held a different opinion and delivered an elaborate statement in support of his position, observing that a will is often executed suddenly in a last sickness, and sometimes in the very face of death itself, and the great question to be asked in such a case is, whether the testator was in his senses when he made the will, and, consequently the time of the execution is the critical moment which required guard and protection.

On the other hand, in Windham v. Chetwynd, 1 Burr. 414, it appeared that the testator left a will, by which he charged real estate with the payment of debts and legacies, attested by two attorneys and an apothecary, he being indebted to each of them at the time of the attestation for their professional services. Their several debts were paid before the day when the cause was tried and when their testimony was required to prove the will, and the court of Queen's Bench were of opinion that the will was duly attested. And in Lowe v. Jolliffe, 1 W. Bl. 365, and Goodtitle v. Welford, Dougl. 139, the legatee, after a release of his interest, was held a competent witness. Compare Hindson v. Hersey, 4 Burn's Ecc. Law 27.

2. Holdfast v. Dowsing, 2 Stra. 1254-55; Hatfield v. Thorp, 5 B. & Ald. 589; 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 70; Sullivan v. Sullivan, 106 Mass. 474; Amory v. Fellowes, 5 Mass. 219; Sparhawk v. Sparhawk, 10 Allen (Mass.) 157; Morton v. Ingram, 11 Ired. (N. Car.) 368; In re Holt's Will (Minn. 1893), 57 N. W. Rep. 219; Fisher v. Spence (Ill. 1894), 37 N. E. Rep. 314; Patten v. Tallman, 27 Me. 17. See also Warren v. Baxter, 48 Me. 193; Allison v. Allison, 4 Hawks (N. Car.) 141; Hawes v. Humphrey, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 350; Haven v. Hilliard, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 10; Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Rich. (S. Car.) 531; Workman v. Dominick, 3 Strobb. (S. Car.) 589.

In Holdfast v. Dowsing, 2 Stra. 1253, a person who took under a will an annuity charged upon a real estate devise was held not to be a credible witness within the meaning of the statute; and Lord Lee, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the court, argued as if the objection of benefit from the will to the witness at the time of subscribing could not be removed or taken away by any subsequent act.

In Carlton v. Carlton, 40 N. H. 18, it was said that where an attesting witness to a will is competent at the time the will is offered for probate, he is to be sworn when the presiding judge ascertains, by interrogating the witness himself, and also by the testimony of others, whether or not the witness was competent at the time of attestation. In this connection it was observed that whether a witness is competent at the time of attestation is a question entirely distinct and separate from the question of his competency at the time of probate. There is no more reason to confine the judge of probate to the examination of a witness at the probate, to determine whether such witness was competent at the time of attestation, than to limit the judge to the testimony of one witness upon any other question. Whether at the probate an attesting witness is incompetent to be sworn, by reason of deficiency of understanding, arising from immaturity of intellect, insanity, or intoxication, is a question to be determined by the judge on proper evidence. More evidence from other witnesses may be required to determine whether such incompetency existed at the attestation, than to determine whether it exists at the probate, because the appearance of the witness whose competency is questioned may furnish little or no evidence of his condition at a former time. But the question of his competency is equally open in both cases, to be settled by such evidence as can be produced. This case involved an allegation of incompetency on account of the immature age of the attesting witness, and it may well be inferred from the language of the court that competency, certainly in respect to age, must exist at the time of attestation. Insanity and intoxication are also regarded in the same light.

And in Patten v. Tallman, 27 Me. 17, it is laid down that the competency of an attesting witness relates to the time of the attestation of the instrument, which must be determined upon facts existing at that time.

In Sparhawk v. Sparhawk, 10 Allen (Mass.) 157, the court said that where the competency of an attesting witness to a will, on the ground of interest, is before the court, the question to be determined is, whether the witness had, at the time of the attestation, such pecuniary interest in the will as would disqualify him to testify concerning the signing of the will by the testator, according to the established rule of evidence at common law.

This rule of law is expressly embodied in some of the American codes. Thus, it is provided in Massachusetts Pub. Stat., ch. 127, § 2, "If a witness to a will is competent at the time of his attestation, his subsequent incompetency shall not prevent the probate and allowance of such will."

In Illinois, it has recently been held that the statute requiring a certain number of credible witnesses must be understood to mean competent at the time of attestation, and, therefore, no subsequent release of interest will remove the incompetency of the attesting witness, so as to comply with the requirements of the statute and render valid the attestation of the will. Fisher v. Spence (Ill. 1894), 37 N. E. Rep. 314. Compare Nixon v. Armstrong, 38 Tex. 296.

But where a statute provides that a release of interest renders a witness competent, it may be construed as determining that in this respect a witness need not have been competent at the time of attestation. This seems to have been done in Missouri (see Miltenberger v. Miltenberger, 78 Mo. 31), for section 40 of Wag. Mo. Stat. 1369, provides that "if any person has attested or shall attest the execution of any will, to whom any legacy or bequest is thereby given, and such person, before giving testimony concerning the execution of such will, shall have been paid, or have accepted or released, or shall refuse to accept such legacy or bequest upon tender thereof, such person shall be admitted as a witness to the execution of the will." See also Grimm v. Tittman, 113 Mo. 56.

Subsequent Incompetency.—It seems never to have been doubted, however, that subsequent incompetency will not impair the validity of the attestation, the diversity of opinion at common law relating to the question as to whether, where incompetency existed

6. What Is Writing Within the Statute of Frauds.—Typewriting or printing satisfies the requirement that the will shall be in writing, and it is not uncommon for a will to be written in a printed or engraved blank.¹ A will written in lead pencil is prima facie deliberative only, but is entitled to probate, if shown to be final;² and lead pencil alterations upon a will written in ink are at the time of attestation, subsequent removal of such incompetency would suffice. Thus, in Brograve v. Winder, 2 Ves. Jr. 636, it was decided that a witness disinterested at the time of the execution of the will and the death of the testator was a good witness, notwithstanding he was interested at the time of his examination.

Where an executor attested the execution of the will, but by his acceptance of the trust was rendered incompetent to testify when the will was offered for probate, it was nevertheless held that the will was regularly executed under a statute requiring the attestation of three credible witnesses. Parker, C. J., delivering the opinion of the court in this case, said that, otherwise, the commission of a crime, after the attestation of the will, which rendered the witness infamous, or the succession to an estate under a devise, would disable a witness who was free from any taint of crime or interest at the time of subscribing, which would greatly embarrass the practice of disposing of estates by will, and produce constant uncertainty in the minds of testators, whether their property would be appropriated according to their wishes. Sears v. Dillingham, 12 Mass. 359; Holmes v. Holloman, 12 Mo. 535; In re Holt's Will (Minn. 1893), 57 N. W. Rep. 219. See In re Gill's Will, 2 Dana (Ky.) 447.

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 258; In re Adams, L. R., 2 P. & D. 367; Dench v. Dench, 2 Prob. Div. 60. See Henshaw v. Foster, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 312; Temple v. Mead, 4 Vt. 536.

In construing a provision of the Vermont Constitution, which required writing for certain purposes, the court, in Temple v. Mead, 4 Vt. 536, said: "The definition of the word writing includes printing; it means no more than conveying our ideas to others by letters or characters visible to the eye. It is so used by all writers, and generally comprehends printing, engraving, etc., in opposition to the mode of conveying them viva voce. In all legal writers, and in the statutes which have been enacted in this state and elsewhere, the expression is made use of in the same general and comprehensive sense." For example, the court continues: "A deed is said to be a writing signed, etc.; yet it is always said that it may be printed. . . . Writs are defined to be precepts in writing, yet it is notorious that they are printed."

It may be said to be a rule of statutory construction of general application, that when a statute requires writing it is satisfied by printing. Schneider v. Norris, 2 M. & S. 286.

2. In re Dyer, 1 Hagg. 219; Bateman v. Pennington, 3 Moo. P. C. 223; Mence v. Mence, 18 Ves. Jr. 348; Harris v. Pue, 39 Md. 535.

In Bateman v. Pennington, 3 Moo. P. C. 223, probate was granted of a paper written in ink, but dated and signed in pencil, with the addition, "in case of accident I sign this my will"—although there was also an unsigned attestation clause, the facts pleaded in the allegation being sufficient to rebut the legal presumption against the paper. Lord Brougham said: "The pressure of the case arises from the words in pencil, 'in case of accident I sign this my will,' and the question is, are they deliberative or final? If the words had been, 'I sign this my will, in case of accidents,' though such signature was in pencil, could it be contended to be only deliberative? Or if he had said, 'I write this in pencil, in case of accidents,' and had then signed his name, could that be held not to be a good signing? But all the circumstances of the case must be looked at, and the question their lordships have to determine is not whether the circumstance of the date and signature being in pencil imports that the paper was deliberative, or the circumstance of the attestation clause being unwitnessed is so strong a presumption against the paper as a will, that the fact stated in the allegation, namely, the intention of the deceased to die testate, and the sudden death, ought not to be admitted to proof in order to rebut the presumption subject to the same rule;¹ but a will written on a slate contravenes the policy of the statute and is not entitled to probate.²

VII. WHO MAY MAKE A WILL—PERSONAL DISABILITIES—1. Testamentary Capacity—In What It Consists—See TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY, vol. 25, p. 970; INSANITY, vol. 11, p. 105.

2. Aliens.—See CONFLICT OF LAWS, vol. 3, p. 630; ALIENS, vol. 1, p. 456.

3. Infants.—See INFANTS, vol. 10, p. 618.

4. Married Women.—See HUSBAND AND WIFE, vol. 9, p. 797; MARRIED WOMEN, vol. 14, pp. 594–603.

5. Idiots and Lunatics.—See INSANITY, vol. 11, p. 105; TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY, vol. 25, pp. 974, 977.

Idiots and lunatics are without the requisite intellectual capacity to make a will (see INSANITY, vol. 11, p. 151).

6. Persons of Unsound Mind.—See INSANITY, vol. 11, p. 105; TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY, vol. 25, p. 970.

7. Traitors and Felons.—Since the abolition of forfeiture by attainder and for crime,³ there is no reason why a traitor or felon should not make a valid will.⁴ afforded by the condition of the instrument itself. All the cases show that in either instance the fact of the signing being in pencil, though prima facie a presumption that the act is only deliberative, yet it may be shown to be otherwise; and so the presumption against a will having an attestation clause without witnesses may be repelled. And in either case, if the facts in this allegation are proved, the legal presumption would be negatived and the appellant entitled to probate."

Pennsylvania.—There is no distinction between pencil and ink. Tomlinson's Estate, 133 Pa. St. 245. See Knox's Estate, 131 Pa. St. 220.

In Myers v. Vanderbilt, 84 Pa. St. 510, it was held that a will written and signed with a lead pencil is "in writing" within the meaning of the act of April 8, 1833, and is valid.

1. Dickerson v. Dickerson, 2 Ph. 173; In re Hall, L. R., 2 P. & D. 256; Goods of Adams, L. R., 2 P. & D. 367.

The testator executed a will and codicil. At some time after the execution of the will, but before that of the codicil, he, with a pencil, struck through several paragraphs of his will, and made his initials on the margin; he also placed a query opposite other paragraphs. The codicil confirmed, in so far as it did not alter, the will. It was held that the alterations so made were only deliberative, and not final, and not included in the confirmation of the codicil, and, therefore, to be omitted from the probate. In re Hall, L. R., 2 P. & D. 256. Lord Penzance said: "If, under all the circumstances, the court considered that such words, although found in a testamentary paper, had not been written as a fixed testamentary disposition, but merely deliberatively, in order that the testator, on further consideration, should determine whether or not they should be ultimately carried out, it rejected the words as part of the will. In this case the alterations are in pencil, lines are scored through certain paragraphs, and opposite others the word 'query' is placed. This very fact of using the word 'query' shows that the testator had no definite intention in doing what he did. The court must exercise some discretion in the matter. It will see with what object alterations are made, and if in any way it can determine that they represent a definite intention of a testator it will adopt them, if satisfied that they were on the paper at the time of the execution of a codicil. These alterations are not of such a character. I am satisfied that the testator contemplated some further act to give them effect, and what he has done, therefore, is not sufficient to make them part of the will."

2. Reed v. Woodward, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 541.

3. FORFEITURE, vol. 8, pp. 444, 445, note 5.

4. 1 Redf. Wills (4th ed.) *119.

8. Persons Deaf, Dumb, and Blind—(See also TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY, vol. 25, p. 975).—At common law, persons born deaf and dumb,¹ or deaf, dumb, and blind, were prima facie presumed to be idiots and incapable of making a will;² the presumption, however, could be rebutted by showing that they had understanding, or had once been able to write or speak;³ and such is the modern rule also, with the qualification that the presumption of incapacity is much more easily repelled than formerly.⁴ Where the defect is not congenital, testamentary capacity is presumed as in other cases.⁵ Aside, however, from the general question of mental capacity, the fact that the testator is deaf, dumb, or blind, whether the defect be congenital or not, renders him peculiarly liable to error and imposition, has an important bearing upon the question of fraud or undue influence, and imposes upon the proponents the burden of showing that the formalities of execution were performed understandingly.⁶ Thus, educated deaf

1. Swinb., pt. 2, § 4, pl. 2; Godolph., pt. 1, ch. 11; 1 Redf. on Wills (4th ed.) 52; Co. Litt. 42 b. See In re Geale, 3 S. & T. 431; In re Owston, 2 S. & T. 461; Brower v. Fisher, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 441.

2. Taylor Med. Jur. 690, 691; 2 Bl. Com. 497; Co. Litt. 42 b.

3. 1 Redf. on Wills (4th ed.) 52, 57; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 1 Spears (S. Car.) 256; Weir v. Fitzgerald, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 42; Moore v. Moore, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 265; Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 325. See also Martin v. Mitchell, 28 Ga. 382; Clifton v. Murray, 7 Ga. 564.

4. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 95; 1 Redf. on Wills (4th ed.) 53, 55.

"Since this class of persons" (deaf mutes) "have, through the ingenuity of philanthropic men, been educated, and, like other persons, been rendered capable of communicating their thoughts and wishes, not only by signs, but by writing also, there seems no more reason for denying them the privilege of making a last will and testament, than in denying it to any other class of persons whatever. And we regard this class of persons as standing precisely like all others in that respect, with this difference perhaps, that where it appears that the testator was a deaf mute, it will impose upon those who claim to establish the will the burden of showing, in the first instance, that the testator made the instrument understandingly." 1 Redf. on Wills (4th ed.) 52.

5. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 96; Gombault v. Public Administrator, 4

Bradf. (N. Y.) 244; Wilson v. Mitchell, 101 Pa. St. 495.

Presumption in Favor of Capacity.—In such cases there is a general presumption in favor of capacity "which must be satisfactorily disproved, when no grounds exist for imputing fraud or circumvention, and the contents of the instrument in question are natural and rational." Bradford Sur. in Gombault v. Public Administrator, 4 Bradf. (N. Y.) 244.

6. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), §§ 96, 97; Weir v. Fitzgerald, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 42; Matter of Bull's Will, 111 N. Y. 624.

Impaired Faculties.—Where the testator was of advanced age, his hearing slightly affected and his sight very seriously impaired, the circumstances attending the execution of his will should be carefully scrutinized for any traces of imposition or artifice. Kind offices and faithful services tend to influence the mind in favor of the party performing them, and care should be taken not to confound the natural action of the human feelings in this respect, with positive dictation and control exercised over the mind of the testator. Besides mere formal proof of execution something more is necessary to establish the validity of a will when, from the infirmities of the testator, his impaired capacity, or the circumstances attending the transaction, the usual inference cannot be drawn from the formal execution. Additional evidence is required that his mind accompanied the will and that he was cognizant of its provisions.

muters should write their own wills; uneducated may communicate by signs, in which case the court will require to be satisfied that the will embodies the testator's real intent, and that its provisions were understood by him.¹ Where the testator is blind, it should be proved to the satisfaction of the court that he knew and approved of the contents of the will which he executed;² but it is

This may be established by the subscribing witnesses or by evidence alibunde. Weir v. Fitzgerald, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 42.

Deaf and Dumb Testator.—"In proving the will of a deaf and dumb person it should, of course, be shown that the obstacles created by his physical infirmity had been overcome and his mind had been reached and communicated with, so that he was cognizant of the act, knew and approved of the contents of the will, and comprehended the force and purpose of the business he was engaged in when he was doing it." Wms. on Exrs. 18, note (d) by Perkins. Thus, where a testator, who was deaf and dumb, made his will by communicating his testamentary instructions to an acquaintance by signs and motions, who prepared a will in conformity with such instructions, which was afterward duly executed by the testator, the court required an affidavit from the draftsman, stating the nature of the signs and motions by which the instructions were communicated to him, and ultimately required to grant probate on motion. In re Owston, 2 S. & T. 461. See In re Geale, 3 S. & T. 431.

1. In re Owston, 2 S. & T. 461; In re Geale, 3 S. & T. 431.

"This will be especially requisite in those cases where the testator was incapable of writing, and was therefore compelled to communicate with his scrivener, and with the witnesses also, by signs. In such cases, it would seem, upon principle, that to a full compliance with the requisites of the statute, requiring a will to be declared, as such, by the testator, in the presence of his witnesses, they giving their attestation to the act, in his presence, and, in some states, in the presence of each other, it would be important that all the witnesses made necessary should be able to communicate with the testator, and to comprehend his declarations thus made. But we know no case where the subject has been so viewed. But in the case of educated muters, who are capable of communicating by writing, there would be no such difficulty. And the fact that the testator wrote the will might fairly be regarded as sufficient evidence, prima facie at least, that he made it understandingly. It might still be necessary, in practice, that he should, before the witnesses, make some recognition of the writing as his last will and testament, and intimate his desire to execute it as such, in their presence, by something more unequivocal than mere signs. It would certainly be prudent and proper for the witnesses to be assured of these matters, by some written intimation from the testator." 1 Redf. on Wills (4th ed.) 53.

"One who is not deaf and dumb by nature, but being once able to hear and speak, if by some accident he loses both his hearing and the use of his tongue, then in case he shall be able to write, he may with his own hand write his last will and testament. But if he be not able to write, then he is in the same case as those which be both deaf and dumb by nature, i. e., if he have understanding he may make his testament by signs, otherwise not at all. Such as can speak and cannot hear, they may make their testaments as if they could both speak and hear, whether that defect came by nature or otherwise. Such as be speechless only, and not void of hearing, if they can write, may very well make their testament themselves by writing; if they cannot write, they may also make their testaments by signs, so that the same signs be sufficiently known to such as then be present." Wms. on Exrs. (9th Eng. ed.) 18; Swinb., pt. 2, § 10, pl. 2, 4; Godolph., pt. 1, ch. 11. As to the presumption in favor of intelligent execution in ordinary cases, see Mason v. Williams (Supreme Ct.), 6 N. Y. Supp. 479; 53 Hun (N. Y.) 398; Worthington v. Klemm, 144 Mass. 167; Walter's Will, 64 Wis. 487.

2. Wms. on Exrs. (9th Eng. ed.) 19; Moore v. Paine, 2 Cas. Temp. Lee 595; In re Axford, 1 S. & T. 540. See Wampler v. Wampler, 9 Md. 540; Martin v. Mitchell, 28 Ga. 382.

The testator's declarations after the not necessary to prove that the identical paper which he executed as his will was ever read to him.¹

9. Persons Who Cannot Read.—A testator, who either from sickness or illiteracy cannot read the will, must be shown affirmatively to have understood its contents.²

execution of the will are competent to show that he knew its provisions. Harleston v. Corbett, 12 Rich. (S. Car.) 604; Davis v. Rogers, 1 Houst. (Del.) 44.

1. Wms. on Exrs. (9th Eng. ed.) 19; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 98; 1 Redf. Wills (4th ed.) *57; Edwards v. Fincham, 3 Curt. 63. See Longchamp v. Fish, 2 N. R. 415; Washington, J., in Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. (U. S.) 585; Lewis v. Lewis, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 496; Hess' Appeal, 43 Pa. St. 73; Clifton v. Murray, 7 Ga. 564; Boyd v. Cook, 3 Leigh (Va.) 32.

"It is laid down in the old text-books of the ecclesiastical law, that although he that is blind may make a nuncupative testament, by declaring his will before a sufficient number of witnesses, yet that he cannot make his testament in writing, unless the same be read before witnesses, and in their presence acknowledged by the testator for his last will; and that, therefore, if a writing be delivered to the testator, and he, not hearing the same read, acknowledged the same for his will, this would not be sufficient; for it may be that if he should hear the same he would not own it. And the civil law expressly required that the will should be read over to the testator, and approved by him, in the presence of all the subscribing witnesses." Wms. on Exrs. (9th Eng. ed.) 18; Godolph., pt. 1, ch. 11; Swinb., pt. 2, § 11. See Weir v. Fitzgerald, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 42.

2. Wms. on Exrs. (9th Eng. ed.) 18; Barton v. Robins, 3 Ph. 455, note (b); Day v. Day, 3 N. J. Eq. 549; Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. (U. S.) 580. Van Pelt v. Van Pelt, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 134. See Harding v. Harding, 18 Pa. St. 340. Compare Gerrish v. Nason, 22 Me. 438; Pettes v. Bingham, 10 N. H. 514; Hoshauer v. Hoshauer, 26 Pa. St. 404; Vernon v. Kirk, 30 Pa. St. 218; Chandler v. Ferris, 1 Harr. (Del.) 454; Smith v. Dolby, 4 Harr. (Del.) 350; Munnikhuisen v. Magraw, 35 Md. 280; McNinch v. Charles, 2 Rich. (S. Car.) 229; Carr v. M'Camm, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 276.

In ordinary cases, where a testator is in health and of ability, it is not necessary to show that the will was read over to him, or that he knew the contents of it. The legal presumption in such cases is always in favor of the will; and he who seeks to impeach it must show conclusively that the testator was imposed on, or that there was some mistake whereby he was deceived. But where it appears affirmatively that the testator did not read the will himself, and that it was not read to him, it must then be shown to the satisfaction of the court that he was in some other way made acquainted with the contents of the instrument and approved them. So if the testator be incapable of reading the will, whether the incapacity arise from blindness, sickness, or any other cause, the rule is the same, and the burden of proof is thrown on the person offering the will. If it be established, either by direct evidence, or by circumstances so conclusive as to admit of no reasonable doubt, that the will in question was truly copied from a previous will, with the contents of which the testator was acquainted, the instrument will be admitted to probate, although it was neither read by him nor in his hearing. Or if it can be shown that the will in question is substantially in accordance with the instructions of the testator, it may be considered as sufficient evidence that he was acquainted with its contents. Day v. Day, 3 N. J. Eq. 549.

But in Guthrie v. Price, 23 Ark. 396, it was held that, on proof that the will was executed in accordance with the formalities prescribed by the statute, the burden of showing that fraud or imposition was practiced upon the testatrix was upon the parties contesting the validity of the will; and though in determining such question the fact that she could not read, and that the will was not read to her at the time she signed it, were circumstances to be considered, it was erroneous for the court to tell the jury, as a matter of law, that, it being shown she could not read, it was necessary to prove that the will was read to her—they having the right to infer from all the circumstances that she knew its contents. See Downey v.

VIII. RESTRAINTS ON TESTAMENTARY POWER—WHO MAY BE DEVISEE OR LEGATEE.

1. Gifts to Aliens.—See ALIENS, vol. 1, p. 630.
2. Gifts to Charitable Uses.—See CHARITIES, vol. 3, p. 137.
3. Gifts to Corporations.—See CORPORATIONS, vol. 4, p. 235.
4. Gifts for Accumulation.—See PERPETUITIES AND TRUSTS FOR ACCUMULATION, vol. 18, p. 335.
5. Whether Devisee or Legatee Who Has Murdered Testator May Take.—The better opinion is that a beneficiary under the will who has murdered the testator to prevent the provision in his favor from being revoked, is thereby disqualified to take.¹

Murphey, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 82; Crispell v. Dubois, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 393.

1. Riggs v. Palmer, 115 N. Y. 506. But see Owens v. Owens, 100 N. Car. 240.

"No One Shall Profit by His Own Wrong."—In Riggs v. Palmer, 115 N. Y. 511, the court, by Earl, J., said: "No one shall be permitted to profit by his own fraud, or to take advantage of his own wrong, or to found any claim upon his own iniquity, or to acquire property by his own crime. These maxims are dictated by public policy, have their foundation in universal law administered in all civilized countries, and have nowhere been superseded by statutes. They were applied in the decision of the case of the New York Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U.S. 591. There it was held that the person who procured a policy upon the life of another, payable at his death, and then murdered the assured to make the policy payable, could not recover thereon. Mr. Justice Field, writing the opinion, said: 'Independently of any proof of the motives of Hunter in obtaining the policy, and even assuming that they were just and proper, he forfeited all rights under it when, to secure its immediate payment, he murdered the assured. It would be a reproach to the jurisprudence of the country if one could recover insurance money payable on the death of a party whose life he had feloniously taken. As well might he recover insurance money upon a building that he had willfully fired.'

"These maxims, without any statute giving them force or operation, frequently control the effect and nullify the language of wills. A will procured by fraud and deception, like any other instrument, may be decreed void and set aside, and so a particular portion of a will may be excluded from probate or held inoperative if induced by the fraud or undue influence of the person in whose favor it is. (Allen v. M'Pherson, 1 H. L. Cas. 191; Harrison's Appeal, 48 Conn. 202.) So a will may contain provisions which are immoral, irreligious, or against public policy, and they will be held void. Here there was no certainty that this murderer would survive the testator, or that the testator would not change his will, and there was no certainty that he would get this property if nature was allowed to take its course.

"He therefore murdered the testator expressly to vest himself with an estate. Under such circumstances what law, human or divine, will allow him to take the estate and enjoy the fruits of his crime? The will spoke and became operative at the death of the testator. He caused that death, and thus by his crime made it speak and have operation. Shall it speak and operate in his favor? If he had met the testator and taken his property by force, he would have no title to it. Shall he acquire title by murdering him? If he had gone to the testator's house and by force compelled him, or by fraud or undue influence had induced him, to will him his property, the law would not allow him to hold it. But can he give effect and operation to a will by murder, and yet take the property? To answer these questions in the affirmative, it seems to me, would be a reproach to the jurisprudence of our state, and an offense against public policy. Under the civil law, evolved from the general principles of natural law and justice by many generations of juriconsults, philosophers and statesmen, one cannot take property by inheritance or will from an ancestor or benefactor whom he has murdered. (Domat, pt. 2, bk. 1, tit.

6. Gifts Contrary to Public Policy or Good Morals.—(See RE-MAINDERS AND EXECUTORY INTERESTS, vol. 20, p. 875).—Gifts subversive of good morals, or contrary to sound public policy, are void, and the executor is justified in refusing to make payment.¹

1, § 3; Code Napoleon, § 727; Mac-Keldy's Roman Law, 530, 550.) In the Civil Code of Lower Canada the provisions on the subject in the Code Napoleon have been substantially copied. But so far as I can find, in no country where the common law prevails has it been deemed important to enact a law to provide for such a case. Our revisers and lawmakers were familiar with the civil law, and they did not deem it important to incorporate into our statutes its provisions upon this subject. This is not a casus omissus. It was evidently supposed that the maxims of the common law were sufficient to regulate such a case and that a specific enactment for that purpose was not needed.

"For the same reasons, the defendant Palmer cannot take any of this property as heir. Just before the murder he was not an heir, and it was not certain that he ever would be. He might have died before his grandfather, or might have been disinherited by him. He made himself an heir by the murder, and he seeks to take property as the fruit of his crime. What has before been said as to him as legatee applies to him with equal force as an heir. He cannot vest himself with title by crime.

"My view of this case does not inflict upon Elmer any greater or other punishment for his crime than the law specifies. It takes from him no property, but simply holds that he shall not acquire property by his crime, and thus be rewarded for its commission. Our attention is called to Owens v. Owens, 100 N. Car. 240, as a case quite like this. There a wife had been convicted of being an accessory before the fact to the murder of her husband, and it was held that she was, nevertheless, entitled to dower. I am unwilling to assent to the doctrine of that case. The statutes provide dower for a wife who has the misfortune to survive her husband and thus lose his support and protection. It is clearly beyond their purpose to make provision for a wife who by her own crime makes herself a widow and wilfully and intentionally deprives herself of the support and protection of her husband. As she might have died before him, and thus never have been his widow, she cannot by her crime vest herself with an estate. The principle which lies at the bottom of the maxim volenti non fit injuria, should be applied to such a case, and a widow should not, for the purpose of acquiring, as such, property rights, be permitted to allege a widowhood which she has wickedly and intentionally created."

1. St. Amour v. Rivard, 2 Mich. 294; Moore v. Moore, 50 N. J. Eq. 554; Philleo v. Holliday, 24 Tex. 38; Mallet v. Smith, 6 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 12; Whitehead v. Watson, 19 La. Ann. 68; Johnson v. Clarkson, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 305; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 22; Schouler on Exrs. and Admsrs., § 463; Rex v. Postington, 1 Salk. 162; Atty. Gen'l v. Fishmongers' Co., 2 Beav. 157; Habershorn v. Vardon, 7 Eng. L. & Eq. 228. Compare Emmons v. Cairns, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 243.

Bequest of Freedom to Slaves.—In Luckey v. Dykes, 10 Miss. 60, it was held that a bequest in a will, directing the executors to emancipate the slaves of the testator, is void because in opposition to state policy. See also Carter v. Carter, 39 Ala. 579; Johnson v. Clarkson, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 305; Mallet v. Smith, 6 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 12.

In Philleo v. Holliday, 24 Tex. 38, it was held that a bequest, by will, of freedom to slaves, where no provision was made for their removal from the state, was void. See also Johnson v. Clarkson, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 305; Mallet v. Smith, 6 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 12.

Substitution Prohibited by Law.—A will contained the following devise, viz.: "I give and bequeath to my beloved wife the plantation upon which I reside, and the following slaves, etc. I further will, upon the demise of my said wife, that the property bequeathed her return to my brothers and sisters, and be equally divided between them." It was held that such a disposition was a prohibited substitution, null even as to the legatee, and that the prohibition contained in article 1507 of the Civil Code, being in the interest of public order, the bequest clashing with it, was an absolute nullity, incurable by the

To this principle may be referred many miscellaneous restraints upon testamentary disposition, varying greatly in different epochs and different jurisdictions. Thus, gifts deemed superstitious in one jurisdiction would probably not be so in another.¹

7. Gifts to Bastards.—Gifts to future illegitimate children are void as contra bonos mores; but an illegitimate child in esse or en ventre sa mere may, if properly described, take the benefit of a devise or bequest, and the court will not inquire as to his origin.²

prescription of five years. Provost v. Provost, 13 La. Ann. 574.

Where the right of action of an heir to compel a partition of the immovables and slaves was sought to be conveyed by a will made in Missouri, in the following words: "I do hereby give and bequeath, absolutely and unconditionally, to M. and to A., to have and to hold the same, unto them jointly and severally, that is to say, as joint tenants, so that all and singular the property hereby devised and bequeathed shall, upon the death of either of them, the said M. and A., descend, pass, and belong to the survivor of them, and to the heirs of such survivor forever," it was held, that such a disposition was a conditional substitution prohibited by law. Weber v. Ory, 14 La. Ann. 543.

The will of A. made in Mississippi, where he died, and where his estate was situated, contained these words: "I give and bequeath to my grandson, W., and his heirs lawfully begotten, all the balance of my estate, real, personal, and mixed, together with the rest and residue of which I may die possessed, to inure to and vest in the said W., on the day on which he shall have attained the age of twenty-one years and not before, and in the event of the said W. dying before he shall have arrived at lawful age, as aforesaid, and leaving no heir of his own body, or in the event of his death at any time thereafter, without lawful issue, then, and in such contingency or contingencies, I give, devise, and bequeath all the real and personal and mixed estate aforesaid to R., daughter and only surviving child of my brother L. C., and wife of B., and to her heirs forever." It was held that such a clause in a will was a substitution prohibited by the laws of Louisiana. Wailes v. Daniell, 14 La. Ann. 585.

1. Smith v. Du Bose, 78 Ga. 435. See also Pool v. Harrison, 18 Ala. 514; Pinckard v. McCoy, 22 Ga. 28; Cobb

v. Battle, 34 Ga. 458; Whitehead v. Watson, 19 La. Ann. 68; Joliffe v. Fanning, 10 Rich. (S. Car.) 186. Compare Carrie v. Cumming, 26 Ga. 690.

2. Medwith v. Pope, 27 Beav. 73, per Romilly, M. R. See Lamb v. Eames, L. R., 6 Ch. 597; Holt v. Sindrey, L. R., 7 Eq. 170; Savage v. Robertson, L. R., 7 Eq. 176; Bagley v. Mollard, 1 R. & M. 581; Durrant v. Friend, 11 Eng. L. & Eq. 2; Owen v. Bryant, 13 Eng. L. & Eq. 217; Hill v. Crook, L. R., 6 H. L. Cas. 265; In re Bolton, 31 Ch. Div. 542; Dunlap v. Robinson, 28 Ala. 100; Hughes v. Knowlton, 37 Conn. 429; Kingsley v. Broward, 19 Fla. 722; Smith v. Du Bose, 78 Ga. 413. See also Shelton v. Wright, 25 Ga. 636; Taylor v. McRa, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 96. Compare Gaines v. Hennen, 24 How. (U. S.) 553; Bennett v. Cane, 18 La. Ann. 590.

In England, it has been held that a testator may provide for his own illegitimate children born, or to be born, of an illicit connection of long standing, at the date of the will, by describing them by their maternity and reputation in such way as to make it unnecessary to prove their actual paternity. Thus, in Occleston v. Fullalove, L. R., 9 Ch. 147, a testator, who had gone through the ceremony of marriage with M. L., his deceased wife's sister, who had two daughters, C. and E., by him, and who was eniente with a third at the date of the will, gave a moiety of his property to trustees in trust for M. L. for life, and after her death for his reputed children C. and E., and all other children which he might have or be reputed to have by M. L., then born or thereafter to be born. The third child was born before the testator's death, and was acknowledged by him as his child. It was held (dissentiente Lord Selborne, L. C.), that the after born child was entitled to share with her sisters under the will. Mellish, L. J., said: "The question to be determined is whether Margaret Occleston is entitled to take with Catherine Occleston and Edith Occleston, the one-half of the residue of the testator's real and personal estate. I think it is clear that she cannot take as an actual child of the testator by Margaret Lewis, because, although there is evidence from which any jury would find, if the question could be left to them, that the appellant was a child of the testator by Margaret Lewis, yet it seems clear on the authorities that the law does not allow such evidence to be given, and this was not seriously disputed. I also think that she cannot take as a child of Margaret Lewis, who was reputed to be a child of the testator at the date of making the will, assuming that an illegitimate child can acquire the reputation of being the child of a particular man whilst in ventre sa mere. I think there is no sufficient evidence that the appellant had at that time acquired the reputation of being the child of the testator. There is no evidence that the testator or anyone else knew at that time that Margaret Lewis was with child, and it seems to me impossible to infer that a child whose existence was unknown was the reputed child of anybody. If, therefore, the appellant takes at all, she must take as a child which the testator was, subsequent to the making of his will, reputed to have by Margaret Lewis. Now, two objections are in substance taken to the right of the appellant so to take: First, that there is not, and indeed could not be, a sufficient legal description to enable a class of subsequent born illegitimate children to take; and secondly, that it is contrary to the policy of the law to allow such a class to take, even if they could be sufficiently described.

"Now, with reference to the first question, it appears to me that every child of Margaret Lewis who was born during the testator's lifetime and who, at the time of his death, was his reputed child, must be included in the class. Whether, if there had been a child in ventre sa mere at the time of the testator's death, who afterwards was born and acquired the reputation of being the testator's child, such a child would have been included, may be doubtful, but, giving the narrowest construction to the words of the will, every child born in the testator's lifetime, and who was his reputed child at the time of his death, must, I think, be included. Then is such a bequest void upon the ground of the insufficient description of the persons who are to take? I am of opinion that it is not. It is clear that a bastard may take as the reputed son of a particular person after he has acquired such reputation. Now, no one can take under a will until the testator is dead, and if at that time a child has acquired the reputation of being a child of the testator, why may he not take under the description of a reputed child of the testator? As a general rule, it is obviously wholly immaterial that a person who is to take a bequest under a will cannot be ascertained at the time the will is made, if he is so described that he can be ascertained after the death of the testator. It makes no difference whether a testator, making his will on his deathbed, gives a legacy of twenty pounds to every servant who is then in his service, or whether, making his will years beforehand, he gives a legacy of twenty pounds to every servant who shall be in his service at the time of his death.

"Neither can I see how a bequest to the illegitimate children of a particular woman, who shall be the reputed children of the testator at the time of his death, is more uncertain than a bequest to the illegitimate children of a particular woman, who are the reputed children of the testator at the time he makes his will. In the one case there must be an inquiry whether the children were the reputed children of the testator at the time of his death, and in the other, whether the children were the reputed children of the testator at the time he made his will.

"Then, with respect to the authorities, I cannot find that there is any direct authority on the subject. The cases appear to establish that a bequest to the future illegitimate children of a man is void for uncertainty, because the law will not allow evidence to be given that they are the actual children of a man. On the other hand, it seems clear that a bequest to the future illegitimate children of a woman is not void for uncertainty, whether it be or be not void for encouraging immorality, and as being contrary to the policy of the law; and, in my opinion, a bequest to the illegitimate children of a particular woman, who shall be the reputed children of the testator, is not more uncertain than a bequest to the future illegitimate children of a woman simply. It occurred to me during the argument that there might be some difficulty in determining at what time

8. Gifts to Mistress or Paramour.—Unless expressly prohibited by statute, as is the case in Louisiana,¹ a bequest to a mistress or paramour, free from suspicion of fraud or undue influence, will be sustained.² It should be observed, however, that conduct which it was necessary that a child who was to take should have required the reputation of being a child of the testator; but, on consideration, I am satisfied that the material time is the death of the testator. If at that time a child of Margaret Lewis had acquired the reputation of being a child of the testator, such child seems to me clearly within the description of the persons who are to take.

"I have next to consider whether a bequest to the future illegitimate children of a woman, who shall be the reputed children of the testator, is void on the ground of public policy. I agree that the earlier authorities, and, in particular, Blodwell v. Edwards, as reported, Cro. Eliz. 509, do go a long way to establish that a settlement of property by deed on future reputed children or bastards is void, as being contrary to public policy. Fenner, J., is there reported to have said 'that they had conferred with divers of the Justices in Serjeants' Inn, and that the greater opinion of them was that a remainder to his first reputed son or bastard is not good, because the law does not favor such a generation, nor expect that such should be, nor will suffer such a limitation for the inconvenience which might arise thereupon.' I am not disposed to throw any doubt on the correctness of this opinion. If a man, at the commencement of an illicit intercourse with a particular woman, could make a valid settlement on his expected illegitimate children, this would, I think, manifestly encourage the immoral connection and discourage marriage, which the law favors. The present case, however, is the case of a will, and it is necessary to consider how far the same doctrine applies to wills. Now if a will was so worded as to give a bequest to illegitimate children to be begotten after the death of the testator, I think it would be subject to the same objection as a settlement by deed; and it may be observed that both in Metham v. Devon, 1 P. Wms. 529, and in Hill v. Crook, L. R., 6 H. L. Cas. 265, the will was the will of a third person, and not of either the father or the mother of the children; and if in those cases the word

'children' had been held to include future illegitimate children, it would have included children begotten after the death of the testator, when the will had come into operation. In the present case, the will being the will of the putative father himself, it is impossible that it can encourage an immoral intercourse after his death. If the bequest is to be held to be contrary to public policy, it must be because it tended to promote an immoral intercourse in his lifetime. There was no evidence that Margaret Lewis knew that the will was made, and if she did know it she must also have known that it could be revoked at any moment. Then can it be said that the testator himself would be encouraged in immorality by having the power to make a will in favor of his future reputed children? I cannot see that he would, or, at any rate, I think that this is too uncertain to be made a ground of decision. I am of opinion that a will no more comes into operation for the purpose of promoting immorality, or for effecting something contrary to public policy, during a testator's lifetime, than it does for any other purpose."

So where H. by his will gave a trust fund "in trust for my four natural children by M. E. N., viz., J. C. E. and J. H., and all and every other children and child which may be born of the said M. E. N. previous to, and of which she may be pregnant at, the time of my death, share and share alike," it was held that three children born after the date of the will and before the death of the testator could take. But a gift to a future illegitimate child described solely by its paternity is void. In re Bolton, 31 Ch. Div. 542.

South Carolina.—Gifts to bastards of more than one-fourth the clear value of the testator's property are void as against legitimate children. Gen. Stat. 1882, §§ 1165, 1866.

Indiana.—In this state, peculiar provisions exist restricting the testator's right to dispose of his property in favor of his bastard children. Civ. Code, §§ 1483-1488.

1. Gibson v. Dooley, 32 La. Ann. 959.

2. In re Donnelly's Will, 68 Iowa 126; would not avoid the will for undue influence in the case of a wife, may have that effect in the case of a mistress.¹

9. Gifts to Subscribing Witnesses.—In England and most of the United States, statutes annul a devise or bequest to a subscribing witness with a view to securing his competency, unless there are the requisite number of subscribing witnesses without him.²

10. Disinheritance of Children.—In many states pretermitted children, or pretermitted issue of deceased children living at the date of the will, take, under the local statute, the same interest in the testator's estate which they would have taken had he died intestate.³

11. Wills Between Husband and Wife.—See HUSBAND AND WIFE, vol. 9, p. 797.

12. Gifts to Scrivener.—While the fact that the person who drew the will is the chief beneficiary imposes upon the court the duty of careful scrutiny, it does not invalidate the gift.⁴

IX. WHAT MAY BE DEVISED OR BEQUEATHED—1. General Principles.—All interests, legal or equitable, in real and personal property, transmissible on the decease of the testator, unless otherwise

McMahon v. Ryan, 20 Pa. St. 329; Porschet v. Porschet, 82 Ky. 93. See McClure v. McClure, 86 Tenn. 174.

In Porschet v. Porschet, 82 Ky. 93, it was held that the mere fact that the testator devised all his estate to a woman with whom he lived as his wife, when she was, in fact, the lawful wife of another, would not authorize the court to instruct the jury that the law presumed undue influence on the part of the devisee, and that, in the absence of any proof to the contrary, they must find against the will.

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 236. See McClure v. McClure, 86 Tenn. 174; Sunderland v. Hood, 84 Mo. 293; Dean v. Negley, 41 Pa. St. 312; Kessinger v. Kessinger, 37 Ind. 341; Monroe v. Barclay, 17 Ohio St. 302; Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9.

2. Goods of Clark, 2 Cart. 329. See the various state statutes.

In Rhode Island, New Jersey, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, it seems that the gift is void, even though there are enough subscribing witnesses without the devisee or legatee. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2650.

Slight variations exist in the statutes of the several states; thus in some states the gift is not void, if corroborating disinterested testimony can be produced; in others the principle is so extended as to cover even a gift to the husband or wife of a subscribing witness. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2650. See, as to incompetency of subscribing witnesses upon ground of interest, Piper v. Moulton, 72 Me. 155; Marston, Petitioner, 79 Me. 26; Comb's Appeal, 105 Pa. St. 155; Quinn v. Shields, 62 Iowa 129; Bates v. Officer, 70 Iowa 343; Kumpe v. Coons, 63 Ala. 448; Vester v. Collins, 101 N. Car. 114; Moore v. McWilliams, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 10; Croft v. Croft, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 103. Compare Cornwell v. Woolley, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 327.

3. Such is the case, with slight variation, in Arkansas, California, Dakota, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Idaho, Nebraska, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2842, and Sup., § 2842.

For slight variations in the several states, the local statute should be consulted.

Upon this subject see the following authorities: Matter of Witter's Estate (Surrogate Ct.), 15 N. Y. Supp. 133; Boman v. Boman, 47 Fed. Rep. 849; Arnold v. Arnold, 62 Ga. 627.

Under what circumstances the subsequent birth of a child left unprovided for works a revocation, see infra, this title, Revocation.

4. Cheatham v. Hatcher, 30 Gratt.

disposed of, to his general, real, or personal representatives, may be devised or bequeathed by him in his lifetime.¹

2. Transmissible Interests in Personality.—See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, vol. 7, p. 238 et seq.; REMAINDERS AND EXECUTORY INTERESTS, vol. 20, p. 875.

3. Transmissible Interests in Real Estate.—See ESTATES, vol. 6, p. 875; REMAINDERS AND EXECUTORY INTERESTS, vol. 20, p. 875.

4. Lands Out of Testator's Possession—Rights of Entry and Action.—At common law, a mere right of action as a reversion in fee expectant on an estate tail, which had been discontinued by the tenant in tail, could not be devised;² and the same doctrine applied to a mere right of entry created by actual disseisin, as distinguished from a right to recover land held by adverse possession or by a tenant at sufferance.³ In England, the Statute 3 & 4 William IV., ch. 27, § 36, abolishing real actions, has rendered (Va.) 69; Riddell v. Johnson, 26 Gratt. (Va.) 152.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.), § 46; 1 Redf. on Wills (4th ed.) 388; 1 Schouler on Pers. Prop. (2d ed.), § 71; 4 Kent's Com. (13th ed.) 511. See Ingilby v. Amcotts, 21 Beav. 585; Bailey v. Hoppin, 12 R. I. 569.

Under a statute which confers the right of devising real estate only on persons who are "seised," a contingent remainder has been held devisable, the word seised being construed "having," which is the word used in 32 Hen. VIII., ch. 1. Bailey v. Hoppin, 12 R. I. 569.

Devise by Testator of a Devise to Himself.—Under Mississippi Rev. Code 433, § 37, a devisee who is a descendant of a testator, and who dies before the testator, leaving children surviving him, cannot by his will dispose of a devise left him by the testator. Pate v. Pate, 40 Miss. 750. See Land v. Otley, 4 Rand. (Va.) 213; Glenn v. Belt, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 362; Hall's Appeal, 26 Md. 107; Newbold v. Prichett, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 46; Perry v. Hunter, 2 R. I. 80.

Devise of Equitable Claim.—A claim of an heir at law in the final division of an intestate estate, for the value of land, to which the intestate had no title, but which was assigned to such heir through mistake and ignorance in a previous partial division of the estate, is not such a purely equitable claim as to cease with the death of the heir; but it may be disposed of by him by devise. Smith v. Sweringen, 26 Mo. 551.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.), § 50;

Baker v. Hacking, Cro. Car. 387; Doe v. Finch, 1 N. & M. 130.

3. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.), § 50; Goodright v. Forester, 8 East 564; Eyre, C. J., in Cave v. Holford, 3 Ves. Jr. 669; Lord Eldon in Atty. Gen'l v. Vigor, 8 Ves. Jr. 282; Doe v. Hull, 2 D. & R. 38; Culley v. Doe, 11 Ad. & El. 1020; 39 E. C. L. 303.

Rights of entry and action were not devisable at common law, because a devise was regarded as a species of conveyance, and such rights could not be conveyed by deed without champerty (see CHAMPERTY, vol. 3, p. 80), as appears from the language of Lord Ellenborough, in Goodright v. Forester, 8 East 566: "We are of opinion that it (i. e., a right of entry) is not devisable. For such right is certainly not assignable by the common law; nor does it fall within the words of the Stat. 32 Hen. VIII., ch. 1, which are, 'having manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments;' nor of the Stat. 34 and 35 Hen. VIII., ch. 5, § 4, which are, 'Having a sole estate or interest in fee simple of and in any manors, lands, tenements, rents, or other hereditaments, in possession, reversion, or remainder.' If the devise of Thomas Burton were stated upon record in any pleadings at common law, what description of interest, falling within these words, could he be stated to have had at the time of the devise? The opinion of Lord Eldon, in The Atty. Gen'l v. Vigor, 8 Ves. Jr. 282, was certainly against it; and the case of Roe v. Griffiths, 1 W. Bl. Rep. 606; Goodtitle v. Wood, Willes 211, and Jones v.

the question of devisability of rights of action obsolete; and the Statute 1 Vict., ch. 26, expressly extends the testamentary power to "all rights of entry for conditions broken and other rights of entry."¹ In most of the United States the local statute provides that all property, real or personal, or at least all property descendable to the heirs or transmissible to the personal representatives, may be devised or bequeathed;² and where such is the case, in the absence of an express statutory provision forbidding the devise of land held adversely to the testator, there would seem to be no reason why one may not devise lands of which he is disseised or to which he has only a right of entry.³

Roe, 3 T. R. 94, do not show that such right of entry is devisable, as in those cases the devisors devised all the interest they had ever had. And Lord Thurlow, Perry v. Phelps, 1 Ves. Jr. 255, supposed, in order to bring executory interests within the Statutes of Wills, that they must have been considered as executed by the Statute of Uses, which is a very different interest from a right of entry for the purpose of revesting a divested estate. In Corbet's Case, 1 Co. 85, b., 'For the construction of wills, this rule was taken by the justices in their arguments; that such an estate, which cannot by the rules of the common law be conveyed by act executed in his life, by advice of counsel learned in the law, such estate cannot be devised by the will of a man who is intended by law to be inops consilii;' from whence it may be inferred that out of that interest, in which by act executed in a man's life it is not possible to create any estate, no estate can be created by his will. And in Butler's Baker's Case, 3 Co. 32, a., it is said: 'Without question that which a man cannot dispose of by any act in his life shall not be taken for any of his manors, etc., whereof he may devise two parts by authority given him by the statute.' And in Lord Mountjoy's Case, Godbolt 17, it is laid down, 'that the Statute of Wills, 32 Hen. VIII., that it shall be lawful, etc., to devise two parts, etc., respects only such things as are devisable;' but a right of entry is not devisable; and therefore, according to the terms of the statute and the authority of that case, is not devisable. For these reasons we are of opinion that there must be judgment for the defendant. And whatever mischief or hardship may attend the decision of this case, or may be expected to arise from the application of the same rule to other cases, it is an inconvenience which can, if our judgment be well founded, only be remedied by positive law. And the propriety of applying such a remedy, whereby the same rights of entry and action which belong to the heir may be extended to the devisee, is a question particularly fit for the consideration of the legislature."

In Poor v. Robinson, 10 Mass. 131, it was held that a disseisee, dying disseised, could not devise such estate to any but the disseisor, and that in such case the devise would, strictly speaking, operate as a release and not as a devise.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 50.

2. See the various local statutes. See also Gist v. Robinet, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 2.

Under a statute authorizing the devise of estates in possession, reversion, or remainder, the intrusion of a stranger into the testator's land does not affect his power to devise. May v. Slaughter, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 505. Mills, J., delivering the opinion of the court in this case, said: "Here it is urged that no title passed by the will, because the land now in question is shown to have been in the adverse possession of another, at the death of the testator, as well as at the making of the will, and that the Virginia statute under which the will was made, like the statute of this state now in force, only authorized the testator to devise estates held by him at his death, 'in possession, reversion, or remainder.'" "The words 'possession,' 'reversion' or 'remainder,'" continues the judge, "are used as descriptive of the nature of the estate to be devised, or of its tenure, and not as describing the peculiar situation in which the land itself might be, with regard to intrusions upon it by strangers." See also Thompson v. Hoop, 6 Ohio St. 480.

3. 4 Kent's Com. (13th ed.) 512; Stim-

5. Devise of Lands Occupied by Testator Without Title.—A devise of land which the testator held merely by possession, without title, confers upon the devisee a good title against all but the true owner.¹

son's Am. Stat. Law, § 2630; Waring v. Jackson, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 570; Varick v. Jackson, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 166; 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 238; Hyer v. Shobe, 2 Munf. (Va.) 200; Watts v. Cole, 2 Leigh (Va.) 664; Smith v. Jones, 4 Ohio 115; Whittemore v. Beane, 6 N. H. 47. Compare Atwood v. Weems, 99 U. S. 183; Carter v. Thomas, 4 Mc. 341.

In Pennsylvania, it is well settled that one may convey or devise lands out of possession. Stoever v. Whitman, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 421; Humes v. McFarlane, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 435.

In Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Kentucky, a devise of lands held adversely to the testator is authorized by statute. Maine Rev. Stat. (1883), ch. 74, § 4; Massachusetts Pub. Stat. (1882), ch. 127, § 26; New Hampshire Gen. Laws (1878), ch. 193, § 3; Kentucky Gen. Stat. (1873), ch. 11, § 2.

1. Asher v. Whitlock, L. R., 1 Q. B. 1. See Doe v. Bryan, 12 Ired. (N. Car.) 11; Atwood v. Weems, 99 U. S. 183.

In Asher v. Whitlock, L. R., 1 Q. B. 1, W., in 1842, inclosed some waste land; in 1850 he inclosed more land adjoining, and built a cottage; he occupied the whole till 1860, when he died, having devised it to his wife, so long as she remained unmarried, with remainder to his daughter in fee. On his death, the widow and daughter continued to reside on the property, and in 1861 the defendant married the widow, and came to reside with them. Early in 1863, the daughter died, aged eighteen years, and the mother died soon after. The defendant continued to occupy the property, and in 1865 the daughter's heir-at-law brought ejectment against him. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the whole property. Cockburn, C. J., said: "Assuming the defendant's possession to have been adverse, we have then to consider how far it operated to destroy the right of the devisee and her heir-at-law. Mr. Merewether was obliged to contend that possession acquired, as this was, against a rightful owner, would not be sufficient to keep out every other person but the rightful owner. But I take it as clearly established, that possession is good against all the world except the person who can show a good title; and it would be mischievous to change this established doctrine. In Doe v. Dyeball, Mood. & M. 346, one year's possession by the plaintiff was held good against a person who came and turned him out; and there are other authorities to the same effect. Suppose the person who originally inclosed the land had been expelled by the defendant, or the defendant had obtained possession without force, by simply walking in at the open door in the absence of the then possessor, and were to say to him, 'you have no more title than I have, my possession is as good as yours,' surely ejectment could have been maintained by the original possessor against the defendant. All the old law on the doctrine of disseisin was founded on the principle that the disseisor's title was good against all but the disseisee. It is too clear to admit of doubt, that if the devisor had been turned out of possession he could have maintained ejectment. What is the position of the devisee? There can be no doubt that a man has a right to devise that estate, which the law gives him against all the world but the true owner. Here the widow was a prior devisee, but durante viduitate only, and as soon as the testator died, the estate became vested in the widow; and immediately on the widow's marriage the daughter had a right to possession; the defendant, however, anticipates her, and with the widow takes possession. But just as he had no right to interfere with the testator, so he had no right against the daughter, and had she lived she could have brought ejectment; although she died without asserting her right, the same right belongs to her heir. Therefore, I think the action can be maintained, inasmuch as the defendant had not acquired any title by length of possession. The devisor might have brought ejectment, his right of possession being passed by will to his daughter, she could have maintained ejectment, and so, therefore, can her heir, the female plaintiff. We know to what extent encroachments on waste lands have taken place; and if the lord has acquiesced and does not interfere, can it be at the mere will of any stranger to disturb the person in possession? I do not know what equity may say to the rights of different claimants who have come in at different times without title; but at law, I think the right of the original possessor is clear. On the simple ground that possession is good title against all but the true owner, I think the plaintiffs entitled to succeed, and that the rule should be discharged."

6. Equitable Rights to Reconveyance.—One who has executed a conveyance under circumstances which would entitle him in equity to have it set aside and reconveyance decreed, has an interest distinct from a right of entry, which may be devised without regard to the devisability of rights of entry under the local law.¹

1. Gresley v. Mousley, 4 De G. & J. 92; Uppington v. Bullen, 2 D. & W. 184; Stump v. Gaby, 2 De G. M. & G. 623.

Rescinded Contract of Sale.—But where, at the date of the execution of a will, the testator had sold a large portion of his estate, real and personal, and taken a mortgage thereon for the purchase-money, and then the contract of sale was rescinded, followed by the death of the testator, without a republication of the will, it was held that the property included in the contract of sale did not pass under a residuary clause in the will; the then existing law being that no real nor personal property acquired after the making of a will shall pass thereby, without republication of the will. Cogdell v. Widow, etc., 3 Desaus. (S. Car.) 346.

In Gresley v. Mousley, 4 De G. & J. 92, the devisee of lands sold by the testator to his solicitor was allowed to recover. Turner, L. J., said: "The will under which the plaintiff claims title was executed after the conveyance had been made to the solicitor, the purchaser, upon the occasion of the purchase in question, and it is, therefore, insisted, on the part of the appellants, the devisees of the purchaser, that the testator had not, at the time of the execution of his will or at any time afterwards, any estate or interest in the property, that he had merely a right of suit to recover it, which right, it was said, was analogous to a right of entry, and could not pass by devise. This argument, on the part of the appellants, was not supported by any authority; on the contrary, it was admitted that the cases of Uppington v. Bullen, 2 D. & W. 184, and Stump v. Gaby, 2 De G. M. & G. 623, which were referred to in the argument, were opposed to it. Those cases, however, were called in question, and it was insisted that the decision of the case ought to be governed by the analogy contended for between the right of suit which the testator in this case had and a mere right of entry. It is hardly necessary to say, that I should hesitate long before I should venture to dissent from authorities of at least equal weight with our own, even if I had strong doubts upon the subject; but on considering the decisions referred to, I am by no means disposed to dissent from them. I think the analogy contended for does not exist. A right of entry is the foundation of proceedings to recover an estate. The exercise of it is of course prescribed by law for restoring the seisin which has been displaced, and without which the estate cannot be recovered. A devise of a right of entry, therefore, is no more than a devise of the right to institute proceedings for recovering an estate; but where a purchase is voidable in equity there is no question of restoring the seisin before instituting proceedings to avoid it. The interest in the estate which gives the right to avoid it exists independently of any act to be done by the party seeking the avoidance. The decree of the court avoiding the purchase does not, as was suggested in argument, create a wholly new right; it proceeds upon a pre-existing right. The mere circumstance of an estate not being recoverable otherwise than by action or suit, clearly does not prevent it from being devisable. That point is well settled by Doe v. Hall, 2 Dow. & R. 38, and Culley v. Doe, 11 Ad. & El. 1021; 39 E. C. L. 303; and it would be most dangerous to unsettle the point, for if it was ruled otherwise, no valid devise could be made by a testator who was out of possession and whose title was disputed. Whether we look, therefore, to the distinction between a mere right of entry and a suit of this description, or to the law as settled upon the power to devise, notwithstanding the title is disputed, I see no ground for holding that the plaintiff is not entitled to sue for the purpose of setting aside this purchase. It was attempted, however, to strengthen the appellant's argument on this part of the case by reference to the authorities as to the revocation of will by conveyances which are void in equity only; but those cases do not seem to me to apply to the present. They proceed upon the ground that the conveyance, although void in equity, evidences an intention to make a different disposition and, therefore, to revoke the devise; but here there is certainly no intention not to devise."

7. Devise of Land Contracted for by Testator.—Where the contract is such as could have been enforced against the purchaser at the time of his decease, the estate which is the subject-matter of the contract, or, failing that, the purchase-money, belongs to his heir or devisee; but if, from a defect of title or any other cause, the contract was not obligatory on the purchaser at his death, his heir or devisee is not entitled to say that he will take the estate with its defects or have the purchase-money laid out in the purchase of another.¹

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 53; Broome v. Monck, 10 Ves. Jr. 597. See Hudson v. Cook, L. R., 13 Eq. 417; Haynes v. Haynes, 1 Dr. & Sm. 451; Lysaght v. Edwards, 2 Ch. Div. 516; Curre v. Bowyer, 5 Beav. 6, n; Ingle v. Richards, 28 Beav. 366; O'Shea v. Howler, 1 J. & L. 398; Sergeant v. Simpson, 8 Me. 149; In re Champion, 1 Busb. Eq. (N. Car.) 246; Smith v. Jones, 4 Ohio 115.

In 3 Wms. on Exrs. (9th Eng. ed.) 265, it is said: "If the purchaser of real estate dies, without having paid the purchase-money, his heir-at-law, or the devisee of the land purchased, will be entitled to have the estate paid for by the executor or administrator. (Milner v. Mills, Mosely 123; Broome v. Monck, 10 Ves. Jr. 597.) And if the personal estate cannot be got in, and the heir or devisee pays for the land out of his own pocket, he may afterwards call upon the personal representative to reimburse him. (Broome v. Monck, 10 Ves. Jr. 615; 1 Sugd. V. & P. 180 (9th ed.). See Lord v. Lord, 1 Sim. 505.)

So, if the personal estate is insufficient to perform the contract, and the agreement is on that account rescinded, yet the heir or devisee will, it should seem, be entitled to the personalty so far as it goes. And it has been decided that if, by reason of the complication of the testator's affairs, the purchase-money cannot be immediately paid, and the vendor for that reason rescinds the contract, yet, on the coming in of the assets, the devisee of the estate contracted for may compel the executor to lay out the purchase-money in the purchase of other estates for his benefit. (Whittaker v. Whittaker, 4 Bro. C. C. 31; Broome v. Monck, 10 Ves. Jr. 597; 1 Sugd. V. & P. (9th ed.) 180.)

"But if a title cannot be made, or there was not a perfect contract, or the court should think the contract ought not to be executed, in all these cases there is no conversion of real estate into personal, in consideration of the court, upon which the right of the executor on the one hand, and of the heir or devisee on the other, depends. And therefore, if the vendor dies, the estate will go to the heir at law of the vendor, in the same manner as if no contract had been entered into (Lacon v. Mertins, 3 Atk. 1; Atty. Gen'l v. Day, 1 Ves. 218; Buckmaster v. Harrop, 7 Ves. 341. See also Johnson v. Legard, T. & R. 281), and the heir or devisee of the purchaser will not be entitled to the money agreed to be paid for the lands, or to have any other estate bought for him. (Green v. Smith, 1 Atk. 573; Broome v. Monck, 10 Ves. Jr. 597.) The court cannot speculate upon what the deceased party would or would not have done; but in these cases the inquiry must be whether at his death a contract existed by which he was bound, and which he would be compelled to perform. (See Curre v. Bowyer, 5 Beav. 6, n.) That alone can give the heir of the purchaser a right to call for the personal estate to be applied, or to the personal representative of the vendor a right to call upon his heir." See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, vol. 7, p. 281.

8. After Acquired Personality.—At common law, personal property acquired by the testator after the date of the making would pass by the will;¹ and the principle has been extended to cover personal property limited by settlement to one's executors and administrators.²

Where a testator, at the time of executing his will, was in the possession of lands under a verbal agreement for their purchase, his legal title to which he subsequently perfected by the acceptance of a deed, it was held that the lands passed by a devise in the will to the devisee; and that the subsequent acceptance of a deed was not a revocation of such devise. Smith v. Jones, 4 Ohio 115.

A testator, by the first item of his will made in August, 1847, gave to his wife "all my real estate, consisting of several town lots in Shelby, viz., No. 11, etc.;" by the second item he gave her "all my personal estate of whatever nature," and "my interest in a tract of land lying, etc., whereon B. now lives;" he then added: "I do give all the aforesaid bequests to my wife, her heirs and assigns forever," and afterward appointed her executrix. In February, 1848, he annexed a codicil giving a negro woman with her child, lately purchased, to his wife. In 1851, he contracted to purchase land of the clerk and master for one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five dollars, but died before paying the money, and before he had taken a title. It was held that, under the Act of 1844, ch. 83, the wife was entitled to his testator's rights in this land. In re Champion, 1 Busb. Eq. (N. Car.) 246.

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 28; Lawson Rights, Remedies, and Practice, vol. 19, p. 1; Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2630. See Smith v. Edrington, 8 Cranch (U. S.) 66; Haven v. Foster, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 539; Winchester v. Forster, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 369; Wait v. Belding, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 1; Loveren v. Lamprey, 22 N. H. 434; Allen v. Harrison, 3 Call. (Va.) 289; Henderson v. Ryan, 27 Tex. 674; Warner v. Swearingen, 6 Dana (Ky.) 199; Walton v. Walton, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 58; Marshall v. Porter, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 1; Nichols v. Allen, 87 Tenn.

131; McNaughton v. McNaughton, 34 N. Y. 201.

2. Morris v. Howes, 4 Hare 599; Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 3 Mac. & G. 559.

In Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 3 Mac. & G. 559, by a postnuptial settlement certain moneys, to become payable on three policies of insurance on the life of R. M., were vested in trust for B. M. for life, and after her death, upon trust for the appointees of R. M. In 1821 R. M. appointed the moneys so to become payable to his executors and administrators. By an order in a suit instituted for the purpose of carrying into effect the trusts of the settlement, it was ordered that the trustees should relinquish the policies for such a sum as might be obtainable for the same from the insurance company, and that the moneys so realized should be invested, and the dividends accumulated during the joint lives of R. M. and B. M. B. M. died in 1847. On a question being then raised between the children of the marriage and the assignees in insolvency and in bankruptcy of R. M., it was held that the effect of the appointment was to make the property part of the personal estate of R. M. Lord Truro said: "The fact is that the effect of the appointment is to add the money to the husband's personal estate in the first instance in the hands of his executors or administrators, and when in the hands of his executors or administrators, it then becomes subject to the operation of any testamentary disposition of it, or in default of that, to the operation of the Statute of Distributions. The persons who take it beneficially do not take as purchasers under the instrument by which the property becomes added to his personal estate. They are not like the objects of a limitation particularly designated by that instrument; they have only the hope or chance, whatever it may amount to, of becoming entitled to the property, or some part of it, not under that instrument, but under the will or intestacy, as the case may be. The children then having no interest, properly

9. After Acquired Lands.—At common law, a devise of lands was regarded as a species of conveyance, and hence after acquired real estate, in which the testator had no interest when he made the will, would not pass.¹ The right, however, to call for a conveyance, pursuant to a binding contract entered into before the will was made, was held a sufficient interest to sustain a devise of the land contracted for.² At the present time, statutes exist in speaking, under the settlement or the appointment, the husband, after the death of the wife, could have sold the policies to the insurance office, or the assignees might have sold them, and would have been entitled to the proceeds. But, in fact, they have been sold, and consequently those who are now entitled to the settlor's interest are entitled to the fund which has arisen from the sale."

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.), § 51; Harwood v. Goodright, Cowp. 90; Bunter v. Coke, 1 Salk. 237, nom; Buckingham v. Cook, 3 Bro. P. C. 19; Langford v. Pitt, 2 P. Wms. 629; Milnes v. Slater, 8 Ves. Jr. 295; Perry v. Phelps, 1 Ves. Jr. 251.

Express Reference to After Acquired Lands.—Even though after acquired lands might be expressly and in terms disposed of, the same rule applied; thus, under a devise of "all the lands I shall have at my decease," it was held that lands purchased after the devise did not pass; "for a man cannot give that which he has not, and the statute only empowers men having lands to devise them, so that if the deviser has not the lands, he is out of the statute." Bunter v. Coke, 1 Salk. 237. The rule applied equally to devises of copyholds by custom, and under the wills of Henry VIII. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 57.

The old regard for wills as a conveyance is assigned in George v. Green, 13 N. H. 521, and Watson v. Child, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 129, as the reason for restricting its power of disposal to property owned at the date of its execution.

See further, as to the common-law rule, Hays v. Jackson, 6 Mass. 149; Ballard v. Carter, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 112; Brewster v. McCall, 15 Conn. 274; George v. Green, 13 N. H. 521; Carter v. Thomas, 4 Me. 341; Douglass v. Sherman, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 358; McKinnon v. Thompson, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 307; Livingston v. Newkirk, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 312; Minuse v. Cox, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 441; Girard v. Philadelphia, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 323;

Kemp v. M'Pherson, 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 320; Raines v. Barker, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 128; Ross v. Ross, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 437; Johnston v. Hunley, 1 Tayl. (N. Car.) 305; Foster v. Craig, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 536; Meador v. Sorsby, 2 Ala. 712; Watson v. Child, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 129; Luce v. Dimock, 1 Root (Conn.) 82; Jackson v. Holloway, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 394; Jackson v. Potter, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 312; Parker v. Cole, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 503; Girard v. Philadelphia, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 323; Grimke v. Grimke, 1 Desaus. (S. Car.) 366. And see Jones v. Shoemaker, 35 Ga. 151; Skeene v. Fishback, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 356; Roberts v. Elliott, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 395; Bowman v. Violet, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 350; Den v. Speight, 9 Ired. (N. Car.) 288; Turpin v. Turpin, 1 Wash. (Va.) 75.

2. Marston v. Roe, 8 Ad. & El. 63; 35 E. C. L. 303; Langford v. Pitt, 2 P. Wms. 631; Greenhill v. Greenhill, Pre. Ch. 320; Morgan v. Holford, 1 Sm. & Gif. 101.

Of course if the will was made before the articles of purchase were entered into, the testator had not a devisable interest. Langford v. Pitt, 2 P. Wms. 631.

In Cathrow v. Eade, 4 De G. & S. 527, it was held that there was no presumption that the contract antedated the will.

"Where a testator had an equitable interest in the devised lands when he made his will, and afterwards acquired the legal ownership, the equitable interest passed by the will, and the subsequently acquired legal estate descended to the heir, who, of course, became a trustee for the devisee. If, on the other hand, the testator were seised only of the legal estate, at the time of the execution of his will, and afterwards acquired the equitable interest (being the converse case), as where, being a mortgagee in fee at the date of the will, he subsequently purchased the equity of redemption, the devisee was a trustee of the legal estate, which he derived

England,¹ and nearly all the United States, which enable a testator to devise land to which he may be entitled at the time of his death; although he became entitled to the same after the execution of the will.² In the absence of such provision, it is conceived that the common-law rule is still in force.

10. Joint Interests.—Estates in real or personal property, held through the will, for the heir at law to whom the equitable inheritance descended. Cases of the former description frequently occurred where a man contracted to purchase a freehold estate, then devised it, and, subsequently to the execution of his will, took a conveyance of the property, and then died without republishing his will. The testator being equitable owner under the contract, his interest passed by the will to the devisee, whose equitable right the heir was bound to clothe with the legal title. In these and many other cases, great inconvenience occurred from the incompetency of a testator to dispose by will of his after acquired real estate; and questions often arose as to the actual state of the rights and obligations of the parties under the contract, on which the validity of the devise depended, and also as to the effect of certain modes of conveyance in producing a revocation of the devise of the equitable interest. The removal of this incapacity, therefore, is not the least of the advantages conferred by the Statute 1 Vict., ch. 26, which has expressly extended the testamentary power to such real and personal estate as the testator may be entitled to at the time of his death, notwithstanding he may become entitled to the same subsequently to the execution of his will. But it may, of course, be necessary, even under the new law, to go into the inquiry, whether the circumstances attending a contract for promise or sale by a deceased person, are such as to render the contract obligatory; for upon this fact would depend the question (which has lost none of its importance), whether, as between the representatives of the deceased testator or intestate, it is to be regarded as real or personal estate; and this may, and often does, depend on extrinsic circumstances, ascertainable by parol testimony. In Lacon v. Mertins, 3 Atk. 1, Lord Hardwicke decreed a parol contract to be carried into execution as between the real and personal representatives of the deceased vendor, the purchaser submitting to perform it, and acts of part performance, sufficient to take it out of the Statute of Frauds, being proved. In Buckmaster v. Harrop, 7 Ves. Jr. 341, a bill by the purchaser's heir-at-law for a similar purpose was dismissed by Sir Wm. Grant, M. R., on the ground that a binding contract had not been proved." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *51, *52.

1. 1 Vict., ch. 26, which applies to all wills made since January 1, 1838. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.), §§ 51, 52; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.) 695.

2. Such is the case in Alabama, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and others. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed. by Randolph and Talcott), § 51, n. 8; Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, §§ 2630, 2634.

In some states the statute has been held to apply only to wills made after its passage; in others, to all cases in which the testator died after the passage of the act. Upon this point the local statute should be consulted. See also the following authorities, Loveren v. Lamprey, 22 N. H. 434; Brewster v. McCall, 15 Conn. 289; Meserve v. Meserve, 63 Me. 518; Winchester v. Foster, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 366; Cushing v. Aylwin, 12 Met. (Mass.) 169; Pray v. Waterston, 12 Met. (Mass.) 262; De Peyster v. Clendinning, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 295; Parker v. Bogardus, 5 N. Y. 399; Ellison v. Miller, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 332; Green v. Dikeman, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 535; Condict v. King, 13 N. J. Eq. 375; Flummerfelt v. Flummerfelt, 51 N. J. Eq. 432; VanTilburgh v. Hollinshead, 14 N. J. Eq. 36, n.; Wilson v. Wilson, 6 Md. 487; Gable v. Daub, 40 Pa. St. 217; Mullock v. Souder, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 198; Roney v. Stiltz, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 381; Gibbon v. Gibbon, 40 Ga. 562; Peters v.

strictly in joint tenancy, cannot be devised or bequeathed by one joint tenant, free from his co-tenant's title by survivorship, which takes precedence of the claim of the devisee or legatee, as it would of that of his heir or administrator had he died intestate.¹ Instances of joint tenancy are rare in practice, as the modern presumption favored by legislation is that a devise or conveyance to two or more creates a tenancy in common, rather than a joint tenancy.²

11. Remainders and Executory Interests.—See REMAINDERS AND EXECUTORY INTERESTS, vol. 20, pp. 838, 968.

12. Community Property.—See COMMUNITY PROPERTY, vol. 3, p. 350.

X. PROBATE AND ITS EFFECTS.—See PROBATE AND LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION, vol. 19, p. 161.

XI. ALTERATIONS, ERASURES, AND INTERLINEATIONS—1. Whether Presumed to Have Been Made Before or After Execution.—Alterations and additions made in a will complete without them, are presumed, in the absence of evidence, to have been made after the execution of the will or any subsequent codicil.³ Alterations

Spillman, 18 Ill. 370; Willis v. Watson, 5 Ill. 64; Den v. Speight, 9 Ired. (N. Car.) 288; In re Champion, Busb. Eq. (N. Car.) 246; Means v. Evans, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 242; Alexander v. Waller, 6 Bush (Ky.) 341; Roberts v. Elliott, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 395; Warner v. Swearingen, 6 Dana (Ky.) 195; Hamilton v. Flinn, 21 Tex. 713; Henderson v. Ryan, 27 Tex. 670; Smith v. Jones, 4 Ohio 115; Turpin v. Turpin, 1 Wash. (Va.) 75; Hardenbergh v. Ray, 151 U. S. 112; McAleer v. Schneider, 22 Wash. L. Rep. 193; Applegate v. Smith, 31 Mo. 166. Compare Havens v. Havens, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 329; Beall v. Schley, 2 Gill (Md.) 181.

By a will executed in Kentucky, a testator devised to his wife his entire estate, real, personal, and mixed, "wherever situate." After the date of the will the testator acquired land in Missouri. It was held that the title to said land passed to the widow under the will. Applegate v. Smith, 31 Mo. 166.

During the operation of a statute providing that personal property acquired after the making of a will should not pass thereby, a certain testator executed his last will and testament. Then the existing act was repealed, and the law changed so as to make a will speak in its disposition of personalty as if executed at the death of the testator. Later the testator, who had made his will disposing of his personal estate when such affairs were regulated by the pre-existing statute, died, leaving the repealing statute in force. It was held that this latter statute should be regarded, and consequently personal property acquired after the making of the will was held to pass thereby. Means v. Evans, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 242.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.), § 46; Co. Lit. 185a.

2. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 28.

3. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 33, citing Cooper v. Bodlett, 4 No. Cas. 685; 4 Moo. P. C. 419; Simmons v. Rudall, 1 Sim. N. S. 115; Greville v. Tylee, 7 Moo. P. C. 320; Gann v. Gregory, 3 De G. M. & G. 780; Doe v. Palmer, 16 Q. B. 747; Williams v. Ashton, 1 J. & H. 115; Christmas v. Whinyates, 3 S. & T. 81; Goods of Sykes, L. R., 3 P. & D. 26. See also Burgoyne v. Showler, 1 Rob. 5; In re James, 1 S. & T. 238; In re Adamson, L. R., 3 P. & D. 253; 1 Redf. on Wills (4th ed.) 316; Dyer v. Erving, 2 Dem. (N. Y.) 160; Wetmore v. Carry, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 544. But compare Matter of Homes' Will (Surrogate Ct.), 11 N. Y. Supp. 898; Matter of Potter's Will (Surrogate Ct.), 12 N. Y. Supp. 105; Crossman v. Crossman, 95 N. Y. 145; Martin v. King, 72 Ala. 354. But see, contra, Wiloff's Appeal, 15 Pa. St. 290.

Where a testatrix told the witnesses to her will, at the time of attestation, that she had made alterations in her will, but did not allow them to see and additions made in a will which would be incomplete without them, are presumed to have been made before execution.¹

2. Admissibility of Extrinsic Evidence as to Date of Alterations.—Extrinsic evidence is admissible to show whether obliterations, additions, or other alterations, were made before or after execution,² and for this purpose the declarations of a testator made be-what the alterations were, it was held that, in the absence of any means to determine what alterations were made before execution, the court could not give effect to any of them. Williams v. Ashton, 1 J. & H. 115. Wood, V. C., said: "I find numerous alterations in this will, as to which the only information afforded by the testatrix is, that she said she had made alterations, without specifying what the alterations were which she had so made. I do not think that it is quite a correct mode of stating the rule of law, to say that alterations in a will are presumed to have been made at one time or at another. The correct view, as enunciated in the case of Doe v. Palmer, 16 Q. B. 747, is that the onus is cast upon the party who seeks to derive an advantage from an alteration in a will, to adduce some evidence from which a jury may infer that the alteration was made before the will was executed. I do not consider that the court is bound to say that it will presume such alterations to have been made either before or after execution. With regard to a will, I do not see any necessary presumption of the kind. As to a deed, a presumption is considered to exist that alterations have been made before execution, because, if you presume them to have been subsequently introduced, you presume a crime; but even that view has only recently been adopted. With respect to a will, this reasoning has no application. There is no crime in a testator choosing to make alterations in his own will, and all that can be said, with respect to such alterations as these, is that we do not know when they were made. Now, a testator cannot reserve to himself a power of making future testamentary gifts by unattested instruments. If a general statement by a testatrix that she had made some alterations in her will were to give validity to any alterations found in the instrument after her death, that would enable her, at any time after such statement, to make as many unattested alterations as she pleased. I apprehend the rule is that those who pro-pound a doubtful instrument must make the doubt clear. I cannot tell what alterations the testatrix made before attestation, or what interests might be affected by alterations subsequently made. Not being able to say which alterations are valid, I cannot give effect to any of them."

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 33; In re Cadge, L. R., 1 P. & D. 543; Birch v. Birch, 1 Rob. 675; In re Swindin, 2 Rob. 192; Greville v. Tylee, 7 Moo. P. C. 320; In re Birt, L. R., 2 P. & D. 214; In re Adams, L. R., 2 P. & D. 367; Goods of King, 23 W. R. 552. See Matter of Voorhees, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 162.

"Where obliterations and interlineations appear on the face of a will, and there is no evidence to show when they were made, the presumption is that they were made after the execution of the will; and if there be a codicil to the will, which codicil takes no notice of them, the presumption is, that they were made after the date of the codicil. And the same presumptions hold regarding mutilation. But where a will has been drawn with blanks left, e. g., for the names of the legatees and the amount of the legacies, which blanks are afterwards filled up, but there is no evidence to show when, the presumption is that the blanks were filled in before execution. And although there may have been no blanks, but the names of the legatees are found interlined, yet if the interlineation only supplies a blank in the sense, and appears to have been written with the same ink and at the same time as the rest of the will, the court will conclude that it was written before execution. In Birch v. Birch, 6 No. Cas. 581, where some blanks were filled in with black ink and others with red, it was presumed that the additions in black ink were made before execution, but that those in red ink were made after execution, the envelope in which the will was found appearing to have been sealed, opened, and resealed." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *143.

2. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 32;

fore the execution of the will, or before the execution of a codicil which republishes the will, showing an intention to benefit an individual, which will not be carried out, unless the alterations are admitted, may be given in evidence.¹ Declarations by a testator after execution of a will, that an alteration was made before execution, are not admissible.²

3. Alterations Dated Prior to Execution.—The fact that an alteration in the testator's handwriting bears an earlier date than the will, is not alone sufficient, where the statute specifies that alterations shall be made in a particular way, to show that it was made before execution.³

Moore v. Moore, 1 R., 6 Eq. 156; In re Duffy, 1 R., 5 Eq. 506; In re Hindmarch, L. R., 1 P. & D. 307. See In re Adamson, L. R., 3 P. & D. 253.

1. Doe v. Palmer, 16 Q. B. 747; 20 L. J. Q. B. 367; Dench v. Dench, 2 Prob. Div. 60; In re Sykes, L. R., 2 P. & D. 26.

The testator having obtained the lithographed form of a will by which the property was left to all the children absolutely on the death of the wife, filled up the blanks in his own handwriting, and in the place of the bequest to the children interlined the words, "To my only son, A. B." The bequest to all the children was canceled by a line drawn through it. No reference was made to the alterations in the attestation clause, nor were any initials placed in the margin to identify them. The surviving attesting witness had no knowledge whether the alterations were made at the time of execution. The testator had one child, a son, by the second wife, who took a life interest under the will, and five children by a previous marriage. The court held that the presumption arising from the ignorance of the witness was rebutted by a declaration of the testator, made previous to the execution of the will, that he intended to provide for the child of the second marriage and by the other circumstances of the case. Dench v. Dench, 2 Prob. Div. 60.

In Re Sykes, L. R., 3 P. & D. 26, the deceased executed a will and codicil, the latter referring to the former by its date. The name of the executor appointed by the will was written on an erasure. The court admitted the declaration of the testator as to the person he had appointed executor, made before the execution of the codicil, and granted probate of the will and codicil to such executor. Sir J. Hannen said: "As the declarations of a testator, made before the execution of a will, are admissible to show that alterations were made before such execution, so declarations made before the execution of a codicil, which republishes the will, may be admitted to show that the alterations in the will were made before the execution of the codicil."

2. In re Adamson, L. R., 3 P. & D. 256; Doe v. Palmer, 16 Q. B. 747. Otherwise, however, if made before the execution of a codicil which republishes the will. In re Sykes, L. R., 3 P. & D. 26. But in Ravenscroft v. Hunter, 2 Hagg. 69, declarations of an intent to benefit certain legatees, made after the will was executed, seem to have been admitted.

3. In re Adamson, L. R., 3 P. & D. 253. In this case, Sir J. Hannen said: "The general presumption, is that unattested alterations were made after the execution of the will, but this presumption may be rebutted by proof or internal evidence to the contrary. In the present case there is a total absence of evidence when the alterations and additions were made, unless the fact that dates prior to that of the will have been affixed to some of them by the testator is to be deemed such evidence. I have been unable to find any case in which it has been held that a date to an alteration was in itself sufficient to establish that it was made at that time. It is no doubt a general presumption that documents were made on the day they bear date. Taylor on Evidence, § 137; but it may well be that the presumption does not exist with reference to alterations in a will, though made by the testator himself, because the legislature, in prescribing the conditions necessary for the due execution of testamentary papers, intended to guard against certain innocent acts of testators as well as

4. Distinctions Between Ink and Pencil Alterations.—Alterations in ink are presumed to be final, while those in pencil, the will being written in ink, are prima facie deliberative only, and the original writing will have effect.¹ Where the alterations are of both kinds in the same instrument, the presumption as to each is the fraudulent acts of others. The object of the Statute 1 Vict., ch. 26, is to obtain the security of the attestation of two witnesses to the fact that the testator has executed the whole instrument sought to be proved. If, in the absence of any proof that the alterations in a will were made before execution, beyond the fact that they bear an earlier date in the testator's handwriting, they were admitted to probate, the security of two witnesses would be wanting and the mere statement of the testator would be acted upon. It has been held that declarations by a testator, after execution of a will, that an attestation was made before, are not admissible in evidence, Doe v. Palmer, 16 Q. B. 747; but if the date written by the testator be taken as sufficient, his declaration would be accepted without proof, whether it was made before or after the execution. It may be said that there is little probability of a testator affixing a false date to an alteration in his will, but my experience in this court leads me to a different conclusion. That I am not alone in deeming it necessary to guard against such practices by testators is proved by the following passage in the judgment of the privy council in Croker v. Hertford, 4 Moo. P. C. 367: 'The want of specific identification would of necessity repeal, to a certain extent, the statute; for if a general reference would do, why should not a testator write as many codicils as he pleases after the incorporating codicil, and by omitting to date them or by antedating them, defeat the provisions of the statute?'

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *133; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 32; Hawkes v. Hawkes, 1 Hagg. 321; Edward v. Astley, 1 Hagg. 490; Ravenscroft v. Hunter, 2 Hagg. 68; Parkin v. Bainbridge, 3 Ph. 321; Lavender v. Adams, 1 Add. 403; Bateman v. Pennington, 3 Moo. P. C. 223; Francis v. Grover, 5 Hare 39; Garm v. Gregory, 3 De G. M. & G. 780; In re Hall, L. R., 2 P. & D. 256; In re Adams, L. R., 2 P. & D. 367. See further Mence v. Mence, 18 Ves. Jr. 348; Goods of Bellamy, 14 W. R. 501.

Thus, where a will was written in ink, and formally executed, and the testator afterward drew a line in pencil through a clause in the will, it was held that the erasure in pencil raised no presumption of revocation, and that, without other explanation, it was properly regarded not as a revocation of the clause, but as merely deliberative, or indicative of some future and incomplete purpose. Francis v. Grover, 5 Hare 39. Wigram, V. C., said: "The alleged omission was in not directing the jury that, prima facie, the pencil erasure was a revocation, and that they were therefore bound to find the bequest revoked, unless evidence was given to counter-vail that act. The judge certainly did not tell the jury that the pencil erasure was a revocation, but only that the act was equivocal, and that they were to decide, from the collateral facts and the nature of the alteration, which was in pencil instead of the more durable material, ink, what effect was to be given to it; and the judge observed very properly that the testator had taken pains to have the will formally drawn up, and had afterward made pencil alterations. Omitting the case of Mence v. Mence, 18 Ves. Jr. 348, it appears to me that, in the cases of Parkin v. Bainbridge, 3 Ph. 321; Ravenscroft v. Hunter, 2 Hagg. 68; Lavender v. Adams, 1 Add. 403; Edwards v. Astley, 1 Hagg. 490, and Hawkes v. Hawkes, 1 Hagg. 321, the learned judges have all considered that a pencil alteration may be final, or that it may be deliberative; and that, from the nature of the act, they consider it, prima facie, as deliberative and not final. That view has always been taken in the ecclesiastical courts, admitting that any circumstance appearing upon the face of the will, or facts appearing by extrinsic evidence, must be taken into account in deciding the question. It is impossible not to feel the force of what the learned judges have said. Every man who makes an alteration in ink supposes that alteration to remain, for the material cannot, without much labor, be got rid of; but with respect to alterations in pencil, the probability stronger than if either stood alone.¹ Any circumstances appearing upon the face of the will, facts appearing by extrinsic evidence, or even the declarations of the testator, may be taken into account in deciding the question.²

is that they have been made as notes for the purpose of altering the instrument, to be changed as the testator thinks fit. The act is deliberative, and I cannot say that the learned judge did not do right when he so stated the law of the case, and left it to the jury to consider the effect of the alteration. He clearly defined the question intended to be referred to them, and left it to the jury as distinctly as it could be left. In that view, therefore, of the case, I do not see any ground to alter their conclusion. I do not understand Sir William Grant, in Mence v. Mence, 18 Ves. Jr., 348, as meaning to lay down any abstract rule. In that case there was a residuary clause, and a pencil line drawn through the residuary clause, so far as it related to the disposition of the property; but the words 'and as to all my ready money, securities for money,' etc., which were descriptive of the property, were left standing. Against the residuary clause in the margin the testator had written, 'This is to be particularly noted;' giving as a reason for the erasure that he meant to make a different disposition of some portraits and other specific articles. Then, in the residuary clause, there were some directions given as to advances for his natural sons and a nephew, and opposite to that the testator had written in the margin, 'This should be modified.' Sir William Grant, having the erasure and the notes in the margin before him, came to the conclusion that the testator did intend to revoke the residuary bequest; that he intended to revoke it so far as the disposing part went; and that he had intended also not to leave the other part standing against which he had written that it was 'to be modified.' I cannot understand Sir William Grant as intending by this intention to lay down any abstract rule of law different from that which has been recognized by other judges. In this case I am of opinion that the learned judge did not miscarry in point of law, in not directing the jury that they were bound to assume a revocation unless the contrary was proved. The jury were directed to consider the nature of the act done, the course the testator had taken in executing a formal instrument, and all the surrounding facts which were brought to their attention; and the judge was satisfied with the verdict. I see no ground for directing a new trial."

Pennsylvania.—Alterations in a will made by the testator with a lead pencil, signify the same intent and have the same effect as if they were in ink; and from the fact that the alterations are in pencil upon a will written in ink, no presumption arises that they are deliberative only and do not express the final intent of the testator. Tomlinson's Estate, 133 Pa. St. 245. See Knox's Estate, 131 Pa. St. 220.

1. Hawkes v. Hawkes, 1 Hagg. 321.

In Hawkes v. Hawkes, 1 Hagg. 322, Sir J. Nichol said: "There are various erasures, and crossings, and interlineations—some in pencil, some in ink; the general presumption and probability are, that, where alterations in pencil only are made, they are deliberative; where in ink, they are final and absolute; but when they are of both sorts, the presumption as to each is stronger; if the writer had made up his mind, and intended the variation to be final, he would, instead of pencil, have used the other material, ink; if he were deliberating only, and undecided, he would not use ink, but pencil."

2. Ravenscroft v. Hunter, 2 Hagg.

69; Francis v. Grover, 5 Hare 47.

Declarations of the testator, before the execution of the will, showing an intent to benefit a particular individual, which cannot be carried out unless the alterations are admitted, may be given in evidence. Doe v. Palmer, 16 Q. B. 747; Dench v. Dench, L. R., 2 P. & D. 60; In re Sykes, L. R., 3 P. & D. 26. In Ravenscroft v. Hunter, 2 Hagg. 69, such declarations were admitted, though made after the will was executed. But the testator's declarations, subsequent to the execution, that a particular alteration was made before, are inadmissible. In re Adamson, L. R., 3 P. & D. 256; Doe v. Palmer, 16 Q. B. 747. Otherwise, if the will has been republished since the declaration by a subsequent codicil. In re Sykes, L. R., 3 P. & D. 28.

5. Mode of Making Alterations.—Unless the local statute points out a different method, alterations which merely revoke existing provisions of the will may be made as prescribed by the Statute of Frauds, by burning, tearing, canceling, or obliterating the particular provision;¹ but if the alteration in effect creates a new devise or bequest, or enlarges an existing interest, the whole instrument should be re-executed or the alterations made by a duly executed codicil.² If a will is republished by codicil, it is enough

1. Swinton v. Bailey, 48 L. J. 57; Larkins v. Larkins, 3 Bos. & P. 16; In re Kirkpatrick's Will, 22 N. J. Eq. 463; Bigelow v. Gillott, 123 Mass. 102; Tudor v. Tudor, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 389; McPherson v. Clark, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 92.

In Swinton v. Bailey, 48 L. J. 57, it was held that a greater estate might be reduced to a less without cutting out the whole clause. But see Eschbach v. Collins, 61 Md. 499.

Interlineations require a new attestation. Doane v. Hadlock, 42 Me. 74.

New York.—Under the New York Revised Statutes a codicil or other writing duly executed is required. Matter of Prescott, 4 Redf. (N. Y.) 178.

Victorian Statute.—The Wills Act, 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 21, enacts that no obliteration, interlineation, or other alteration, made in any will after the execution thereof, shall be valid or have any effect, except so far as the words or effect of the will before such alteration shall not be apparent, unless such alteration shall be executed in like manner as hereinbefore is required for the execution of the will; but the will, with such alteration as part thereof, shall be deemed to be duly executed if the signature of the testator and the subscription of the witnesses be made in the margin, or on some other part of the will opposite or near to such alteration, or at the foot, or end of, or opposite to, a memorandum referring to such alteration, and written at the end or some other part of the will.

An alteration opposite which the testator and two witnesses have set their initials in the margin, is sufficiently executed under this section. In re Blewitt, 49 L. J. P. 31; 5 P. D. 116; see also In re Treeby, L. R., 3 P. & D. 242; In re Shearn, 50 L. J. P. 15.

Where the original is completely obliterated and not ascertainable, the will must be considered blank, so far as the obliteration, interlineation, or other alteration is concerned. In re

Ibbetson, 2 Curt. 337; Townley v. Watson, 3 Curt. 761; In re James, 1 S. & T. 238.

The court will only endeavor to discover the original by the use of glasses or similar means, and not by the use of chemicals, or removal of any substance from the will. In re Beavan, 2 Curt. 369; In re Horsford, L. R., 3 P. & D. 211; In re Nelson, I. R., 6 Eq. 569. See Lushington v. Onslow, 6 No. Cas. 183.

It appears to be clear that no external evidence would be admitted to show what the original words were, except in a case of dependent relative revocation. In re Horsford, L. R., 3 P. & D. 211; In re Nelson, I. R., 6 Eq. 569. See Townley v. Watson, 3 Curt. 761; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 33.

2. In re Wilson's Will, 8 Wis. 171; Jackson v. Holloway, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 395; McPherson v. Clark, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 99; Wolf v. Bollinger, 62 Ill. 372; Doane v. Hadlock, 42 Me. 72; In re Penniman's Will, 20 Minn. 253; Pringle v. M'Pherson, 2 Brev. (S. Car.) 289. See Eschbach v. Collins, 61 Md. 478; Wheeler v. Bent, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 61.

A, having made his will, duly executed, devising all the lands of which he was then in possession to his four sons, and having afterward become seised of other lands, altered his will by erasures and interlineations, so as to make the devise extend to all lands of which he should die seised; and indorsed a memorandum to that effect on the will, stating the alterations which he had made; but the memorandum was attested by two witnesses only. It was held that the erasures and interlineations did not destroy the original devise; but that the alteration, not being attested by three witnesses, could not operate; and the lands acquired subsequent to the date of the devise, descended to the heirs-at-law. Jackson v. Holloway, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 394.

Attestation of Interlineations—Knowledge of Their Import.—Where the to show that the alterations were made before the execution of the codicil.¹

6. Alterations by a Stranger.—Interlineations and alterations made by a stranger have no legal effect.²

witnesses attested the interlineations without knowing what or where they were, it was held that the attestation was invalid. In re Penniman's Will, 20 Minn. 246, the court, by Berry, J., said: "Our statute has prescribed the manner in which wills must be executed, and this in language so peremptory and explicit as to leave no doubt upon the point that the general rule, which renders it indispensable that a will should be executed in strict compliance with the forms of law, is in force here. Section 5, ch. 47, Gen. Stat., enacts that 'no will . . . shall be effectual to pass any estate, real or personal, or to charge or in any way affect the same, unless it is in writing and signed at the end thereof by the testator, or by some person in his presence and by his express direction, and attested and subscribed in his presence by two or more competent witnesses.' Now, if the erasures, interlineations, and additions in this instance are to be held valid, the result is that the original will, as such, is superseded by the (so to speak) new will, which has been made out of it by the alterations, and a re-execution or a new execution is required, just as a republication would be necessary in a like case, if publication of wills was required here, as in some countries. Pringle v. M'Pherson, 2 Brev. (S. Car.) 289; 1 Redfield on Wills (4th ed.) 315, 316, §§ 22, 23, 25.

"The attestation of the original will is, of course, not an attestation of the will as altered; and if there is no other sufficient attestation of the will as altered, it cannot be sustained, since it is not attested as imperatively required by the statute. Doane v. Hadlock, 42 Me. 72; Jackson v. Holloway, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 399. The only other attestation is that of the Sidles, and we think it affirmatively and clearly appears that this cannot be regarded as an attestation of the will. The testimony of the Sidles upon the hearing for probate, as well as the language of the attestation clause signed by them (Mundy v. Mundy, 15 N. J. Eq. 293), and which is in the handwriting of the testator, shows conclusively that, both in the understanding of the testator and the witnesses, their attestation was at most an attestation of the erasures and interlineations only: their attestation of such erasures and interlineations consisting of no more than the signing, at the testator's request, of a memorandum which had not been signed by the testator himself, and without any knowledge on their part of the number or location or nature of the erasures, interlineations, and additions. What was said by the witness J. K. Sidle, in answer to the inquiry of the court, as it appears in his testimony is, we think, entitled to no weight as against the other testimony of himself and H. G. Sidle, and the statements of the memorandum. It is to be observed, too, that the integrity of wills would be greatly jeopardized, if attestations like that in this instance were to be upheld, either as a sufficient attestation of erasures and interlineations, or of the will as altered thereby, since, the erasures and interlineations not being pointed out or identified, any number of them could be made, at any time, under cover of this attestation."

Alteration by Attesting Witness.—A testator made his last will and testament, disposing of his real and personal estate, which was signed, sealed, published, and attested by two witnesses. Subsequently, one of the witnesses, by order of the testator, and in his presence, made some alterations in its provisions both as to the real and personal estate, but there was no attesting witness to the alterations. The testator merely put his finger to the signature and said "it was as he wanted it," and the witness making the alterations made an indorsement on the back of the will to refresh his memory. It was held by the court that the alteration was no revocation of the whole will, and that the will as it stood before the alteration was a good will to pass real estate, and that, as altered, it was a good will to pass the personal estate according to the alterations. Greer v. McCrackin, Peck (Tenn.) 301.

1. Tyler v. Merchant Taylors' Co., 15 Prob. Div. 216; Burge v. Hamilton, 72 Ga. 568. Compare Lushington v. Onslow, 12 Jur. 465; In re Wyatt, 2 S. & T. 404.

2. Morrell v. Morrell, 7 Prob. Div.

7. Alterations by a Legatee.—Whatever the effect of alterations made by a legatee as to avoiding the legacy so altered, such alterations cannot affect other bequests in the will, to himself or others.¹

XII. REVOCATION—1. Testator's Right to Alter or Revoke.—Owing to the ambulatory nature of wills, a testator may revoke or alter his will at any time before death, provided only he observes the formalities prescribed by the governing statute.²

2. Revocation Defined.—By revocation is meant the destruction of the operative force of the will, either in part or entirely, by some extrinsic act in regard to it, or by making and publishing a later instrument in the nature of a will animo revocandi, or by operation of law from the testator's marriage and birth of issue, or the alteration of his estate.³

3. Presumption of Revocation.—See LOST PAPERS, vol. 13, p. 1091.

4. Parol Revocation.—Under the Statute of Frauds,⁴ the Statute of Victoria,⁵ and corresponding statutes in the United States, no duly executed written will or any provision therein can be revoked by parol.⁶ Exceptions exist in regard to wills of personal property in New Jersey and Florida, and in regard to wills of both real and personal property in Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Tennessee, provided the words of revocation are reduced to writing, read over, and approved by the testator in his lifetime.⁷

70. Story, J., in Smith v. Fenner, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 170; Doane v. Hadlock, 42 Me. 72; Grubbs v. McDonald, 91 Pa. St. 236. See Jackson v. Malin, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 293.

1. Story, J., in Smith v. Fenner, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 174; Doane v. Hadlock, 42 Me. 72. See Jackson v. Malin, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 293.

2. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), §§ 380, 429-431.

Mutual wills prove an exception. See supra, this title, Classification—Joint and Mutual Wills.

3. 1 Jarm. on Wills (Rand. & Talcott's ed.), p. 268, note 1; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 380; 2 Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.), § 680; In re Woodward, L. R., 2 P. & D. 206; Christmas v. Whinyates, 3 S. & T. 81; White v. Casten, 1 Jones (N. Car.) 197. See, as to animus revocandi, Mills v. Millward, 15 Prob. Div. 20; Rich v. Gilkey, 73 Me. 595; Wilbourn v. Shell, 59 Miss. 205; Forbing v. Weber, 99 Ind. 588.

4. 29 Car. II., ch. 3, §§ 6, 22.

5. 1 Vict., ch. 26, §§ 18, 20, 21.

6. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2672.

See Goodsell's Appeal, 55 Conn. 171; Kent v. Mahaffey, 10 Ohio St. 204; Perjue v. Perjue, 4 Iowa 520; Hylton v. Hylton, 1, Gratt. (Va.) 161; Wittman v. Goodhand, 26 Md. 95; Kennedy v. Upshaw, 64 Tex. 412; Jackson v. Kniffen, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 31; Slaughter v. Stephens, 81 Ala. 418; Brown v. Thorndike, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 393; Jones v. Moseley, 40 Miss. 261; Taylor v. Pegram, 151 Ill. 106; Hargroves v. Redd, 43 Ga. 143; Herbert v. Long, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 427; Lewis v. Lewis, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 455; Mundy v. Mundy, 15 N. J. Eq. 290; Ladd's Will, 60 Wis. 187.

7. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2675; Pars. Dig., tit. "Wills," par. 17; New Jersey Stat., tit. "Wills," par. 14; Tennessee Code, § 3008; Florida Stat., ch. 200, § 3; Maryland Rev. Stat., art. 49, § 6; Rodgers v. Rodgers, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 489; Boudinot v. Bradford, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 170.

Prior to the revision of the Connecticut statutes in 1821, wills might be revoked in the state by parol. Card v. Grinman, 5 Conn. 164.

5. Revocation by Burning, Tearing, Canceling, Obliterating, or Destroying.—Under the Statute of Frauds,¹ the Statute of Victoria,² and corresponding statutes in the United States, a will or codicil, or any part thereof, may be revoked by the burning, tearing, canceling, obliterating, or destroying of the same by the testator himself or some one in his presence, and by his direction, with intent to revoke it.³ The act of destruction must be accompanied with the animus revocandi or intent to revoke, and both must concur to constitute a legal revocation.⁴ The animus or intent also governs the extent and measure of operation to be attributed to the

1. "By the 6th section of the Statute of Frauds, it is enacted 'that no devise in writing of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, nor any clause thereof, shall be revocable otherwise than by some other will or codicil in writing, or other writing declaring the same, or by burning, canceling, tearing, or obliterating the same by the testator himself, or in his presence and by his directions and consent; but all devises and bequests of lands and tenements shall remain and continue in force until the same be burnt, canceled, torn, or obliterated by the testator, or his directions, in manner aforesaid, or unless the same be altered by some other will,' etc., executed as therein mentioned." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *129.

2. By the Statute 1 Vict., ch. 26, §§ 20, 21, it is provided that "no will or codicil, or any part thereof, shall be revoked otherwise than as aforesaid, or by another will or codicil executed in manner hereinbefore required, or by some writing declaring an intention to revoke the same, and executed as a will or by the burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying the same by the testator, or by some person in his presence and by his direction, with the intention of revoking the same," and that "no obliteration, interlineation, or other alteration made in any will, after the execution thereof, shall be valid or have any effect except so far as the words or effect of the will before such alteration shall not be apparent, unless such alteration shall be executed in like manner as hereinbefore is required for the execution of the will."

Under this statute, revocation by burning or tearing remains the same as under the Statute of Frauds, but cancellation or obliteration is ineffectual unless it amounts to effacement, or the alterations are executed in the manner prescribed for the execution of wills. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.), § 140.

3. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2672. Goods of Dodd, Dea. 290. See Brown v. Thorndike, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 388; Smith v. Dolby, 4 Harr. (Del.) 350; Clingan v. Mitcheltree, 31 Pa. St. 25; Burns v. Burns, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 295; Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 483; Clark v. Smith, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 140; Timon v. Claffy, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 438; Semms v. Semms, 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 388; Spoonmore v. Cables, 66 Mo. 579; Barker v. Bell, 46 Ala. 216; White v. Casten, 1 Jones (N. Car.) 197; Johnson v. Brailsford, 2 Nott. & M. (S. Car.) 272; Means v. Moore, 3 McCord (S. Car.) 282; Boylan v. Meeker, 28 N. J. L. 274; Smock v. Smock, 11 N. J. Eq. 156; Marr v. Marr, 2 Head (Tenn.) 303; Dower v. Seeds, 28 W. Va. 113; Wolf v. Bollinger, 62 Ill. 368; Slaughter v. Stephens, 81 Ala. 418; Gains v. Gains, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 190; Steele v. Price, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 58; Patterson v. Hickey, 32 Ga. 156; Lawyer v. Smith, 8 Mich. 411.

The local statutes in the several states differ somewhat, and should be consulted. In Georgia, Delaware, Iowa, Kansas, Nevada, and Ohio it seems that the act of destruction may be performed by a third person acting by the testator's express direction in his absence. In New York, Arkansas, California, Oregon, Dakota, Alabama, Montana, and Utah the fact of destruction and the testator's consent thereto must be proved by two witnesses. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2672.

Revocation of Holographic Will.—To revoke a holographic will, made under the Tennessee Act of 1784, there must be some act done plainly showing such intention, such as cancellation, destruction, reclamation from the hands of the person with whom it may have been lodged for safe keeping, or removal from the place of deposit. Marr v. Marr, 2 Head (Tenn.) 303.

4. Clarke v. Scripps, 2 Rob. 567; act, and determines whether it shall effect a revocation of the whole instrument or only a portion, and what portion, of it.¹ Thus, if a testator attempts to destroy his will, in a fit of insanity,²

Mills v. Millward, 15 Prob. Div. 20; Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 483; Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9; Smock v. Smock, 11 N. J. Eq. 156; Wolf v. Bollinger, 62 Ill. 368; Dickey v. Malechi, 6 Mo. 177; Wright v. Wright, 5 Ind. 389; Runkle v. Gates, 11 Ind. 95; Overall v. Overall, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 501; Heise v. Heise, 31 Pa. St. 246; Evans' Appeal, 58 Pa. St. 238; Lewis v. Lewis, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 455; Burns v. Burns, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 295; Gains v. Gains, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 190; Jackson v. Betts, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 208; In re Johnson's Will, 40 Conn. 587; Sweet v. Sweet, 1 Redf. (N. Y.) 451; Rich v. Gilkey, 73 Me. 595; Forbing v. Weber, 99 Ind. 588; In re Lang's Estate, 65 Cal. 19; Graham v. Burch, 47 Minn. 171. See also Woodfill v. Patton, 76 Ind. 575; Marsh v. Marsh, 3 Jones (N. Car.) 77; Taylor v. Taylor, 2 Nott. & M. (S. Car.) 482; Means v. Moore, 3 McCord (S. Car.) 282; Jackson v. Holloway, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 394.

1. Clarke v. Scripps, 2 Rob. 567. See Brown's Will, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 57; Law v. Law, 83 Ala. 432; Muh's Succession, 35 La. Ann. 394.

In Clarke v. Scripps, 2 Rob. 567, Sir J. Dodson said, in regard to 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 20, which provides that a will may be revoked by "burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying the same:" "It is obvious, first, that a part only of a will may be revoked in the manner described; in other words, that the whole will is not necessarily revoked by the destruction of a part; nevertheless, I do not by any means intend to say that the destruction of a part may not, under certain circumstances, operate as a revocation of the entire will. Secondly, it is to be observed that 'the burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying' the instrument must be done with the intention to revoke. It is not the mere manual operation of tearing the instrument, or the act of throwing it into a fire, or of destroying it by other means, which will satisfy the requisites of the law; the act must be accompanied with the intention of revoking; there must be the animus as well as the act; both must concur in order to constitute a legal revocation. It is the animus, also, which must govern the extent and measure of operation to be attributed to the act, and determine whether the act shall effect the revocation of the whole instrument, or only of some, and what, portion thereof." See also In re Cook's Will, 5 Pa. L. J. 1.

In Frear v. Williams, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 550, the testator signed his surname to his will immediately after his given name, which had been written by the draftsman in writing the attesting clause, in the presence of two witnesses, who subscribed the attesting clause at his request. Two days thereafter, being doubtful as to the validity of such a signature, he sent for two other witnesses, one of whom erased the surname at the testator's request, when he signed his full name. These two witnesses, at his request, and in his presence, signed their names under those of the former witnesses. It was held that the erasure did not amount to a revocation of the will, as it did not appear to be his intention to cancel his will, and all the facts and circumstances may be looked to in arriving at the testator's intentions.

2. Scrubby v. Fordham, 1 Add. 74; Brunt v. Brunt, L. R., 3 P. & D. 37; Goods of Shaw, 1 Curt. 905. See Forbing v. Weber, 99 Ind. 588; Matter of Forman's Will, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 274; Smith v. Wait, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 28; Rhodes v. Vinson, 9 Gill (Md.) 169; Ford v. Ford, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 92; In re Johnson's Will, 40 Conn. 587; Rick v. Gilkey, 73 Mo. 595; Allison v. Allison, 7 Dana (Ky.) 94; In re Lang's Estate, 65 Cal. 19.

The testator, having duly executed his will, subsequently, when suffering under an attack of delirium tremens, tore it in pieces. The pieces were preserved, and on his recovery he was informed of what he had done, and he answered he must have been mad when he did the act, and that he would make a fresh will, which intention he did not carry out. It was held that the will was not revoked. Brunt v. Brunt, L. R., 3 P. & D. 37.

It requires the same mental capacity to revoke as it does to make a will. Allison v. Allison, 7 Dana (Ky.) 94; Loughton v. Atkins, 1 Pick. (Mass.)

or under the mistaken impression that it is invalid,¹ or has become useless because revoked by a subsequent will,² or throws ink on the paper instead of sand,³ or is induced to destroy it through fraud or undue influence, the will remains in full force.⁴ So the destruction of a codicil which has revived a revoked will, does not revoke the will, if it appears that the codicil was destroyed on the supposition that the will would still stand.⁵ The destruction, by a third person, 547; McIntire v. Worthington, 68 Md. 203.

1. Giles v. Warren, L. R., 2 P. & D. 401.

In Giles v. Warren, L. R., 2 P. & D. 401, a testator, under the false impression that his will was invalid, tore it up. Immediately afterward, on reconsideration, he collected the pieces and placed them together among his papers of importance, and preserved them until his death. It was held that as the act done was not accompanied by an intention to revoke a valid will, it was ineffectual, and the will was admitted to probate. Lord Penzance said: "The fact that a testator tears or destroys his will is not itself sufficient to revoke one properly executed. That is to say, the bare fact. If, for instance, he tears it imagining it to be some other document, there would be no revocation, for there would be no animus revocandi. He must intend by the act to revoke something that he had previously done. There can be no intention to revoke a will, if a person destroys the paper under the idea, whether right or wrong, that it is not a valid will. Revocation is a term applicable to the case of a person canceling or destroying a document which he had before legally made. He does not revoke it if he does not treat it as being valid at the time when he sets about to destroy it. According to the evidence the testator, in consequence of some conversation he had with Hillstead, was under the impression that he had made no valid will, and, as being useless, he tore the document up and threw it on the fire. That is no revocation."

Parol evidence of intention is admissible to show that the destruction was effected under a mistake. Powell v. Powell, L. R., 1 P. & D. 209.

Contents of Destroyed Will.—The contents of a will destroyed by mistake may be proved by parol. Brown v. Brown, 8 El. & Bl. 876; 92 E. C. L. 875; Wood v. Wood, L. R., 1 P. & D. 309.

2. Scott v. Scott, 1 S. & T. 258; Clarkson v. Clarkson, 2 S. & T. 497; Goods of Middleton, 3 S. & T. 583. See Semmes v. Semmes, 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 390; Bohanon v. Walcot, 1 How. (Miss.) 336.

In Clarkson v. Clarkson, 2 S. & T. 497, B. duly executed a will in August, 1857; in July, 1859, he executed another will, purporting to revoke the will of 1857; in a suit respecting the validity of the will of 1859, the court of probate pronounced against the validity of such will. The draft of the will of 1857 was then propounded, and it was proved that, after the execution of the will of 1859, B. had called for the will of 1857, and after appearing to read it had torn it up, saying, "It is of no use now, I have another." Most of the above facts were admitted on the record, and the court held that there was no proof of the destruction of the will of 1857, with intention to revoke, so as to satisfy 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 20, and decreed probate of the draft thereof. Sir C. Creswell said: "The act done without the intention is ineffectual. Here the intention was wanting, for, according to the evidence, he imagined that the revocation had been already accomplished; and because it had been accomplished, and not for the purpose of accomplishing it, the act of destruction was done."

3. Lord Mansfield, in Burtenshaw v. Gilbert, Cowp. 52.

An act of destruction for the purpose merely of making a fair copy of the will, or of improving the handwriting, has no revocatory effect. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 37; In re Kennett, 2 N. R. 461; Goods of Applebee, 1 Hagg. 144; In re Tozer, 2 No. Cas. 11. Compare Wilbourn v. Shell, 59 Miss. 205.

4. Batton v. Watson, 13 Ga. 63; Voorhees v. Voorhees, 39 N. Y. 463; Rich v. Gilkey, 73 Me. 595; Laughton v. Atkins, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 546; McIntire v. Worthington, 68 Md. 203.

5. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 37; James v. Shrimpton, 1 Prob. Div. 431.

of a will or codicil, in the testator's lifetime, without his knowledge or permission, does not affect its validity; a fortiori, if the destruction took place after his decease.¹ The slightest act of tearing or burning, with intent to revoke the whole will, is sufficient for the purpose,² but an unexecuted intent to revoke,

In James v. Shrimpton, 1 Prob. Div. 431, the testator, having duly executed a will, subsequently married. On the day of and after the marriage ceremony he executed a codicil, by which he made a provision for his wife, and in all other respects revived, ratified, and confirmed his will. His wife predeceased him, and on his death the codicil, which had been in his possession, could not be found. Declarations of the testator of a desire to adhere to his will were proved extending up to the latest period of his life. It was held that the testator could not have intended by the destruction of the codicil to render his will inoperative, and that the court would therefore grant probate of the will and of the codicil as contained in a draft from which the original was prepared for execution. Sir J. Hannen said: "The question for my consideration is, whether the destruction of the codicil upon which the revival of the will depended has left the will inoperative. I am of opinion that it was not the intention of the testator to leave the will inoperative, but his idea was that the will, having been brought into existence again, remained valid, notwithstanding the destruction of the codicil. I was asked to grant probate of the will and codicil on the presumption that what the testator had done had not been done animo revocandi. Where there has been a physical destruction of a testamentary paper, the court has often been called upon to form an opinion as to the intention of a deceased at the time he did the act. In this case I have come to the conclusion that the testator destroyed the codicil with no intention of revoking the will, and that the court should give no more effect to the act than it would do if the testator had destroyed the paper under a mistake as to the instrument he was destroying. It was done under a misconception of the effect of the act; it was not done animo revocandi, and I therefore decree probate of the will and codicil."

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.), § 130; Haines v. Haines, 2 Vern. 441; Mills v. Millward, 15 Prob. Div. 20. See Idley v. Bowen, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 227; Kidder's Estate, 66 Cal. 488; Tucker v. Whitehead, 59 Miss. 594; Allison v. Allison, 7 Dana (Ky.) 94; Bennett v. Sherrod, 3 Ired. (N. Car.) 303.

Subsequent Ratification.—To make cancellation, burning, or obliteration of a will, efficacious as to revocation, it must be done by the express direction of the testator, and his subsequent ratification is not equivalent to a previous command. Clingan v. Mitcheltree, 31 Pa. St. 25. See Steele v. Price, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 61. But see Mills v. Millward, 15 Prob. Div. 20.

Destruction After Death.—A testator cannot revoke his will by authorizing any person to destroy it after his death. Stockwell v. Ritherden, 12 Jur. 779. See Goodsell's Appeal, 55 Conn. 171. And if so destroyed, its contents may be proved aliunde. Goods of North, 6 Jur. 564.

2. Bibb v. Thomas, 2 W. Bl. 1043; Clarke v. Scripps, 2 Rob. 567; Avery v. Pixley, 4 Mass. 460; Sweet v. Sweet, 1 Redf. (N. Y.) 451; Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 483; Johnson v. Brailsford, 2 Nott. & M. (S. Car.) 272; Means v. Moore, 3 McCord (S. Car.) 282; White v. Casten, 1 Jones (N. Car.) 197; Bohanon v. Walcot, 1 How. (Miss.) 336; Jackson v. Betts, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 377; Brown's Will, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 56; Evans' Appeal, 58 Pa. St. 238; Chinmark's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 128.

In Bibb v. Thomas, 2 W. Bl. 1043, as stated in 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *130, "the testator (who had frequently declared himself dissatisfied with his will), being one day in bed near the fire, ordered W., a person who attended him, to fetch his will, which she did, and delivered it to him, it being then whole, only somewhat creased; he opened and looked at it, then gave it a rip with his hands, so as almost to tear a bit off, then crumpled it together, and threw it on the fire; but it fell off. However it must soon have been burnt, had not W. taken it up, and put into her pocket. The testator did not see her do so, but seemed to have some suspicion of it, as he asked her what she was at, to which she made no matter how clearly expressed, is insufficient, unless accompanied by one of the acts of destruction prescribed by the local statute, even though the attempt was frustrated by the improper conduct of a third person, for, the legislature having pointed out certain modes by which a will may be revoked, it is not within the power of the judiciary to dispense with any of the prescribed requirements and accept the intention to perform the prescribed act as equivalent to the act itself.¹ Where the testator abandons little or no answer; the testator several times afterwards said that was not, and should not be his will, and bid her destroy it; she said at first, 'So I will when you have made another;' but, afterwards, upon his repeated inquiries, she falsely told him that she had destroyed it. She asked him to whom the estate would go when the will was burnt. He answered, to his sister and her children. The testator afterwards told a person that he had destroyed his will, and should make no other until he had seen his brother J. M., and desired the person would tell his brother so, and that he wanted to see him; he afterwards wrote to his brother, saying, 'I have destroyed my will which I made; for, upon serious consideration, I was not easy in my mind about that will;' and desired him to come down, saying, 'If I die intestate, it will cause uneasiness.' The testator, however, died without making another will. The jury thought this a sufficient revocation, and the court of common pleas was of the same opinion, on a motion for a new trial; De Grey, C. J., observing that this case fell within two of the specific acts described by the Statute of Frauds; it was both a burning and a tearing; and that throwing it on the fire, with an intent to burn, though it was only very slightly singed and fell off, was sufficient within the statute." But compare Doe v. Harris, 6 Ad. & El. 209; 33 E. C. L. 57.

New York and Alabama.—See Lovell v. Quitman, 88 N. Y. 377; Slaughter v. Stephens, 81 Ala. 418.

1. 1 Jarm. Wills (5th ed.) *131; Doe v. Harris, 8 Ad. & El. 1; 35 E. C. L. 299; Cheese v. Lovejoy, 2 Prob. Div. 251; Blanchard v. Blanchard, 32 Vt. 62; Mundy v. Mundy, 15 N. J. Eq. 290; Clingan v. Mitcheltree, 31 Pa. St. 25; Gains v. Gains, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 190; Boyd v. Cook, 3 Leigh (Va.) 32; Malone v. Hobbs, 1 Rob. (Va.) 366; Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9; Jackson v. Betts, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 208; Hise

v. Fincher, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 139; Giles v. Giles, Cam. & N. (N. Car.) 174; Pryor v. Coggin, 17 Ga. 445; Kent v. Mahaffey, 10 Ohio St. 204; Clark v. Smith, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 140; Gratham v. Burch, 47 Minn. 171. See Goodsell's Appeal, 55 Conn. 171; Runkle v. Gates, 11 Ind. 95; McBride v. McBride, 26 Gratt. (Va.) 476; contra Smiley v. Gambill, 2 Head (Tenn.) 164.

In Blanchard v. Blanchard, 32 Vt. 62, the defendants offered to prove that about ten days before the death of the testator he procured the will in question for the purpose of revoking it, and sent for a magistrate and witnesses to be present at its revocation, but before they all arrived the will was taken from him without his consent, and withheld from him, and for that reason the revocation was not consummated; that afterward he applied to the person who had the will, to get it so that he might revoke it, but his request was not complied with; and that he supposed it to be necessary to have a magistrate and witnesses present to enable him to make a valid revocation of the will. The plaintiffs objected to this testimony, and it was excluded by the court, to which the defendants excepted. It was held not to be error. The court, by Bennett, J., said: "It is clear that the facts offered to be proved would not have constituted a revocation of the will. Though the testator might have procured the will for the purpose of revocation, and sent for a magistrate and witnesses to be present at its revocation, yet this does not create a revocation; and the fact that the will was taken from the testator without his consent, and kept from him, and the revocation by this means prevented, cannot alter the case. Though at common law the mode of proof might, perhaps, be immaterial, if the intention to revoke a will was fully established, and an attempt to cancel a will might have the same effect as an actual cancellation, yet the statute prescribing how a will shall be revoked has changed the rule, and now that intention must be wholly or partially consummated."

In Doe v. Harris, 6 Ad. & El. 209; 33 E. C. L. 57; 8 Ad. & El. 1; 35 E. C. L. 299, a testator, intending to destroy his will, threw it on the fire; but a devisee under the will snatched it off, and took it away, a corner of the envelope only being burnt. The testator was displeased at her having taken it, and she, being urged by him to give it back, promised to burn it, and pretended to do so in his presence, but did not. The testator afterward told another person that the devisee had thrown the will on the fire; but, on that person expressing a doubt, the testator said that he did not care, and that, if he was alive and well, he would make another. He took no further step either to destroy the old will, or to make a new one. It was held in regard to devises of freehold lands which were governed by the Statute of Frauds, that the will was not revoked. Lord Denman, C. J., said: "The Statute of Frauds requires that a will shall be executed with certain solemnities; and, after describing these, directs how it shall be revoked; and that is by certain acts, which are specified. In the present case, there is no evidence that any one of those acts has been done. It is impossible to say that singeing a cover is burning a will within the meaning of the statute. The terms used in the sixth section show that to assert this would be going a length not contemplated in the statute. The acts required are palpable and visible ones. Cases may, indeed, be put where very little has been done, as a slight tearing and burning, and yet a revocation has taken place; but the main current of the statute is against the argument from such cases. The intention seems to have been to prevent inferences being drawn from such slight circumstances. In Bibb v. Thomas, 2 W. Bl. 1043, the will was slightly torn and slightly burnt; and the court said that the case fell within two of the specific acts described by the statute; there was both a burning and a tearing. Doubt might be entertained now whether the proof there given would be sufficient as to these; but, as the court considered what was done to have been a burning and a tearing, the case shows at least that they did not think the acts required by the statute could be dispensed with by reason of the conduct of a third party. In Doe v. Perkes, 3 B. &

Ald. 489; 5 E. C. L. 353, the testator's hand was arrested while he was in the act of tearing the will; he submitted to the interference; and the intention of revoking was itself revoked before the act was complete. There it was properly left to the jury to say whether the testator had done all he intended or not. Neither of these cases at all approaches the present. It would be a violence to language if we said here that there was any evidence to go to the jury of the will having been burnt. Great inconvenience would be introduced by holding that there may be a virtual compliance with the statute, but there is none in saying that, if a testator perseveres in the intention of revoking his will, he shall fulfill it by some of the means pointed out in the statute; that he shall revoke the will, if not in his possession, by writing properly attested, or cancel it, if in his power, by some of the other acts which the statute prescribes." Patterson, J., said: "As the act says that there must be a tearing or burning of the instrument itself, a mere singeing of the corner of an envelope is not sufficient. To hold that it was so would be saying that a strong intention to burn was a burning. There must be, at all events, a partial burning of the instrument itself. I do not say that a quantity of words must be burnt, but there must be a burning of the paper on which the will is."

In Cheese v. Lovejoy, 2 Prob. Div. 251, a testator drew his pen through the lines of various parts of his will, wrote on the back of it "This is revoked," and threw it among a heap of waste papers in his sitting room. A servant took it up and put it on a table in the kitchen. It remained lying about in the kitchen till the testator's death seven or eight years afterwards, and was then found uninjured. It was held that the will was not revoked, the words "or otherwise destroying," in 7 Wm. IV. and 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 20, not being satisfied, as, whatever the testator may have intended, the will had not been actually injured. James, L. J., said: "It is quite clear that a symbolical burning will not do, a symbolical tearing will not do, nor will a symbolical destruction. There must be the act as well as the intention. As it was put by Dr. Deane in the court below, 'All the destroying in the world without intention will not revoke a will, nor all the intention in the world without destroying; there must be the two.'"

his intention of revoking the will before the act of destruction is complete, the will remains unrevoked.¹ In the absence of evidence aliunde, however, an intent to revoke the whole will cannot be inferred from a partial mutilation which does not affect the instrument as an entirety, or destroy that part which gives effect to the whole.² Thus, by merely cutting off or tearing the begin-

Concerning evidence of intention in the absence of special statutory requirements as to revocation, see Card v. Grinman, 5 Conn. 164; Smiley v. Gambill, 2 Head (Tenn.) 164. Compare Pryor v. Coggin, 17 Ga. 444.

The fact that the testator was deceived into believing that the will was destroyed, as required by the statute to work a revocation, will not revoke it if such was not the case. Clingan v. Mitcheltree, 31 Pa. St. 25; Boyd v. Cook, 3 Leigh (Va.) 32; Malone v. Hobbs, 1 Rob. (Va.) 366; Hise v. Fincher, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 139. But in Smiley v. Gambill, 2 Head (Tenn.) 164, it was held that the will was revoked where the testator burnt another paper by mistake, supposing it to have been his will.

In Gains v. Gains, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 191, it was said that a devisee, who by fraud or force prevents the will from being revoked, may, in a court of equity, be considered a trustee for those who would be entitled to the estate in case it were revoked, but such a question cannot be determined upon an application to admit the will to record. See Blanchard v. Blanchard, 32 Vt. 65. But this seems doubtful, since such a doctrine would in effect work a revocation without regard to the requirement of the local statute.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *131; Doe v. Perkes, 3 B. & Ald. 489; Elms v. Elms, S. & T. 155; Burns v. Burns, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 568. Compare Goods of Colberg, 2 Curt. 832. In re Cockayne, Deane Ecc. Rep. 177; Winsor v. Pratt, 2 B. & B. 655; Giles v. Giles, Cam. & N. (N. Car.) 174.

In Doe v. Perkes, 3 B. & Ald. 489; 5 E. C. L. 353, a testator, being angry with one of the devisees named in his will, began to tear it, with the intention of destroying it; and having torn it into four pieces, was prevented from proceeding further, partly by the efforts of a bystander, who seized his arms, and partly by the entreaties of the devisee. Upon this he became calm; and having put by the several pieces, he expressed his satisfaction that no material part of the writing had been injured, and that it was no worse. It was held that it was, on these facts, properly left to the jury to say whether he had completely finished all that he intended to do for the purpose of destroying the will; and the jury having found that he had not, the court refused to disturb the verdict, and supported the will. Bayley, J., said: "If the testator had done all that he originally intended, it would have amounted to a cancellation of the will; and nothing that afterwards took place could set it up again. But if the jury were satisfied that he was stopped in medio, then the act not having been completed will not be sufficient to destroy the validity of the will. Suppose a person, having an intention to cancel his will by burning it, were to throw it on the fire, and upon a sudden change of purpose, were to take it off again, it could not be contended that it was a cancellation. So here, there was evidence from which a change of purpose, before the completion of the act, might properly be inferred. The jury have drawn that inference, and I see no reason to disturb the verdict."

2. Hobbs v. Knight, 1 Curt. 768; Clarke v. Scripps, 2 Rob. 563; Goods of Woodward, L. R., 2 P. & D. 206; Bell v. Fothergill, L. R., 2 P. & D. 148; Goods of Geellan, 1 S. & T. 23; Williams v. Jones, 7 No. Cas. 106. See In re Lewis, 1 S. & T. 31; Goods of Simpson, 5 Jur. N. S. 1366; Abraham v. Joseph, 5 Jur. N. S. 179; Evans v. Dallo, 31 L. J. Prob. 128; Price v. Powell, 3 H. & N. 341; Williams v. Tyley, Johns. 530; Giles v. Warren, L. R., 2 P. & D. 401; Coleridge, J., in Doe v. Harris, 6 Ad. & El. 209; 33 E. C. L. 57; Avery v. Pixley, 4 Mass. 460; Johnson v. Brailsford, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 272; Brown's Will, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 56; Lovell v. Quitman, 88 N. Y. 377. As to erasing name of beneficiary, see Noyes' Will, 61 Vt. 14. Compare Dammann v. Dammann (Md. 1894), 28 Atl. Rep. 408.

ning of the will,¹ or the clause appointing executors,² or tearing the will in such a way as to indicate that the signature and attestation clause were designedly left untouched, the will is revoked only as to the parts so torn.³ On the other hand, tearing or cutting out (for tearing includes cutting)⁴ the signature of the testator,⁵ or the subscription of the witnesses, works a revocation of the

In Brown's Will, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 56, it was held that the cancellation or cutting off a portion of the devises in a will, leaving the testator's signature at the conclusion, or in the body, when no other signing had been intended, with a declaration that the intention was to annul only what was so canceled, the residue is not affected, but remains a valid will. And in Johnson v. Brailsford, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 272, it is declared that the degree of "burning, canceling, tearing, or obliterating," necessary to the revocation of a will, according to the Statute of Frauds, must depend on the circumstances of each case.

1. In re Woodward, L. R., 2 P. & D. 207. In this case Lord Penzance said: "The mere cutting off eight lines at the beginning of the document does not show an intention to revoke the whole will. It may be said that the object of tearing off the first part was to destroy the statement that it was the last will and testament of the deceased, which is a material averment, but the force of that observation depends very much, if not entirely, upon the consideration whether there was anything else of moment or importance in that part of the will destroyed, which the testator might have wished to revoke. It is probable in this case that there was. It seems probable that the part torn off did contain something besides the mere statement that the document was the last will and testament of the deceased, and it might very well have been that the deceased tore it off in order to get rid of that. I consider, under these circumstances, that the will is not revoked, and must be admitted to probate."

2. In re Maley, L. R., 12 Prob. Div. 134; Wells v. Wells, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 152.

3. Clarke v. Scripps, 2 Rob. 575.

4. Hobbs v. Knight, 1 Curt. 768; Clarke v. Scripps, 2 Rob. 563; In re Cooke, 5 No. Cas. 390.

In Hobbs v. Knight, 1 Curt. 779, Sir H. Jenner said: "Cutting is a mode of destroying as effectual as tearing, and it appears to me that if tearing a will to this extent be a sufficient destruction of it, the same effect must be attributed to the act of cutting it; what would be the consequences of a different construction? Suppose a will were torn into two or more pieces, the will, no doubt, would be revoked; but if it were cut into twenty pieces with a knife that would be no revocation; and if the pieces could be collected and pasted together, the will must be pronounced for by the court. I cannot conceive it possible that it was the intention of the legislature to leave the law in that state."

Scratching Out.—Scratching out a signature revokes the will. In re Morton, 12 Prob. Div. 141.

5. Hobbs v. Knight, 1 Curt. 768; Goods of Geellan, 1 S. & T. 23; In re Simpson, 5 Jur. N. S. 1366; In re Lewis, 1 S. & T. 31. See Gay v. Gay, 60 Iowa 418.

The signature of the testator being "an essential part of a will, it is difficult to comprehend, when that which is essential to the existence of a thing is destroyed, how the thing itself can exist. There can be no doubt that if the name of the testator had been burnt or torn out, the revocation would have been as complete as if the will had been torn into twenty pieces. If this were not the case, it would lead to many absurd consequences. But it has been argued, that as the present act of Parliament has pointed out certain modes with regard to the revocation of wills, the court cannot go beyond the express terms of the act; that the words being confined to 'burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying,' omitting the terms 'obliterating' and 'canceling' used in the Statute of Frauds, there must be an actual burning or tearing, or as to 'otherwise destroying,' that the whole instrument must be destroyed; that the cutting, in the present case, is not tearing (burning is out of the question) and, the instrument not being destroyed, that there is no revocation; and upon this part of the argument, the case of Doe v.

whole will.¹ Where a will is written on several sheets, each of which is signed by the testator and subscribed by witnesses, tearing off the signature and subscription on the last sheet revokes the whole will, although the prior signatures and subscriptions remained.² Although sealing is not essential to the validity of a will, tearing off seals works a total revocation, if the will professed to be executed and attested as a sealed instrument, or the animus revocandi be shown by evidence aliunde.³

Harris, 6 Ad. & El. 209; 1 Nev. & P. 405; 33 E. C. L. 57, in the Queen's Bench, was referred to, in which the testator had thrown his will on the fire, with the intention of destroying it, and a part of the cover was burnt, but there being no burning on the instrument itself, the judges of that court held that the will was not revoked; that the words of the Statute of Frauds had not been complied with. But that case is not applicable to the present point, for here a part of the will, the most essential part, is removed, and if in that case the name of the testator had been burnt or torn off, I think the court of Queen's Bench would have held that to be an effectual revocation by burning or tearing, for, according to the judgment in that case, it was not required that the whole will should be burnt or torn. The learned judges do not say how much it is necessary should be burnt, but Mr. Justice Coleridge says it is sufficient if the entirety of the will is destroyed; his expressions are these: 'We were pressed with the argument, must the whole of the document be destroyed? I say no; but there must be a destruction of so much as to impair the entirety of the will, so that it may be said that the will does not exist in the manner framed by the testator.' So I say here, is not the entirety of the will destroyed by the removal of the signature of the testator? It is true this is not an act of tearing, in the strict sense of that term; but, if the circumstances of this case required it, I think it would not be difficult to show that a will might be revoked by cutting with an instrument as well as by tearing, if a corresponding effect be produced by the one act as by the other. . . . The question then comes to this: Whether this be or be not a destruction of the will. I consider the name of the testator to be essential to the existence of a will, and that if that name be removed, the essential part of the will is removed and the will is destroyed." Sir H. Jenner, in Hobbs v. Knight, 1 Curt. 779.

Pasting Signature on Again.—Pasting the signature into its former place will not revive the will. Bell v. Fothergill, L. R., 2 P. & D. 148.

1. Abraham v. Joseph, 5 Jur. N. S. 179; Evans v. Dallow, 31 L. J. Prob. 128; Hobbs v. Knight, 1 Curt. 781. See Birkhead v. Bowdoin, 2 No. Cas. 66; In re White's Will, 25 N. J. Eq. 501.

2. This is undoubtedly so in jurisdictions in which the will is required to be signed "at the end thereof," for in such case, the last signature alone gives it efficacy. Goods of Gullan, 1 S. & T. 23. See supra, this title, Construction of English and American Statutes. See Gullan v. Grove, 26 Beav. 64; Christmas v. Whinyates, 32 L. J. P. 73.

3. Lambell v. Lambell, 3 Hagg. 568; Davies v. Davies, 1 Cas. temp. Lee 444; Price v. Powell, 3 H. & N. 341; Avery v. Pixley, 4 Mass. 462; Johnson v. Brailsford, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 277. See In re White's Will, 25 N. J. Eq. 501.

"There can be no doubt that prior to the new statute a will found in the testator's possession with the seal torn off was deemed to have been canceled. Davies v. Davies, 1 Cas. temp. Lee 444; Lambell v. Lambell, 3 Hagg. 568. At that time any tearing done with the intention of revoking had been held sufficient. The expression upon which we have now to put a construction is 'by tearing or otherwise destroying;' and as it was admitted (and we think could not be denied) that actual destruction was not necessary, it becomes a question of degree whether what was done in this case was sufficient; and in such cases, and indeed in all similar cases, we think it would be discreet not to lay down any general rule applicable to cases and circumstances which have not been the subject of argument before us, but to confine our judgment to the case at bar.

The whole will, or any provision therein, may be revoked by cancellation or obliteration, as well as by tearing or burning. Thus, if the testator strikes out or obliterates a particular provision, a revocation is effected pro tanto, and the rest of the will remains in full force;¹ but if he should strike out or obliterate his signature or

And in our opinion, as this will professed to be executed under seal, and was published and attested as a sealed instrument, when the seal was torn off it ceased to be the instrument which the testator professed to execute and to publish to the attesting, and through them to the world. It was, to make use of the expression of Mr. Justice Coleridge in Doe v. Harris, 6 Ad. & El. 209; 33 E. C. L. 57, 'destroyed in its entirety,' and ceased to be (by means of tearing) the instrument as and for which it had been published." Pollock, C. B., in Price v. Powell, 3 H. & N. 350.

Upon the principle of this case it was held, by Wood, V. C., in Williams v. Tyley, Johns. 530, that by the usual statement in the witnessing clause at the end of his will, that he has set his hand to the preceding pages, a testator makes the signatures on those pages a part of his will; and if, having so recited, he afterwards, animo revocandi, tears off the signatures from the preceding pages, it is a good revocation of the whole will under the 20th section of the act, 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., ch. 26. See In re Harris, 3 S. & T. 485.

1. Sutton v. Sutton, Cowp. 812. See Bigelow v. Gillott, 123 Mass. 102; Wheeler v. Bent, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 61; In re Kirkpatrick's Will, 22 N. J. Eq. 463; McPherson v. Clark, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 92; Clark v. Smith, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 140; Jackson v. Holloway, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 395; Tudor v. Tudor, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 383; Cogbill v. Cogbill, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 467; Dixon's Appeal, 55 Pa. St. 424; Tomlinson's Estate, 133 Pa. St. 245; Doane v. Hadlock, 42 Me. 72; Means v. Moore, 3 McCord (S. Car.) 282; Brown's Will, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 57; Wells v. Wells, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 152.

In McPherson v. Clark, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 92, the court, in delivering the opinion, said: "It never seems to have been doubted that a portion of a will might be revoked by obliteration. In Roberts v. Round, 3 Hagg. 548, the testatrix having partially mutilated a duplicate will, Sir John Nicoll said: 'Suppose that the mutilated instrument alone had been found, and that no duplicate had ever existed. This mutilation of the first sheet, leaving the signature untouched, would not be a total revocation—it would be a revocation of those particular devises only.' In support of this position, he refers to Larkins v. Larkins, 3 Bos. & P. 16. In that case, the testator having made a devise to three persons, as joint tenants, afterwards struck out the name of one of the devisees, without republication, and it was held that the erasure operated only as a revocation of the will pro tanto. Lord Alvanley remarked, 'I have no doubt upon this case. A revocation by obliteration will have the same effect which a revocation by any other means will have, and no more.' In Burkitt v. Burkitt, 2 Vern. 498, certain devises were obliterated and alterations made, and it was decreed that the obliterations did not revoke such clauses as remained unaltered. (See Limbery v. Mason, Comyns 451.) In Sutton v. Sutton, Cowp. 812, various and extensive alterations were made, and parts obliterated animo revocandi, but it was decided that the whole will was not revoked, but a devise of certain real estate was sustained as valid and unaffected. The same doctrine has been held in this country. In the case of Brown's Will, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 57, it was declared that a cancellation of a portion of the devises, the testator's signature being left untouched, did not affect the residue of the dispositions, which remained unaltered, the testator's intention not to revoke them being clearly established." But see Quinn v. Quinn, 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 437.

In Pennsylvania, where several legacies were canceled by drawing a pencil through them, the will was held to be revoked as to such legacies, but not entirely. Tomlinson's Appeal, 133 Pa. St. 245.

In Bigelow v. Gillott, 123 Mass. 102, it was held that where a testator struck out certain bequests by drawing lines through them, the property passed under the residuary clause. The court, by Merton, J., said: "The statute provides that 'no will shall be revoked, unless by burning, tearing, cancelling, or obliterating the same, with the intention of revoking it, by the testator himself, or by some person in his presence and by his direction; or by some other will, codicil, or writing, signed, attested, and subscribed in the manner provided for making a will.' Gen. Stat., ch. 92, § 11. This provision is a re-enactment of the Rev. Stat., ch. 62, § 9, with merely unimportant changes. The Revised Statutes made material changes in the law as to wills, doing away with the distinctions between wills affecting real and wills affecting personal property, and putting all upon the same footing. The Stat. of 1783, ch. 24, § 2, permitted the revocation of a devise of land, 'or any clause thereof,' in the manner pointed out in the statute, which was the same manner now provided for the revocation of a will. "We see nothing to indicate that the legislature, in the revision of 1836, intended to change the law in this respect and to limit the power of revocation to a revocation of the whole will. The power to revoke a will includes the power to revoke any part of it. If we were to hold that under this provision a testator could not revoke a part of a will by canceling or obliterating it, we should be obliged by the same rule of construction to hold that he could not revoke a part by a codicil, which would be against the uniform practice in this commonwealth, sanctioned by numerous decisions. We are therefore of opinion that, in this case, the cancellation by the testator of the sixth and thirteenth clauses of his will, by drawing lines through them, with the intention of revoking them, was a legal revocation of those clauses."

New York.—Under 2 Rev. Stat. 64, § 42, it seems that a will cannot be revoked pro tanto, except by a writing executed with the same formalities with which the will itself was required to be executed. Lovell v. Quitman, 88 N. Y. 377. In this case, testatrix struck out certain clauses with intent to revoke, leaving them still legible, and it was held that the whole will, including these clauses, should be admitted to probate. The court, by Danforth, J., said: "The appeal depends upon the true construction of the statute (2 Rev. Stat., pt. 2, ch. 6, tit. 1, art. 3, p. 64, § 42), which enacts that 'no will in writing, . . . nor any part thereof, shall be revoked or altered, otherwise than by some other will in writing, or some other writing of the testator declaring such revocation or alteration, and executed with the same formalities with which the will itself was required, by law, to be executed; or unless such will be burnt, torn, canceled, obliterated, or destroyed, with the intent and for the purpose of revoking the same, by the testator himself, or by any other person in his presence, by his direction and consent; and when so done by another person, the direction and consent of the testator, and the fact of such injury or destruction, shall be proved by at least two witnesses.'

"First. A literal and plain reading of these words defeats the appellant. There is language of prohibition, but it is so qualified as to amount to permission to revoke or alter a will, or any part thereof, by some other will in writing, or some other writing of the testator declaring such revocation or alteration; or by burning, tearing, canceling, obliterating, or destroying the will, 'for the purpose of revoking the same.' Now, by the first phrase, the repentant testator is required to write out the proposed alteration, select his witnesses and make to them an acknowledgment or declaration that the act is his; and, so far, the language permits but one inference or construction; that that act becomes effectual whether it relates to the whole will, or some portion only of the will.

"The second clause requires no such construction. The words 'or any part thereof,' are omitted. The 'will' itself is to be burnt, torn, canceled, obliterated, or destroyed, not with an intent or purpose of 'altering,' but, as the statute says, 'with the intent and for the purpose of revoking the same.' And while these things may be done, either by the testator or by another person in his presence, under his direction, yet the statute provides that 'when so done by another person, the direction and consent of the testator, and the fact of such injury or destruction, shall be proved by at least two witnesses.' The injury relates to the effect of burning, tearing, canceling, and obliterating.

"We see, therefore, that, under the first clause, an act of alteration or revocation, if in writing, and under the last clause an act of destruction or of injury, unless by the testator himself, is required to be proved by witnesses. Can it be supposed that the statute intended a partial revocation or alteration, if done by the testator himself, the subscription of the witnesses, the whole will is revoked.¹ Under the Statute of Frauds, and similar statutes framed thereon in should be effective, although no formality was observed? According to the appellant's construction, a dash of the testator's pen supplies the place of the formality required by the first clause, renders unnecessary the presence of two witnesses, and becomes effectual to the same extent as if the above provisions of the statute had been observed.

"Such a conclusion is inadmissible. The dissimilarity of the two events, one requiring and the other dispensing with formalities, the most solemn known to the law relating to the execution of papers, seems to permit but one answer to the appellant. The two acts cannot be deemed equivalents. To the same end is the general policy of the law, which aims to close the door against opportunities of fraud, and it would be unreasonable to suppose that the legislature intended a method by which the purpose of the testator could be defeated, and the restrictions thrown around him at the time of executing the will designed to carry that purpose into effect, evaded. The provisions of the statute applicable to wills (2 Rev. Stat., pt. 2, ch. 6, art. 3, tit. 1, p. 63), which include the one before us, have in view not merely the convenience of the individual and his protection, but also the prevention of fraud and perjury in reference to an act which becomes effective only after the death of the testator, and then concerns his devisees, his heirs, and indirectly the whole public. Second. The appellant resorts to implication, and imports into the second clause of the statute words which are found only in the first, thus violating not only the method of the legislature, but the grammatical reading of the sentence. This last consideration would be of little importance if there was anything in the statute from which it appeared that the apparent grammatical construction could not be the true one, but should control unless there is some strong and obvious reason to the contrary; as if we could see that the legislature had a different intention. But when we find in the first clause that the will, or any part thereof, can be altered by a writing only when duly attested, and in the second clause the words 'or any part thereof' omitted, we are bound to give effect to the specific words actually used, and say that no obliteration can be effective as to part, unless it altogether destroys the whole will. We have no power to interpolate other words."

In Gugel v. Vollmer, 1 Dem. (N. Y.) 484, the testator's will consisted of six pages, four of which were marked across, as having been stricken out at some time after its execution, with a marginal note on each of the four pages, in the handwriting of the testator, as follows: "I pronounce this void, July 24, 1878." All the writing was perfectly distinguishable; it only appearing on the face of the paper, that the pen had been drawn across several pages of it. It was held that there was no revocation and that the entire will, as executed, must be admitted to probate.

Alabama.—Under a statute providing that "a will in writing can only be revoked by burning, tearing, canceling, or obliterating the same, with the intention of revoking it, by the testator himself, or by some person in his presence, and by his direction; or by some other will in writing, or some other writing subscribed by the testator, and attested as prescribed in the first section of this article; and when this will is burned, torn, canceled, or obliterated by any other person than the testator, his direction and consent thereto, and the fact that such burning, canceling, tearing, or obliteration must be proved by at least two witnesses." (Code (1886), § 1968.) It was held that all alterations or revocations of any part or any clause of a will, properly executed, must be made, not by burning, tearing, canceling or obliterating, but only by a new will, or a codicil, properly subscribed by the testator, and attested by at least two subscribing witnesses, in the mode prescribed by the statute. Law v. Law, 83 Ala. 432.

In England, it has been repeatedly held that the canceling of a legacy by lines drawn by the testator revokes the legacy so canceled, but does not affect the residue of the will. Mence v. Mence, 18 Ves. Jr. 350; Martins v. Gardner, 8 Sim. 73; Francis v. Grover, 5 Hare 39; Larkins v. Larkins, 3 Bos. & P. 16; Short v. Smith, 4 East 418; In re Woodward, L. R., 2 P. & D. 206; Rogers Ecc. Law 1018.

1. In re James, 7 Jur. N. S. 52; Bap-

the United States, the revocation is complete, if enough of the material part of a provision is stricken out, canceled, or obliterated to show an intent to revoke, as where the testator draws his pen through a devisee's name.¹ Under the Statute of Victoria, revocation by cancellation is abolished, and obliteration to be effective tist Church v. Robbarts, 2 Pa. St. 110; Evan's Appeal, 58 Pa. St. 238.

Pencil Marks Over Signature.—Drawing pencil marks over the signature has been held sufficient. Woodfill v. Patton, 76 Ind. 575. See Tomlinson's Estate, 133 Pa. St. 245.

Scratching out the signature revokes the will. Goods of Morton, 12 Prob. Div. 141.

Tearing out the seal, and part of the signature, and obliterating the rest of signature and the names of witnesses, works a revocation of the will. In re White's Will, 25 N. J. Eq. 501.

1. Mence v. Mence, 18 Ves. Jr. 350; In re Kirkpatrick's Will, 22 N. J. Eq. 463; Matter of Clark's Will, 1 Tuck. (N. Y.) 445; Woodfill v. Patton, 76 Ind. 575; Evan's Appeal, 58 Pa. St. 238.

In Müh's Succession, 35 La. Ann. 394, the will containing some twenty legacies was found, with all the legacies except four erased by pen marks, but still legible. The clause appointing executors was erased in like manner, the names being read with more difficulty. The testator's signature was still more completely marked out in like manner. In the margin were several additions in his handwriting, apparently designed for a new will. It was held that the will was revoked.

Effect of Writing the Word "Canceled," "Obsolete," etc., on Will.—In Warner v. Warner, 37 Vt. 356, the testator made his will in 1857, and wrote it mostly upon one side of a half sheet of foolscap paper, the signature and attestation clause being upon the other side of the same paper near the top, and two years afterward wrote below all the writing, and near the middle of the sheet, "This will is hereby canceled and annulled in full this 15th day of March, 1859." It was held to amount to a revocation of the will by "canceling," which could not be thereafter revived by parol declarations of such a purpose or desire on the part of the testator. The court, by Barrett, J., said: "From the fact that the cross marks were so easily made, and, when made upon the face of a written instrument, were so significant that thereby, the maker of them designed to put an end to the continuing validity of the instrument, this mode was recognized and adopted into the statute, in common with tearing, burning and obliterating, as one by which wills might be revoked. In some instances this mode might be preferable to either of the others, as when it should be desirable to preserve the legibility of the entire instrument, which might not happen as the result of burning, tearing or obliterating. While, therefore, a common and customary mode of manifesting the intent to abrogate the instrument, by drawing cross lines over the face of it, gave rise to the use of the term cancel, still the entire judicial history of the subject shows that that manner of marking an instrument is by no means essential in order to answer to the full force and effect of the term in its legal sense. The net result of all the cases and all the text books, as well as the reason of the thing, and the appropriate analogies, seems to be this,—that, when the instrument is so marked by the maker of it as to show clearly, whenever it is produced, that the act was designed by him to be a canceling, that act becomes effectual, by force of the statute, as a revocation of the will by canceling.

"In the present case the act of the testator was done, not only upon the paper on which the will was written, but upon such a part of it as always to go with that part of the will which contained the disposition of the property,—not indeed on the face, but on the back of such disposition. It is obvious that the act itself was designed to constitute a revocation by canceling. This is not a mere memorandum or declaration, which, as such, operates a legal effect by force of the terms, but it was the performing of an act upon the instrument itself, which act operates the legal effect. If cross lines had been drawn over the face of the writing of the will, they would have been effectual, because they would have constituted an act done to the instrument, showing the intent of the testator, by that act, to destroy the validity of it. Instead of thus drawing lines, he equally must so completely efface the original writing that it cannot be read.¹ A somewhat similar construction has been placed upon an performed an act to the substance of the instrument, and as inseparable from the written text as cross lines over its face, showing, with even clearer certainty, the intent, by that act, to destroy its validity. Instead of leaving the significance of informal marks to be fixed by the location they occupy, he formed the marks into letters and words expressive of their significance, and as effectually placed them upon the instrument as if they had been made upon the face of the script of the will. If he had drawn a slight mark from the top to the bottom of the writing, though that would not have been canceled, within the etymological and primary meaning of the term, still it is conceded that it would have been a canceling of the will, if done with that intent, within the legal meaning of that term. We think that writing upon a will, as was done in this case, as nearly answers to the primary sense of that term, as such mark would, and, having regard to the ground on which effect is given to an act of cancellation, such writing answers every reason and requisite of the law."

The reasoning in this case was approved by Strong, J., in Evan's Appeal, 58 Pa. St. 247. See also Witter v. Mott, 2 Conn. 67.

But in Lewis v. Lewis, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 455, under an act similar in phraseology to the Statute of Frauds, it was held that the word "obsolete," written by a testator on the margin of his will, but not signed by him or any person for him in the mode prescribed by the sixth section of the Act of April 8, 1833, did not operate as a revocation of the will under the thirteenth section of that act.

Parol declarations as to the testator's intent to die intestate are inadmissible to show a revocation of his will. See further Grantley v. Garthwaite, 2 Russ. 90; In re Gosling, 11 Prob. Div. 79; In re Ladd's Will, 60 Wis. 187.

Canceled Legatee's Name in Some Places and Not in Others.—The testator directed his executors to pay an annuity to his sister —, the wife of Francis Betley, or to such persons as the said Elizabeth Betley should appoint, to the intent that the same might be for the separate use of the said E. Betley, and the receipt of the said — to be a sufficient discharge. The testator, after executing his will, drew his pen through his sister's name in those places where dashes are left. It was held that the request was not revoked. Martins v. Gardiner, 8 Sim. 73.

Obliterating Title on Envelope.—Striking a pen through the words "last will and testament," on the back of the envelope in which the will is contained, and entering thereon "superseded by a later will," which was improperly executed, does not revoke the first will. Grantley v. Garthwaite, 2 Russ. 90.

In Re Ladd's Will, 60 Wis. 187, the will was written upon a large double sheet, the first page being a printed blank. This was filled in by the testator, and the will was wholly upon the first page. The second and third pages were blank, and the usual indorsement by the scrivener was upon the fourth page, being the outside wrapper leaf. Here, also, in pencil, in the handwriting of the testatrix, signed and dated by her, were the words, "I revoke this will." This was held not to be a cancellation.

1. The Statute 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 20, enacts "that no will or codicil, or any part thereof, shall be revoked otherwise than as aforesaid (i. e., by marriage), or by another will or codicil executed in manner hereinbefore required, or by some writing declaring an intention to revoke the same, and executed as a will," or "by the burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying the same by the testator, or by some person in his presence and by his direction, with the intention of revoking the same;" and (section 21) "that no obliteration, interlineation, or other alteration, made in any will after the execution thereof, shall be valid or have any effect, except so far as the words or effect of the will before such alteration shall not be apparent, unless such alteration shall be executed in like manner as hereinbefore is required for the execution of the will; but the will, with such alteration as part thereof, shall be deemed to be duly executed, if the signature of the testator and the subscription of the witnesses be made in the margin, or on some other part of the will opposite or near to such alteration, or at analogous statute in Iowa.¹ A testator may, by obliteration or cancellation (where the latter is permitted by statute), reduce a the foot, or end of, or opposite to, a memorandum referring to such alteration, and written at the end or some other part of the will." . . . The change, therefore, is that a revocation by cancellation or obliteration is not (as before) placed upon the same footing as a revocation by burning or tearing. Obliteration, or other alteration which does not wholly efface the will, is no longer effectual unless executed in manner prescribed for the execution of a will. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *140. See In re Horsford, L. R., 3 P. & D. 211; Hobbs v. Knight, 1 Curt. 779; Stephens v. Taprell, 2 Curt. 458; In re Brewster, 29 L. J. P. 69; In re Fary, 15 Jur. 1114.

Under the statute just set forth, providing that no cancellation or obliteration shall operate as a revocation unless the original writing be wholly effaced, it has been held, in controversies depending upon the effect of cancellation or obliteration, that magnifying glasses may be used to discover what the words obliterated originally were. In re Ibbetson, 2 Curt. 337; Lushington v. Onslow, 6 No. Cas. 187. And see also In re Horsford, L. R., 3 P. & D. 211.

Parol evidence for this purpose is inadmissible, except in those cases where the obliteration was made for the purpose merely of altering the amount of the gift, and not of revoking it, in which cases, there was no intention to revoke except for the purpose of substituting a gift of a different amount. If the latter amount cannot take effect by reason of the substituted words not being properly attested, the former gift will remain good, and evidence will be admitted to show what the original words were. Townley v. Watson, 3 Curt. 761; 8 Jur. 111; 3 No. Cas. 17; Soar v. Dolman, 3 Curt. 121; 6 Jur. 512; Brooke v. Kent, 3 Moo. P. C. 334; 1 No. Cas. 99; In re Ibbetson, 2 Curt. 337; In re Reeve, 13 Jur. 370.

Probate in Blank.—In such a case as that last mentioned, if there is no evidence what the words were which had been substituted by words not properly attested, probate is decreed in blank. In re James, 1 S. & T. 238.

Erasure of Name of Legatee.—It is presumed that where the name of a legatee was obliterated simply for the purpose of substituting another legatee, where such substitution is not properly attested, that parol evidence will be received of the name of the original legatee. As to this question, see Short v. Smith, 4 East 419.

This rule, it appears, has been adopted in reference to the name of an executor. See In re Parr, 1 S. & T. 56; 29 L. J. P. 70; 6 Jur. N. S. 56; In re Harris, 1 S. & T. 536; 29 L. J. P. 79. See also Hale v. Tokelove, 2 Rob. 318; 14 Jur. 817; In re McCabe, L. R., 3 P. & D. 94; In re Bedford, 5 No. Cas. 188. This last case would seem of contradictory import.

While, under the Statute of Victoria, ch. 26, § 20, merely running a pen through a testamentary disposition to a legatee is not sufficient to revoke the legacy, and not to be noticed in probate, such circumstance may nevertheless be not altogether without significance, for where the testator has paid a sum in his lifetime to the legatee, it seems that the fact of the gift being struck out in the will might be received as evidence that the payment was intended to be in satisfaction of the legacy. Twining v. Powell, 2 Coll. 262.

Fac-simile Probate.—The court of probate has in some instances granted a fac-simile probate of a will containing interlineation, showing the parts of the will struck through, and the court of construction has then considered the alteration as made before execution, and therefore effectual. Where this is really so, the duty of the court of probate, at all events since the Judicature Act of 1873, would seem to be to grant probate of the will as altered, in the same way as if the alterations had been referred to in the attestation clause. Gann v. Gregory, 3 De G. M. & G. 777; Shea v. Boshetti, 18 Jur. 614; 23 L. J. Ch. 652; Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 143.

1. Gay v. Gay, 60 Iowa 415. In this case it was held, under the local statute, that canceling the signature did not revoke the will unless the cancellation was witnessed as required. The court, by Day, J., said: "In the Code of 1851 the provisions of our present statute were adopted, as follows: 'Section 1288. Wills can be revoked, in whole or in part, only by being canceled or greater estate to a less, as a fee to a life estate;¹ but cannot convert a smaller estate into a greater, as a life estate into a fee, for destroyed by the act or direction of the testator, with the intention of so revoking them, or by the execution of subsequent wills. Section 1289. When done by cancellation, the revocation must be witnessed in the same manner as the making of a new will.' Revision, §§ 2320, 2321; Code of 1873, §§ 2329 and 2330. When a statute provides the manner in which a will may be revoked, that manner must be pursued. Wright v. Wright, 5 Ind. 391; Runkle v. Gates, 11 Ind. 95; Blanchard v. Blanchard, 32 Vt. 62; Gains v. Gains, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 190; Clingan v. Mitcheltree, 31 Pa. St. 25; Doe v. Harris, 6 Ad. & El. 209; 33 E. C. L. 57. Our statute provides that a will may be revoked, in whole or in part: First. By being destroyed. Second. By being canceled, the cancellation being witnessed in the same manner as the making of a new will. If the scroll drawn over the name of the testator had entirely obliterated the signature, this might have worked a destruction of the will, upon the ground that it had destroyed that without which the will could not exist. See Hobbs v. Knight, 1 Curt. 768; Price v. Powell, 3 H. & N. 341; In re Harris, 3 S. & T. 485; Goods of Gullan, 1 S. & T. 23; In re Coleman, 2 S. & T. 314. In this case, however, the scrolls drawn across the signature of the testator do not obliterate it, nor render it illegible. They do not, therefore, constitute a destruction of the will. See In re Dyer, 5 Jur. 1016; In re Fary, 15 Jur. 1114; In re Brewster, 6 Jur. N. S. 56; Lushington v. Onslow, 12 Jur. 465; Stephens v. Taprell, 2 Curt. 458; In re Beavan, 2 Curt. 369; In re Ibbetson, 2 Curt. 337; In re Horsford, L. R., 3 P. & D. 211. It is insisted by the appellant that, as the statute provides for the partial revocation of a will by its being destroyed, the word destroyed cannot mean annihilated, but is sufficiently answered by what was done in this case. It is apparent, however, that there may be a destruction of a particular part of a will by erasure or complete obliteration, and that, admitting that destroyed does not, as used in the statute, mean annihilated, it does not follow that a will may be destroyed by simply drawing a scroll through the signature. The most that can be said for what was done in the present case is, that it constitutes a cancellation of the signature not rendering it illegible, and, as it was not witnessed in the manner required by section 2330 of the Code, it is inoperative."

1. Swinton v. Bailey, 45 L. J. Exch. 427. In this case a testator, by his will made in 1826, devised his realty to E., her heirs and assigns forever. He subsequently obliterated the words, "her heirs and assigns forever," with pen and ink. It was held (reversing the decision of the Exchequer Division) that the obliteration effected a revocation and not an alteration in the subject-matter of the devise, and that the words obliterated were "a clause" within the meaning of the 6th section of the Statute of Frauds. E. therefore took an estate for life. Cockburn, C. J., said: "Now I quite agree that you cannot alter a will, so as to enlarge the estate of some one else who takes under the will, by striking out words so as to give it the effect of granting a new estate to some one, but when the purpose is simply to revoke and undo something which has been done, and the effect of striking out certain words is to revoke what has been given and no more, it does not seem to me to be brought at all within the mischief contemplated by the act, or to be inconsistent with the terms of the act. That the testator intended to cut down the estate in fee simple, which he had given to his mother, to a life estate, I cannot, looking at the will, entertain the slightest doubt in the world. It is said that this is not a clause, and that consequently, the sixth section having said that a devise shall not be altered except by a certain form of revocation, or by a new writing of a will or codicil, or writing for the purpose of revocation, this is not a clause to which a power of revocation attaches. If it is not, then it is not within the section. But I do not desire to place my judgment upon that narrow ground. I think this is a clause within the section, because, although it is a devise in fee simple by the terms of the will, I think that it is (so far as it is a matter of revocation) divisible into two parts, and that the man who has given the larger estate may revoke the gift to that extent and cut it down to the smaller gift, or devise of an estate for life. And that is all that this man has done here. It may be you cannot add to the will without satisfying the requirements of the second part of the sixth section, but you may, by striking out words, have the effect of revoking, and without militating against the provisions of that statute. You may have a case in which the phraseology of the will is such as that you cannot, by striking out words, effect your purpose. Then your case falls within those instances which Mr. Romer pointed out in his able argument. But here the words are such as that by expunging a portion of them you have the effect of revoking, seeing that an estate in fee simple may be revoked to the extent, not of taking away all the estate, but of taking away that portion of it which is an estate of inheritance. If the phraseology of the will is such, that by striking out certain words, you revoke the estate in fee simple and leave the estate for life standing, I see no reason why that should not be done. That is what I think the testator intended to do, and I think has done. The view taken of the matter in the court below was a mistaken one, especially as it was based on the question of whether this was a 'clause' or not. I think, for all practical purposes of the application of this act, it is a clause and is one therefore which might be revoked."

any alteration which amounts to a new devise requires the will to be re-executed according to the statute.¹

Mellish, L. J., said: "The difference between revocation and alteration seems to me to be this: If what is done simply takes away what was given before, or a part of what was given before, then it is revocation; but if it gives something in addition, or gives something else, then it is more than revocation and cannot be done by mere obliteration. Here it appears to me that it does simply take away something that was given before. It makes the estate less than what it was. It does not give anything which the devisee had not before, because she had an estate for life before. The estate in fee included an estate for life, and she had an estate for life. It simply takes away something which had previously been given. That, to my mind, is a revocation, and it seems to be the intention of the legislature, as far as one can judge from the language they have used, that revocation might be accomplished by simple obliteration without making a new attested will. It appears to me, this does merely amount to a simple revocation, because it simply amounts to taking away a part of the estate which has been before given." This decision was affirmed in the House of Lords, 48 L. J. Exch. 57. But compare next note.

1. Lord Ahanley, in Larkins v. Larkins, 3 Bos. & P. 21; Lovell on Wills 349; Eschbach v. Collins, 61 Md. 478. See Wolf v. Bollinger, 62 Ill. 368. But see Swinton v. Bailey, 48 L. J. 57.

In Eschbach v. Collins, 61 Md. 478, the effect of the erasures was to enlarge the estates of the devisees from life estates to fees. The court held the erasures inoperative, and by Yellott, J., said: "If this was simply a question of revocation its determination would involve a construction of section 302 of article 93 of the Maryland Code of General Laws, which prescribes the mode by which a revocation may be effected. The language of the statute is, 'No devise, in writing of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any clause thereof, shall be revocable,' except in the manner designated. An entire will can thus be revoked, or any clause thereof. What then is a clause? Does it consist of two or three words which, disjoined from the context and transferred to a separate sheet of paper would be devoid of sense or meaning? Do the mere names of two persons constitute a clause? Is not a clause always understood to mean one of the subdivisions of a written or printed document? Is the word ever used in any other sense? Wills are frequently subdivided into a number of clauses. In one the testator may provide for the payment of debts; in another, dispose of his personal property; in a third, devise his real estate; in a fourth, leave legacies; and then there may be a residuary clause. Is it not apparent that the statute has reference to one of these subdivisions of a will when the word clause is used in connection with revocation? It is true that a whole will might be revoked, or any clause thereof, by obliterating all the words necessary to give it meaning. To deprive a will of all meaning would be as effectual

6. Dependent Relative Revocation, or Revocation with a View to Another Disposition.—A revocation made in such immediate contemplation of another disposition as to raise an inference that the testator intended the revocation of the old disposition to depend upon the efficacy of the new, will take effect only in case the new disposition is effectually made;¹ and, therefore, if the will a revocation as if it had been consumed to ashes.

"It is manifest that in the construction of this will a question is encountered which involves something more than mere revocation. The will has not been revoked; it has been altered. It cannot be supposed that when the legislature uses the word 'revocation' it is to be construed to mean mutation. Revocation is certainly not a synonym of alteration. To revoke a testamentary disposition plainly means to annul it; and the revocation of a clause implies the destruction of that clause. In legal contemplation it ceases to exist, and is as inoperative as if it had never been written. It is not necessary that the words erased should be wholly illegible, but the act of the testator must be such as to clearly indicate an intention to expunge the whole clause, so that it shall no longer constitute a subdivision of the will. But when by the obliteration of certain words a different meaning is imparted, there is not a mere revocation. There is something more than the destruction of that which has been antecedently done. There is a transmutation by which a new clause is created. There is another and a distinct testamentary disposition which must be authenticated by the observance of the statutory requirements. The statute, after designating the modes of revocation whereby that, which has already been done, is rendered inoperative by being destroyed, says, in language wholly free from ambiguity, and therefore needing no construction: 'or unless the same be altered by some other will or codicil in writing, signed in the presence of three or four witnesses declaring the same.'

"There can, therefore, be no alteration in a testamentary disposition of real estate, except by an observance of the formalities prescribed by the statute. In the will now to be construed the obliterations, so far from operating as a mere revocation, by destroying the sense of the context, impart to the clause a different and more important significance. Not only does this become apparent, but it is also evident that the construction, which has been contended for, would be productive of the very evils which the legislature intended to provide against. The obliteration of two or three words might wholly change the character of a devise. As aptly illustrated by learned counsel in argument, if the words were 'to my son William I give nothing, and give all my estate to my son John,' the will could be made to read, without the insertion of any additional words, 'to my son William I give all my estate.'

"But, as already intimated, this record does not present a question of revocation. It is clear that the testator did not contemplate an intestacy. He evidently intended to make a testamentary disposition of the whole of his property. It was supposed by the learned judge of the circuit court that he intended by the obliterations to diminish the fee simple estates of Leo and John E. Eschbach to life estates. If such was his purpose he has attempted to make another and a different devise of one-fifth of his whole property. He transfers the legal title, vested in Leo and John E. Eschbach, to trustees, and carves out of the fee simple equitable life estates, with remainders to the children of the life tenants. This is a new will as respects the disposition of the one-fifth of his property. Let it be supposed, by way of illustration, that the entire estate had been devised to Leo in fee simple. How could the testator subsequently vest the legal title in trustees, and create an equitable life estate with remainders? Not certainly by obliterations and interlineations, without attestation or the observance of any of the formalities prescribed by the statute. And is a testamentary disposition of the one-fifth of an estate governed by a different principle? The intention of a testator is only to be regarded when the law sanctions the means which he has adopted to carry it into effect. If what he has done is invalid the intent cannot be respected."

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *135; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 37; Onions

v. Tyrer, 1 P. Wms. 345; Thynne v. Stanlope, 1 Add. 52; Ex p. Ilchester, 7 Ves. Jr. 372; Winsor v. Pratt, 5 J. B. Moore 484; 2 Br. & B. 650; Scott v. Scott, 1 S. & T. 258; Clarkson v. Clarkson, 3 S. & T. 497; Dancer v. Crabb, L. R., 3 P. & D. 98; Clarke v. Scripps, 2 Rob. 563; Laughton v. Atkins, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 543; Stickney v. Hammond, 138 Mass. 116; Sewall v. Robbins, 139 Mass. 164; Stover v. Kendall, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 557; Youse v. Forman, 5 Bush (Ky.) 338; Barksdale v. Barksdale, 12 Leigh (Va.) 535; Pringle v. M'Pherson, 2 Brev. (S. Car.) 279; Jackson v. Holloway, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 394. See Bethel v. Moore, 2 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 311; Means v. Moore, 3 McCord (S. Car.) 282; Semmes v. Semmes, 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 390; Wilbourn v. Shell, 59 Miss. 205; McClure v. McClure, 86 Tenn. 179.

In Ex p. Ilchester, 7 Ves. Jr. 372, Lord Alvanley said: "Where a disposition is made so as to have legal effect, and afterwards another, by which the former would be revoked, but the other substituted, and it is evident that the testator, though using the means of revocation, could not intend it for any other purpose than to give effect to another disposition, though, if it had been a mere revocation, it would have had effect, yet, the object being only to make way for another disposition, if the instrument cannot have that effect, it shall not be a revocation."

Cancellation of a will by drawing lines across it, is an equivocal act; and whether it amounts to a revocation, depends upon the intention with which it was done. This intent may be gathered from contemporaneous acts of the testator; and where he canceled his signature, and afterward signed the will anew, and by a codicil attached referred to it; sealed the whole up together, and deposited it among his valuable papers; the jury may, from these facts, infer that the cancellation was not intended as an absolute revocation, but made with the view to another will, which was afterward abandoned. Bethel v. Moore, 2 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 311.

Clause of Revocation — Effect. — The fact that the later will contains a clause expressly revoking former wills, does not prevent the application of the doctrine, since it must be inferred that the testator intended to revoke former wills for the purpose of giving effect to the new disposition, and if, for want of proper execution of the subsequent will, its defective construction, or other sufficient cause, proper effect cannot be given to it, we are not to suppose that he designed to die intestate. Stickney v. Hammond, 138 Mass. 120. See Powell v. Powell, L. R., 1 P. & D. 209; Onions v. Tyrer, 1 P. Wms. 345; Pringle v. M'Pherson, 2 Brev. (S. Car.) 290; Barksdale v. Barksdale, 12 Leigh (Va.) 535; Rudy v. Ulrich, 69 Pa. St. 183; Peck's Appeal, 50 Conn. 566.

A contrary view seems to have been taken in Hairston v. Hairston, 30 Miss. 276. See further Burns v. Travis, 117 Ind. 45; Barksdale v. Hopkins, 23 Ga. 339.

Subsequent Will Canceled to Set up Prior Will. — Similarly a will canceled in order to set up a prior will, which under the statute of Victoria cannot be so revived, is not thereby revoked. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 38; Powell v. Powell, L. R., 1 P. & D. 209. See Dickinson v. Swatman, 4 S. & T. 205; Eckersley v. Platt, L. R., 1 P. & D. 281; In re Weston, L. R., 1 P. & D. 633.

In Powell v. Powell, L. R., 1 P. & D. 209, a testator executed a will in 1864 revoking all former wills. In 1865 he destroyed this will, saying at the time that he wished to substitute for it a will of 1862, which he held in his hand. It was held that there was no revocation. Sir J. P. Wilde said: "It is not contended that effect could be given by law to this object, but failing that, it is argued that effect ought not to be given to the destruction of the will of 1864 as an act of revocation. I conceive that the doctrine of dependent relative revocation properly applies to facts such as this case involves. This doctrine is based on the principle that all acts by which a testator may physically destroy or mutilate a testamentary instrument are in their nature equivocal. They may be the result of accident, or, if intentional, of various intentions. It is, therefore, necessary in each case to study the act done by the light of the circumstances under which it occurred, and the declarations of the testator with which it may have been accompanied. For unless it be done 'animo revocando' it is no revocation. What, then, if the act of destruction be done with the sole intention of setting up and establishing some other testamentary paper, for which the destruction of the paper in question was only designed to make way? It is intended to be substituted is not made,¹ or from defect of attestation, or other cause, is inoperative, the original will remains in force.² So, where a testator strikes out the name of a devisee or legatee, and at the same time interlines that of another, or substitutes a larger or smaller interest or share for that which he had previously given, if the interlineation is inoperative for want of attestation or other cause, the obliteration will also fail of effect.³

clear that in such case the 'animus revocandi' had only a conditional existence, the condition being the validity of the paper intended to be substituted, and such has been the course of decision in the various cases quoted in argument. But then, it is said, that this method of reasoning has only hitherto been applied to cases in which the destruction of the script has accompanied the execution of the instrument intended in substitution; and that no decided case can be found in which the instrument intended to be established has been a long previously executed paper. But I fail to perceive a distinction in principle between the two cases. For what does it matter whether a testator were to say, 'I tear this will of 1860 because I have this day (1st of January, 1861) executed another designed to replace it,' or, 'I tear this will of 1860 because I desire and expect that the effect of my so doing will be to set up my old will of 1840?' In either case, the revocatory act is based on a condition, which the testator imagines is fulfilled. In both cases the act is referable, not to any abstract intention to revoke, but to an intention to validate another paper; and as in neither case is the sole condition upon which revocation was intended fulfilled, in neither is the 'animus revocandi' present. It is only necessary to add that, in the above observations, it has been assumed that the act of destruction was referable, wholly and solely, to the intention of setting up some other testamentary paper. And such was, I think, upon the evidence given in this case, the reasonable conclusion of fact. Cases may, and probably will, arise in which the intention is either mixed or ambiguous, and such are for future consideration."

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 38; Goods of Eles, 2 S. & T. 600; Goods of Bode, 5 No. Cas. 189. See Youse v. Forman, 5 Bush (Ky.) 338.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *135; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 38; Hyde

v. Mason, Vin. Abr. Devise (R. 2), pl. 17; Com. Rep. 451; Dancer v. Crabb, L. R., 3 P. & D. 209; Pringle v. M'Pherson, 2 Brev. (S. Car.) 279; Stover v. Kendall, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 557; Laughton v. Atkins, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 543; Sewall v. Robbins, 139 Mass. 164; Carpenter v. Miller, 3 W. Va. 174. See Stickney v. Hammond, 138 Mass. 116; Wilbourn v. Shell, 59 Miss. 205.

3. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *135, 142; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 39. See Keike v. Keike, 4 Russ. 435; Locke v. James, 11 M. & W. 901; Brooke v. Kent, 3 Moo. P. C. 334; Soar v. Dolman, 3 Curt. 121; Unison v. Pratt, 2 B. & B. 650; In re Horsford, L. R., 3 P. & D. 211; Goods of Past, 1 S. & T. 56; In re Harris, 1 S. & T. 536; Short v. Smith, 4 East 418; Wolf v. Bollinger, 62 Ill. 374, citing McPherson v. Clark, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 92; Jackson v. Holloway, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 394; Laughton v. Atkins, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 535.

"If there is an erasure simply, without any substitution or interlineation, the doctrine does not apply, even though the erasure may be of part of a legacy—as, for instance, where a legacy of one hundred and fifty pounds is given and the words 'and fifty' are erased. In re Ibbetson, 2 Curt. 337; In re Horsford, 3 P. & D. 211; In re Nelson, 1 R., 6 Eq. 569. The distinction between a case where the words 'one hundred and fifty' are obliterated, and the word 'fifty' is written over them, and a case where the words 'one hundred and,' are obliterated, leaving the word 'fifty,' is somewhat thin. Upon similar principles, when the name of an executor has been obliterated, and another executor substituted after the execution of the will, the name of the original executor will be restored, if it can be shown by external evidence what the name was. The presumption that the testator intended to appoint some executor or other, is a strong one. In re Parr, 29 L. J. P. 70; 6 Jur. N. S. 56; In re Harris, 1 S. & T. 536; 29 L. J. P. 79. It is clear that, where the name of

But a mere intention to make, at some indefinite future time, a new will is not enough to prevent revocation.¹ The better opinion is that the doctrine is inapplicable to cases in which the second a legatee is obliterated, and that of another legatee substituted after execution, and there is no further evidence of intention, no case of dependent relative revocation arises. Under such circumstances, however, a case of dependent relative revocation may be raised by proper evidence. Thus, if it appears from external evidence that a gift has been made to a person only on the supposition by the testator that another person was incapable of taking, and after the execution of the will the name of the first person has been obliterated and the name of the second substituted, the original legatee takes on the ground that he was intended to take in the event of the substituted legatee being incapable of taking. In re McCabe, L. R., 3 P. & D. 94." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 39, 40.

A person, after his will was duly executed, struck out with his pen certain clauses devising to his daughter, adding at the end of his will that the reason was bad treatment on her part. He also attempted to dispose of the property bequeathed to the daughter, by striking out of the residuary clause the words "my children," and inserting "my two sons." It was held that though as a mere revocation pro tanto of the will the cancellation would have been sufficient, the subsequent disposition not being executed in due form, the revocation, being a part of the same intent, must fail also. McPherson v. Clark, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 92.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *135; Wood, V.C., in Williams v. Tyley, 5 Jur. N. S. 35; In re Mitcheson, 32 L. J. P. M. & A. 202; 1 Redf. on Wills (4th ed.) 308. See Banks v. Banks, 65 Mo. 435; Brown v. Thorndike, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 388; Youse v. Forman, 5 Bush (Ky.) 338.

"To bring the case within this doctrine (dependent relative revocation) it must appear that the testator considered the substitution of some valid disposition as part of the act of revocation at the time when the act was done. The mere revocation of a will, followed by a subsequent ineffectual disposition, will not set up the original will if the two acts are not so connected that it can be said the substitution of an effectual disposition was the condition of the revocation of the original will. In re Mitcheson, 32 L. J. P. M. & A. 202; In re Weston, L. R., 1 P. & D. 633; In re Gentry, 3 L. R. P. 80. The point in these cases is not that a revoked will is set up again, if a subsequent disposition is ineffectual, but that the original will is not itself intended to be revoked, unless or until an effectual disposition of the property is made. See Powell v. Powell, L. R., 1 P. & D. 209; In re Weston, L. R., 1 P. & D. 633; Eckersley v. Platt, 1 P. & D. 281." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 37, 38. See Johnson v. Brailsford, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 278; Semmes v. Semmes, 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 388; Hairston v. Hairston, 30 Mis. 305; Barksdale v. Barksdale, 12 Leigh (Va.) 535; Rudy v. Ulrich, 69 Pa. St. 183.

In Dancer v. Crabb, L. R., 3 P. & D. 98, the testatrix, having her will in her hand, dictated the alterations she desired to be made in the first part of it to a friend, who wrote them down. The testatrix, feeling unwell, desired her friend to stop there, and then tore off and burnt so much of her will as had been covered by the memorandum written at her dictation. This memorandum, together with the rest of the will, which contained the residuary clause and the signatures of the testatrix and witnesses and the attestation clause intact, was placed in a desk by the testatrix and locked up, and she believed when she did so that these papers constituted a new will, and were not merely instructions for such a will. It was held that it was a case of dependent relative revocation, a revocation dependent on the papers locked up constituting a new will, and probate was granted of the original will as contained in the portion which remained and the draft of the part which was destroyed. Sir J. Hannen said: "If the testator's act can be interpreted thus, 'Whatever else I may do, I intend to cancel this as my will from this time forth,' the will is revoked; but if his meaning is, 'As I have made a fresh will my old one may now be destroyed,' the old will is not revoked if the new one be not in fact made. I think that the latter form of words correctly expresses the state of disposition is duly executed, but fails through the legal construction of its terms,¹ or the incapacity of the legatee or devisee to take.²

7. Whether an Earlier Will Is Revived by Revoking a Later One.—Where the later of two inconsistent wills was revoked by the testator in his lifetime, it was held by the courts of common law that the earlier will was thereby revived, and, unless afterwards revoked by some subsequent act, came into operation on his decease, whether the later will contained an express clause of revocation or not.³ In the ecclesiastical courts it was held that the revocation of the later will raised no presumption in favor of the revival the testatrix's mind at the time when she tore her will of June, 1865. I may add that I have no doubt that the testatrix attached special importance to the striking out of Mr. Upward's name from her will."

In Banks v. Banks, 65 Mo. 432, a testator, intending to revoke a will, caused it to be burned. He had already prepared and signed a second will making materially different dispositions of the property. At the time of the burning, the second will was not attested, and the testator understood that until attested, it would not be complete. It was subsequently attested, and after the death of the testator, was offered for probate, but was rejected by the probate court. In an action to establish the first will, it was held that the burning operated a complete revocation, and this result was not changed by the fact that the second will never took effect. The court, by Henry, J., said: "In the English cases which we have cited, the alterations in the original wills were in immaterial particulars, and did not indicate any dissatisfaction of the testator with the disposition of the property made by the original wills. Here the disposition which he proposed to make of his property by the will of 1866, was substantially and materially different from that made by the will of 1865, clearly indicating that he was not satisfied with the original will. Here the testator had no impression or opinion that the last will was complete, but had a purpose subsequently to perfect it, and did so. He burned the will expressly to revoke it. We cannot say that he would not have done so, if he had known that the second will would never be completed or probated."

The position that the doctrine of dependent relative revocation is inapplicable, unless the second will was completely executed when the first was destroyed, is not sustained; it would seem upon principle sufficient if the first is canceled in such immediate contemplation of the second as to raise an inference that the testator intended the revocation of the old disposition to depend upon the efficacy of the new, even though the latter be not drawn up. Goods of Applebee, 1 Hagg. 143.

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 398.

2. Tupper v. Tupper, 1 K. & J. 665; Quinn v. Butler, L. R., 6 Eq. 225; Barksdale v. Hopkins, 23 Ga. 342; Hairston v. Hairston, 30 Miss. 304, citing Eggleston v. Speke, 3 Mod. 258; Roper v. Radcliffe, 10 Mod. 230; Ex p. Ilchester, 7 Ves. Jr. 378; Onions v. Tyrer, 1 P. Wms. 345; Ellis v. Smith, 1 Ves. 17.

"But this is a mere distinction of fact and not of principle. It may even be doubted whether it reconciles the cases in fact. See Quinn v. Butler, L. R., 6 Eq. 225. The true theory seems to be, that the doctrine of dependent relative revocation applies equally where the second legatee is incapacitated from taking, provided the case can be brought within the doctrine, or in other words, provided it can be shown that the original legacy was intended to be revoked only in the event of the second taking effect. The mere fact that a legacy is revoked and a different legacy to a different legatee substituted, affords no argument, either in the court of probate or in a court of construction, that the capacity of the second legatee to take was the condition of the revocation of the earlier legacy." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 41.

3. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *135; Goodright v. Glazier, 4 Burr. 2512; Rainier v. Rainier, 1 Jur. 754; Bates v.

of the earlier will, but that the question depended upon the intention of the testator as shown by the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case, and was open to decision either way.¹ The Statute of Victoria abolished the doctrine by expressly providing that no will or codicil, or any part thereof, which shall be in any manner revoked, shall be revived otherwise than by the re-execution thereof, or by a duly executed codicil showing an intention to revive the will.² In several of the states similar statutes exist, under which the revocation of the second will does not

Holman, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 502. See Roper on Revocation 94.

In Harwood v. Goodright, Cowp. 92. Lord Mansfield said: "If a testator makes one will and does not destroy it, though he makes another at any time virtually or expressly revoking the former, if he afterwards destroy the revocation, the first will is still in force and good." See Taylor v. Taylor, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 482; Randall v. Beatty, 31 N. J. Eq. 643.

1. Ustick v. Bawden, 2 Add. 116; Moore v. Moore, 1 Ph. 412; James v. Cohen, 3 Curt. 770; Welch v. Phillips, 1 Moo. P. C. 299; Wilson v. Wilson, 3 Ph. 554.

"The question is not whether the deceased meant to die testate or intestate, but whether he meant to revive the earlier will by the destruction of the later." Sir H. James Fust in James v. Cohen, 3 Curt. 770.

A testator made a will in due form of law, to which he subsequently subjoined a codicil. He then made a second will, and added a postscript to it, by which he "revoked all former wills," and signed the postscript. The second will was canceled by cutting his name out from the body of it, but leaving the postscript with his name subjoined to it. This paper was carefully preserved by the testator, as also his first will. It was held that the postscript to the second will was a substantive revocation of the first will, and that the canceling of the second will did not necessarily cancel the postscript also, so as to set up the first as the will of the testator. Bates v. Holman, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 502.

2. By 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 22, it is enacted, that "No will or codicil, or any part thereof, which shall be in any manner revoked, shall be revived otherwise than by the re-execution thereof, or by a codicil executed in manner hereinbefore required, and showing an intention to revive the same; and when any will or codicil which shall be partly revoked and afterwards wholly revoked shall be revived, such revival shall not extend to so much thereof as shall have been revoked before the revocation of the whole thereof, unless an intention to the contrary shall be shown."

In Rudisill v. Rodes, 29 Gratt. (Va.) 149, the court, by Burks, J., said: "It seems to have been held generally by the common-law courts, that in such a case it was a necessary conclusion of law, admitting of no proof to the contrary, that the former will was revived. This rule was deduced from the nature of the revoking instrument, which is itself revocable and never becomes final and absolute until the death of the testator; and it was considered that the effectual revocation of such instrument restored the former will and left it to operate in like manner and with like effect as if the revoking will had never been executed. Goodright v. Glazier, 4 Burr. 2512; Burtenshaw v. Gilbert, 1 Cowp. 49; Bates v. Holman, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 525; 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 123; 4 Kent's Com. (13th ed.) 531; 1 Redf. on Wills (4th ed.) 374, 375; 1 Tuck. Com. (Book 2) 295; 2 Minor's Inst. 931, 932. On the other hand, in the ecclesiastical courts, the revival or restoration of the former will was made to depend on the intention of the testator, to be gathered from the facts and circumstances of each particular case, and parol evidence was admissible to show the intention. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.), 123, and cases cited in notes on Lawson v. Morrison, 2 Am. Lead. Cas. (5th ed.) 482, 518-523. The effect of the rule in the law courts was to exclude arbitrarily all extrinsic evidence of intention upon the question of revival, and thus oftentimes to set up a will contrary to the intention of the testator; while the rule in the ecclesiastical courts threw the door wide open to the admission of such evidence, and suffered revive the first, unless such intent appear in the terms of the revocation, or the first will be duly republished afterwards.¹ In the absence of such legislation the rule varies greatly in the different states. In Mississippi it has been held that a revocation of a subsequent will does not ipso facto revive a former one expressly or impliedly revoked by the latter.² In Connecticut and South Carolina, it has been held, on the authority of the common-law cases, that the revocation of the later will revives the earlier;³ and in New Jersey and Pennsylvania such seems to be the rule, although the second will contains a clause of revocation.⁴ In Michigan, the intention of the testator to be determined by 'the uncertain testimony of slippery memory.' It was the object of the English statute, by the 22d section, to abrogate both of these rules, which were attended with the mischiefs just indicated, and to establish in their stead a safer rule, by which the intention of the testator would be manifested with more certainty, and be less liable to be defeated by acts and circumstances of an equivocal character."

Construction of Victorian Statute.—The second section of this statute changed the formerly prevailing rule that the revocation of a posterior will revived a former will, which such posterior instrument, if it had remained in force, would have revoked. Nor is it material, in such cases, whether such subsequent will owed its revoking efficacy to an express clause of revocation contained in it, or to mere inconsistency of disposition. Brown v. Brown, 8 El. & Bl. 876; 92 E. C. L. 875; Hale v. Tokelove, 2 Rob. 318; 14 Jur. 817; Boulcott v. Boulcott, 2 Drew. 25.

How Former Will May be Revived.—This statute above referred to permits the resurrection of the former will by one of two means only: Re-execution of the will, or the execution of a codicil having the effect of reviving. Even the destruction of the second will for the express purpose of setting up the first, will not accomplish the desired object, for parol evidence of intention is not admissible to effectuate this end. Major v. Williams, 3 Curt. 432; nom. Major v. Iles, 7 Jur. 219.

1. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2679, and Supp. See also 4 Kent's Com. (13th ed.) 532; Pickens v. Davis, 134 Mass. 256; Rudisill v. Rodes, 29 Gratt. (Va.) 147; Beaumont v. Keim, 50 Mo. 28; Harwell v. Lively, 30 Ga. 315; In re Hodgkinson (1893), P. 339; MacDonell v. Purcell, 23 Can. Supreme Ct. 101.

Compare Matter of Johnston, 69 Hun (N. Y.) 157.

As to effect of destroying a subsequent codicil which revoked a prior will, see Matter of Simpson, 56 How. Pr. (N. Y. Surrogate Ct.) 125.

2. Bohanon v. Walcot, 1 How. (Miss.) 336. See also Harwell v. Lively, 30 Ga. 315.

3. Taylor v. Taylor, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 482; Peck's Appeal, 50 Conn. 562.

4. Randall v. Beatty, 31 N. J. Eq. 643; Flintham v. Bradford, 10 Pa. St. 85; Peck's Appeal, 50 Conn. 562.

In Randall v. Beatty, 31 N. J. Eq. 643, the court said: "The law declares the manner in which a will is to be revoked. It must be by burning, canceling, tearing, or obliterating it by the testator, or in his presence and by his direction and consent, or by a writing executed with the same formalities as a will. No proof of declarations of revocation, made by the testator, will avail. Boylan v. Meeker, 28 N. J. L. 274. The will of 1870 is produced uncanceled. It is admitted that there is no revocatory will or writing extant, but it is alleged that all such instruments subsequently made by the testatrix, have been canceled. The execution of the will of 1873 was not attended or followed by the cancellation of the will of 1870. Notwithstanding the revocatory clause in the will of 1873, the will of 1870 was retained by the testatrix uncanceled, up to the day of her death. The fact that she so kept the will is the most cogent evidence of her intention that it should be revived by the cancellation of the will of 1873."

This view would probably now be taken in Connecticut. Peck's Appeal, 50 Conn. 562.

In Pennsylvania, such is the rule, unless it be clearly proved that the second will was destroyed with a view

Texas, and Massachusetts, if the later will contains a clause revoking former wills, its revocation does not revive the earlier will, in the absence of evidence that such was the testator's intent.¹ In to die intestate. Flintham v. Bradford, 10 Pa. St. 85; Boudinot v. Bradford, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 266.

Thus, where a testator died in 1838, leaving a will dated in 1821, with an unsigned addition; a will dated in 1824, which had been canceled at an uncertain time, and which was inconsistent with the will of 1821; and a will dated in 1835, which did not purport to pass real estate, it was held that the will of 1821, so far as it passed real property then held by the testator, was revived by the cancellation of the will of 1824. Flintham v. Bradford, 10 Pa. St. 82.

A codicil will operate to republish a will, and revoke another made before the codicil and after the will to which it is annexed, unless its effect to do so is negated by the contents of the codicil itself. Neff's Appeal, 48 Pa. St. 501.

1. Scott v. Fink, 45 Mich. 241; Pickens v. Davis, 134 Mass. 252; Hawes v. Nicholas, 72 Tex. 481. But see Williams v. Williams, 142 Mass. 515.

In Scott v. Fink, 45 Mich. 246, the court, by Graves, J., said: "There seems to have been a material distinction, and on good ground, between the state of a former will after a second one merely inconsistent with it, and its state after a second one with a declaration expressly revoking it. In the first case the only chance for the second to operate in revocation of the first, according to the prevalent theories of the courts, was by its coming to a head as an active will, which it could do only by surviving its author. Being the last expression of the decedent, and at the same time practically inconsistent with the prior one, the intent to repeal the first by it was to be implied. In case, however, of its being recalled by the testator in his lifetime, it could not, on the theory referred to, be taken to have had the effect to do away with its predecessor. Being cut off before having its dispositions of property awakened into life, it could have no affirmative operation through its dispositions upon the estate. In the second case the written declaration is express and in plain terms immediate and absolute. It is a verbal act done solemnly and deliberately for present effect, and not an act contemplating that future circumstances are to determine whether after all it shall have any force. It is not a needful ingredient of the will. That is perfect without it. The addition of it is a mode of immediate cancellation of prior wills, and quite as unequivocal and unambiguous as many others within the statute whose meaning is open to no controversy. It operates at once, and does not apply as a mere contingent caveat against the objects at which it is aimed. It revokes them without reserve or qualification. And in case the document with which it is connected is itself revoked, that fact can have no effect as a restoration and republication of former revoked wills."

In Pickens v. Davis, 134 Mass. 256, the court, by Allen, J., said: "The clause of revocation is not necessarily testamentary in its character. It might as well be executed as a separate instrument. The fact that it is inserted in a will does not necessarily show that the testator intended that it should be dependent on the continuance in force of all the other provisions by which his property is disposed of. It is more reasonable and natural to assume that such revocatory clause shows emphatically and conclusively that he has abandoned his former intentions, and substituted therefor a new disposition of his property, which for the present, and unless again modified, shall stand as representing his wishes upon the subject. But when the new plan is in its turn abandoned, and such abandonment is shown by a cancellation of the later will, it by no means follows that his mind reverts to the original scheme. In point of fact, we believe that this would be comparatively seldom found to be true. It is only by an artificial presumption, created originally for the purpose of preventing intestacy, that such a rule of law has ever been held. It does not correctly represent the actual operation of the minds of testators in the majority of instances. The wisdom which has come from experience, in England and in this country, seems to point the other way. In the absence of any statutory provision to the contrary, we are inclined to the opinion that such intention, if proved to Maryland, it has been held that cancellation of a revoking will is prima facie evidence of an intent to revive the previous will, but the presumption may be rebutted by evidence of the circumstances and motives of the testator.¹ In Tennessee the destruction of the second of two inconsistent wills with intent to make a third, does not revive the first, even though no will is made and the first will is found among the testator's valuable papers; for in such case, as the motive for destroying the second will is explained, no presumption in favor of reviving the first can arise.²

8. Will Executed in Duplicate—Destruction or Alteration of One Part.—If a testator who has executed a will in duplicate destroys one part, the presumption is that he meant thereby to revoke the will;³ so an alteration or obliteration in one part has the same have existed at the time of canceling the second will, would give to the act of such cancellation the effect of reviving the former will; and that it would be open to prove such intention by parol evidence. Under the statute of England and of Virginia, and perhaps of other states, such revival cannot be proved in this manner. Major v. Williams, 3 Curt. 432, and Dickinson v. Swatman, 4 S. & T. 205, above cited. Rudisill v. Rodes, 29 Gratt. (Va.) 147. But this results from the express provision of the statute." Compare Williams v. Williams, 142 Mass. 515.

1. Colvin v. Warford, 20 Md. 359.

2. McClure v. McClure, 86 Tenn. 174.

3. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *137; Pemberton v. Pemberton, 13 Ves. Jr. 310; Seymore's Case, 1 P. Wms. 346; Colvin v. Fraser, 2 Hagg. 266; Boughey v. Moreton, 3 Hagg. 191, n. See Hubbard v. Alexander, 3 Ch. Div. 738; Doe v. Strickland, 8 C. B. 724; 65 E. C. L. 722; Crossman v. Crossman, 95 N. Y. 150; O'Neill v. Farr, 1 Rich. (S. Car.) 80; Asinari v. Bangs, 3 Dem. (N. Y.) 385. See also Biggs v. Angus, 3 Dem. (N. Y.) 93.

In Rickards v. Mumford, 2 Ph. 24, Sir J. Nicholl said: "Where a testator has a will in his own custody, and that will cannot be found after his death, the presumption is that he has destroyed it himself—it cannot be presumed that the destruction has taken place by any other person without his knowledge or authority, for that would be presuming a crime. Again, if a testator executes a duplicate and keeps one part himself and deposits the other part with some other person, and the testator voluntarily cancels, or destroys the part in his own custody, it is a revocation of both.

So, also, the act of cancellation, or destruction, is prima facie done animo cancellandi, and a presumptive intention to revoke, till the contrary is shown. The reason is that the act of voluntarily destroying the instrument implies the intention of revoking its whole effect. These positions have frequently been laid down in this court as legal presumptions; but, like all other legal presumptions, they may be repelled by evidence."

So, also, if the testator himself has possession of both, the presumption of revocation holds, though weaker. Pemberton v. Pemberton, 13 Ves. Jr. 310; Goods of Haines, 5 No. Cas. 621. But see Asinari v. Bangs, 3 Dem. (N. Y.) 385.

Furthermore, even if, having both in his possession, he alters one and then destroys that which he has altered, a presumption of revocation, though slight, arises. Pemberton v. Pemberton, 13 Ves. Jr. 310.

"Perhaps, in such a case, the presumption can hardly be said to lean in favor of the revocation at all; for the testator having made alterations in one part, and then canceled the part so altered only, the conclusion would rather seem to be, that he merely intended, by the destruction of that part, to get rid of the alterations, and to restore the will to its original state. And it is observable that, in Roberts v. Round, 3 Hagg. 548, where one of two duplicate wills was found partly mutilated, and the other carefully preserved in the testator's own possession, it was held that the will remained unrevoked. The evidence in Pemberton v. Pemberton, 13 Ves. Jr. 310, as to the intent with which the act of cancellation was done, consisted partly of subsequent effect as if made in both; for the two parts together form (if such be the intention) but one will.¹

9. Where Same Expressions Occur in Both Will and Codicil, and Testator Cancels or Obliterates Them in One Only.—Upon the same principle that the destruction of one part of a duplicate is held to give rise to a presumption that the testator meant thereby to revoke the will, it has been held that where the testator has expressed the same purpose in both will and codicil, and afterwards canceled or obliterated the provision in the codicil, the corresponding provision in the will was also revoked.²

10. Effect of Destroying Will and Leaving Codicil Intact—Revocation of Codicil by Destruction of Will.—Where a testator destroys the will, leaving the codicil intact, if the provisions of the codicil are inseparably blended with those of the will, the act which revokes the will revokes the codicil also; but if the provisions of the codicil are such as to enable it to subsist independently of the will, its validity is not affected by the destruction of the latter.³

declarations of the testator, and these tended rather to favor the revocation than otherwise; but both Lord Eldon and Lord Erskine adverted to the very little weight due to expressions thrown out by testators in conversation with persons, respecting their wills." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *138.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *138; Doe v. Stickland, 8 C. B. 724; 65 E. C. L. 722.

Simultaneous Execution of Duplicates.—It has been held that duplicates need not be executed at the same time. Hubbard v. Alexander, 3 Ch. Div. 738. But see O'Neill v. Farr, 1 Rich. (S. Car.) 80.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *139. Thus, in Utterson v. Utterson, 3 Ves. & B. 122, as stated in 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *138, "a testator, after disposing of the residue of his real and personal property among his children, introduced into the will an interlineation excepting his son J., to whom he gave one shilling. By a codicil (being the fifth), after expressing his disapprobation of the conduct of this son, he declared it to be his determination that he (the son) should have no more of his property than one shilling. It appeared that the testator subsequently became reconciled to his son, and canceled the codicil by drawing his pen across it, but did not strike out the interlineation in his will. This raised the question, whether the canceling of the codicil destroyed the effect of the interlined clause in the will, with reference to some copyhold property; for, as to the freeholds, it was admitted that the interlineation was inoperative, for want of an attestation; and in regard to the personalty, the ecclesiastical court had held the cancellation of the codicil to have canceled the excluding clause in the will; and of this opinion was Sir W. Grant, with respect to the copyholds. 'Even independently of the parol evidence of reconciliation,' he said, 'it seems to me that the act of obliteration speaks as clearly as words could have done a change of intention as to the exclusion, and not merely as to the mode of effecting it. It is the same as if he had said, "this codicil no longer speaks my sentiments; I am no longer dissatisfied with my son, and no longer mean to make any distinction between him and my other children."'"

3. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 400; 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *139; Coppin v. Dillon, 4 Hagg. 361; Medlycott v. Assheton, 2 Add. 229; Tagart v. Squire, 1 Curt. 289. Compare CODICILS, vol. 3, p. 299.

In Medlycott v. Assheton, 2 Add. 230, Sir J. Nicholl said: "A codicil is, prima facie, dependent on the will; and the cancellation of the will is an implied revocation of the codicil. But there have been cases where the codicil has appeared so independent of, and unconnected with, the will, that, under circumstances, the codicil has been established, though the will has been held invalid. It is a question altogether of intention. Consequently, the legal presumption in this case may be repelled,

11. Revocation by Subsequent Will, Codicil, or Other Writing.—A will or codicil may be revoked by a subsequent will, codicil, or other writing, duly executed as required by the governing statute. Although, under the Statute of Frauds,¹ a writing which merely revoked a prior will or codicil need not be executed with the same formality as the will or codicil revoked,² under the Statute of Victoria and corresponding statutes in nearly all the United States, such instrument, whether it be a formal instrument, an informal letter, or a mere memorandum written upon the will or codicil namely, by showing that the testatrix intended the codicil to operate, notwithstanding the revocation of the will."

1. 29 Car. II., ch. 3, §§ 6, 22.

2. "The Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II., ch. 3, § 6, enacts 'that no devise in writing, of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, nor any clause thereof, shall be revocable, otherwise than by some other will or codicil in writing, or other writing declaring the same (or by burning, etc.); but all devises and bequests of lands and tenements shall remain and continue in force (until the same be burnt, etc.); or unless the same be altered by some other will or codicil in writing, or other writing of the deviser, signed in the presence of three or four witnesses declaring the same.' The same statute (section 22) provides 'that no will in writing concerning any goods or chattels or personal estate shall be repealed, nor shall any clause, devise or bequest therein be altered or changed by any words, or will by word of mouth only, except the same be in the life of the testator committed to writing, and after the writing thereof read unto the testator, and allowed by him, and proved to be so done by three witnesses at the least.' Unless these enactments had placed the revocation of wills under positive restrictions, they might have been revoked in the same manner as before, there being no necessary implication that what is required to constitute a valid execution of an instrument is essential to its revocation; on which principle it was held before the Statute of Frauds, that a will required to be in writing by the statute of 34 Hen. VIII., ch. 5, might be revoked by parol. Cranvel v. Sanders, Cro. Jac. 497. See also Ex p. Ilchester, 7 Ves. Jr. 348; Richardson v. Barry, 3 Hagg. 249. Though the Statute of Frauds required that a will which revoked a devise of freehold lands should be attested by the same number of witnesses as a will devising such lands, yet, in some particulars, the prescribed ceremonial differed in the respective instances. Thus, a devising will was required to be subscribed by the witnesses in the testator's presence, which a revoking will was not, and a revoking will was required to be signed by the testator in the presence of the witnesses, while a devising will needed not to be signed in their presence; each, therefore, had a circumstance not common to both. This difference, however (which probably occurred without design), has been attended with little practical effect; for it seldom happens that a testamentary instrument is executed for the mere purpose of revoking a previous will, and if it contain a new disposition, any revoking clause therein will be a nullity, whether the substituted devise takes effect or not, though for widely different reasons in the respective cases. If the devise with which the clause in question is associated be effective, it reduces the latter to silence by rendering it unnecessary, the new devise itself producing the revocation; so that the efficacy of the will as a revoking instrument cannot, in such a case, become a subject of consideration. If, on the other hand, the new devise be ineffectual, on account of the attestation being insufficient for a devising, though sufficient for a revoking, will, the revoking clause becomes inoperative on the principle before noticed, that the revocation is conditional and dependent on the efficacy of the attempted new disposition, and that failing, the revocation also fails; the purpose to revoke being considered to be, not a distinct, independent intention, but subservient to the purpose of making a new disposition of the property; the testator meaning to do the one so far only as he succeeds in effecting the same." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) * 168. See supra, this title, Dependent Relative Revocation, or Revocation with a View to Another Disposition.

itself, must be executed with the same formalities as a dispositive testamentary paper.¹ In regard to wills of personalty, the requirements of the Statute of Frauds were satisfied by the intent to revoke being reduced to writing in the lifetime and by the direction of the testator, though not authenticated by his signature, and hence, a letter addressed by a third person, at the request of the testator, to one who had custody of the will, requesting him to destroy it, was a sufficient revocation although the will was not destroyed.² Under the Statute of Victoria, and corresponding

1. 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 20; Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2673 and Supp. See In re Fraser, L. R., 2 P. & D. 40; Lansing v. Haynes, 95 Mich. 16; Heise v. Heise, 31 Pa. St. 249; Barksdale v. Barksdale, 12 Leigh (Va.) 535; In re Noyes' Will, 61 Vt. 14; Lewis v. Lewis, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 455; Ladd's Will, 60 Wis. 187; Reid v. Borland, 14 Mass. 208; Stickney v. Hammond, 138 Mass. 116; Laughton v. Atkins, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 535; Peck's Appeal, 50 Conn. 562; Nelson v. Public Administrator, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 210. See also Sherry v. Lozier, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 437; DeLafield v. Parish, 1 Redf. (N. Y.) 1; Blanchard v. Blanchard, 32 Vt. 62; Wikoff's Appeal, 15 Pa. St. 281. Compare Witter v. Mott, 2 Conn. 67; Clark v. Eborn, 1 Law Repos. (N. Car.) 91.

A deed from the husband to his wife, and an agreement by which she releases him from all demands made pending a divorce suit, do not constitute an express revocation of mutual wills made by them contemplated by How. (Mich.) Stat., p. 5793, providing that no will shall be revoked except by burning, tearing, canceling, or obliterating it with the intent to revoke, or by some will, codicil, or other writing signed, attested, and subscribed in the manner prescribed for the execution of the will. Lansing v. Haynes, 95 Mich. 16.

Will Revoked by Subsequent Memorandum.—A testator made his will, and then disposed of a portion of his real property. Several years afterward he drew up a paper headed "memorandum of the last will," etc.; he showed it to a third person to be put into form, and was referred to counsel. He lived five months after this time, attended to his business, but never made any alterations in the memorandum, and left the original will, in due form, uncanceled. It was held that "the memorandum of a will," attested by two witnesses, was a sufficient revocation of the former will, so far as it was inconsistent. Arndt v. Arndt, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 256.

In New Jersey and Florida, wills of personal property, and in Maryland, wills of both real and personal property, may be revoked by word of mouth proved by three witnesses to have been reduced to writing in the testator's lifetime, read over to him, and allowed. New Jersey Rev. Stat., Wills 14; Florida Digest, ch. 200, § 3; Maryland Rev. Code, ch. 49, § 6.

So in Tennessee, in regard to wills of both real and personal property, where the oral revocation is proved by two witnesses to have been reduced to writing in the testator's lifetime, read over to him and approved. Tennessee Code, § 3008.

In Illinois and Colorado, it is expressly provided that a duly executed written will shall not be revoked orally. Illinois Rev. Stat., ch. 148, § 17; Colorado Gen. Stat., § 3484.

Whether Such Writing Be Entitled to Probate.—The better opinion seems to be that an informal writing, letter, or memorandum, which merely revokes a former testamentary disposition, is not entitled to probate. In re Fraser, L. R., 2 P. & D. 40. Compare In re Hicks, L. R., 1 P. & D. 683; Laughlin v. Atkins, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 535. Otherwise if the writing is dispositive although in the form of a letter, In re Durance, L. R., 2 P. & D. 406; or expresses a wish that the property may pass as though under intestacy. In re Hicks, L. R., 1 P. & D. 683; Brenchley v. Still, 2 Rob. 164.

2. In Walcott v. Ochterlony, 1 Curt. 588, Sir H. Jenner said: "The Statute of Frauds provides that no will in writing of personal estate shall be repealed, nor any clause or bequest therein altered or changed by any words. Is this a revocation by words? I apprehend not; the deceased did not say, 'I revoke statutes in the United States, such a letter would be inoperative unless duly executed and attested as a testamentary paper.¹ Under both the Statute of Frauds and the Statute of Victoria, it is essential that the writing disclose a present intent to revoke, as distinguished from a mere intimation of a future intent.²

A duly executed will or codicil may operate as a revocation of a prior testamentary instrument, by the effect either of an express clause of revocation, or of an inconsistent disposition of the previously devised property.³ An express clause of revocation, to be my will,' but in effect says, 'Mr. George is in possession of my will; I am not able to destroy it myself, but I desire that he will destroy it;' and this amounted to a present intention absolutely to revoke, which was written down at the time, approved of by the deceased, and by her direction communicated to the person in whose custody the will was; it was an absolute direction to revoke, reduced into writing in the deceased's lifetime. There is nothing in the Statute of Frauds which prevents such revocation having effect, and it is clear that, prior to that statute, a will might be so revoked. Further, the deceased subsequently directed a letter to be written to Mr. George, intimating that she would give her reasons thereafter, and evinced anxiety for a reply to that letter down to the time of her death; there can be no doubt that she died in the intention to revoke the will, and in the belief that it was revoked." See Meredith v. Maunsell, Milw. Ir. Ecc. Rep. 132.

1. See Mundy v. Mundy, 15 N. J. Eq. 291; Tynan v. Paschal, 27 Tex. 302; Hollingshead v. Sturgis, 21 La. Ann. 450. Compare Bohanon v. Walcot, 2 Miss. 336.

In Re Durance, L. R., 2 P. & D. 406, the testator, in a letter addressed to his brother, which was signed by him in the presence of two witnesses, directed his brother to obtain his will and burn it without reading it. It was held that the letter was a writing duly executed, declaring an intention to revoke the will, and administration, with the letter only annexed, was granted to the next of kin to the deceased. The soundness of this position is questionable, since such a request shows that the testator regarded the act of destruction rather than the letter as effective to work the revocation. Tynan v. Paschal, 27 Tex. 303.

In states in which the statute requires the will to be destroyed in the testator's presence, it would seem that such a letter, even if the request were complied with, would be ineffectual. Mundy v. Mundy, 15 N. J. Eq. 291.

2. Burton v. Gowell, Cro. Eliz. 306; Ray v. Walton, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 74; Tynan v. Paschal, 27 Tex. 303.

A memorandum on the will: "This will was canceled this day," duly attested, has been held sufficient. In re Fraser, L. R., 2 P. & D. 40; In re Hicks, L. R., 1 P. & D. 683. But an indorsement on the will: "This will is intended to be altered and will be—time is given" is insufficient. Ray v. Walton, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 74.

3. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *170; Nelson v. McGiffert, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 158. See Reese v. Probate Court, 9 R. I. 434; Jones v. Jones, 2 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 387; Warner v. Warner, 37 Vt. 356; Simmons v. Simmons, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 68; Marston v. Marston, 17 N. H. 503; Deakins v. Hollis, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 311; Belt v. Belt, 1 Har. & McH. (Md.) 409; Johns Hopkins University v. Pinckney, 55 Md. 365; Hamilton's Estate, 74 Pa. St. 69; Burden's Estate, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 130; Heise v. Heise, 31 Pa. St. 246; Price v. Maxwell, 28 Pa. St. 23; Rudy v. Ulrich, 69 Pa. St. 177; Brant v. Willson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 56; Boylan v. Meeker, 28 N. J. L. 274; Smith v. McChesney, 15 N. J. Eq. 359; Den v. Snowhill, 23 N. J. L. 447; Laughton v. Atkins, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 535; Reid v. Borlan, 14 Mass. 208; Colvin v. Warford, 20 Md. 357; Boudinot v. Bradford, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 266; Holley v. Larrabee, 28 Vt. 274; Taylor v. Taylor, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 482; Fisk's Succession, 3 La. Ann. 705; Mercer's Succession, 28 La. Ann. 564; Kelley v. Johnson, 34 Mo. 400; Bobb's Succession, 42 La. Ann. 40; Young v. Sadler, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 531; Kelly v. Richardson (Ala. 1893), 13 So. Rep. 785; Hallyburton v. Carson, 86 N. Car. 290; Hollingshead v. Sturgis, 21 La. Ann. 450; Sturgis v.

Work, 122 Ind. 134; Clarke v. Ransom, 50 Cal. 595; In re Fisher's Will, 4 Wis. 254; Neff's Appeal, 48 Pa. St. 501. Compare Gelbke v. Gelbke, 88 Ala. 427; Derby v. Derby, 4 R. I. 414; Green v. Lane, 1 Busb. Eq. (N. Car.) 102; Howland v. Union Theological Seminary, 5 N. Y. 193; Coster v. Coster, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 111; Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. (U. S.) 400; Homer v. Brown, 16 How. (U. S.) 354; Bosley v. Wyatt, 14 How. (U. S.) 390. Compare Gelbke v. Gelbke, 88 Ala. 427.

Subsequent Inconsistent Disposition.

—Where a specific devise and bequest of a mansion house, with the furniture and the personal property therein, was made in a codicil, and the will to which the codicil was appended had previously directed the mansion, with the other real estate, and the personal property of the testator, house, etc., to be sold by the executor for the payment of debts and legacies, it was held that the codicil, by this devise and bequest, revoked the power to sell, so far as the mansion house and personal property therein specifically given was concerned; the disposition made by the codicil, of the same, being entirely inconsistent with the power and purpose of selling them. Derby v. Derby, 4 R. I. 414.

A testator, by his will, ordered his slaves, consisting of a mother and her children of various ages, to be removed in as short a time as practicable, and with the intent to a permanent settlement in some state or country where emancipation was unrestricted, and there to be entirely emancipated, and also provided for their subsistence and education; and eight years thereafter made a codicil, and republished his will, and gave to trustees a house and lot in Newbern, and certain personal property, including household furniture, and a cow and calf, on trust that they should permit the mother to use, occupy, and enjoy the same during her life, and at her death to surrender up the estate to the other slaves. It was held that this provision indicated a change of mind of the testator, and his intention that the mother should reside on the lot, so as to revoke the provision of the will for her removal; and that as the testator had then shown a disposition to evade the law, as to the mother, it ought to appear by the codicil that he wished the children's fate to be different from hers, or it must be presumed that he intended that they also should remain. Green v. Lane, 1 Busb. Eq. (N. Car.) 102.

A testator, in 1869, executed, in the city of New York, a will, whereby he devised his interest in a house and lot in said city to two cousins. On April 30, 1875, at Nyon, in Switzerland, he executed, in accordance with the laws of this state, a second will whereby, after giving certain legacies to his servant, he devised the remainder of his property, all situated or invested in America, to his natural heirs. The second will did not in express terms revoke the first. It was held that the first will, being inconsistent therewith, was revoked by the second. Ludlum v. Otis, 15 Hun (N. Y.) 410.

Effect Upon Prior Will of Subsequent Imperfect Instrument.

—In Laughton v. Atkins, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 543, Parker, C. J., said: "An instrument intended to be a will, but failing of its effect as such on account of some imperfection in its structure, or for want of due execution, cannot be set up for the purpose of revoking a former will, for this substantial reason, that it cannot be known that the testator intended to revoke his will except for the purpose of substituting the other, and that it would be making the testator die without a will, though it was clearly his design not to do so." See Eccleston v. Spelke, Carth. 79; Limbery v. Mason, Comyns 451; Ex p. Ilchester, 7 Ves. Jr. 348; Hyde v. Hyde, 3 L. J. Ch. 130; Stickney v. Hammond, 138 Mass. 116; Barksdale v. Barksdale, 12 Leigh (Va.) 541; Pringle v. M'Pherson, 2 Brev. (S. Car.) 290; Rudy v. Ulrich, 69 Pa. St. 183. But see Hairston v. Hairston, 30 Miss. 276; Barksdale v. Hopkins, 23 Ga. 339; Burns v. Travis, 117 Ind. 45.

In Heise v. Heise, 31 Pa. St. 246, it was held that the addition of an unexecuted codicil would not revoke a prior will. The court, by Strong, J., said: "The question is not, whether the paper offered for probate contains the whole counsel of the testator, all his intentions at the time of his death, but whether it expressed his whole counsel at the time it was signed. If it did, then the statute declares that it shall continue to speak, until its power has been destroyed in one of the modes which the legislature has designated."

A subsequent will which contains no express clause of revocation, and never becomes operative, does not revoke the prior will, Peck's Appeal, 50 Conn. 562; as where the condition upon which the second will was to take effect failed. Hamilton's Estate, 74 Pa. St. 69; Bradish v. McClellan, 100 Pa. St. 607.

A holographic will is not revoked by the defective execution of a copy, even though the original be destroyed. Wilbourn v. Shell, 59 Miss. 205.

Under the Statute of Frauds, the ecclesiastical courts tried the validity of the second instrument by the same principles by which they determined the validity of other testamentary instruments, and hence a regularly executed testament might be revoked by a subsequent unfinished instrument, although the presumption was always against such construction. See 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *170; Masterman v. Maberley, 2 Hagg. 235; Clark v. Eborn, 2 Murph. (N. Car.) 234; Glasscock v. Smither, 1 Call (Va.) 479.

Distinction Between Revocation of a Gift and of so Much of the Will as Contains the Gift.—"Express revocation may, it seems, be produced in two different modes, having different effects. Thus, if there be a bequest by will to several persons as tenants in common, and by codicil the testator revoke the bequest to one of them, his share will not accrue to the others. Cresswell v. Cheslyn, 2 Eden 123; Humble v. Shore, 7 Hare 247. Compare Shaw v. McMahon, 4 D. & W. 431. This is the ordinary mode. But if the testator revoke so much of his will as contains the gift to one of such persons, here, if the words that remain are sensible per se, and amount without further alteration to a gift of the whole subject to the others, these will take the whole, the will being read as if the revoked words had never been in it. Harris v. Davis, 1 Coll. 416, affords an example of the latter mode. In that case there was first a gift to A and B in common; then, in a subsequent part of the will, a direction that C should take a share with A and B; and afterwards a codicil revoking 'that part written in the will which left' the share to C; and it was held that A and B took the whole. The frame of the will was peculiar, and lent itself easily to this construction. If the words that are left require (as they generally would) some further alteration or addition to make them sensible, the construction will not be made. Sykes v. Sykes, L. R., 4 Eq. 200." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *170.

Where Subsequent Will Is Lost.—Where the subsequent will or codicil, relied upon to revoke a prior testamentary instrument, is lost or missing, its contents must be clearly established by secondary evidence, so that it may appear that it contained a clause of revocation or made an inconsistent disposition. The mere fact that such a will existed without proof of its contents, is sufficient. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 172; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 412. See Seymour v. Nosworthy, Hard. 374; Shaw C. P. 146; Harwood v. Goodright, 2 W. Bl. 987; Cowp. 87; Hitchins v. Bassett, 3 Mod. 203; Shaw C. P. 146; Peck's Appeal, 50 Conn. 562; Nelson v. McGiffert, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 158.

In Cutto v. Gilbert, 9 Moo. P. C. 131, a testator executed a will in 1825, which was found uncanceled at his death, which took place in 1853. In 1852 he executed another testamentary paper, the contents of which were wholly unknown except the circumstance of the paper commencing with the words, "This is the last will and testament." This latter instrument was not forthcoming at his death, but there was no evidence of its destruction. The prerogative court held that the instrument executed in 1852 was not to be considered as a codicil, but as a substantive will, which operated as a revocation of the prior will of 1825, and that under the Statute of Wills, 1 Vict. ch. 26, § 22, the deceased must be considered to have died intestate, as the former will was not revived by the destruction of the latter. It was held on appeal, that the first will was entitled to probate. Dr. Lushington said: "There is not one authority which lays down the proposition that the execution of a subsequent will destroyed animo revocandi by the testator, the contents of which are not known, revokes a prior will. On the contrary, in all the cases where revocation has been held to be effected there has been proof of a difference of disposition. These considerations alone would induce us to doubt the correctness of the judgment in the court below in the case now under consideration, but the very foundation of that judgment appears to us to be unsound; that judgment is mainly based upon the evidence that the latter paper contained the words 'This is my last will and testament.' We are of opinion that these words do not import that the paper contained a different disposition of the property, nor that the mere fact of so calling it could possibly render it effectual, must express an actual and present intent to revoke, as distinguished from a mere intimation of a future intent;¹ and if contained in a codicil to the will, the intent to revoke must be as clear as the original intent to devise, for if there is any doubt as to whether the clause of revocation was intended to include a particular devise, the devise remains unrevoked.² In the absence of an a revocatory instrument. We think that the interpretation put upon these words by Lord Truro, in his judgment in the case of Stoddart v. Grant, 1 Macq. H. L. 171, is the true meaning to be attributed to them. With regard to any auxiliary circumstances in this case, we think that the evidence wholly fails to render any assistance to the case of the respondent. Considering, therefore, that the respondent, upon whom the onus probandi lies, has failed to prove what the law requires, the execution of a subsequent will expressly revoking the former, or of different contents, we must reverse the judgment of the court below and pronounce for the will propounded by Mrs. Cutto." See Freeman v. Freeman, 5 De G. M. & G. 704.

Admission of Subsequent Will as Evidence of Revocation.—An objection to the admission of a will to probate, upon the ground that it has been revoked by a subsequent will, cannot be taken until the subsequent will is put in evidence; and such will cannot be put in evidence until it is admitted to probate. Sewall v. Robbins, 139 Mass. 164; Stickney v. Hammond, 138 Mass. 116.

1. Burton v. Gowell, Cro. Eliz. 306; Cleoburey v. Beckett, 14 Beav. 583.

A testator wrote on his will, "It is my intention at some time to change the tenor of the above will, or rather to make another will, therefore, be it known, if I should die before another will is made, I wish the foregoing to be looked upon as revoked and of no effect." It was held that this was a present revocation. Brown v. Thorndike, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 388.

2. Doe v. Hicks, 8 Bing. 475; 21 E. C. L. 349. See Gelbke v. Gelbke, 88 Ala. 427; Grimball v. Patton, 70 Ala. 626.

See CODICILS, vol. 3, p. 296. In Cleoburey v. Beckett, 14 Beav. 583, a testator devised his real estate to his brother William for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with remainders over; and he bequeathed his residuary personal estate between his nephews and nieces. By a codicil, he revoked his will, so far only as it was altered by the codicil, and he gave to his nephews and nieces, except (as he said) his brother William's children, "who are not intended to take any beneficial interest under his will or this codicil," £1,000 each. It was held that the devise to the children of William was not revoked. Romilly, M. R., said: "The question here is, whether the codicil has revoked the gift contained in the will to the children of William Beckett. One settled rule of construction is, that the gifts contained in the will shall not be affected further than is absolutely necessary, in order to give effect to the gifts contained in the codicil. Now there is not contained in this codicil any gift inconsistent with the gift given by the will to the children of William Beckett. So far, therefore, as the gifts in the codicil are concerned, they do not, in my opinion, affect this question. But although the necessity of giving effect to the bequests contained in the codicil does not make a revocation, there is no question but that the testator may, by his codicil, have expressly revoked any portion of the will; and the question I have to consider is, whether the words 'who are not intended to take any beneficial interest under my will or this codicil' is such a revocation. Another rule of construction to be observed, is laid down in the case of Doe v. Hicks, 8 Bing. 475; 21 E. C. L. 349, in these words, viz.: 'If such devise in the will is clear, it is incumbent on those who contend it is not to take effect, by reason of a revocation in the codicil, to show that the intention to revoke is equally clear and free from doubt as the original intention to devise. For if there is only a reasonable doubt, whether the clause of revocation was intended to include the particular devise, then such devise ought undoubtedly to stand.' Unless, therefore, I can arrive at the conclusion that these words are equivalent to 'I revoke the beneficial interest given to the children of William Beckett in my will,' it cannot amount to revocation.

express clause of revocation, a subsequent will or codicil will not work a total revocation of a prior testamentary paper, unless the two dispositions are plainly so inconsistent as to be incapable of standing together;¹ but in applying the principle, it should be borne in

"Now it is to be observed, that these words are in a parenthesis and form part of an exception out of the class of legatees to take. The gift in the codicil is 'to my nephews and neices now living;' this would have included the children of William Beckett and Emma Ormond and William M. Williams. He accordingly excepts the children of William Beckett and Emma Ormond and William H. Williams; but in the middle of this exception, he uses the words in question. One rule of construction is, that an exception shall be treated only as so much taken out of the original gift, and if so, this cannot be treated as a distinct and separate expression of revocation. I think that those words are meant simply to be descriptive of the children of William Beckett, and do not contain an express revocation in themselves. I am confirmed in this view because the words 'in this codicil' are just as expressive as the words 'under my will,' and yet those words are wholly inoperative. They were introduced, I think, to make a distinction between the children of William Beckett and Emma Ormond and William M. Williams, inasmuch as the latter niece and nephew do take bequests under the codicil, and that those words are introduced, in order to remove any doubt as to the construction arising from the exception of the nephew and niece in one case, and the gifts to some of them in another part of the codicil. The words are themselves extremely ambiguous, except as expressive of construction. It is usual for counsel and judges to say: A. B. is not intended to take any interest under the will, by which is meant simply this, that, according to its true construction, A. B. takes no such interest. If this, therefore, is to be treated simply as an expression by the testator of what he considers to be the effect of the will he had already made, it does not amount to a revocation. If it be treated still more unfavorably to the children of William Beckett, as an expression of the testator to revoke the gifts made to them, it must still be determined, whether it means an intention thereby to revoke, or an intention thereafter to revoke those bequests; an intention thereafter to revoke would clearly be no revocation, both on principle and authority. The result of my opinion is, that, finding by the will clear gifts to the children of William Beckett, and being unable to arrive at the conclusion that the words meant a distinct and present revocation of the bequest so contained in the will, I think that this codicil did not effect any such revocation, and that the children of William Beckett are entitled in like manner as if those words had been omitted from the codicil."

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 407; 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *174; Richards v. Queen's Proctor, 18 Jur. 540; Leslie v. Leslie, 1 R., 6 Eq. 332; Lemage v. Goodban, L. R., 1 P. & D. 57; Stoddart v. Grant, 1 Macq. H. L. 170; Hellier v. Hellier, 9 Prob. Div. 239. See Austin v. Oakes, 117 N. Y. 577; Hard v. Ashley, 117 N. Y. 606; Crozier v. Bray, 120 N. Y. 366; Newcomb v. Webster, 113 N. Y. 191; Brant v. Willson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 56; Nelson v. McGiffert, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 158; Barlow v. Coffin, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 54; Holley v. Larrabee, 28 Vt. 274; Buchanan v. Lloyd, 64 Md. 306; Johns Hopkins University v. Pinckney, 55 Md. 365; Boyle v. Parker, 3 Md. Ch. 42; Price v. Maxwell, 28 Pa. St. 23; Reichard's Appeal, 116 Pa. St. 232; Boudinot v. Bradford, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 266; Rodgers v. Rodgers, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 490; Den v. Vancleve, 5 N. J. L. 589; Grimbail v. Patton, 70 Ala. 626; Vaughan v. Bunch, 53 Miss. 513; Quincy v. Rogers, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 291; Lamb v. Lamb, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 371; Hallyburton v. Carson, 86 N. Car. 290; Lyon v. Fisk, 1 La. Ann. 444; New Orleans v. Fisk, 2 La. Ann. 78; Dawson v. Dawson, 10 Leigh (Va.) 631; Brown v. Cannon, 3 Head (Tenn.) 354.

Where the meaning sought to be attributed to a codicil would be to take away the greatest part of a legacy given in the will, on the day before, to A., and cause an intestacy as to that much of the estate, to a part of which the legatee would be again entitled under the statute, there being no change in the condition of the testator's affairs, and the language of the will being ambiguous, it was held, according to the rules of interpreting such instruments, not to have been the testator's intention to revoke the former legacy. Dalton v. Houston, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 401.

In Conover v. Hoffman, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 429, it was held that a power of sale in a will is not revoked by a different disposition of the estate, made by a codicil, unless there is some inconsistency between the exercise of the power and some part of the codicil.

In Lemage v. Goodban, L. R., 1 P. & D. 57, the testator by his first will made his sister general and residuary legatee. By a subsequent will, purported to be his "last will and testament," he bequeathed to her substantially the same property as he had bequeathed by the general legacy in the first will, but inserted a defective residuary clause. It was held that the residuary bequest was not revoked. Sir J. P. Wilde said: "Cases of the present character are properly questions of construction, and in deciding upon the effect of a subsequent will on former dispositions, this court has to exercise the functions of a court of construction. The principle applicable is well expressed in Mr. Justice Williams' book on Executors. He says: 'The mere fact of making a subsequent testamentary paper, does not work a total revocation of a prior one, unless the latter expressly, or in effect, revokes the former, or the two be incapable of standing together; for though it be a maxim, as Swinburne says above, that as no man can die with two testaments, yet any number of instruments, whatever be their relative date, or in whatever form they may be (so as they be all clearly testamentary), may be admitted to probate, as together containing the last will of the deceased. And if a subsequent testamentary paper be partly inconsistent with one of an earlier date, then such latter instrument will revoke the former, as to those parts only where they are inconsistent.' This passage truly represents the result of the authorities. The will of a man is the aggregate of his testamentary intentions, so far as they are manifested in writing, duly executed according to the statute. And as a will, if contained in one document, may be of several sheets, so it may consist of several independent papers, each so expected. Redundancy or repetition in such independent papers, will no more necessarily vitiate any of them, than similar defects if appearing on the face of a single document. Now, it was argued that in the case of more than one testamentary paper, each professing in form to be the last will of the deceased, it is necessary for the court, before concluding that they together constitute the will, to be satisfied that the testator intended them to operate together as such. In one sense this is true, for the intention of the testator in the matter is the sole guide and control. But the 'intention' to be sought and discovered relates to the disposition of the testator's property, and not to the form of his will. What dispositions did he intend?—not which or what number of papers did he desire or expect to be admitted to probate—is the true question. And so this court has been in the habit of admitting to probate such, and as many, papers (all properly executed) as are necessary to effect the testator's full wishes, and of solving the question of revocation by considering, not what papers have been apparently superseded by the act of executing others, but what dispositions can be collected from the language of all the papers that the testator designed to revoke or to retain. In this case such a task is not difficult. The first paper makes the testator's sister the sole object of bounty, and residuary legatee. The second is to the like general effect; no new object of bounty is introduced, and the sole reason for its execution seems to have been, that the testator's father had died in the interval, and that half a freehold house, and a share of personalty, had devolved on him by that event. These new acquisitions he devises and bequeaths in the same direction. But the residue is not disposed of, the clause apparently intended for that purpose being defective in its language, and not reading sensibly. The court can, however, see thus far into the intent of that clause—that the object of it was the same sister whose name alone appears in both papers. It would not be reasonable, under such circumstances, to conclude that the testator intended to revoke the residuary bequest in the first paper, and as effect can only be given to that disposition by granting probate of the first and second papers, as together constituting the will, the court so decides."

A testator ordered that all his slaves

mind that greater effort will be made to reconcile the provisions of the two instruments where the subsequent instrument purports to be a codicil or is inadequate to the disposition of the entire property, so that a partial intestacy would result from rejecting the prior statement, than where the subsequent instrument is adequate to the disposition of the entire property, and does not profess to be a codicil.¹

should be emancipated, and sent to a country where slavery is not tolerated, if they should elect to be emancipated on these terms, otherwise to be sold, and devised his Belle Air estate to charitable uses. By a codicil, he devised his Belle Air estate to B., for the support of his slaves thereon. It was held, that this codicil created a trust in B. for the support and maintenance of the slaves until they should be emancipated or sold, on the happening of which event his interest ceased; and that the codicil was a revocation of the will only to this extent. Dawson v. Dawson, 10 Leigh (Va.) 631.

Where a testator gave, in the body of his will, a fee simple in a tract of land to F., and by a codicil ordered the land to be sold by his executor, and the proceeds divided among other persons than F., it was held that until the exercise of the power of sale by the executor, the legal estate remained in F., the legatee named in the body of the will. Jenkins v. Maxwell, 7 Jones (N. Car.) 612.

A testator bequeathed his entire estate, with some small exceptions, to his wife for life, with remainder in fee to his two surviving children and the children of a deceased daughter, and by a codicil, executed the same day, after reciting the bequest to his wife, declared that he revoked "the same in part," and then bequeathed the "rents, issues, and profits," of a certain house and lot, immediately after his decease, to his two surviving children, "the same to be applied towards their support and education." It was held that the intent of the testator, manifest upon the face of the will (construing the will and codicil as one instrument), was simply to revoke the bequest to his wife, so far as the house was concerned, and to give the rents and profits of it for her life to his two surviving children, leaving the will after her decease to operate upon it as upon the residuum of his estate. Boyle v. Parker, 3 Md. Ch. 42.

Subsequent Will Described as Last

Will.—The fact that the subsequent instrument is described as the testator's "last will and testament," is entitled to very little weight. Lemage v. Goodban, L. R., 1 P. & D. 57. See Hellier v. Hellier, 9 Prob. Div. 237; Leslie v. Leslie, L. R., 6 Eq. 332; Cutto v. Gilbert, 9 Moo. P. C. 131.

Appointment of Executors.—Nor is the appointment or non-appointment of executors by the subsequent will conclusive. Richards v. Queen's Proctor, 18 Jur. 540; Stoddart v. Grant, 1 Macq. H. L. 163. But see Plenty v. West, 1 Rob. 264.

In the absence of a clause of revocation, if the second will appoints a fresh executor and the wills are consistent, probate may be granted to both executors. Gearns v. Price, 3 S. & T. 71. See In re Leese, 2 S. & T. 442; Goods of Graham, 3 S. & T. 69.

Revocation of Interest of One Devisee Inoperative in Itself as an Enlargement of Interest of Remaining Devisee.—A testator, by his will as originally executed, gave to his brother five hundred shares of certain stock for his life, and after his death to his children as an absolute estate, giving also other shares of the same stock to sundry other legatees; and by a residuary clause of the will he gave all the remaining stock of that kind of which he should die possessed, to the several persons to whom he had before given legacies of the stock, to be divided among them in the proportions in which the legacies of the stock had been given. By a codicil the testator revoked the legacy of five hundred shares to his brother and his children, and gave the shares to another legatee, and by a later codicil revoked all prior legacies to the children of his brother. It was held that the bequest to the brother of the share of the residue of the stock was not revoked, and that the interest which he took under that bequest was a life estate only. Colt v. Colt, 33 Conn. 270; In re Waln's Estate, 156 Pa. St. 194.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *175;

If the subsequent testamentary instrument is only partly inconsistent with one of earlier date, the former instrument is revoked only as to those parts which are inconsistent, and both are entitled to probate.¹ Where both instruments profess to be the last Henfrey v. Henfrey, 2 Curt. 468; Moo. P. C. 29. See Cottrell v. Cottrell, L. R., 2 P. & D. 397; In re Howard, L. R., 1 P. & D. 636; Robertson v. Powell, 2 H. & C. 762; Freeman v. Freeman, Kay 479; 5 De G. M. & G. 704; Lemage v. Goodban, L. R., 1 P. & D. 57; Cookson v. Hancock, 1 Keen 817; Birks v. Birks, 4 S. & T. 23. See Crozier v. Bray, 120 N. Y. 366; Newcomb v. Webster, 113 N. Y. 191; Brant v. Willson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 56; Austin v. Oakes, 117 N. Y. 577; Hard v. Ashley, 117 N. Y. 606; Smith v. McChesney 15 N. J. Eq. 359; Dalton v. Houston, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 401; Vaughan v. Bunch, 53 Miss. 513; Rodgers v. Rodgers, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 490. See CODICILS, vol. 3, p. 296.

In Henfrey v. Henfrey, 4 Moo. P. C. 29, a testator left two substantive wills, each disposing of his entire property. By the first, dated in 1838, he appointed executors, to one of whom he gave the residue of his estate. By the second will, dated in 1839, which contained no revocation of the prior one, he gave the whole of his property to his wife, with the exception of £5, but appointed no executors. It was held affirming the decree of the court below, that the second will operated as a revocation of the first will, and was alone entitled to probate. Dr. Lushington said: "Can two wills, both disposing of the whole property, be included in one probate? Can the will of 1838 be joined in probate with the will of 1839? Such a course would be against the whole practice of the court, and productive of utter confusion and litigation. Sir John Nicholl, in Masterman v. Maberley, 2 Hagg. 236, said: 'Is there any instance where two papers, both complete as to the disposition of personalty, and where the only defect of the second paper is a want of due execution, have been admitted to probate as together containing the last will?' And in that case there was much less objection, for the second set of papers was unexecuted. But it is said that there is no revocation of the appointment of executors, and that the case of Beard v. Beard, 3 Atk. 72, is an authority for the prayer now made; but that case was totally different. In that case there was no revocation of the will, as a will, by any subsequent testamentary paper. The operation of the will was prevented by deed poll; so it might be by bankruptcy, loss, or giving away of property, or death of legatees; but into such facts a court of probate never inquires; it knows nothing but of revocation by subsequent will of the instrument itself, as cancellation; or, before the late statute, marriage of a woman, or marriage and birth of a child. As to the authority from Swinburne, that doctrine has been exploded so far back that it would be difficult to trace it; and the rule stated by Sir J. Nicholl established, viz., that a paper disposing of the whole property, is a revocation in toto of a previous will also disposing of the whole."

1. Lemage v. Goodban, L. R., 1 P. & D. 57; Stoddart v. Grant, 1 Macq. H. L. 163; Hellier v. Hellier, 9 Prob. Div. 237; Richards v. Queen's Proctor, 18 Jur. 540; Holley v. Larrabee, 28 Vt. 274; Marston v. Marston, 17 N. H. 503; Jones v. Jones, 2 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 387; Nelson v. McGiffert, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 158; Brant v. Willson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 56; Robinson v. Smith, 13 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 359; Price v. Maxwell, 28 Pa. St. 23; Johns Hopkins University v. Pinckney, 55 Md. 365; Den v. Snowhill, 23 N. J. L. 447; Fleming v. Fleming, 63 N. Car. 209; Arndt v. Arndt, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 256.

After making her will, the testatrix sold the principal real estate devised, and acquired other real estate. She thereafter executed a codicil which, after providing for beneficiaries named in the will without any reference, however, to it, and also for new beneficiaries, gave all the rest and residue of her estate, real and personal, to certain beneficiaries named. It, by express provision, revoked so much of the will as was inconsistent with the codicil. In an action for the interpretation of the instruments, it was held that all the provisions of the will, save the clause appointing executors, were revoked by the codicil; but that, as said clause remained in force, both instruments were properly admitted to probate. Newcomb v. Webster, 113 N. Y. 191.

will of the deceased, the court, in determining whether one or both are entitled to probate, will be guided by the consideration, not whether the testator intended them both together to form his will, but what dispositions of his property he designed to revoke or to retain.¹ Where inconsistent wills bear the same date or are without date, extrinsic evidence is admissible to show when they were executed.² If nothing can be shown to establish their relative priority, both are held void, and the heir as to realty and the next of kin as to personalty are let in.³ Such result is, however, avoided, if possible, by collecting some consistent scheme of disposition from both instruments.⁴ Duplicate wills, being, in effect, different from copies of the same instrument, are not within the principle, and it is immaterial which is presented for probate.⁵ A mere intimation of an intent to make a new disposition, as where the testator writes on a second will, devising after acquired property, that he intends to dispose of the general residuary estate bequeathed by the first will by codicil, "hereafter to be made," does not work an actual present revocation.⁶ On the other hand, an indorsement upon the will that it is to be considered revoked in case no other will be made, has been held to

A testator made two different provisions in his will for his son A., and said son's children, one of which was a devise of a farm, to executors in trust, to sell the same, and apply the proceeds to the maintenance of said son and his children, the principal to go to A.'s children in a certain event. He subsequently in his lifetime, sold said farm, and then went to the attorney who had drawn up his will, and told him that he wished to provide for the case of selling said farm, by a codicil to his will; and a memorandum was drawn up, containing the wishes of the testator, to the effect that, "instead of the legacy and devise to the children of his son A.," his executors should pay the interest of the sum of three thousand dollars annually, towards the support of him and his family, and after the decease of said son, the principal should go to the latter's children. Said memorandum was never formally executed by the testator. It was held that, if such memorandum was to be taken as a codicil, it had the effect of only providing a substitute for the farm for A., and did not affect any other provision of the will in favor of him and his children. Burhans v. Haswell, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 424.

1. Lemage v. Goodban, L. R., 1 P. & D. 57.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *173.

The watermark on the paper showing the date of manufacture has been sometimes conclusive as to priority. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *173.

3. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *174; Phipps v. Anglesea, 7 Bro. P. C. 443.

4. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *175; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 411.

5. Odenwaelder v. Schorr, 8 Mo. App. 464.

Both need not be produced for probate. Crossman v. Crossman, 95 N. Y. 145.

6. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *171; Thomas v. Evans, 2 East 488. See Griffin v. Griffin, 4 Ves. 197, n.; Ray v. Walton, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 74; Rife's Appeal, 110 Pa. St. 232.

In Thomas v. Evans, 2 East 496, Lawrence, J., said: "The circumstances relied on to show that the subsequent instrument was a revocation of the former are, first, That the testator calls it his last will; to which the true answer was given at the bar, that it is merely a word of form, and he meant no more by it than that it was the last of those instruments which he had executed. Then, secondly, stress is laid on the declaration of his intention to dispose of the rest of his real and personal estate by a codicil thereafter to be made; from whence it is contended that he must have considered all the rest of his property as undisposed of, work a present revocation.¹ To revoke a prior will or codicil, the subsequent testamentary instrument must be perfect in form and execution; but its failure to take effect, not from the infirmity of the instrument, but from the incapacity of the devisee, or other cause, is immaterial.² If the subsequent will or codicil is besides what he had devised in the prior part of the second will. But it would not be inconsistent with the disposition in the first will, if, in speaking of the residue, he had meant to include the same property that he had before devised; for he only says that he intended to dispose of it by a future codicil, and non constat, whether he would make any or what difference in the disposition he had before made. It does not, however, appear that he meant to include the same property in the residuary clause; for he had other property, both real and personal, undisposed of by either of the instruments, namely, his personal property which had lapsed by the death of his mother, and real property purchased by him after the date of his first will, which alone he might have intended to dispose of by a future codicil. In neither case, therefore, is the declaration of such intent inconsistent with the disposition made by the first instrument."

1. Brown v. Thorndike, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 388. Compare Ray v. Walton, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 74; Rife's Appeal, 110 Pa. St. 232.

In Brown v. Thorndike, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 388, a testator wrote on his will, "It is my intention at some future time to alter the tenor of the above will, or rather to make another will; therefore, be it known, if I should die before another will is made, I desire that the foregoing be considered as revoked and of no effect." It was held that this was a present revocation and not the declaration of an intent to revoke by some future act. The court, by Shaw, C. J., said: "It was contended by the counsel for the appellant, that supposing the instrument of revocation to be well executed, still it did not separate as a revocation, because it manifested a future intent to revoke and not an actual revocation. The rule is well settled that the declaration of an intent to revoke by some future act is no actual revocation. Cranvel v. Sanders, Cro. Jac. 497; Thomas v. Evans, 2 East 488. But we think the present case not affected by that rule, because, taken together, the instrument is one of present revocation. The testator begins by stating an intention of altering the tenor of this will, or rather of making a new will, but this is mere inducement to the latter clause, in which he says: 'therefore, be it known, that if I should die before another will is made, I desire that the foregoing be considered as revoked and of no effect.' Taking it in great strictness as hypothetical and conditional, the condition has been complied with; he has died before making another will. But we think it must be construed according to the obvious intent, and according to the subject-matter. If he should make a new will, it is to be presumed that it would embrace the whole subject of his testamentary dispositions, and so would operate as a revocation of the present. If he should die before making a new will, this was to be considered revoked and of no effect, and, of course, in that event he would die intestate. The effect, we think, is this, that 'this will is revoked at all events, and I intend to make a new will, or should I not do so, I prefer to die intestate.' It is to be remarked that the words of revocation are in the present: 'I desire that this will be considered as revoked and of no effect.' It does not declare an intent to revoke; it looks to no future act to be done, to effect such revocation, and in this respect it differs from the cases cited. The instrument written on the will, therefore, must be considered, not as a declaration of an intent to revoke by some future act, but as an actual instrument of present revocation, by which the will in question was legally revoked." Of course, if the words of revocation are inoperative for informality of execution, the intent with which they were written is immaterial. Ladd's Will, 60 Wis. 187.

2. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 406; Frenche's Case, 8 Vin. Abr. Div. O., pl. 4; Roper v. Radcliffe, 10 Mod. 233; Tupper v. Tupper, 1 K. & J. 665; Quinn v. Butler, L. R., 6 Eq. 225; Ladd's Will, 60 Wis. 187; Gossett v. Weatherly, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 46; Price v. Maxwell, 28 Pa. St. 39; Laughton v. Atkins, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 535; Colvin v.

the result of fraud or undue influence, it will not revoke the prior instrument.¹ An express clause of revocation inserted by mistake is inoperative.² So where a testator revokes a devise or bequest in a former will or codicil, and expressly sets forth as his Warford, 20 Md. 394; Hairston v. Hairston, 30 Miss. 276; Reed v. Manning, 30 Miss. 308. See Goods of Gentry, L. R., 3 P. & M. 80. Compare Barksdale v. Hopkins, 23 Ga. 332. See also Hollingshead v. Sturgis, 21 La. Ann. 450.

In Tupper v. Tupper, 1 K. & J. 665, a codicil revoked valid bequests in a will, and bequeathed the property to a fund which was being raised for the purpose of buying land for a charity. It was held that, although the gift by the codicil failed, the revocation nevertheless took effect. Wood, V. C. said: "There is some difficulty in this case, because, although the difference may not be very striking, it is not precisely the case of a gift to an object incompetent to take, but I think that it falls within the principle of the case in which there was a devise to a parish; and that to make a distinction between them would be carrying the refinements, which have gone very far already, farther than would be advisable. I concede that it is very difficult to make a satisfactory distinction between Onions v. Tyrer, 1 P. Wms. 343, and those cases in which the gift fails for want of capacity in the devisee to take. There is this difference, that, in cases like Onions v. Tyrer, 1 P. Wms. 343, the testator is making an instrument which he intends to be effective as a whole, and the law takes away one-half, in the same manner as though it cut off the operative half of the instrument, leaving only the revoking part of the will; and it may be said that it was the intention of the testator that the instrument should operate in an entire and not in a mutilated form; while, in the other cases, where the testator has made certain gifts, which are invalid in law, the instrument is in a sense operative, but the party to take under it is not allowed to receive the benefit. It has been argued that the law does not render the treasurer of a charity absolutely incapable of taking, but only makes void the gift to him in trust for the purposes of this charity; and, therefore, that this part of the will is blotted out; and that makes the case still more like Onions v. Tyrer. I think, however, that though something is to be said for it, that is too fine a distinction to make any real difference between this case and that in which there was a gift to a parish. Although the law would prevent that from taking effect either by deed or will, yet being by will, in which the testator manifested an intention to revoke a previous gift, it was held that the revocation must take effect, although the gift was void. (French's Case, Roll. Abr. 'Devise,' O. 4.) In this case the gift is to a charity, and, regarding the solemn introduction to his will, it is probable that the testator did not intend to withdraw from pious uses the sum which he had set apart for them; but that does not indicate an intention that the legatees whose legacies he revokes should remain recipients of his bounty. He expressly says by the codicil that they shall not receive anything, but that the fund shall be given to another object; and though this latter cannot take it, I cannot speculate on whom he might wish to confer the benefit in such an event. He desired to devote the money to charity generally. The law prevents the particular object which he has designated from taking anything, and I must hold that the revocation remains in force, though the gift by the codicil may be void."

1. Laughton v. Atkins, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 546; O'Neill v. Farr, 1 Rich. (S. Car.) 80; McCarthy v. Bone, 33 Ala. 601.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *172; Powell v. Monchell, 6 Madd. 216.

In Re Oswald, L. R., 3 P. & D. 162, the deceased by her will left a portion of her furniture and household effects to her daughter, and disposed of the residue of her property, appointing trustees and executors. Afterwards she was advised that the bequest to her daughter should be secured to her separate use, and she gave directions that a testamentary paper should be prepared to that effect. The paper thus prepared purported to be her last will and testament, and in addition to a clause to the effect above mentioned, contained one revocatory of all former wills. This paper was executed by the deceased, but was not read over to or by her, and she was not aware that it reason for so doing the existence of a state of facts which turns out to be false, the condition upon which the revocation was to take effect is held to have failed, and the original gift remains unrevoked.¹ But if the testator has not set forth the ground contained such words of revocation. It was held that, as the words of revocation had been introduced per incuriam and without the instructions of the deceased, and their presence there was unknown to the deceased when she executed the will, they ought to be omitted from the probate.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *183; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 410; Campbell v. French, 3 Ves. Jr. 321; Doe v. Evans, 10 Ad. & El. 228; 37 E. C. L. 102; Barclay v. Maskelyne, Johns. 124; Mendinhall's Appeal, 124 Pa. St. 387. See further Goods of Moresby, 1 Hagg. 378; Atty. Gen'l v. Lloyd, 1 Ves. 32; Atty. Gen'l v. Ward, 3 Ves. Jr. 327; Parker v. Nickson, 1 De G. J. & S. 177; Thomas v. Howell, L. R., 18 Eq. 198; In re Taylor's Estate, 22 Ch. Div. 495; Dunham v. Averill, 45 Conn. 61; Hayes v. Hayes, 21 N. J. Eq. 265; Mordecai v. Boylan, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 365; Gifford v. Dyer, 2 R. I. 102; Skipwith v. Cabell, 19 Gratt. (Va.) 784.

In Doe v. Evans, 10 Ad. & El. 228; 37 E. C. L. 102, a testatrix devised lands to L. for life, remainder to his first and other sons and daughters successively in tail. L. died, leaving one son, and one posthumous daughter. The son died. The testatrix, being ignorant of the existence of the daughter, made a codicil, reciting the death of L. without leaving any issue, and devising the land to H., in the same manner as she had before done to L. It was held that the codicil must be construed as a conditional revocation only, and was inoperative as against the daughter of L., though the testatrix, after making the codicil, and two years before she died, had become acquainted with her existence. Williams, J., said: "Now the codicil evidently does not proceed on any change of mind in regard to the original devisee. It only substitutes one devise for another, on the supposition that the first cannot take effect. The condition of revocation fails, because it appears that the party, who was always intended to be benefited, is capable of receiving the benefit intended." Little-dale, J., said: "As to her becoming acquainted with the fact after the codicil was made, this alone cannot set it up; otherwise it might be established by showing that she lived only one day after she knew of the daughter's existence."

Thus, where a will bequeathing specific chattels to A (who was not personally known to the testator) was followed by a codicil reciting (erroneously) that by the will they were bequeathed to B (who was uncle to A and a personal friend of the testator), revoking that bequest on the ground that B was lately dead, and the testator's connection with his family thereby almost null, and bequeathing the same chattels to another family, it was held that the bequest in the will was not revoked by the codicil, and the circumstance, that it might reasonably be doubted whether, if the real effect of the will had been present to the testator's mind, he would not still have disposed of the property differently, was not held to affect this conclusion. Barclay v. Maskelyne, Johns. 124. In this case Wood, V. C., said: "It was argued that 'if there be in a will a clear and express gift of certain property to A, and in a codicil a gift as clear and express of the same property to B, the latter gift passes the property to B; the two bequests being inconsistent, the latest is that to which the court gives effect.' That proposition is true where the bequest in the codicil is made simpliciter; but the question in this case is, whether the bequest in the codicil is made simpliciter, or whether it is not coupled with the introductory part of the codicil, in which the testator states, in plain words, his belief, that by the death of the previous legatee he has now a clear field for the disposal of his property. Leaving out the words as to his connection with the family being now severed, upon which I shall comment presently, it is the simple case of a gift by will of a specific chattel to A, followed by a codicil, in which the testator says: 'Whereas, by my will, I have given a specific chattel to J. S., and J. S. is now dead, now, therefore, I give all that same chattel to B., instead of J. S.' There being, in fact, no gift whatever to J. S., who is dead, upon which the intent to revoke was founded,¹ or has acted upon legal advice or belief only,² or the facts were peculiarly within his knowledge, the principle is inapplicable.³ Words expressing a total revocation may be controlled by a natural implication arising from the circumstances under which the will was made, or the absurdities resulting from giving them an unrestrained construction.⁴

12. Revocation by Alteration of Estate—(See LEGACIES AND DEVISES, vol. 13, p. 100).—At common law it was essential to the validity of a devise of freehold lands that the testator should be seised thereof at the making of the will, and that he should continue so seised without interruption until his decease. If, therefore, a testator, subsequently to his will, by deed aliened lands, which he had disposed of by such will, and afterwards acquired a new freehold estate in the same lands, such newly acquired estate did not pass by the devise, which was necessarily void.⁵ The doctrine applied to a devise of a lease for life, which was afterwards but a gift to B, who is alive at the death of the testator. It is not the simple case of a gift of the same chattel to one person by the will, and to another person by a codicil to the will; it is a gift to one by will, and to another by the codicil, the gift in the codicil being prefaced by a statement that the donee under the will is out of the way, and the field is clear; the object of the gift in the will being at an end, the testator feels himself at liberty to dispose of the property by his codicil to some one else. Other cases might be put, in which the point would be equally clear. Suppose a gift by will to John, and then a codicil reciting 'Whereas I gave that property by my will to Henry, and Henry has displeased me, now I hereby give it to J. S.,' no one could contend that the gift to John was displaced by the codicil. The whole codicil proceeded upon a mistake. A new gift to J. S., standing alone and without any such preface, would have displaced the gift to John; but being prefaced by a recital showing plainly that the new legatee was only substituted because the first legatee was out of the way, cannot deprive the person entitled under the previous instrument."

1. Dunham v. Averill, 45 Conn. 62; Skipwith v. Cabell, 19 Gratt. (Va.) 758; Gifford v. Dyer, 2 R. I. 102.

Evidence dehors the instrument, of the ground upon which the intent was founded, is inadmissible. Gifford v. Dyer, 2 R. I. 102; Skipwith v. Cabell, 19 Gratt. (Va.) 758. But see Goods of Moresby, 1 Hagg. 378.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *183; Atty. Gen'l v. Lloyd, 1 Ves. 35; Atty. Gen'l v. Ward, 3 Ves. Jr. 327; Skipwith v. Cabell, 19 Gratt. (Va.) 785. But see Thomas v. Howell, L. R., 18 Eq. 211; Mendinhall's Appeal, 124 Pa. St. 387.

3. Mendinhall's Appeal, 124 Pa. St. 387. Thus a codicil revoking in express terms a legacy in the will, because the testator had provided the legatees with a permanent home, when in fact he had not so provided, will not be declared inoperative upon the ground of mistake, since the testator must have known whether he had provided such home. Hayes v. Hayes, 21 N. J. Eq. 265. But in Re Taylor's Estate, 22 Ch. Div. 495, it was held that a legatee could dispute an advancement alleged in the will to have been made.

4. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *172; Jones v. Jones, 2 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 387.

As where a testator disposed of all his estate, giving the larger portion to his wife, and a smaller to a daughter, then his only child, and upon the birth of a son, by a codicil declared, "I revoke and make void the said legacy to my wife," and then gave one moiety of it to his son, and made no disposition of the other, it was held that his intention was to revoke the legacy to his wife only for one-half, so as to make her a joint tenant with the son. Jones v. Jones, 2 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 387.

5. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *147.

renewed by the testator,¹ and to a conveyance limited in its purpose, which instantly vested the estate in the testator;² but not to a contingent remainder or executory interest which afterwards vested by the happening of the contingency upon which it was originally limited.³ If the testator, after making the devise, made a lease for life or years, or conveyed the land by deed to the use of himself for life, the remainder to the use of his wife for life, in jointure without disposing of the inheritance, the devise was revoked only pro tanto, and the reversion passed to the devisee, subject to the term or intermediate life estate.⁴ The principle applied to devises of both legal and equitable estates.⁵ A partition between tenants in common or copartners did not revoke a prior devise, provided the conveyance be confined to the object of the partition, merely assuring to the testator, in the lands allotted to him in severalty, an estate precisely correspondent to that which he previously had in the undivided share.⁶ A devise is not revoked in equity by a mortgage in fee; in such case, the mortgagee is considered a trustee for the devisee, and the

See Donohoo v. Lea, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 119; Skerrett v. Burd, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 246; Carter v. Thomas, 4 Me. 314. In other respects the will remained in force. Hawes v. Humphrey, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 350; Carter v. Thomas, 4 Me. 341; Wells v. Wells, 35 Miss. 663.

A testator devised real estate to his wife, but afterward, in his lifetime, disposed of the real estate so devised, his wife joining in the conveyance thereof, and received other lands in exchange, she, as well as the testator, believing the exchange of lands would not alter the will or affect the devise to her except to give her the lot received in exchange, in lieu of the land devised to her. The testator died leaving no real estate except the land received in exchange for the land conveyed, and without having altered his will. Upon a bill in equity filed by the wife against the heirs at law to be declared entitled under the will to all the real estate of which the testator died seised, it was held that the court had no power to correct the mistake of the testator as to the effect of the conveyance, it being a mistake of law, and the bill was dismissed. Gilbert v. Gilbert, 9 Barb. (N.Y.) 532.

1. Marwood v. Turner, 3 P. Wms. 163.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *148; Goodtitle v. Otway, 2 H. Bl. 516; Cave v. Holford, 3 Ves. Jr. 650. See Vawser v. Jeffrey, 16 Ves. Jr. 519; Walker

v. Armstrong, 21 Beav. 284; Power v. Power, 9 Ir. Ch. Rep. 178.

3. Jackson v. Hurlock, Eden 263.

4. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *148. See Hodskinson v. Wood, Cro. Car. 23; Lamb v. Parker, 2 Vern. 495.

5. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *150; Lincoln's Case, Shaw P. C. 154; Pollen v. Huband, 1 Eq. Ab. 412.

6. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 151; Luther v. Kidby, 3 P. Wms. 169, n.; Risley v. Baltinglass, Raym. 240; Webb v. Temple, 1 Freem. 542; Rawlins v. Burgis, 2 Ves. & B. 382; Atty. Gen'l v. Vigor, 8 Ves. Jr. 281. Compare Knollys v. Alcock, 5 Ves. Jr. 648; Phillips v. Turner, 17 Beav. 194.

"The case of partition is always considered a sort of special case. Each party can compel the other to make partition." Lord Eldon in Atty. Gen'l v. Vigor, 8 Ves. Jr. 281.

In Duffel v. Burton, 4 Harr. (Del.) 290, Harrington, J., said: "Such a conveyance by a coparcener or tenant in common, after he had made his will, has been held not to occasion a revocation of the will. The reason of this seems to be that the object of the conveyance is really not to pass title, but to effect a severance of the manner of holding; and the estate to which the will applies being liable to this change, without enlargement or restriction, the will is reasonably to be regarded and held as applying to it in its severed form of holding, as well as when it was held in common."

devisor continues owner as before, subject to the mortgage.¹ So a conveyance in trust to sell to pay debts,² or bankruptcy, does not revoke the will as to any surplus remaining after satisfying the claims of creditors;³ but if the partition, deed of trust, or mortgage conveyance, contain ulterior limitations by which the

1. Kent, Ch., in Livingston v. Livingston, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 155. See 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 157; Perkins v. Walker, 1 Vern. 97; Stubbs v. Houston, 33 Ala. 555; McTaggart v. Thompson, 14 Pa. St. 149; Woolery v. Woolery, 48 Ind. 526.

"It is immaterial whether the testator had the legal estate or was equitable owner only (Jackson v. Parker, Ambl. 687); whether the mortgage conveyance was made by fine, or any other mode of assurance (Rider v. Wager, 2 P. Wms. 334; Jackson v. Parker, Ambl. 687); whether the mortgagee were the devisee himself (Peach v. Phillips, Dick. 538; Baxter v. Dyer, 5 Ves. Jr. 656. Overruling Harkness v. Bayley, Pre. Ch. 514), or a stranger; and whether the estate of the mortgagee were to vest in possession immediately on its execution or not until the death of the mortgagor (Cro. Car. 23)." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *151.

2. Vernon v. Jones, 2 Freem. 117; Temple v. Chandos, 3 Ves. Jr. 685; Livingston v. Livingston, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 148; Jones v. Hartley, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 103. See Clingan v. Mitchelltree, 31 Pa. St. 25.

"Even though it were accompanied by a declaration that the surplus proceeds of the sale should be held in trust for the grantor, his executors and administrators, provided, however, that such conveyance had for its object the payment of debts only; the insertion of a further trust, as the payment of an annuity to the wife of the grantor, would have worked a revocation." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *152; Hodges v. Green, 4 Russ. 28.

It seems that a deed of trust conveying all the property of the grantor to certain persons and their heirs "forever," with warranty; "nevertheless, upon special trust that they shall pay the profits to himself during his life;" concluding with declaring its "true intent and meaning to be that, at his death, everything therein contained between the parties should become null and void;" is a conveyance to the trustees and their heirs, of an estate for the life of the grantor only, and not a revocation of a previous will. Hughes v. Hughes, 2 Munf. (Va.) 209.

In 1841, B. made his will, and devised an estate for life to his wife, from the crops to be raised on the farm on which he then resided. To his son M. he devised a tract of land on which the son resided. To his son R. he devised all the rest and residuary part of the tract or tracts of land of which the testator was in possession, and on which he then (now) resided, and everything (personal) wheresoever found upon the premises, intended to be devised; provided that he, R., should grant unto the testator's widow an ample and comfortable support during her life. To his son M. he gave an estate in trust for his daughter F. In 1844, the testator conveyed his estate in trust to pay debts, and afterwards to pay over to him all moneys which remained in the hands of the trustee, or to reconvey to the testator all such portions of real and personal property as might remain unsold. The trustee sold the entire estate under the deed, and paid the surplus in money, which in fact was the proceeds of the personality, to the executor of the testator. It was held that the executor, after payment of the debts, etc., was bound to pay the balance in his hands to the son R., and that the deed of trust was not a revocation of the will in reference to R.'s interest in the surplus. Shilling v. Shilling, 6 Gill (Md.) 171.

Evidence in Ejectment.—Parol evidence is not admissible in ejectment between the heirs at law of a decedent and a devisee in an alleged will, to prove that a conveyance, made after the date of the will and absolute on its face, was, in fact, made in trust to pay the debts of the grantor, with a resulting interest to him. Jones v. Hartley, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 103.

3. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *151; Charman v. Charman, 14 Ves. Jr. 580.

In Livingston v. Livingston, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 155, Kent, Ch., said: "It is a settled principle in equity, that if a conveyance is only for a partial purpose of introducing a charge, and does not affect the interest of the testator's ownership is varied or modified, it works an absolute and entire revocation.¹

testator beyond that purpose, it is only a partial revocation of the will, and equity will hold the party a trustee, not for the heir, but for the devisees. A devise is not revoked in equity by a mortgage in fee, or a conveyance in fee, for the payment of debts. The mortgagee is a trustee for the devisee, and the donor continues owner as before, subject to the mortgage. So, after a devise, if a conveyance be made in fee, in trust to sell and pay debts, and the surplus of the personal estate to the testator and his executors, and the surplus of the lands to him and his heirs, this is no revocation in equity, and so it has been determined. If, after the debts are paid, the trustee conveys to the testator and his heirs, that is no revocation; and if the estate should descend to the heir, he would be only a trustee for the devisee. This has been held so by Lord Hardwicke and Lord Thurlow; and the principle is settled. So, if the testator dies without taking back the legal estate, equity has only to decide to whom the beneficial interest belongs, and it holds the party a trustee for the devisee, and not for the heir, and directs a conveyance. When the testator, after making his will, conveys his estate in trust for the payment of debts, the estate is still, in contemplation of equity, in him substantially; and though the mode amounts to a revocation at law (for a court of law has nothing to do with the purpose), yet, subject to the debts, he remains, in equity, master of the estate, and the will continues to operate upon his interest. If he calls for a conveyance of the legal estate, his heir is a trustee for the devisee; and if he does not, but dies in the meantime, his trustee holds for the devisee, for his equitable interest still continued. (Harwood v. Oglander, 6 Ves. Jr. 223.) The doctrine thus laid down by Lord Alvanley, may also be collected from a series of other decisions. (Hall v. Dench, 1 Vern. 329; Vernon v. Jones, 2 Vern. 241; Ogle v. Cook, 3 Atk. 746; 2 Bro. 592; Jackson v. Parker, Ambl. 687, and the general observation of Lord Hardwicke, in Parsons v. Freeman, 3 Atk. 748, and in Sparrow v. Hardcastle, 3 Atk. 805; Lord Rosslyn, in Bridges v. Chandos, 2 Ves. Jr. 429.) In the prior case of Williams v. Owens, 2 Ves. Jr. 600, Lord Alvanley had explained, in the same way, the principle, which he shows was evidently established by Lord Hardwicke, in Parsons v. Freeman, 3 Atk. 748, 'that wherever the estate is modified in a manner different from that in which it stood at the time of making the will, it is a revocation; but wherever the testator remains, after a conveyance for a mere particular purpose, as the payment of debts, seized of the same estate, and disposable by the same means, without any fresh modification, there is no revocation.'

Bankruptcy Distinguished from Disseisin.—In Charman v. Charman, 14 Ves. Jr. 584, Sir Wm. Grant said: "The case alluded to of a disseisin has no application. It is not for any partial or limited purpose that a disseisin is made; nor is the disseisor in any sense a trustee for the dissee. Whereas, the bankrupt laws take the property out of the bankrupt only for the purpose of paying his creditors; and from the moment that the debts are paid, the assignees are mere trustees for the bankrupt, and can be called upon to convey to him."

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *153; Tickner v. Tickner, 1 Wils. 309; Kenny v. Sutton, cited in 2 Ves. Jr. 601; Harwood v. Oglander, 6 Ves. Jr. 199; 8 Ves. Jr. 106; Hodges v. Green, 3 Russ. 28. See Briggs v. Walts, 2 Jur. N. S. 1041; Power v. Power, 9 Ir. Ch. Rep. 178.

What Words Will Modify the Ownership.—"What words introduced into the proviso for redemption amount to an indication of intention to change the equitable ownership, so as to revoke a previous devise by the mortgagor, is not clear. The cases abundantly demonstrate that such an intention will not be inferred from equivocal expressions, affording conjecture merely. The deed must distinctly and explicitly show that the estate is to be reconveyed to uses different from those which previously subsisted—a doctrine which seems to agree with the rule establishing that the interests of a husband and wife, joining in a mortgage of land held jure uxoris, are not liable to be varied by the inaccurate terms in which the reconveyance is directed to be made." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *154. See Innes v. Jackson,

16 Ves. Jr. 356; Ruscombe v. Hare, 6 Dow. 1; 2 Bl. N. S. 192; Clark v. Burgh, 2 Colly. 221; Hipkin v. Wilson, 3 De G. & S. 738. Thus, in Brain v. Brain, 6 Madd. 140, as stated in 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *154, "where A, subsequently to his will, by a conveyance by way of security, in consideration of £800 advanced by B, conveyed lands to trustees in fee, upon trust to permit him (A) to enjoy until default of payment; and upon payment of principal and interest, upon trust to reconvey unto and to the use of A, the testator, his heirs and assigns, or unto and to the use of such other person or persons, and for such estate and estates, and to and for such lawful trusts, intents, and purposes, as A, his heirs or assigns, by any deed or deeds, instrument or instruments, in writing under his or their hand or respective hands, should direct, limit, or appoint, clear of all intermediate incumbrances, and, in default of payment, the trustees were empowered to sell. Sir J. Leach, V. C., held that this was a revocation pro tanto only. 'The true question,' his Honor observed, 'is whether by the addition of the words which follow the direction to recovery to the deviser and his heirs, he does, in fact, acquire any new estate or power, or whether these subsequent words do not leave him with the same estate, and the same powers, as he would have had if they had not been used. It is plain that he who has the right to call upon trustees to convey to himself and his heirs, has a right, by any instrument under his hand, to direct the same trustees to convey to the use of any other person, or for any estates and interests, at his pleasure. The authority to make such direction by any deed or instrument under his hand, is the necessary consequence of this conversion of his legal estate into an equitable interest; and the subsequent words are the mere 'expressio eorum quae tacite insunt.' I am of opinion, therefore, that the conveyance in question, being by way of security for money, is a revocation pro tanto only.'"

Conveyance of Legal Estate; No Revocation in Equity.—"Though an absolute conveyance by a person having the equitable ownership only, does, we have seen, under the old law, revoke a prior devise, by analogy to the rule which makes a similar conveyance of the legal estate a revocation at law, yet when the testator merely clothes his equitable title with the legal estate, by taking a conveyance of the latter to himself, or merely changes the trustee, as this produces no alteration in the beneficial ownership, which is the subject of the devise, it leaves such devise unaffected." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *154. See Watts v. Fullarton, cited Dougl. 718; Parsons v. Freeman, 3 Atk. 741; 1 Wils. 308; Dingwell v. Askew, 1 Cox 427; Clough v. Clough, 3 Myl. & K. 206; Seaman v. Woods, 24 Beav. 372.

"If, however, the conveyance does more than vest the legal estate in the testator, and newly modifies his ownership, revocation will, of course, be produced, as it would if the equitable interest separately had been so modified. This question often arose, and, of course, under a will made before 1838, may still arise, where a testator contracted to purchase lands, and in the interval between the contract and the conveyance devised them. In such case, it is clear that if the conveyance be made to the testator, to the usual limitations for preventing dower, viz., to such uses as he shall appoint, and in default, to the use of himself for life, remainder to a trustee for himself during life, with remainder to him (the purchaser), in fee, the devise will be revoked. And the same effect is produced where the conveyance is simply to such uses as the deviser shall appoint, and in default of appointment to him in fee." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *155. See Rawlins v. Burgis, 2 Ves. & B. 382; Plowden v. Hyde, 2 Sim. N. S. 171; 2 De G. M. & G. 684; Schroder v. Schroder, Kay 578; Tickner v. Tickner, cited 1 Wils. 311; 3 Atk. 742; Parsons v. Freeman, 3 Atk. 741; Ward v. Moore, 4 Madd. 195. See further Ballard v. Carter, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 112; Brigham v. Winchester, 1 Met. (Mass.) 390; Swift v. Edson, 5 Conn. 531.

Effect of Contract for Sale After Devise.—"Another obvious case of revocation in equity occurs where the testator devises lands, and then, subsequently to the will, contracts for the sale of them; such a contract, if once obligatory on the testator, will revoke the devise (Mayer v. Gowland, Dick. 563), though it should happen to be rescinded after the testator's decease (Tebbutt v. Voules, 6 Sim. 40), and also, by the better opinion, even though such transaction should have taken place in his lifetime (see Knollys v. Alcock, 7 Ves. Jr. 566; Bennett v. Tankerville, 19 Ves. Jr. 170; Curre v. Bowyer, 5 Beav. 6), supposing, of course, the will to be subject to the old law. Notwithstanding the contract for sale, the legal estate passes under the devise, and the devisee is bound to convey it to the purchaser, in pursuance of the contract. If the devise, which might thus in event become operative upon the legal inheritance, would have the effect of tying up the property in a manner incompatible with the convenient execution of the contract, as by creating limitations in favor of minors or unborn persons, the testator should immediately after the sale execute a codicil, devising the property to trustees, for the purpose of carrying the contract into effect. But if the contract is rescinded or abandoned, either before or after the testator's decease, there is no purchaser to convey to; and the will being revoked, the devisee is a trustee for the heir (see Tebbot v. Voules, 6 Sim. 40). So where a testator devised an estate and then contracted to sell it, but no conveyance was executed, and afterwards the testator repurchased the estate, it was held that the will, once revoked in equity, was not set up again. (Andrew v. Andrew, 8 De G. M. & G. 336. See observations on this case, Sug. R. P. S., p. 361.) 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *160, *161. See further Bosley v. Wyatt, 14 How. (U. S.) 390; Hall v. Bray, 1 N. J. L. 212; Chadwick v. Tatem, 9 Mont. 354. See Donohoo v. Lea, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 119.

Under the Statute of Victoria,¹ and corresponding statutes in the United States, which in effect provide that the will shall speak from the death, and that no conveyance or act subsequent to the execution of the will shall prevent its operation with respect to such estate as the testator may have power to dispose of at his death, the doctrines peculiar to revocation by alteration of estate have ceased to be of practical importance in England and many of the United States.²

13. Change of Condition and Circumstances—(See LEGACIES AND DEVICES, vol. 13, p. 101).—The more generally accepted view seems to be that a change in the testator's condition and circumstances, as the death of his wife or children, or of the objects of his bounty, the increase or decrease of his fortune, or the alienation of his property, will not work a total revocation of the will.³

Marriage Articles.—"Antenuptial articles for a settlement have, of course, the same revoking effect in equity, upon a previous devise of the property agreed to be settled, as a contract to sell. Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.), § 161. See Cotter v. Layer, 2 P. Wms. 624;

Vawser v. Jeffery, 16 Ves. Jr. 519; 2 Sw. 268; Langdon v. Astor, 16 N. Y. 9."

1. 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 23.

2. LEGACIES AND DEVICES, vol. 13, pp. 102, 103. See Prater v. Whittle, 16 S. Car. 40; Wells v. Wells, 35 Miss. 663; Floyd v. Floyd, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 290; Carter v. Thomas, 4 Me. 341; Morey v. Sohler, 63 N. H. 507; Graham v. Burch, 47 Minn. 171; Skerrett v. Burd, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 246; Woolery v. Woolery, 48 Ind. 527; Brush v. Brush, 11 Ohio 291; Blandin v. Blandin, 9 Vt. 210; Livingston v. Livingston, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 148; Taylor v. Kelly, 31 Ala. 59; M'Rainy v. Clarke, 2 Tayl. (N. Car.) 278; Powell v. Powell, 30 Ala. 607; Jones v. Hartley, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 103. Compare Wogan v. Small, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 143; In re Tillman's Estate (Cal. 1892), 31 Pac. Rep. 563. See also Vreeland v. McClelland, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 393; Welsh v. Pounders, 36 Ala. 668.

Conveyance on Ground Rent.—Conveyance in fee of land devised reserving ground rent, revokes the devise. Skerrett v. Burd, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 246.

3. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 427; Graves v. Sheldon, 2 D. Chip. (Vt.) 74; Doe v. Edlin, 4 Ad. & El. 587; 31 E. C. L. 143; Hoitt v. Hoitt, 63 N. H. 475; Morey v. Sohler, 63 N. H. 507; Fellowes v. Allen, 60 N. H. 439; Blandin v. Blandin, 9 Vt. 210; M'Rainy v. Clarke, 2 Tayl. (N. Car.) 278. See Livingston v. Livingston, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 148; Barksdale v. Barksdale, 12 Leigh (Va.) 535; Hughes v. Hughes, 2 Munf. (Va.) 209; Warner v. Beach, 4 Gray (Mass.) 162; Jackson v. Betts, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 208; Sherry v. Lozier, 1

Bradf. (N. Y.) 437; Brown v. Thordike, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 388; Hawes v. Humphrey, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 350; Clark v. Eborn, 2 Murph. (N. Car.) 235; Carter v. Thomas, 4 Me. 341; Bethell v. Moore, 2 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 311; Wells v. Wells, 35 Miss. 663; Verdier v. Verdier, 8 Rich. (S. Car.) 135; Moore v. Spier, 80 Ala. 130; Balliet's Appeal, 14 Pa. St. 451; Epps v. Dean, 28 Ga. 533; Parkhill v. Parkhill, Brayt. (Vt.) 239; Bowen v. Johnson, 6 Ind. 110; Dungan v. Hollins, 4 Md. Ch. 139; Warren v. Taylor, 56 Iowa 182. Compare Garrett v. Dabney, 27 Miss. 335; Young's Appeal, 39 Pa. St. 115.

"No man is presumed to have revoked his testament once made, unless it be proved, insomuch that if a man do live by the space of forty years after he have made his testament, yet is not the testament presumed to be revoked by the course of so long time. And albeit, during the same time his wealth and substance do greatly increase, yet is not the testament presumed to be revoked. And albeit, the testament be in prejudice of such as otherwise were to have the administration of the goods of the deceased, yet all those things occurring, viz., the long time, the increase of the testator's wealth, and the prejudice of such as are to have the administration of the testator's goods, the testament is not presumed to be revoked. And albeit, the testament be made in time of sickness and peril of death, when the testator doth not hope for life, and afterwards the testator recover his health, yet is not the testament revoked by such recovery; or albeit, the testator make his testament by reason of some great journey, yet it is not revoked by the return of the testator." Swinburne, pt. 7, § 15, pl. 2, § 3.

In Clements v. Horn, 44 N. J. Eq. 595, a husband, entitled juri mariti to the proceeds of sale of certain lands, which descended to his wife before 1852 (when the Married Woman's Act was passed), executed a deed of trust, directing the trustee to invest the fund on bond and mortgage, and giving to her the income thereof for life, with a testamentary power of disposing of the principal and its accumulations. After the husband's death she made a will, giving the fund to a subsequent husband. At her request, the trustee, who had previously invested the fund according to the trust deed, bought a house and lot, using the fund to pay therefor, and taking the title in her name, but without any mention of the trust in the deed, and she and her husband occupied the premises until her death. It was held that the will was not revoked by the diversion of the trust fund, nor the fund itself destroyed or lost beyond identification, and that the husband is entitled to have the amount of the fund decreed to be a first lien on the house and lot. Bird, V. C., said: "It seems to me that it would be a very dangerous doctrine to hold that a donee, after the exercise of a power conferred, destroys the operation and effect of the instrument by which the power is exercised, simply because a consent is given to some use or disposition of the funds, which is the object of the power, in a manner not precisely contemplated by the original declaration of trust which gives the power. In this case the only departure or irregularity was in investing the moneys by taking an absolute title in fee for the land, rather than a mortgage; the money, nevertheless, being secured, its identity placed beyond dispute, and the object in nowise indeterminate."

Revocation of a will cannot be implied by law from the birth of a child to the testator, contemplated in the will; the death of the testator's wife, and of another child leaving issue; the testator's insanity for forty years, from soon after the making of the will until his death; and a fourfold increase in the value of his property, so as greatly to change the proportion between the specific legacies given to some children and the shares of other children, who were made residuary legatees. Warner v. Beach, 4 Gray (Mass.) 162. In the above case Shaw, C. J., said: "Our Statute of Wills, in providing that wills should not be revoked unless by canceling or by another will, etc., excepts revocations implied by law from subsequent changes in the condition and circumstances of the testator. Massachusetts Rev. Stat., ch. 62, § 9. What those changes are, the statute does not intimate; it is left to be decided by the general rules of law. . . . The death of the wife in the present case, could have no effect. She had a life interest only, and the death of a devisee is a contingency always in view. The death of a daughter, under any circumstances, could have no such effect; but in the present case her legacy would not lapse, as she left several descendants, who would take it. Massachusetts

Exceptions, to be hereafter considered, exist in the case of subsequent marriage and birth of children.¹

Rev. Stat., ch. 62, § 24. The birth of a posthumous child could have no effect, for his birth was contemplated and provided for by the will; besides, all children not provided for by will, including posthumous children, are provided for by law. Massachusetts Rev. Stat., ch. 62, §§ 21, 22; Bancroft v. Ives, 3 Gray (Mass.) 367. The only other circumstances, intimated as ground of revocation of this will, are the increase in value of the real estate, and the long continued insanity of the testator, which disabled him from altering his will. The former circumstance alone would have no weight; and it is only the great length of time, during which this disability lasted, which appears to give it any plausibility. It is said that a will is ambulatory during the life of the testator because he may at any time alter or change it. If this could be held to mean that he must always have the capacity to revoke, it would follow that any attack of insanity would operate as a revocation, which would prove far too much. And we have no law, no rule or maxim, intimating a distinction in this respect, between the existence of insanity for a longer or shorter period of duration."

New York.—The revised statutes provide that if the provisions of an instrument of conveyance executed by the testator are wholly inconsistent with a previous testamentary disposition of his property, it shall work a revocation. 2 Rev. Stat. 65, § 48. See, as to construction, Walker v. Steers (Supreme Ct.), 14 N. Y. Supp. 398. Compare Nottbeck v. Wilks, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 315.

Pennsylvania.—In Re Cooper's Estate, 4 Pa. St. 88, the court appears to have proceeded upon the principle that a subsequent alienation by the testator, of so much of his property as rendered his scheme of distribution impractical, worked a total revocation of the will. As to the application of the principle, see Marshall v. Marshall, 11 Pa. St. 430; Balliet's Appeal, 14 Pa. St. 457. Compare Wogan v. Small, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 141; Clingan v. Mitcheltree, 31 Pa. St. 25.

Revocation Pro Tanto by Alienation of Estate.—Where a testator devised the south half of certain land, called the "Cook Farm," to B, and the north half to A, and after the execution of the will, and previous to the death of the testator, a portion of said south half was sold to A, under a levy by the collector of taxes, it was held that the alienation of the part sold by the collector was a revocation pro tanto of the will. Borden v. Borden, 2 R. I. 94. Brayton, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in this case said: "A voluntary alienation is ipso facto a revocation to the extent of such alienation. A man cannot dispose of more than he owns, and he is supposed, therefore, conclusively, not to intend to give away the property of another, and if that which, being his own at the time of making his will, he in fact devises, becomes before his death another's, he is presumed to revoke it; and whether it were presumed or not, the title of this other could not be defeated by the will, and such devise would and must be void, or such as it would be if the testator never owned the land." See also Claggett v. Hall, 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 90.

In Marshall v. Marshall, 11 Pa. St. 430, the more extensive meaning was given to the words revocation pro tanto. In that case, it was held that the revocation of a will pro tanto comprises all that part of the will, the execution of which is either entirely destroyed or prevented by alienation, or so far mutilated as to remove from the remnant the impress of the testator's intent. The true test of the extent of the words pro tanto appears to be the intent of the testator as gathered from the act or deed, and the bequests and devises in the will on which it operated. Thus, where a testator devised an estate to B charged with certain legacies, and devised another estate to A charged with other legacies, and before his death, he sold the estate devised to B, and B received a portion of the purchase-money, and after the testator's death paid or tendered all the legacies which he was directed by the will to pay, it was held that the sale of the estate devised to B was not a revocation of the entire will, but was only a revocation pro tanto.

1. See infra, this title, Revocation by Marriage and Birth of Issue.

14. Revocation by Void Conveyance.—At common law, an instrument purporting to be a conveyance, but incapable of taking effect as such, might, nevertheless, operate to revoke a previous devise on the principle that the attempted act of conveyance was inconsistent with the testamentary disposition, and, therefore, though ineffectual to vest the property in the alienee, produced a revocation of the devise. The rule obtained with some exceptions wherever the failure of the conveyance arose from the incapacity of the grantee, or from want of some ceremony essential to the efficacy of the instrument.¹ As, under the Statute of Victoria,² and corresponding statutes in most of the United States,³ an actual conveyance does not produce revocation except so far as it may, by alienating the testator's interest, leave the devise nothing to operate upon, it is obvious that a void or attempted conveyance cannot, under any circumstances, as such, have the effect of revocation, and the doctrine, therefore, has ceased to be of importance in such jurisdictions.⁴

15. Revocation by Marriage and Birth of Issue.—At common law, the will of an unmarried woman was revoked by her subsequent marriage,⁵ and in many states the rule has been expressly sanctioned by

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.), § 166; Beard v. Beard, 3 Atk. 72. See 1 Powell on Devises 584; Montague v. Jefferies, Moore 429, pl. 599; Doe v. Bishop of Dandoff, 2 B. & P. N. R. 404; Shove v. Pincke, 5 T. R. 124; Vawser v. Jeffery, 16 Ves. Jr. 519; Walton v. Walton, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 269.

An exception existed where the conveyance was to charitable uses, and void under 9 Geo. II., ch. 36, on account of the grantor's death within twelve months of the execution. Mathews v. Venables, 9 J. B. Moore 286. Or where the grantor was under legal disabilities. Eilbeck v. Wood, 1 Russ. 564; Lawrence v. Wallis, 2 Bro. C. C. 319. Or the conveyance was void at law for fraud; although if valid at law, even if voidable in equity, it worked a revocation. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *167; Simpson v. Walker, 5 Sim. 1; Hick v. Mors, Ambl. 215.

2. 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 23.

3. LEGACIES AND DEVISES, vol. 13, p. 103.

4. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *167.

5. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *122; Forse's Case, 4 Rep. 81; Doe v. Staple, 2 T. R. 695; Cotter v. Laver, 2 P. Wms. 624; Hodsdon v. Lloyd, 2 Bro. C. C. 534; Long v. Alfred, 3 Add. 48. The doctrine seems to have been based upon the theory that as an unmarried woman could not modify the will after coverture it ceased to be ambulatory, and could not therefore be relied upon as representing her wishes. See Lord Kenyon's observations in Doe v. Staple, 2 T. R. 695; Morton v. Onion, 45 Vt. 145; Carey's Estate, 49 Vt. 236.

Where Power of Disposing of Separate Property Is Preserved by Antenuptial Agreement.—Since an unmarried woman's will was held to be revoked by her subsequent marriage, upon the ground that coverture destroyed her testamentary capacity, and the instrument ceased to be revocable, it was held that where her powers of disposing of her separate property was preserved by an antenuptial agreement, her will previously made was not revoked by such marriage. Cassady, J., in Ward's Will, 70 Wis. 255, citing 1 Sugd. Powers 182-190; Wright v. Englefield, Ambl. 468; Rippon v. Dawding, 2 Ambl. 565; Rich v. Beaumont, 6 Bro. P. C. 152; Churchill v. Dibben, 2 Kevy., pt. 2, p. 82; Logan v. Bell, 1 C. B. 872; 50 E. C. L. 872; Doe v. Bird, 2 N. & M. 679; Downs v. Timperon, 4 Russ. 334; Dillon v. Grace, 2 Sch. & Lef. 456. To the same effect see Stewart v. Mulholland, 88 Ky. 38. See also Osgood v. Bliss, 141 Mass. 474. But compare Nutt v. Norton, 142 Mass. 242. Compare Morton v. Onion, 45 Vt. 145.

In Lant's Appeal, 95 Pa. St. 279, a woman in contemplation of marriage obtained from her intended husband his verbal consent that she should dispose of her property by will or otherwise as she pleased. The day before her marriage she executed a will whereby she made a liberal provision for her husband, and gave the residue of her estate to relatives, friends, and charities. It was held that while said will was revoked by her subsequent marriage, by reason of the Act of April 8, 1833, it might, nevertheless, take effect in equity as an antenuptial settlement, and that on every principle of equitable estoppel, the husband's mouth ought to be shut from interposing an objection to its full enforcement. The court, by Sharswood, C. J., said: "There are some matters involved in this controversy which must be assumed, if not conceded, as not in dispute. First, that the instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of Elizabeth M. Dunn, dated February 8, 1876, cannot take effect as a will, having been revoked by her marriage with the appellee on the following day. Probate of it was refused by the tribunal having exclusive jurisdiction as far as personal property is concerned, and its decree unappealed from is conclusive. Second, this revocation was by the positive provision of the statute April 8, 1833, § 14, Pamph. L. 250: 'A will executed by a single woman shall be deemed revoked by her subsequent marriage.' This law was not known to her, and not adverted to by her counsel called in by her to give his advice and prepare the instrument.

"It was certainly not thought by her that such a result would follow. She did not mean it to be revoked by her marriage. On the contrary, both she and her counsel meant to make a disposition which would be effectual after her marriage which was to be celebrated within twenty-four hours after the paper was executed. The execution of the will at the time and under the circumstances was a plain mistake. Had it been postponed only a few hours, until after the marriage ceremony was performed, it would have been a valid and effectual disposition of her property. Third, there was a contract made by John A. Mullen, the intended husband, at or about the time the instrument was executed, by which she was to have the power 'to dispose of her fortune, by will or otherwise, any way she pleased.' That this was the contract is established by the most conclusive testimony, confirmed by the admission of the husband afterwards, who put his refusal to give effect to it, not on the ground that he had not freely and fairly so agreed, but that because it was not in writing he was not bound by it. In this he was mistaken, for a parol antenuptial contract such as this, being in consideration of marriage, which is a valuable one, is unquestionably binding on the parties. Gackenback v. Brouse, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 546. That he knew and considered, at the time the instrument in question was executed, that it was intended to carry out and give effect to his antenuptial agreement, is proved by the clearest and most convincing evidence. If, as it has been earnestly contended, the decree of the court below must be affirmed, and the entire personal estate of the decedent awarded to the appellee, then it is not to be disputed that there must be some palpable defect in equitable jurisdiction in this commonwealth, to render necessary so gross an injustice, so revolting to the moral sense of what is right and wrong. We think, however, that fortunately there are two very familiar and well settled principles of equity often recognized and applied by our courts which prevent such a result. One of these principles is, that whatever a chancellor on the facts of a case would have decreed to be done, the courts, will consider as having actually been done. Another principle is, that wherever a person has the legal right to dispose of property and means to do so, the form of the instrument adopted for the purpose, if at law ineffectual, will be disregarded, and it will be reformed so as to be made effectual. Suppose then, that at the time the paper of February 8, 1876, was executed by Elizabeth M. Dunn, she had filed a bill in equity setting forth the antenuptial contract made by John A. Mullen, and the marriage about to be solemnized, and praying that it might be carried into execution by some instrument of writing to be signed by him, what would have been the decree of the court? Surely, upon the undisputed facts, the prayer of the bill would have been granted, and the decree would have been either that the husband and wife should join in a conveyance to trustees in trust for the separate use of the wife, with full power in her to dispose of the same in lifetime by sale or gift, and after her death by a will in statute.¹ On the other hand, at common law, the will of an unmarried man was not revoked by his subsequent marriage, probably on the ground that the law had made a provision for the wife writing, or any writing in the nature of a last will and testament. Such is the ordinary form of such powers in marriage settlements. If the complainant was willing, the court might decree simply that the husband himself should execute a declaration of trust to the same effect. Nothing is better settled than that a court of equity, in decreeing the specific performance of marriage articles, will make such a decree as will give full effect to the intention of the parties, without regard to the legal construction of the words used in them. Thus, if by the words, according to their legal construction, a fee-tail would be vested in the parties or either of them, a strict settlement will be decreed to the husband or husband and wife for life, with remainders to the children of the marriage—successively in tail—according to the most approved forms of deeds of marriage settlement. 2 Story's Eq. Jur. (13th ed.), § 983, and authorities there cited. Now if we are to consider as having actually been done what a chancellor would have decreed to be done, then we have at the time of the execution of the paper of February 8, 1876, either a conveyance to a trustee or a declaration executed by the husband to the same effect. Surely, then, under such a declaration or deed of settlement, this paper, though ineffectual as a will under the statute, was still a writing in the nature of a last will and testament, a clause introduced into such powers for the very purpose of providing against mere technical objection, which would prevent the instrument from being admitted to probate as a will. It was a disposition of property to take effect at death if not revoked by the party during life. That is a writing in the nature of a last will and testament. This paper was so intended beyond all question. It was executed under, and in pursuance of, the contract on the eve of the marriage—indeed it might almost be said to have been, in the consideration of equity, cotemporaneous with the ceremony—executed for the express purpose, with the knowledge and consent of John A. Mullen, of having just the effect here stated. It makes most liberal provision for him, and upon every principle of equitable estoppel his mouth ought to be shut from interposing an objection to its full enforcement.

"The case, too, is equally within the second principle of equity adverted to; a paper executed by a person who had a perfect legal right to dispose of her property, and intended to do so, but by a plain mistake of the scrivener it was drawn in the form of a will when it ought to have been a deed or declaration of trust. Surely, it must be in the power of a court of equity in this commonwealth to correct so gross and palpable a mistake, to reform the instrument and decree it to be such as it ought to have been, so as effectually to carry out the intentions of the parties." Compare McAnnulty v. McAnnulty, 120 Ill. 26.

Wills Under Powers.—Exceptions existed in the case of a will which operated as an appointment under a power. Logan v. Bell, 1 C. B. 872; 50 E. C. L. 872. See Doe v. Staple, 2 T. R. 695; Douglas v. Cooper, 3 Myl. & K. 378.

In Osgood v. Bliss, 141 Mass. 477, Allen, J., said: "The reason given for holding that marriage is deemed to be a revocation of a woman's will—that she thereby divests herself of the power of revoking it, and destroys the ambulatory character necessary to a will—does not apply to an appointment by will. The woman has the same authority to execute the power of revocation and appointment when married as when sole. The nature, and not the form, of the instrument determines whether, at common law or under statutes, it is a will of which marriage is a revocation." See McMahon v. Allen, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 519.

1. See the various state statutes. See Crum v. Sawyer, 132 Ill. 457; Duryea v. Duryea, 85 Ill. 41; Ellis v. Darden, 86 Ga. 368; Swan v. Hammond, 138 Mass. 45; Blodgett v. Moore, 141 Mass. 75; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369; Matter of Davis' Estate, 1 Tuck. (N. Y.) 107; Lathrop v. Dunlop, 14 Hun (N. Y.) 213.

Remarriage of Widow.—A widow is an unmarried woman within the statute. Matter of Kauffman's Will (Supreme Ct.), 16 N. Y. Supp. 113; Blodgett v. Moore, 141 Mass. 75.

independently of the act of the husband, by means of dower; nor did the subsequent birth of a child revoke a will made after marriage, since a married testator must be supposed to have had such an event in contemplation.¹ But where the whole, or at least

If a testator's circumstances be so altered that new moral testamentary duties have accrued to him subsequent to the date of the will, such as may be presumed to produce a change of intentions, this will amount to an implied revocation, except as to persons who could gain nothing by a revocation or whose remedy is perfect without it; and therefore, where a will was made by a testatrix under special power contained in articles of marriage settlement, and a son is born to her thereafter, it will be revoked by operation of law, so far as regards the son. Young's Appeal, 39 Pa. St. 115.

Ohio.—It is expressly provided that the will of an unmarried woman is not revoked by her subsequent marriage. Ohio Rev. Stat. (1880), § 5958.

Effect of Husband's Death.—At common law the husband's subsequent death did not revive the will. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *122; Long v. Aldred, 3 Add. 48; and such is the statutory rule in Pennsylvania, California, Dakota, Montana and Nevada. Purd. Dig., tit. "Wills," par. 19; California Civ. Code, § 6300; Dakota Civ. Code, § 709; Montana Prob. Code, § 460; Nevada Comp. Laws, § 822; Stimson's Am. Stat. Laws, § 2676.

Under the statute, a woman's subsequent marriage revokes her prior will without regard to her intention. Hence, the fact that the will was made in contemplation of the marriage, and left the property to the intended husband, does not prevent its being revoked. Fransen's Will, 26 Pa. St. 202; Walker v. Hall, 34 Pa. St. 488. Compare Stewart v. Mulholland, 88 Ky. 38; Lant's Appeal, 95 Pa. St. 279.

1. Hoitt v. Hoitt, 63 N. H. 475.

Rhode Island.—Under the Rhode Island statute, revocation of a will by marriage is presumptive only, not absolute, and evidence of the acts of the testator, and circumstances showing clearly an intention that the will shall stand, ought to be admitted. Wheeler v. Wheeler, 1 R. I. 364; Miller v. Phillips, 9 R. I. 141.

Thus, where a testator, having children by a former marriage, in contemplation of a second marriage, conveyed his real property in trust for his children, or for such uses as he should, by will, appoint, and his intended wife released in the said conveyance all claim of dower in said estate, and, on the same day, the said intended wife made a conveyance of her property in trust for her heirs, and the testator released all claim, as future husband, thereto, and on the following day the testator made his will and two days thereafter the parties married, it was held that the will was not revoked by the marriage. Wheeler v. Wheeler, 1 R. I. 364.

In Georgia, the will is revoked unless made in contemplation of marriage. Ellis v. Darden, 86 Ga. 368.

In Indiana, the rule of the common law, that the mere marriage of a man, after he has made a will, does not revoke the will, is not changed by statute. So where the testator had an illegitimate son, and had taken, raised, and provided for him, and made a will devising all his property to him, and afterward married, but had no child by the marriage, and died without legitimate issue, it was held that the marriage did not revoke the will. Bowers v. Bowers, 53 Ind. 430.

Effect of Legislation Conferring Testamentary Capacity Upon Married Women.—In several states it has been held that unless it is provided by statute that the will shall be revoked by a subsequent marriage, legislation conferring testamentary capacity upon married women has abrogated the common-law doctrine. In re Tuller's Will, 79 Ill. 99; Webb v. Jones, 36 N. J. Eq. 163; Noyes v. Southworth, 55 Mich. 173; Ward's Will, 70 Wis. 251; Emery, Appellant, 81 Me. 275. Compare Morton v. Onion, 45 Vt. 145; In re Carey's Estate, 49 Vt. 236.

In Noyes v. Southworth, 55 Mich. 174, the court, by Campbell, J., said: "Laying aside such decisions as are made under statutes, the only foundation which has been suggested for holding a woman's marriage to operate as an implied revocation, is the common-law rule to that effect, which was based on the effect of marriage on a woman's property and testamentary capacity."

By marriage, her personalty devolved on her husband, and left nothing for a will to operate on, unless, possibly, such rights in action as should not be reduced to possession during coverture. So it was further held that she could make no testamentary provisions during coverture relating to her own property, without her husband's concurrence, and this would prevent a revocation, as well as any other testamentary act; and a will cannot be recognized which is not subject to revocation by the testator. These were reasons enough to maintain the common-law doctrine. And the exceptions show that these were the only reasons, for they only extended to wills under powers of appointment, and devises which were suspended during coverture and revived by the husband's death. These doctrines are elementary, and a general reference to the authorities cited on the argument will suffice. See, especially for the old doctrine, Forse's Case, 4 Rep. 61, and notes to modern editions, and the reference to Plowden 343; also 4 Kent's Com. (13th ed.) 523-527. Our constitution has done away with all the disabilities of coverture on this head, and expressly authorized every married woman to make wills of her estate as if she were sole. This leaves her case to be governed by the same rule which would apply to anyone else on change of condition. Apart from some decisions based on statutory or peculiar local usages, the doctrine is quite uniform that marriage alone, without birth of issue, will not revoke a man's will. It may be doubtful whether, under our statutes concerning children born subsequently, the birth of issue would have the same significance. That question is not before us. But there is no sound reason that we can perceive why, in the absence of statute, implied revocations should be extended, or should be differently treated as between men and women, when the property rights of married women have ceased to be hampered by marriage."

In Webb v. Jones, 36 N. J. Eq. 163, a widow made her will disposing of her property. She afterward entered into a marriage settlement, whereby she assigned a very large part of her property (it was all personal) and the income thereof, and of all her other property, to trustees in trust for herself for life, and after her death to distribute the property assigned to certain persons whom she named, and who, with a few exceptions, were the same persons who were named as legatees in the will, reserving to herself, with the express assent of her future husband, a testamentary power of disposition over her estate, which was, by the settlement, put into the hands of her trustees. She married and died without any further execution of the power. It was held that her will was not revoked by her marriage, and was a good execution of the power.

In Massachusetts, however, it was expressly held that the common-law doctrine was not abrogated by such legislation. Swan v. Hammond, 138 Mass. 45. The court, by Colburn, J., said, in regard to the above reasoning: "This argument is not without force, but its force would be much greater if we could see any good reason why, in the case of a man, both marriage and the birth of a child should be held necessary for the revocation of his will. The rule was adopted from the civil law, and is now firmly established as part of the common law; but the reason upon which it is founded is not obvious. Marriage alone in the case of a man or woman would seem to be a sufficient change in condition and circumstances to cause an unimplied revocation of a will previously made. A will made before marriage, and taking effect after marriage, must take effect in a very different manner from that in the mind of the testator when the will was made. The rights of the husband or wife must greatly modify its provisions; and it can hardly be supposed that an unmarried person would make the same will he or she would make after marriage. If we were under no restraint, we might well hesitate to hold that, since testamentary capacity has been given to women, a will made by a woman when sole should be revoked only by marriage and the birth of a child, as in case of a man, for the sake of uniformity only, when we are inclined to think a better rule would be, that, in case of a man, his will should be revoked by marriage alone. But such a rule can only be introduced by the Legislature. In England, by the Stat. of 7 Will. IV. and 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 18, and in many of the states in this country, it has been provided by statute that the wills of both men and women shall be revoked by marriage. See collection of statutes in 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 122, note. But we are of opinion that the question substantially the whole, estate was devised, the will was revoked by the testator's marriage and the birth of a child conjointly,¹ unless provision was made for the wife and children by the will or now before us has been so far settled by statute as not to admit of change by construction. Section 8 of the Massachusetts Pub. Stat., ch. 127, after providing that no will shall be revoked, unless by burning, tearing, etc., or some other writing executed in the manner required in the case of a will, goes on as follows: 'But nothing contained in this section shall prevent the revocation implied by law from subsequent changes in the condition or circumstances of the testator.' It is not apparent that an entire revocation by implication of law results from any change of condition or circumstances, except that of a subsequent marriage. See the discussion in Warner v. Beach, 4 Gray (Mass.) 162. This clause as to implied revocations was first introduced in the Massachusetts Rev. Stat., ch. 62, § 9. The other provisions as to revocation were substantially taken from the Statute of 1783, ch. 24, § 2. The commissioners, in their note to this section, say: 'The clause as to implied revocations recognizes and adopts the existing law, as established and understood among us.' And their further discussion of this subject shows clearly that they had in mind the rule of the common law, that, in case of a man, marriage and the birth of a child, and, in case of a woman, marriage alone, revoked a will previously made. We are of opinion that this provision as to implied revocations, from its language, and the reasons given for its introduction, has substantially the force of an express enactment of the rules of the common law, which we are not at liberty to change, even if the reason for the rule, in case of a woman, no longer exists. This was the view taken in Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369, upon a similar question, under a statute of New York." See Blodgett v. Moore, 141 Mass. 75. Compare Ward's Will, 70 Wis. 255; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369.

Of course, where a statute provides, that the will shall be revoked by marriage, there is no room for controversy. McAnnulty v. McAnnulty, 120 Ill. 26; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *123; 4 Kent's Com. (13th ed.) 527; Doe v. Edlin, 4 Ad. & El. 587; 31 E. C. L. 143; Doe v. Lancashire, 5 T. R. 49; Christopher v. Christopher, Dick. 445, citing 4 Burr. 2182; Spraag v. Stone, Amb. 721; Kenebel v. Scrafton, 2 East 530; Brush v. Wilkins, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 506; Havens v. Van Den Burgh, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 27; Warner v. Beach, 4 Gray (Mass.) 163; Wilcox v. Rootes, 1 Wash. (Va.) 140; Baldwin v. Spriggs, 65 Md. 373. See Jacks v. Henderson, 1 Desaus. (S. Car.) 556; Tomlinson v. Tomlinson, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 224; Yerby v. Yerby, 3 Call (Va.) 334; Morgan v. Davenport, 60 Tex. 230.

Where Testator Is Married.—Where a married man made a will, survived his wife, married again, and had issue by his second wife, it was held that the will was revoked. Christopher v. Christopher, Dick. 445, citing 4 Burr. 2182; Baldwin v. Spriggs, 65 Md. 373.

So where a married man made his will, had issue, survived his wife, and married again, Sir R. R. Arden, M. R., inclined to the opinion that the will was revoked. Gibbons v. Caunt, 4 Ves. Jr. 848. Compare Havens v. Van Den Burgh, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 27.

Subsequent Acquisition of Property, which is not affected by the will, affords no ground for not applying the rule. Baldwin v. Spriggs, 65 Md. 373.

Posthumous Children.—It was immaterial that the birth of the child was posthumous, and the probability of such event not disclosed to the testator. Doe v. Lancashire, 5 T. R. 49; Israell v. Rodon, 2 Moo. P. C. 51; Matson v. Magrath, 1 Rob. 680. See Hart v. Hart, 70 Ga. 764; Squire's Estate, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 110; Warner v. Beach, 4 Gray (Mass.) 163.

But in Ordish v. McDermott, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 460, it was held that a will made in ignorance of the existence of a living child, is not revoked, even at common law, by the discovery of its existence.

Substantially Whole Estate Must Be Devised.—Where less than the whole estate is disposed of it has been said that the will is not revoked. Lord Mansfield in Brady v. Cubitt, Doug. 31; Lord Ellenlough in Kenebel v. Scrafton, 2 East 541; Tindal, C. J., in Marston v. Roe, 8 Ad. & El. 14; 35 E.

by previous settlement, or unless they would derive no benefit from setting it aside; for circumstances producing such a change in the testator's situation naturally lead to the presumption that he could not have intended a previous disposition which was without provision for them to continue unchanged.¹

C. L. 303; Denman, C. J., in Doe v. Edlin, 4 Ad. & El. 587; 31 E. C. L. 143; Havens v. Van Den Burgh, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 27.

"Supposing this to be clear (though it has never been positively decided), it would remain to be considered whether a will which actually, though not professedly, disposes of the testator's entire estate, as where there are particular gifts sufficient to absorb the whole, but no residuary disposition, falls within the principle. Considering, however, that the inquiry is not what the testator intended, but of the fact whether the wife and children be provided for, it can scarcely be doubted that this question would, if it arose, be answered in the affirmative." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *125.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *128. See Kenebel v. Scrafton, 2 East 530; Havens v. Van Den Burgh, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 27; Warner v. Beach, 4 Gray (Mass.) 163; Baldwin v. Spriggs, 65 Md. 373.

In Doe v. Edlin, 4 Ad. & El. 587; 31 E. C. L. 143, Denman, C. J., said: "The rule as to marriage and the birth of a child, amounting to an implied revocation of a will of lands, is not of universal application; for it does not apply in cases where the whole estate is not devised by the former will; nor where a man has been married before, and there are children of the first marriage (at least not in all such cases); nor where the marriage is in contemplation, and the intended wife, and the children the testator may have by her, after her marriage, have a provision made for them under a former will."

Rule Independent of Actual Intention—Settlement After Will—Settlement on Children.—"The doctrine does not suppose that, in every particular instance, an intention to revoke actually exists, but it annexes to the will a tacit condition that the party does not intend it to come into operation, if there should be a total change in the situation of his family." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *124. See Doe v. Lancashire, 5 T. R. 49; Israell v. Rodon, 2 Moo. P. C. 51;

Matson v. Magrath, 1 Rob. 680; 6 No. Cas. 709; 13 Jur. 350; Marston v. Roe, 8 Ad. & El. 14; 35 E. C. L. 303; Baldwin v. Spriggs, 65 Md. 373.

Hence a provision for the wife and children, under settlement executed after the will, cannot prevent revocation, as it might have done had the question been one solely of intention. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.), § 125; Israell v. Rodon, 2 Moo. P. C. 51. See Matson v. Magrath, 1 Rob. 680. See Corker v. Corker, 87 Cal. 643.

"Neither was a provision for the wife alone suffice, though made before the will; and it is not clear that a provision for children alone, though made before the will, would be sufficient for that purpose; for since the revocation by marriage and the birth of children results from a tacit condition annexed to the will, that it shall be so revoked unless both wife and children are provided for, and is not dependent on the testator's intention, no circumstance demonstrative of a contrary intention on his part, such as a provision for children (though the birth of children necessarily supposes marriage), can effect the question." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *125; Marston v. Roe, 8 Ad. & El. 14; 35 E. C. L. 303.

Extrinsic Evidence.—Evidence (not amounting to proof of republication) cannot be received in a court of law to show that the testator meant his will to remain in force, notwithstanding the subsequent marriage and birth of issue. Marston v. Roe, 8 Ad. & El. 14; 35 E. C. L. 303. See Baldwin v. Spriggs, 65 Md. 381; Hoitt v. Hoitt, 63 N. H. 498; Gay v. Gay, 84 Ala. 44; 4 Kent's Com. (12th ed.) 578.

This doctrine was placed partly upon the ground that the presumption in favor of revocation is juris et de jure, and partly upon the ground that the admission of such evidence (in the case of a devise of realty) was inconsistent with the Statute of Frauds. Marston v. Roe, 8 Ad. & El. 59; 35 E. C. L. 303.

In some states, such evidence has been admitted upon the authority of the ecclesiastical decisions which held

In New York, California, and several other states, it is expressly provided that if a testator marry and leave a widow or issue, the will is revoked unless provision be made for them in the will, or by settlement, or they are in such way mentioned in the will as to show an intention not to provide for them, and no other evidence to rebut the presumption of revocation can be received.¹

the presumption merely one of intention. Yerby v. Yerby, 3 Call (Va.) 341; Brush v. Wilkins, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 506.

Whether Will Is Revoked in Favor of Pre-existing Children.—"It seems, also, that marriage and the birth of a child or children revoke a will which is subject to the old doctrine, only where the effect of throwing open the property to the disposition of the law, would be to let in such after born child or children; for, if it would operate for the exclusive benefit of a pre-existing child, the ground for subverting the will fails. Thus, in Sheath v. York, 1 Ves. & B. 390, where a testator, having a son and two daughters, directed his real and personal estate to be sold for payment of his debts and for the benefit of those children. The testator was at that time a widower, he married again, and had issue, one child. The question arose, on a bill filed by the creditors for a sale, whether the will was revoked as to the real estate. Sir W. Grant held that it was not. 'In all cases,' he said, 'the will has been that of a person who, having no children at the time of making it, has afterwards married, and had an heir born to him. The effect has been to let in such after born heir to an estate disposed of by will made before his birth. The condition implied in these cases was, that the testator, when he made his will in favor of a stranger or more remote relation, intended that it should not operate if he should have an heir of his own body. In this case, there is no room for the operation for such a condition, as this testator had children at the date of the will, of whom one was his heir apparent, and was alive at the period of the second marriage, of the birth of the children by that marriage, and of the testator's death. Upon no rational principle, therefore, can this testator be supposed to have intended to revoke his will on account of the birth of other children, those children not deriving any benefit whatever from the revocation, which would have operated only to let in the eldest son to the whole of that estate, which he had by the will divided between the eldest son and the other children of the first marriage.' The reason of the M. R. extends only to cases in which the heir is among the pre-existing children, and it is probable that the revocation would take effect, notwithstanding the existence of such children, where the consequence of the intestacy would be to cast the estate on one of the subsequently born children (being an eldest or only son), or upon the children of both marriages (all being daughters). Such is the rule in regard to personal estate (this, or at least, the children's share of it, being distributable among all the children pari passu), a testamentary disposition of which has been decided to be revoked by a subsequent marriage and birth of children, notwithstanding the prior existence of children. Holloway v. Clarke, 1 Ph. 339 (Walker v. Walker, 2 Curt. 854). See also Gibbon v. Caunt, 4 Ves. Jr. 849; Wright v. Netherwood, 2 Salk., by Evans, 593. These observations assume that the effect of the will being revoked by the application of the doctrine in question, will be to produce intestacy; but this is not necessarily the case; for the consequence of the revocation might have been (Helyar v. Helyar, cited 1 Ph. 413; Sullivan v. Sullivan, cited 1 Ph. 343; Emerson v. Boville, 1 Ph. 324), to revive a prior uncanceled will, which contained a provision for the wife and children, protecting it from the revocation which the marriage and the birth of children produced on the subsequent will." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *126, 127.

1. So in Nevada, Dakota, Montana, and Alabama.

See Gay v. Gay, 84 Ala. 44; Belton v. Summer, 31 Fla. 139; Parish v. Parish, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 274; Havens v. Van Den Burgh, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 27; Brush v. Wilkins, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 506; Baldwin v. Spriggs, 65 Md. 373; Matter of Burton's Will (Surrogate

The Statute of Victoria expressly provides that every will made by a man or woman shall be revoked by his or her marriage, with the exception of certain wills made in the exercise of powers of appointment,¹ and similar provisions exist in some states.² Under such legislation marriage alone produces complete revocation, irrespective of the testator's intent, without the birth of issue.³ In most of the United States, however, statutes also exist which provide, with slight modifications and exceptions in the several states, that a will made when there are no issue living, without mention of possible issue, is revoked if the testator leave a legitimate child.⁴

Ct.), 25 N. Y. Supp. 824; Nutt v. Norton, 142 Mass. 242.

An unmarried man by will ordered the sale of his real and personal property, the investment of the proceeds, and the payment of the interest to a lady whom he subsequently married; after his decease a son was born, who was not provided for in the will. It was held that as to the widow, the will was revoked by the marriage; and as to the son, by his birth after the testator's death, without being provided for therein; and that the estate must be distributed as in cases of intestacy. Edward's Appeal, 47 Pa. St. 144.

1. 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 18. For review of recent English decisions upon the subject, see 89 Law Times 20.

2. See local statutes; also Byrd v. Surles, 77 N. Car. 435.

In Rhode Island, Connecticut, Illinois and Georgia, a will is revoked by the testator's subsequent marriage. Stimson Am. Stat. Law, § 2676, citing Rhode Island Pub. Stat. (1882), ch. 182, § 6; Connecticut Laws (1885), ch. 110, § 135. Compare Goodsell's Appeal, 55 Conn. 171; Illinois Rev. Stat. (1883), art. 39, § 10; Georgia Code (1882), § 2477. See Tyler v. Tyler, 19 Ill. 151; Duryea v. Duryea, 85 Ill. 41; Morgan v. Ireland, 1 Idaho 786; Loomis v. Loomis, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 257; Blodgett v. Moore, 141 Mass. 75; Fransen's Will, 26 Pa. St. 202; American Board, etc. v. Nelson, 72 Ill. 564; Brown v. Scherrer (Colo. 1894), 38 Pac. Rep. 427; Wheeler v. Wheeler, 1 R. I. 364; Phaup v. Wooldridge, 14 Gratt. (Va.) 332; Morgan v. Davenport, 60 Tex. 230; Roane v. Hollingshead, 76 Md. 369. And see also Church v. Crocker, 3 Mass. 17; Noyes v. Southworth, 55 Mich. 173; Sanders v. Simcich, 65 Cal. 50.

In Morgan v. Ireland, 1 Idaho 786, it was held that whenever new moral and testamentary duties arise subsequent to the execution of a will, the will is revoked by presumption or operation of law, unless the objects of those duties are provided for, either by the law or the will.

3. 1 Jarm. on Wills, § 129; 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 19; North Carolina Code (1883), § 2178. See Morgan v. Ireland, 1 Idaho 786; McAnnulty v. McAnnulty, 120 Ill. 26; Sanders v. Simcich, 65 Cal. 52; Corker v. Corker, 87 Cal. 643. Such is the effect in regard to a woman's will under analogous statutes. See Fransen's Will, 26 Pa. St. 202; Walker v. Hall, 34 Pa. St. 483.

4. So in Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, Texas, Mississippi, Indiana, Georgia and Louisiana. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2676, citing Connecticut Rev. Stat. (1875), tit. 18, ch. 11, § 6; New Jersey Revision (1877), "Wills," § 8; Delaware Rev. Code (1874), ch. 84, § 11; Virginia Code (1873), ch. 118, § 17; West Virginia Laws (1882), ch. 84, § 16; Kentucky Gen. Stat. (1873), ch. 113, § 24; Texas Rev. Stat. (1879), § 4869; Mississippi Code (1880), § 1263; Indiana Rev. Stat. (1881), § 2560; Georgia Code (1882), § 2477; Louisiana Rev. Civ. Code (1875), § 1705.

Construction.—See further, as to construction of local statutes referred to in above section, Branton v. Branton, 23 Ark. 569; Rhodes v. Weldy, 46 Ohio St. 234; Evans v. Anderson, 15 Ohio St. 324; Ash v. Ash, 9 Ohio St. 383; Alden v. Johnson, 63 Iowa 124; Squire's Estate, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 110; Ward v. Ward, 120 Ill. 111; Gay v. Gay, 84 Ala. 38; Baldwin v. Spriggs, 65 Md. 373; Armistead v. Dangerfield, 3 Munf. (Va.) 20; Parham's Succession, 11 La. Ann. 646; Coudert v.

Coudert, 43 N. J. Eq. 407; Stevens v. Shippen, 28 N. J. Eq. 487; Hackett v. Stephens, 3 La. Ann. 271; Lewis v. Lewis, 8 La. Ann. 378; Morse v. Morse, 42 Ind. 365; Hughes v. Hughes, 37 Ind. 183; Bloomer v. Bloomer, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 339; Church v. Crocker, 3 Mass. 17; Prentiss v. Prentiss, 11 Allen (Mass.) 47; Nutt v. Norton, 142 Mass. 242; Hart v. Hart, 70 Ga. 764; Holloman v. Copeland, 10 Ga. 79; Thomas v. Black, 113 Mo. 66; Negus v. Negus, 46 Iowa 487; Fallon v. Chidester, 46 Iowa 588; McCullum v. McKenzie, 26 Iowa 510; Carey v. Baughn, 36 Iowa 540; Osborn v. Jefferson Nat. Bank, 116 Ill. 130; Tomlinson v. Tomlinson, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 224; In re Wardell's Estate, 57 Cal. 484; Beck v. Metz, 25 Mo. 70; Pounds v. Dale, 48 Mo. 270; Hockensmith v. Slusher, 26 Mo. 237; Guitar v. Gordon, 17 Mo. 408; Wetherall v. Harris, 51 Mo. 65; Cotheal v. Cotheal, 40 N. Y. 405; Moon v. Evans, 69 Wis. 667; Coates v. Hughes, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 498; Fidelity Ins., etc., Co.'s Appeal, 121 Pa. St. 1; Chace v. Chace, 6 R. I. 407; Potter v. Brown, 11 R. I. 232; Sanford v. Sanford, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 753; Matter of Huell, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 352; Mercantile Trust, etc., Co. v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co., 36 Fed. Rep. 863; Morgan v. Davenport, 60 Tex. 230; Waterman v. Hawkins, 63 Me. 156; Cunningham v. Cunningham, 30 W. Va. 599; Wilcox v. Rootes, 1 Wash. (Va.) 140. Compare Ellis v. Ellis, 2 Desaus. (S. Car.) 556; Savage v. Mears, 2 Rob. (Va.) 570; M'Cay v. M'Cay, 1 Murph. (N. Car.) 447.

Pennsylvania.—In Pennsylvania, a will is revoked under the following circumstances. First. The will of a single woman is revoked by her subsequent marriage, and is not revived by the death of her husband. Second. If a man makes his will and marries, and dies leaving a widow, so far as regards the widow he dies intestate; that is, his will is revoked pro tanto. Third. If a man makes his will, and has an after born child, or children, not provided for in such will, and dies leaving such after born child, or children, so far as regards such child, or children, he dies intestate, and his will is revoked pro tanto. Fourth. If a man makes his will and marries, and dies leaving a widow and child not provided for in such will, his will is not revoked absolutely, as at common law, but only pro tanto. Fifth. If a man makes his will, marries, and dies, leaving a widow, but no known heirs or kindred, it is clearly revoked, so far as to give to his widow, both the real and personal estate absolutely. Walker v. Hall, 34 Pa. St. 483. See Edward's Appeal, 47 Pa. St. 144; Hollingsworth's Appeal, 51 Pa. St. 518; Fidelity Ins., etc., Co.'s Appeal, 121 Pa. St. 1.

Ohio.—B. made his will June 20, 1830, devising all his estate to his wife, and died, without issue, on the 7th of July following, seised of lands. The will was admitted to probate Oct. 7, 1830; and on the 4th of December following, the widow of B. was delivered of a son, the child of M. It was held that at the time of making such will, the testator had no child in esse, within the meaning of section five of the Act of 1824, relating to wills, and therefore that the birth of the child avoided the will. Evans v. Anderson, 15 Ohio St. 324.

Georgia.—Where a testator made his will devising his property to his wife and children then in life, and two years after the date of his will had another child born, for whom no positive provision was made, and departed this life without altering said will after the birth of such after born child, it was held that according to the provisions of the Act of 1834, the testator must be considered as having died intestate, notwithstanding such after born child might be entitled to some portion of the testator's property under the will, on the happening of certain contingencies mentioned therein, under the general description of "children." Holloman v. Copeland, 10 Ga. 79.

In Deupree v. Deupree, 45 Ga. 415, it was held that the marriage of a testator or the birth of a child to him subsequent to the making of a will, in which no provision is made in contemplation of such an event, is, by presumption of law, a revocation of the will, and this presumption cannot be rebutted by any declarations of the testator, whether by parol or in writing, at the time of the marriage, or even by a settlement on the wife, and a renunciation by her of all interest in the estate of her husband, unless the declarations or provisions be testamentary in their character, and be executed by the testator with the forms and solemnities required for making a will.

Illegitimate Children.—Iowa.—Under the statutes of this state, an illegitimate child, which has been notoriously recognized by its father, inherits from the

16. Extrinsic Evidence.—Where the effect of doubtful acts of revocation is to be established, extrinsic evidence of the surrounding circumstances, and even of the verbal or written declarations of the testator, is admissible, to show the intent with which the act was committed.¹ But when the act is insufficient to constitute a legal revocation, evidence of the intent is irrelevant and father share and share alike with his legitimate children; and the birth and recognition of an illegitimate child, after the execution of a will by the father, has the effect to revoke the will, the same as the birth of a legitimate child. Milburn v. Milburn, 60 Iowa 411. Compare Kent v. Barker, 2 Gray (Mass.) 535.

Adopted Children.—Subsequent adoption of a child is held no revocation in Indiana and North Carolina. Davis v. Fogle, 124 Ind. 41; Davis v. King, 89 N. Car. 441.

Retrospective Operation of Such Statutes.—Such statutes are not retrospective. Thus in Connecticut, before the act of 1885 (Session Laws of 1885, ch. 110, § 135), a man's will was revoked by marriage and the birth of a child, but not by marriage alone.

The act provides that "if after the making of a will the testator shall marry, or if a child is born to the testator, and no provision is made in the will for such contingency, such marriage or birth shall operate as a revocation of such will." It was held to be prospective only, and that it could not operate upon any will where the marriage or birth had already occurred at the time the act was passed, although the testator died afterwards, Goodsell's Appeal, 55 Conn. 171. The court, by Pardee, J., said: "As a rule of interpretation all statutes are to operate prospectively unless they contain language unequivocally and certainly retrospective. The above statute looks forward and not backward. It can be said to be a remedial statute only in the sense that all statutes are passed because they are expected to benefit the public either by lifting burdens or conferring privileges. It is not the casting of a common-law rule into the fixed form of a statute; for there was no such rule in existence. It is the gift of a right to the wife to demand and receive a greater share of her husband's estate, under specified circumstances, than she previously could receive. We may be of opinion that the right given to the wife in this statute should have been given to her long before; but that is not a valid reason why a law giving additional rights should operate retrospectively. Possibly estates in like situation with the one before us have been settled and property vested; possibly wrong would be inflicted if we should give retrospective effect to this statute."

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 403; Evan's Appeal, 58 Pa. St. 238; Patterson v. Hickey, 32 Ga. 156; Boudinot v. Bradford, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 170; Eyster v. Young, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 511; Bethell v. Moore, 2 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 311; Tynan v. Paschal, 27 Tex. 286. See Betts v. Jackson, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 173; Law v. Law, 83 Ala. 432; Collagan v. Burns, 57 Me. 449; Pickens v. Davis, 134 Mass. 252; Kidder's Estate, 66 Cal. 487; Tucker v. Whitehead, 59 Miss. 594; Vining v. Hall, 40 Miss. 83; Caeman v. Van Harke, 33 Kan. 333.

After the death of the testatrix, a will twenty-five years old was discovered in a barrel among waste papers, and either torn or worn into several pieces, which were scattered loose among the papers in the barrel. It was held that whether the injury to the instrument was done by the testatrix or by some other person, and, if by her, whether accidentally, or intentionally, and for the purpose of revoking the will, are questions of fact for the jury; and to aid them in determining these questions, and not as separate and independent evidence of a revocation, the declarations of the testatrix, made after the date of the will, that she had destroyed it, are competent evidence. Lawyer v. Smith, 8 Mich. 412.

Intent to Revoke Wholly or in Part—How Shown.—In Clarke v. Scripps, 2 Rob. 568, Sir J. Dodson said: "The intention of a testator to revoke wholly, or in part, may, I conceive, be proved. First. By evidence of the expressed declaration of a testator, especially if such declaration was contemporaneous with the act. If in doing the act, whether burning, tearing, or destroying the whole or a part, he should inadmissible.¹ Inasmuch as marriage and birth of issue are, in themselves, an absolute revocation of a will made previous to the marriage, but not in contemplation of it, extrinsic evidence of the testator's intent to the contrary is inadmissible.²

XIII. REVIVAL AND REPUBLICATION—1. At Common Law.—Until the passage of the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II., ch. 3, wills of both real and personal property could be revived or republished by an informal writing or even by parol evidence of the testator's acts or declarations showing an intent to revive.³

declare that he so did with the intention to revoke, there would be the act and intention; to whatever extent the act was carried, if he declared that it was his intention thereby to revoke the instrument, that declaration, I apprehend, coupled with the act, would be sufficient. Secondly. The intention may, in the absence of any express declaration, be inferred from the nature and extent of the act done by a testator; i. e., it may be inferred from the state and condition to which the instrument has been reduced by the act. From the face of the paper itself, it may be inferred, either he did intend to destroy it altogether, or did not. Thirdly. The intention may, in some degree at least, be inferred from extrinsic circumstances. There may have been declarations, not direct as to the revocation, but such as would lead to the inference, whether he did intend to revoke the will, or did not."

Under the Alabama statute, which, after excepting certain implied revocations, provides that "a will in writing can be revoked by burning, tearing, canceling, or obliterating the same, with the intention of revoking it," etc., it was held that where a testator had drawn his pen through the name of one of several devisees, evidence of his declarations that he thereby intended to revoke his will should have been admitted; but that since the statute omitted the words "or any clause thereof," which occur in the original English Statute of Frauds, such evidence could only be admitted to prove an intention to revoke the whole will, and not merely the devise to the person whose name was canceled. Law v. Law, 83 Ala. 432.

Evidence that a subsequent will had been made and afterward stolen from the testator, without any evidence as to its contents, and proof of his declarations, after the will was stolen, that he would die intestate, and leave his property to be distributed according to the statute, was held insufficient as evidence of the revocation of a former will. Hylton v. Hylton, 1 Gratt. (Va.) 161.

1. Shouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 403; Smith v. Fenner, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 170; Hargroves v. Redd, 43 Ga. 143; Gay v. Gay, 60 Iowa 415; Wittman v. Goodhand, 26 Md. 25; Jackson v. Kniffen, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 31. See Clark v. Smith, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 140; Hoitt v. Hoitt, 63 N. H. 499; Davis v. King, 89 N. Car. 441.

The legal effect of revoking a subsequent will containing a clause expressly revoking prior wills, cannot be controlled by evidence of the testator's intent to revive a former will. Vurtzell v. Beckman, 52 Mich. 478.

2. Marston v. Roe, 8 Ad. & El. 14; 35 E. C. L. 303; Israell v. Rodon, 2 Moo. P. C. 51; Matson v. Magrath, 1 Rob. 680. See Hoitt v. Hoitt, 63 N. H. 498; Baldwin v. Spriggs, 65 Md. 381; Gay v. Gay, 84 Ala. 44; 4 Kent's Com. (12th ed.) 578.

Formerly the ecclesiastical courts admitted such evidence. Gibbons v. Cross, 2 Add. 455; Johnston v. Johnston, 1 Ph. 447; Yerby v. Yerby, 3 Call (Va.) 341; Brush v. Wilkins, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 506. See supra, this title, Revocation by Marriage and Birth of Issue.

3. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 444; Jackson v. Hurlock, Amb. 494; Alford v. Earle, 2 Vern. 209; Peekford v. Parne-cott, Cro. Eliz. 493; 1 Saund. 277. See 1 Roll. Abr. 617; Tr. Pl. 2; Long v. Alfred, 3 Add. 48; Braham v. Burchell, 3 Add. 264; Miller v. Brown, 2 Hagg. 209; Abney v. Miller, 2 Atk. 599; Harvard v. Davis, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 425; Jones v. Hartley, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 103; Harwell v. Lively, 30 Ga. 315; Bohanon v. Walcot, 2 Miss. 336.

Before the Statute of Frauds, it was held that anything which showed an intent that a will of lands should take effect as of a subsequent date, was a sufficient republication. 1 Roll. Abr. 618, pl. 7; Anonymous, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 48; Barnes v. Crowe, 1 Ves. Jr. 497; Cotton v. Cotton, citing Alford v. Earle, 2 Vern. 209.

In Braham v. Burchell, 3 Add. 264, Sir John Nicholl said that the mere conservation of a will for many years, taken in connection with its place of deposit, may so evidence adherence to and approval of it as to amount to republication.

In Miller v. Brown, 2 Hagg. 209, as stated 1 Wms. on Exrs. 207, "which also was a question whether a widow had republished a will made during her coverture, the evidence established that after the death of her husband she frequently recognized the instrument as her will, and expressed her satisfaction that it was made; and that three months before her death, and eighteen months after that of her husband, she delivered to one of the executors a tin box, which she told him contained her will (and in which it was found after her death); and on the same day told the father-in-law of the executor that she had that day deposited her will with him. Sir John Nicholl held that this was a republication to all intents and purposes, as far as regarded the personality."

So a canceled or obliterated will, which remains legible, might be revived by words or acts of the testator showing that he meant it to operate notwithstanding. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 445; Slade v. Friend, citing 2 Cas. temp. Lee 84; Brotherton v. Hellier, 2 Cas. temp. Lee 55.

"If one of the executor's names be stricken out," says Wentworth, Office of Ex. (4th ed.), ch. 1, p. 68, "and afterwards a stet be written over his head by the testator or by his appointment, now he is a revived executor. So if the testator express by word, in the presence of witnesses, that the party put out shall be executor. But now I mean where the executor's name is not so blotted out but that it may be read and discerned, for else the stet is upon nothing; and if the verbal reaffirmance should renew his executorship, then must the will be partly in writing, and partly nuncupative, his name not being to be found in the written will."

But where the testator was in search of another paper, and a person who was assisting him took up the will by mistake, whereupon the testator said: "That is my will," Lord Hardwicke held the evidence insufficient to establish the animus republicandi. Abney v. Miller, 2 Atk. 599.

Where There Are Two Wills of Different Dates.—So "where there are two wills of different dates, both remaining uncanceled, some direct and very unequivocal act of republication is required to set up the will of the earlier date, and so revoke that of the later; for the presumption of law is strongly in favor of the last dated will uncanceled." Wms. on Exrs. 209, citing Stride v. Cooper, 1 Ph. 336.

Where Republication of an Earlier Will Revokes a Later Will.—Where the effect of republishing an earlier will was to revoke one of later date which remained uncanceled and contained an express clause of revocation, it seems that the testator's declarations alone were held insufficient.

In Daniel v. Nockolds, 3 Hagg. 777, as stated in 1 Wms. on Exrs. 210, "the deceased, by a will made in the year 1819, attested by three witnesses, gave his brother a legacy of one hundred pounds and after bequeathing further legacies left the residue to Mary Tomkins, and appointed Daniel and Bush his executors, without a legacy to either. In the year 1823 he made a new will, in which he devised a small freehold to Tomkins, and appointed Parkinson sole executor and residuary legatee. This will contained a clause of revocation, and was duly executed. Both Tomkins and Parkinson died in the testator's lifetime. In 1827, the deceased, on several occasions during his last illness, conversed with different persons respecting his affairs, produced and read to them his will of 1819, declared that it was his last will, and what he wished to be carried into effect; and that Daniel and Bush were his executors, and would have the management of his affairs. After his death the will of 1819 was found carefully deposited and locked up in one of the drawers of his bedroom, and that of 1823 at the bottom of the same drawer, but much soiled and crumpled among old and useless papers. It was held that the will of 1819 was not revived, and administration with the will of 1823 annexed was decreed to the brother; and Sir John Nicholl, in giving judgment, said: 'This is not like the case of a later canceled will, because then the very act of cancellation revokes the latter, and lays a foundation for an inference that the testator intended the former will to operate; but here is a later revocatory will entire, and in force as a revocation of the former, though the devises and bequests may have lapsed. Can the former will be revived without an act of republication, or indeed of re-execution; or rather can the latter will be revoked by mere declarations? If it were merely a will of realty, it clearly could not have been contended that there had been a republication of the former will, because the words of the sixth section of the Statute of Frauds are express. It is clear, also, under section twenty-two, that the latter will could not have been revoked by mere declarations, unaccompanied by some writing; but here is no declaration in writing; nothing reduced into writing during the deceased's lifetime; nor are there any acts; the circumstances of the finding are too slight—they might be merely accidental. The latter will was in an envelope; and there is no appearance that it was rumpled. Why did not the deceased, a professional man, cancel, if he intended to revoke it, and revive the former will? Declarations without acts are always dangerous evidence; they are frequently insincere—liable to be misapprehended—not accurately recollected. The case of Miller v. Brown, 2 Hagg. 209, does not apply. In that case there had been no revocation; all that was there required was to show adherence. In this case there is an express revocation, and that revocation is to be removed by parol—that is the difficulty."

2. Under English and American Statutes.—The Statute of Frauds,¹ which made formal execution essential for all wills of land, provided as part of the same scheme that no will of lands should be republished, except by its re-execution in the presence of three witnesses, or by a codicil duly executed in like manner.² The Statute of Frauds, however, left wills of personalty untouched.³

In Williams v. Williams, 142 Mass. 515, a testator executed three wills, each containing a revocatory clause, and each of which he published and declared to be his last will. At the time he executed the third will, he said he would keep them all until he made up his mind which he wanted, and would then destroy the two he did not want. He afterward destroyed the first and third wills. It was held that these facts would warrant a finding that the testator, in canceling the third will, intended to revive the second will, without further evidence of a republication of this will.

1. 29 Car. II., ch. 3, § 5.

2. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 442; Osborne v. Rogers, 1 Saund. 268; 1 Powell on Devises (3d ed.) 609. See Jackson v. Holloway, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 394; Jackson v. Potter, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 312; Love v. Johnston, 12 Ired. (N. Car.) 355; Walton v. Walton, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 269; Cogdell v. Widow, etc., 3 Desaus. (S. Car.) 346; James v. Marvin, 3 Conn. 576; Harwell v. Lively, 30 Ga. 315; Johnson v. Brailsford, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 272. See also Bohanon v. Walcot, 2 Miss. 336. Compare Boudinot v. Bradford, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 266; Lawson v. Morrison, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 286; Burns v. Burns, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 295.

3. Long v. Aldred, 3 Add. 48; Braham v. Burchell, 9 Add. 264; Miller v. Brown, 2 Hagg. 209; Cogdell v. Widow, etc., 3 Desaus. (S. Car.) 346.

"By reason of the enactments of the fifth section of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II., ch. 3), no will of lands could be republished, except by re-execution in the presence of three attesting witnesses, or by a codicil duly executed according to the statute. But as that section did not apply to wills of personalty, such a will might be republished, not only by an unattested codicil, or other writing, but by the mere parol acts or declarations of the testator. It has, indeed, been said, that there must be some difficulty in holding that the statute, by the prohibition in section nineteen, of nuncupative wills, has not in effect prohibited nuncupative republications. But, upon a closer examination of the subject, it should seem that the statute does not affect the question. It must be remembered, that no publication nor formalities of execution are required either by the Statute of Frauds, or the general law, for the validity of a will of personalty, if made before the Statute of Victoria

Chapter 26, section 22, of the English Statute of Victoria¹ expressly provides that no will or codicil, or any part thereof, which shall be in any manner revoked, shall be revived otherwise than by its re-execution, or by a duly executed codicil showing an intent to revive the same.² In the United States, it has been held, under came into operation. It has already been shown that such a will need not be executed by the testator; it is sufficient if it be in writing, and approved of by him before his death. Hence, it should appear, that if a will of personality, which has been revoked, or made at a distant period, be afterwards sufficiently recognized as his operative will, by the parol acts or declarations of the testator, the will so recognized becomes, as any other written document would, his legal will of the date of the recognition." 1 Wms. on Exrs. *206.

1. 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 22.

2. The text of this provision of the English Wills Act, 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 22, is as follows: "No will or codicil, or any part thereof, which shall be in any manner revoked, shall be revived otherwise than by the re-execution thereof, or by a codicil executed in manner hereinbefore required, and showing an intention to revive the same; and when any will or codicil which shall be partly revoked, and afterwards wholly revoked, shall be revived, such revival shall not extend to so much thereof as shall have been revoked before the revocation of the whole thereof, unless an intention to the contrary shall be shown."

Construction.—"Inasmuch as the old doctrine of the republication of wills by parol acts or declarations, depends on the principle that the will so recognized becomes a new will, of the date of the recognition, no such republication can take place, in respect of any will whatever, since the new statute came into operation, because no new will can be made unless with the prescribed formalities. Again, it is clear that no republication can now in any case be affected by a codicil, unless the codicil be executed according to the exigencies of the new statute, because such republication depends on the codicil becoming a part of the will, and it cannot become a part unless it be so executed. But if it be so executed, it will still amount to a republication of the will according to the old law, as above stated, unless it appears on the face of it that it was not the intention of the testator to republish; or unless the will has been in some manner revoked, in which case the new statute further requires that the codicil should show an intention to revive the will."

1 Wms. on Exrs. 215. See Doe v. Walker, 12 M. & W. 591; Skinner v. Ogle, 1 Rob. 363; Hale v. Tokelove, 2 Rob. 318.

The result of the decisions upon this provision is thus stated by Mr. Theobald: "Where a testamentary disposition is revoked by a subsequent disposition, which latter is in its turn revoked, the former disposition is not thereby revived. Burtenshaw v. Gilbert, Cowp. 49; Goods of Brown, 1 S. & T. 32; Brown v. Brown, 8 El. & Bl. 876; 92 E. C. L. 875; Wood v. Wood, L. R., 1 P. & D. 309. It has recently been doubted, whether, since the Wills Act, a codicil, described as a codicil to a will of a particular date which has been revoked, would be sufficient to revive the revoked will in the absence of any additional evidence of 'intention to revive the same.' In re Steele, L. R., 1 P. & D. 575. There is an obvious distinction between a codicil incorporating and giving effect to earlier untested instruments, for which purpose a mere reference is sufficient, and a codicil reviving a revoked instrument. There are, however, cases in which a codicil described as a codicil to a particular will which had been revoked by marriage, there being no other will in existence, has been held sufficient to revive the revoked will. In re Chapman, 1 Rob. 1; Payne v. Trappes, 1 Rob. 583. This was clearly the rule before the Wills Act, Walpole v. Orford, 3 Ves. Jr. 402; 7 T. R. 138. In the case of Neate v. Pickard, 2 No. Cas. 406, and in The Goods of Reynolds, L. R., 3 P. & D. 35, there appear to have been express words of confirmation. It seems a codicil, described as a codicil to a will of a particular date, though the codicil is directed to take effect only in events which do not happen, may have the effect of reviving the will. In bonis Da Silva, 2 S. & T. 315. See Parsons v. Lanoe, 1 Ves. 100. If there are two wills, the latter of local statutes, more or less positively worded, that the republication of a will is essentially at the present day equivalent to the making of a new will, and the usual formalities of execution must be followed.¹

which revokes the earlier, it seems a codicil described as a codicil to the testator's last will, but giving the date of the revoked will, will not revive that will or revoke the second will. In re May, L. R., 1 P. & D. 581; In re Ince, L. R., 2 P. & D. 111. These cases may very well be supported on the ground that the description of the will by the codicil was ambiguous, the will of the date mentioned not being the last will of the testator, or, in fact, his will at all, as it had been revoked. In Re Anderson, 39 L. J. P. 55, the principle applied was the same. In that case the codicil was expressed to be a codicil to the testator's last will, but confirmed a will by date which had been revoked. In Re Wilson, L. R., 1 P. & D. 582, the codicil, though referring to a revoked will by date, went on to refer to certain bequests as contained in that will, which were, in fact, contained in a later will. There was, therefore, a clear case of mistaken description. A testamentary disposition, written at the foot of a will revoked by marriage, and referring to a bequest contained in the will, though not referring to the will in terms or described as a codicil, is sufficient to revive the will. In re Terrible, 2 S. & T. 8. The fact that a codicil is found attached by tape to a will which has been revoked by a later will, will not revive the revoked will. Marsh v. Marsh, 1 S. & T. 528. A will which has been destroyed and no longer exists in writing cannot be revived by a codicil, though there may be a draft of the will in existence. Hale v. Tokelove, 2 Rob. 318; Newton v. Newton, 12 Ir. Ch. 118; Rogers v. Goodenough, 2 S. & T. 342. A codicil making an alteration in a will, and confirming it in all other respects, does not revive the will so far as it has been altered by intermediate codicils. Crosbie v. MacDonal, 4 Ves. Jr. 610; Green v. Tribe, 9 Ch. Div. 231. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 58.

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 442; 1 Jarm. on Wills (Rand. & Talchett) 362, note 2. See Barker v. Bell, 46 Ala. 216; Carey v. Baughn, 36 Iowa 540; Love v. Johnston, 12 Ired. (N. Car.) 355; Sawyer v. Sawyer, 7 Jones (N. Car.) 134; Warner v. Warner, 37 Vt.

356; Witter v. Mott, 2 Conn. 67; Cogdell v. Widow, etc., 3 Desaus. (S. Car.) 346; Dunlap v. Dunlap, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 321; Sharp v. Wallace, 83 Ky. 584; In re Penniman's Will, 20 Minn. 245; Jackson v. Potter, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 312; Musser v. Curry, 3 Wash. (U. S.) 481. But see Hatch v. Hatch, 2 Hayw. (N. Car.) 33; Marsh v. Marsh, 3 Jones (N. Car.) 77; Reynolds v. Shirley, 7 Ohio 39; Den v. Speight, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 459; Jones v. Hartley, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 103; Wallace v. Blair, 1 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 75; Matter of Knapp's Will (Surrogate Ct.), 23 N. Y. Supp. 282.

New York.—Under the New York revised statutes, it has been held that a will of personal property may be republished by a parol declaration by the testator before two witnesses, that the instrument is his last will and testament; but devises of realty require re-execution, as under the Statute of Frauds. Matter of Simpson, 56 How. Pr. (N. Y. Surrogate Ct.) 142; Jackson v. Potter, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 312.

A will with the name of the maker and the names of all the subscribing witnesses, save one, torn off, cannot be republished without a new signing and attestation, as required by the statute in the case of making a new will, where it appears that the cancellation was committed by the testator himself with the intention to cancel the will; and this, although, after such cancellation, the testator may have spoken of such canceled will as "his will." Barker v. Bell, 46 Ala. 216.

Pennsylvania.—In Jones v. Hartley, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 110, Sergeant, J., said: "The rule of law is, that the republication of a will must be accomplished by the same solemnities as were necessary to the publication in the first instance (Havard v. Davis, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 419); but no others are required. Hence, in England, since the Statute of Frauds, requiring a will to be in writing signed by the party, and to be attested and subscribed in his presence by three witnesses, a parol republication is not good; but in Pennsylvania, the witnesses to a will need not be subscribing witnesses. If there be a will in writing, signed by the testator, it is sufficient that it be proved by any two witnesses who can establish the fact, whether they attested as witnesses or not. As, therefore, the original proof of the will may be by parol, so may the proof of republication; but the number of witnesses must be the same. In this respect our law stands on the footing of the English law, under the Statute 32 Hen. VIII., prior to the Statute of Frauds; and under the Statute of Hen. VIII., the decisions in England were uniform in favor of receiving parol evidence of the republication of a will in writing; and it was held that anything which expressed the testator's intention that the will should be considered as of a subsequent date, was sufficient. Barnes v. Crowe, 1 Ves. Jr. 497; Hall v. Dench, 1 Vern. 330; Alford v. Earle, 2 Vern. 209; 2 Roll. Abr. 618; 1 Freem. 264; Belaney v. Belaney, 2 Ch. Rep. 140. This is, indeed, not an open question now; for those principles were all recognized and acted upon by this court in the case of Havard v. Davis, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 406, in which the subject was fully discussed by counsel, and carefully considered by the court. In that case, declarations by a testator, not long before his death, that a will dated in August, 1806, was his last will, were held to be evidence of republication of it, so as to produce a revocation of a will dated in September, 1806, revoking all prior wills, and to set up the first will in its stead. That was a stronger case than the present, for it was to revoke a will deliberately made, and when the intention of the testator to revoke it was undoubted; here the revocation is rather a presumed or implied one. In principle, however, the cases are the same, and I think that decision must be considered as settling the doctrine that parol evidence of republication is proper in Pennsylvania, with the requisition, however, that the proof of the republication be by the same number of witnesses, and be as conclusive of the fact as would be required to establish an original will. The animus republicandi must be shown, that is, it must be shown that it was the intention of the testator at that time, that the will in question was and should be his will. The identity of the will must be shown, or in other words, that the will produced is the same will to which the testator referred his declarations. The witnesses need not be called for the purpose, for that is not required in order to establish an original will; nor need the will be present at the time of such declarations. In Havard v. Davis, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 406, only one of the two witnesses saw the will, and that not by the testator's directions. Nor need declarations be at the same time to the witnesses; they may be to one on one day, and to another on the next. It is sufficient if they satisfactorily show that after the date of the revocation, the testator declared his intention that the writing was his last will, and that fact is proved by two competent witnesses to the satisfaction of the jury. The evidence, however, ought to be clear and satisfactory, to establish this intention, as well as the identity of the writing referred to; as the fact is to depend on parol evidence, and there is no written evidence to establish the republication."

In Warner v. Warner, 37 Vt. 356, it was held that a will could not be republished by parol declarations of such a purpose or desire on the part of the testator.

A testator made his will in 1837, in his own handwriting, unattested, and it was placed among his valuable papers. Subsequently, in 1847, being about to leave the United States, he placed this will, together with other papers, in the hands of a friend, for safe keeping. It was held that this did not of itself amount to a republication of the will, and that, therefore, land acquired after 1837 did not pass under it. Den v. Speight, 9 Ired. (N. Car.) 288.

See Musser v. Curry, 3 Wash. (U. S.) 481; Campbell v. Jamison, 8 Pa. St. 499.

Whether this reasoning would be regarded as applicable to wills made since the passage of the Act of 1833 seems very doubtful. Fransen's Will, 26 Pa. St. 202; Broe v. Boyle, 108 Pa. St. 82; Gable v. Daub, 40 Pa. St. 229; Neff's Appeal, 48 Pa. St. 509.

Massachusetts.—Declarations of the testator to the effect that he destroyed a later will, intending thereby to revive an earlier one, have been admitted. Pickens v. Davis, 134 Mass. 252; Williams v. Williams, 142 Mass. 515.

Virginia and Kentucky.—In these states, it is expressly provided by statute that a will or codicil once revoked can only be revived by re-execution thereof, or by a duly executed codicil. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2678, citing Virginia Code (1873), ch. 118, § 9;

3. Republication by Codicil.—See CODICIL, vol. 3, p. 301.

4. Wills Revoked by Operation of Law.—A will revoked by operation of law, as by subsequent marriage and birth of children, can only be revived by republication, and where the local statute requires all wills to be formally subscribed and attested, or where publication is subjected to written solemnities, it cannot be revived by parol.¹

5. Consequences of Republication.—Republication brings the will republished down to the date of republishing, and makes it speak, as it were, at that time,² extending its operation to subjects Kentucky Gen. Stat. (1873), ch. 113, § 11.

Georgia.—It is expressly enacted that a parol republication in the presence of the original witnesses is good. Georgia Code (1882), § 2478.

Virginia and West Virginia.—It is expressly enacted, after the analogy of the English Wills Act of Victoria (see preceding note), that a duly executed codicil only revives the will to the extent to which an intent to revive such will is shown. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2678; Virginia Code (1873), ch. 118, § 9; West Virginia Laws (1882), ch. 84, § 8.

Holographic Wills are within the principle, and cannot be republished by parol. Sawyer v. Sawyer, 7 Jones (N. Car.) 134.

Manner of Re-execution.—Generally speaking, it is a good republication for the testator to call witnesses of the required number into his presence and declare the paper to contain his last will, and then cause the witnesses to subscribe their names by way of attestation. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 443. See Dunn v. Dunn, L. R., 1 P. & D. 277; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369; Matter of Simpson, 56 How. Pr. (N. Y. Surrogate Ct.) 125; Carey v. Baughn, 36 Iowa 540.

Resigning.—If the signature remain intact, the instrument need not be resigned. It is sufficient to acknowledge the old signature before the required number of witnesses, with proper formalities. Such acknowledgment is good for either execution or re-execution. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 443.

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 446. See Long v. Aldred, 3 Add. 48; In re Wollaston, 12 W. R. 18; Carey v. Baughn, 36 Iowa 540; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369; Brady v. Cubitt, Doug. 31.

In James v. Shrimpton, 1 Prob. Div. 431, the testator having duly executed a will, afterward married. On the day of, and after, the marriage ceremony, he executed a codicil, by which he made a provision for his wife, and in all other respects revived, ratified, and confirmed his will. His wife predeceased him, and on his death the codicil, which had been in his possession, could not be found. Declarations of the testator of a desire to adhere to his will were proved extending up to the latest period of his life. It was held that the testator could not have intended by the destruction of the codicil to render his will inoperative, and that the court would therefore grant probate of the will and of the codicil as contained in a draft from which the original was prepared for execution.

2. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 450. See Brownell v. DeWolf, 3 Mason (U. S.) 486; Brimmer v. Sohler, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 118; Haven v. Foster, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 543; Luce v. Dimock, 1 Root (Conn.) 82; Van Kleeck v. Reformed Protestant Dutch Church, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 457; Kip v. Van Cortland, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 346; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 370; Gilmore's Estate, 154 Pa. St. 523; Den v. Snowhill, 23 N. J. L. 447; Davis v. Taul, 6 Dana (Ky.) 51; Armstrong v. Armstrong, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 269; Sharp v. Wallace, 83 Ky. 587; Murray v. Oliver, 6 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 55; Dunlap v. Dunlap, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 305; In re Murfield's Will, 74 Iowa 479; Hawke v. Enyart, 30 Neb. 149. Compare Ware v. People, 19 Ill. App. 196.

A testator bequeathed to his daughter G., wife of the defendant, "exclusive of what he advanced to her and her husband, shortly after their marriage, in money, furniture, etc., and of the money her husband had since received from him, and part of it never refunded, $3,325, payable in one year from his decease." He made a bequest for which have arisen between its date and publication,¹ curing another daughter, exclusive of a similar advance, and of moneys paid her husband on his transferring worthless bonds to the testator. The testator had made advances to G., and lent money to her husband, who had assigned for the benefit of his creditors, compromised at 75 cents on the dollar, and given the testator a bond for this proportion of his debt. He had also paid the other creditors the remaining 25 per cent., and partially paid the testator for that amount. Subsequently to the date of the will, another loan was made to the husband, and the whole amount of this indebtedness was included in a bond given to the testator who subsequently made a codicil altering the provisions made in the will for other legatees. It was held that the estate being solvent, the bond and interest thereon were discharged by the will, which spoke from the date of the codicil. Goale v. Smith, 4 Pa. St. 376.

1. 1 Wms. Exrs. *219. See Neall v. Pickard, 2 No. Cas. 406; Monypenny v. Bristow, 2 R. & M. 117; Mooers v. White, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 375; Den v. Maney, 1 Murph. (N. Car.) 258; Haven v. Foster, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 540; Jones v. Shewmaker, 35 Ga. 151; Beall v. Cunningham, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 390; Jack v. Shoenberger, 22 Pa. St. 416.

"This consequence of republication was not so important with respect to personalty as it was with regard to realty, before the passing of the new Statute of Wills (1 Vict., ch. 26); because a will of personalty, if it contained prospective words sufficiently comprehensive, would operate on the personal estate of the testator, to which those words applied, although acquired since the making of the will, without any republication of it; whereas no real estate, which the testator had not at the date of the will, would pass by it, however express, comprehensive, and general the words, or however manifest the intention of the testator might be. Consequently, no after purchased lands could pass, nor any lands which did not remain in the same condition from the date of the will to the death of the testator, unless there were a republication, according to the solemnities required by the Statute of Frauds; for any, the least, alteration, or new modeling of the estate after the will, was an actual revocation." Wms. Exrs. *220; 1 Saund. 277-

278e, note to Duppa v. Mayo, 1 Saund. 277.

In states in which it is provided by statute that the will shall speak from the death, and after acquired realty pass thereunder, this distinction has ceased to be of importance.

In order that republication may have the effect of extending the operation of the will to after acquired real estate, the words of the will must be of such character, as if used at the date of republication, and include the estate in controversy. Haven v. Foster, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 541. See Monypenny v. Bristow, 2 R. & M. 117.

Lapsed Bequests Not Revised.—Republication does not revive a devise or bequest which has lapsed by the death of the devisee, a legatee, in the testator's lifetime. Thus, if a testator devises lands to his nephew John, who dies in his lifetime, and he afterward has another nephew of the same name, the republication of the will would be inoperative to carry the property to the second nephew John. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *200, *201; Drinkwater v. Falconer, 2 Ves. 626; Doe v. Kett, 4 T. R. 601. See Campbell v. Jamison, 8 Pa. St. 498. Compare Perkins v. Micklethwaite, 1 P. Wms. 275.

Legacies Adeemed or Satisfied.—Legacies which have been adeemed or satisfied will not be revived by republication. Drinkwater v. Falconer, 2 Ves. 626; Powys v. Mansfield, 3 Myl. & C. 359; Paine v. Parsons, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 318; Langdon v. Astor, 16 N. Y. 57; Ware v. People, 19 Ill. App. 196.

In Powys v. Mansfield, 3 Myl. & C. 376, Lord Cottenham said: "It is very true that a codicil republishing a will makes the will speak as from its own date for the purpose of passing after-purchased lands, but not for the purpose of reviving a legacy revoked, adeemed, or satisfied. The codicil can only act upon the will as it existed at the time; and, at the time, the legacy revoked, adeemed, or satisfied formed no part of it. Any other rule would make a codicil, merely republishing a will, operate as a new bequest, and so revoke any codicil by which a legacy given by the will had been revoked, and undo every act by which it may have been adeemed or satisfied. The cases are consistent with this rule, as defects in execution,¹ and revoking any will of date prior to that of the republication which is inconsistent with the will republished.² If the will republished has codicils added to it, the prima facie presumption is that the testator intended to republish the will as amended by the codicils, and not otherwise.³ Interlineations and alterations inserted in the will at the time of the execution of the Drinkwater v. Falconer, 2 Ves. 623; Monck v. Monck, 1 Ball & B. 298; Booker v. Allen, 2 Russ. & M. 270; and the case of Roome v. Roome, 3 Atk. 181, is not an authority against these decisions, because the codicil was not considered in that case as reviving an adeemed legacy, it having been decided that there was no ademption; but the codicil was referred to as an additional proof that no ademption was intended."

1. McCurdy v. Neall, 42 N. J. Eq. 333; In re Murfield's Will, 74 Iowa 479. But see Sharp v. Wallace, 83 Ky. 584. See further CODICILS, vol. 3, p. 301.

Republication Does Not Cure Defects of Expression.—"The effect of republication can never extend further than to give the words of the will the same force and operation as they would have had if the will had been executed at the time of republication; it cannot invest with a devising efficacy expressions which originally had none; and, therefore, where (Lane v. Wilkins, 10 East 241), a testator, who was devisee in tail of certain lands, in allusion to them, said: 'which, though I could now legally dispose of, I mean fully to confirm to the devisees in remainder,' and afterwards suffered a common recovery of the lands, to the use of himself for life, remainder to such uses as he, by deed, will, or codicil, should appoint. He then executed a codicil, whereby he expressly confirmed the will; and it was contended that the effect of the whole was to pass the estates in question to the remaindermen; but the court of K. B. held that the will contained no devise, the expressions rather importing an intention to leave the property alone, than to dispose of it, and that the codicil could not alter the construction." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *201. See Campbell v. Jamison, 8 Pa. St. 499.

2. 1 Wms. Exrs. *217; Serocold v. Hemming, 2 Lee Ecc. 490; Walpole v. Orford, 3 Ves. Jr. 402; Walpole v. Cholmondeley, 7 T. R. 138; Rogers v. Pittis, 1 Add. 38. See CODICILS, vol. 3, p. 301.

Revocation of Intermediate Will by Codicil Republishing Former.—In Rogers v. Pittis, 1 Add. 38, it was held that a codicil operates as the republication of that will to which it applies; and, consequently, as the revocation of any intermediate will. Sir John Nicholl said: "I apprehend it to be clearly settled that making a codicil to a will republishes that will—that a codicil, even of personalty, if executed so as to act on the subject, that is, if attested by three witnesses, republishes a will of lands; so that a will of personalty a fortiori, or a mixed will, so far as respects personalty, is republished by a codicil, whether so attested or not. No evidence of intention to republish is requisite, in either case; the very act of making the codicil, prima facie at least, infers the intention. It is true, indeed, that this prima facie inference may be rebutted by proof that the act was done by the deceased in error, or obtained from him by fraud. So the cancellation of a will may be shown to have taken place in error, or the execution of a new will to have been procured by fraud. Prima facie at least, however, the making of a codicil to a will as much republishes that will as a will is revoked, prima facie, by its cancellation, and as a new will, prima facie, annuls and makes void any will of a prior date. Secondly, the republication of a will is tantamount to the making of that will de novo; it brings down the will to its own date, and makes it speak, as it were, at that time. In short, the will so republished is, to all intents and purposes, a new will. Consequently, upon the ordinary and universal principle, that, of any number of wills, the last and newest is that in force; it revokes any will of a date prior to that of the republication."

3. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 450; Powell on Devises (Jarman's ed.) 624; Crosbie v. MacDonald, 4 Ves. Jr. 610, per McAlvanby, M. R. See Bunny v. Bunny, 3 Beav. 109; Cartwright v. Shephard, 17 Beav. 301; Grand v. Reeve, 11 Sim. 66. Compare Alsop's codicil, are confirmed by it, and entitled to probate, and it may be proved by extrinsic evidence that the alterations were made before the execution of the codicil.¹

XIV. GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF INTERPRETATION—(See INTENT, vol. 11, p. 372; INTERPRETATION, vol. 11, p. 507).—The general rules for the interpretation of wills may be found discussed in the article on interpretation. We purpose, under this head, to present more fully the adjudged cases illustrating these general rules.

1. Intention of the Testator.—The fundamental rule in the construction of wills is, that the intention of the testator, if not inconsistent with some established rule of law, must control.²

Appeal, 9 Pa. St. 374; Wikoff's Appeal, 15 Pa. St. 281.

1. Tyler v. Merchants' Tailor Co., 15 Prob. Div. 216; Burge v. Hamilton, 72 Ga. 569. And see Linnard's Appeal, 93 Pa. St. 313.

2. Bell v. Hogan, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 536; Moore v. Dudley, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 170; Capal v. M'Millan, 8 Port. (Ala.) 197; Leavens v. Butler, 8 Port. (Ala.) 380; Thrasher v. Ingram, 32 Ala. 646; Holms v. Williams, 1 Root (Conn.) 332; Lutz v. Lutz, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 72; Kelly v. Stinson, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 387; Baker v. Riley, 16 Ind. 479; Crerar v. Williams, 145 Ill. 625; Johnson v. Mayne, 4 Iowa 180; Augustus v. Seabolt, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 155; Maupin v. Goodloe, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 399; Atty. Gen'l v. Wallace, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 611; McBrayer v. McBrayer, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 18; Flournoy v. Flournoy, 4 Bush (Ky.) 519; Brown v. Brown, 1 Dana (Ky.) 39; Armorer v. Case, 9 La. Ann. 288; Thorame's Succession, 12 La. Ann. 384; Tappan v. Deblois, 45 Me. 122; Bowly v. Lammot, 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 4; Elder v. Elder, 50 Me. 535; Steward v. Pattison, 8 Gill (Md.) 46; Smith v. Donnell, 9 Gill (Md.) 84; Holmes v. Mitchell, 4 Md. Ch. 162; Eliot v. Carter, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 436; Malcolm v. Malcolm, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 472; Sawyer v. Baldwin, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 378; Hayden v. Stoughton, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 536; Crocker v. Crocker, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 257; Lamb v. Lamb, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 375; Wright v. Barrett, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 41; Dewey v. Morgan, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 295; Richardson v. Noyes, 2 Mass. 56; Davis v. Hayden, 9 Mass. 514; Allen v. White, 97 Mass. 504; Sorsby v. Vance, 36 Miss. 564; Lucas v. Lockhart, 18 Miss. 466; Austin v. Watts, 19 Mo. 293; Hall v. Chaffee, 14 N. H. 215; Brearely v. Brearely, 9 N. J. Eq. 21; Stokes v. Tilly, 9 N. J. Eq. 130;

Sims v. Sims, 10 N. J. Eq. 158; Current v. Current, 11 N. J. Eq. 186; Den v. Crawford, 8 N. J. L. 90; Den v. Snitcher, 14 N. J. L. 53; Mullany v. Mullany, 4 N. J. Eq. 16; Olmsted v. Harvey, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 102; Cole v. Cole, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 608; Lasher v. Lasher, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 106; Jackson v. Jansen, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 73; Morton v. Morton, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 457; Bradhurst v. Bradhurst, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 331; Mason v. Mason, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 433; Chapin v. Marvin, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 538; Crosby v. Wendell, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 548; Winder v. Smith, 2 Jones (N. Car.) 327; Gillis v. Harris, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 267; Decker v. Decker, 3 Ohio 157; Stevenson v. Evans, 10 Ohio St. 307; McKeen's Appeal, 42 Pa. St. 479; Bender's Appeal, 3 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 210; Christy v. Christy, 162 Pa. St. 485; Belshoover v. Brandt, 18 Pa. St. 473; Watson v. Woods, 3 R. I. 226; Guery v. Vernon, 1 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 69; Heyward v. Brailsford, 2 Bay (S. Car.) 255; Collin v. Green, 2 Mill Const. (S. Car.) 346; McLemore v. Blocker, 1 Harp. Eq. (S. Car.) 272; Ellis v. Woods, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 19; Anderson v. McCullough, 3 Head (Tenn.) 614; Philleo v. Holliday, 24 Tex. 38; Reno v. Davis, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 283; Mooberly v. Marye, 2 Munf. (Va.) 453; Land v. Otley, 4 Rand. (Va.) 213; Wooton v. Redd, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 196; Burwell v. Mandeville, 2 How. (U. S.) 560; Lane v. Vick, 3 How. (U. S.) 464; Inglis v. Sailors' Snug Harbour, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 113; Finlay v. King, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 346; Smith v. Bell, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 68; Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. (U. S.) 289.

A testator, several years before making his will, gave to his son B. certain slaves, naming them; and to his son A. certain other slaves, naming them. By his will he gave to his son B. the slaves by name which he had before given to his son A., and to A. the slaves by name which he had before given to B., stating at the close of each bequest that he had before given the slaves as he gave them by will. The first gifts were admitted. It was held that it must have been the testator's intention to confirm the previous gift, and that the will must be so construed. Lowe v. Carter, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 377.

Where a testator seized of a large real and personal estate made a partial disposition of it to some of his children and to his widow, to the latter of whom he gave household and kitchen furniture, slaves, horses, farming implements, and many other things applicable and necessary for housekeeping and farming operations, leaving out the bulk of his land, and then adds, "I will that all the balance of my estate, real and personal, be disposed of as the law directs," it was held to have been the intention of the testator that the widow should have her dower assigned in the mode directed by law in cases of intestacy. Bost v. Bost, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 484.

A testator, by his will, devised to his wife during her life the use of the homestead at B., except such part as he bequeathed to his son. He then gave to her an annuity of $400 during life, charged upon certain lots situate in the city of New York, which lots were divided among his children. It was provided that those lots should be held to pay their respective shares of the annuity, in proportion to their assessed valuation in the public inventory of the property. It was further provided that the testator's son M. should never possess the right to sell the house and lot devised to him, but that the same should be held by a trustee to be appointed by the court, and the trust should cease upon the decease of M.; and that M. should not receive any income from the rents or profits of the premises, unless he should become the head of a family, in which case the entire annual income should accrue to him; or if M. should remain single, at the age of forty years and upward, and become infirm or unable to support himself, the trustee was directed to grant him an annuity of $100 for his support. It was further provided that as there were certain incumbrances upon the New York lots, the proceeds and profits of the estate, after the necessary current expenses were paid therefrom, should be appropriated to pay the annuity.

It was held that the provisions of the will, in behalf of the testator's children, demonstrated that it was not his intention to give the widow both dower and the annuity; and that she was bound to elect between the annuity and her dower. Dodge v. Dodge, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 414.

Where a testator bequeathed slaves to a trustee in trust for his daughter and her children, "free and exclusive of any control of her husband," she having children at the time, it was held to manifest an intention to make special provision for the daughter, and that she, consequently, took an estate for life in the negroes, with a remainder to her children born, or that might be born thereafter. Faribault v. Taylor, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 219.

Where a testator, after devising all his property, real and personal, to his children to be taken possession of by them on their severally coming of age, added a clause declaring his will to be that his wife should hold the entire estate until his children severally came of age, and that they severally, before they took possession of his estate, should give security according to their several proportion of the estate, for and towards a competent maintenance of his wife, during her natural life, it was held that the wife of the testator was entitled to retain possession of the estate, until provision was made for her by her children in the manner directed by the will, it being the evident intention of the testator to put the provision for the wife beyond all hazard. Jackson v. Wight, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 109.

B., by his last will, after ordering his executors to sell his personal estate, authorizes his executors thereafter named, to sell and dispose of his real estate; and directs them, after they have disposed of his real estate, and converted the same into money, to place the same at interest on good security, and to pay the interest annually to his wife; and, "at and after his wife's decease, he gives and bequeaths to his son, an only child, all the principal sums of money and security in the hands of his executors." He then named his wife and two others as executors. One of the executors renounced; and after the decease of the widow the surviving executor sold the real estate. It was held that the object of the testator in creating the power being to make a provision for his wife, it ceased at her death, and the lands descended to the heir at law. Jackson v. Jansen, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 73.

A testator after disposing of certain portions of his property, devised all the residue of his estate to the complainant, in trust, to hold the income, rents, and profits of one-third part of said residue for the use of his grandson, the defendant, during his life; such income, etc., to be paid to him from time to time, as they might accrue, and after his death to his children in fee; and failing children, to other grandchildren to whom the remaining two-thirds were in like manner devised. At the time of the testator's decease, the grandson was indebted to him in a large sum of money; but it appearing that the testator did not mean to regard him as his debtor in respect thereof, it was held that to enforce the payment of this debt out of the defendant's share of this income and profits, would defeat the clear intention of the testator to provide his grandson a competent support. Waters v. Waters, 1 Md. Ch. 196.

A testator, after reciting in his will (which was executed in Germany) his intention to depart in a few days for America, "for the purpose of seeking his fortune," devised as follows: "He declares his deliberate will to be that, in case he should die unmarried in a foreign country, the small Opeman Cottage, situated at R., should be retained as heritable property, by his near relation F., the eldest daughter of I., farmer at R., whom he hereby constitutes his sole heiress. She and her father, however, shall be held to pay to the three daughters of W. and D." a certain sum, as a legacy. "To his guardian C. he devises the turf moor at," etc. After this the testator came to Baltimore, where he died, unmarried and without issue, leaving personal estate. It was held that upon the true construction of this will F. was entitled to the testator's personal estate, as it was his intention by the words "sole heiress," to give her everything he had, except the property specifically devised, in the event of his dying unmarried in a foreign country. Siemer v. Siemer, 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 100.

The testator devised his real property to two of his children, F. and S., and then declared, "that full justice may be done, it is my wish that my son J. may be equal with my other two children in the division of the land, out of money he now owes me." The intention of the testator being to make his children equal, and the indebtedness of J. to the testator not being equal to the shares of his brother and sister, he was entitled to a sufficiency out of the residue of the estate, after paying the specific legacies, to make his share equal to the portion of land allotted to his brother. Wirt v. Cannon, 4 Coldw. (Tenn.) 121.

Where a testator bequeathed property to children, as a class, and ordered the profits to be "applied annually to their use," it was held that it was the intention of the testator, apparent from the words of the will, that, at the division of the property, the surplus rents and profits should be so divided that each child should get only a pro rata share of what had accrued since its birth. Simpson v. Spence, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 208.

Where a testator having seven daughters made provision for one by name, and then ordered that the residue of his property should be divided into nine equal parts, three of which were to go to his three sons, and the other six parts to be allotted to his daughters, it was held that the meaning of the testator was that each of the six daughters remaining to be provided for, should have one of the six remaining equal parts. Shepard v. Wright, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 20.

B., in 1819, devised real estate to M., his wife, for life or during her widowhood, to support herself, her three daughters, and one F., and on the decease or marriage of M., the same to go to F. for life to support himself and the daughters; and, after the death or marriage of M. and the death of F., to go to the daughters in fee. Power was given to M. so long as she remained single, and afterward to F., to sell and convey the real estate, provided that S. should in writing, signed with his hand, approve and consent to such sale; but no such sale should be valid without such approbation and consent; and the moneys arising from the sale were directed to be invested as S. should direct. It was held that under the will M. had only a naked power in respect to the disposition of the property, and that the power could be rightfully exercised only by a sale of the estate in fee; and that a lease, as a conveyance under the power of sale in the will, was void, as not fulfilling the intent of the testator. Waldron v. Chastaney, 2 Blatchf. (U. S.) 62.

A testator 1, bequeathed to his daughter B. a slave at a fixed valuation;

2, declared that his children should take equal shares in the whole of his estate, the special legacies to them to be taken at the valuations affixed as part of the estate; 3, that the part of his estate which should fall to his daughter B. should be placed in the hands of R. for her special use and benefit, he consenting to act as guardian. B. subsequently married, and the testator, by a codicil to his will, directed that the portion of the property devised to B., if she died before her husband, should be equally divided between her sisters and brother; that the slave should be sold and the proceeds placed in the hands of R. for the benefit of B., and that B. should receive the interest of her portion of the estate, to be paid to her annually by the said R. or his legal representatives. It was held that, to effectuate the intention of the testator, it was necessary that R. should be clothed with the legal title, and that he took B.'s share as her trustee. Hall v. Howdeshell, 33 Mo. 475.

Where the Intent Is Illegal.—A testator, having devised his home farm to his wife for life, with remainder in fee to his daughters as tenants in common, and his other property to his son in fee, by a clause in his codicil recited, that since the execution of his will he had purchased a wood lot called "Swanston's Lot" "as a support for" his home farm "and the estate devised to his son," and devised the same as follows: "Now, therefore, I do give and devise and bequeath the said parcel of land to my said wife, and my three daughters" (naming them), "on the express condition that the same is not at any time to be cleared or converted into arable land, but that they are respectively to be allowed to take therefrom as much wood and timber as will be required and necessary with care for the purpose for which it was purchased as aforesaid." It was held that the several devisees took a fee-simple interest in the "Swanston's Lot," and not a mere incorporeal hereditament or easement to cut timber and wood upon it; the attempt to prescribe the mode in which the lot was to be used during all time, was repugnant to the devise and void. Smith v. Clark, 10 Md. 186.

Legal Not Actual Intention to Be Considered.—In Martindale v. Warner, 15 Pa. St. 471, it was held that it is not the actual intention of the testator, but the legal intention which is the rule by which a will is to be construed. See Eckford v. Eckford (Iowa, 1892), 53 N. W. Rep. 345; Hannes' Estate, 2 Pa. Dist. Ct. Rep. 21. Compare Worthington v. McPherson, 5 Gill (Md.) 51.

Express Declaration as to Intent Unnecessary.—In Hughes v. Hughes, 14 La. Ann. 85, it was held that an express declaration to effectuate a certain disposition is not necessary where the intention is apparent on the face of the will.

But where there is an express disposition, though it may be the result of oversight or mistake on the part of the testator, it cannot be controlled by inference which is not necessary and indubitable. Harrison v. Haskins, 2 Patt. & H. (Va.) 388.

Where No Interpretation Is Needed.—If the language of the will is free from doubt, there is no need to apply the rules of interpretation. Brasher v. Marsh, 15 Ohio St. 108; Carr v. Jeanerett, 2 McCord (S. Car.) 66; Still v. Spear, 45 Pa. St. 170; Tebbs v. Duval, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 345.

In Tebbs v. Duval, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 349, Joynes, J., in delivering the opinion of the court said: "Where a will affords no satisfactory clue to the intention of the testator, the court must, from the necessity of the case, resort to legal presumptions and the rules of construction. But such rules yield to the intention of the testator apparent in the will, and have no application where the intention thus appears."

In Still v. Spear, 45 Pa. St. 170, Strong, J., delivering the opinion of the court, thus comments on the rules which aid in the construction of wills: "There are certain principles, it is admitted, which are intended to assist in ascertaining a testator's intention, and which are controlling when that intention is doubtful. . . . Among them are the maxims that the first taker of a legacy is presumed to be the chief object of a testator's bounty; that in doubtful cases legacies are held to be vested rather than contingent; absolute, rather than defeasible; that the law favors such a construction as will render estates alienable, and that the primary intent is to be regarded rather than the secondary, if both cannot prevail. But these principles . . . are only applicable in cases of doubtful construction. They are never allowed to defeat a plain intent expressed."

Where the Will Is Absurd.—The intention of the testator is to be carried out, though the purposes of the will are unreasonable or absurd. In re Lewis' Estate, 152 Pa. St. 477; Marshall v. Hadley, 50 N. J. Eq. 547.

2. Surrounding Circumstances.—In the construction of a will, the court will put themselves as far as possible in the position of the testator by taking into consideration the circumstances surrounding the testator at the time of the execution of the will.¹

1. Snyder v. Warbasse, 11 N. J. Eq. 466; Lawrence v. Mitchell, 3 Jones (N. Car.) 190; Barham v. Gregory, Phill. Eq. (N. Car.) 243; Mitchener v. Atkinson, 63 N. Car. 585; Lassiter v. Wood, 63 N. Car. 360; Edens v. Williams, 3 Murph. (N. Car.) 27; Wolfe v. Van Nostrand, 2 N. Y. 436; White v. Olden, 4 N. J. Eq. 343; Leigh v. Savidge, 14 N. J. Eq. 124; Boudinot v. Bradford, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 170; Eyster v. Young, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 511; Hutchinson's Appeal, 47 Pa. St. 84; Hooe v. Hooe, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 245; Rhett v. Mason, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 541; Wells v. Wells, 37 Vt. 483; Clark v. Peck, 41 Vt. 145; Smith v. Wells, 7 Met. (Mass.) 240; Popkin v. Sargent, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 327; Perry v. Hunter, 2 R. I. 80; Moore v. Moore, 18 Ala. 242; Bond's Appeal, 31 Conn. 183; Starling v. Price, 16 Ohio St. 29; Danbridge v. Washington, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 370.

A will is to be construed not only by its language, but by the condition of the testator's family and estate. Lassiter v. Wood, 63 N. Car. 360.

In construing a will, the court will put themselves in the position of the testator, in reference to the property and the relative claims of his family, the relations subsisting between him and them, and the circumstances which surround him, in order to be enlightened where the provisions are doubtful or may admit of more than one interpretation, but not where the meaning of the language of the will is plain. Perry v. Hunter, 2 R. I. 80.

In Adamson v. Ayres, 5 N. J. Eq. 353, upon a question of intention, Chancellor Halstead said: "The situation of the estate, as to the comparative amounts of realty and personalty, might certainly be shown. Suppose the estate consisted of $100 in land and $10,000 in personalty, the court would not shut its eyes to that fact; and it would have a legitimate influence on the reading of the will."

In the construction of ambiguous expressions, the situation of the parties may very properly be taken into view.

The ties which connect the testator with his legatees, the affection subsisting between them, the motives which may reasonably be supposed to operate with him, and to influence him in the disposition of the property, are all entitled to consideration in expounding doubtful words, and ascertaining the meaning in which the testator used them. Smith v. Bell, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 68.

A testator, the only son of his mother by her first marriage, who would have been his sole heir at law if he had died intestate, devised to her all his property, "to hold the same to her and her heirs and assigns, to be for the sole use of herself, her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns." The mother was wife of a second husband, but lived separate from him, and had no support from any source besides her own labor, her husband being intemperate, and not of ordinary capacity or prudence in the management of property. It was held that the mother took the estate to her separate use, to the exclusion of her husband and his creditors. Smith v. Wells, 7 Met. (Mass.) 240.

A testator left a will containing the following devise: "I give to my wife all my real estate so long as she shall remain my widow, but on her decease or marriage the remainder thereof I give to my children and their heirs respectively, to be divided in equal shares between them." At the date of the will and at his death, the testator had four children living, and four others had previously died, all leaving children. No reason appeared for supposing that the testator had any preference for his surviving children over these grandchildren. It was held that the testator must be understood to have intended these grandchildren by the word "heirs," and that the real estate was to be distributed in equal shares among the surviving children and the representatives of the deceased ones. Bond's Appeal, 31 Conn. 183.

Where the testator, at the time of the making of the will, owned a residence in the town of G. which occupied three lots on the plan of said town, and

3. All Parts of a Will Construed Together.—In giving construction to a will all the parts of it should be examined and compared also owned in said town another house and lot disconnected with the former, besides other real estate without the town, which said town lots he was in the habit of listing for taxes as two lots, and he devised to his wife his dwelling house and lots in said town, with certain other property—and to his son the balance of his property, real and personal, it was held that he intended that his widow should take the dwelling house and three lots upon which it was situated, and that his son should take the other house and lot in said town. Blackmore v. Blackmore, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 365.

A testator made his will in the following words: "That all my property, both real and personal, of which I am now possessed, or may hereafter accrue, be retained and continued together till my youngest child may have arrived at lawful age; at which time, all the above property, with its increase, from now to the time of my youngest child arriving at lawful age, to be equally divided among all my lawful heirs." His estate consisted of lands, slaves, stock, plantation utensils, etc. He died leaving a widow and five infant children. It was held that the testator's intention, to be gathered from the will and these circumstances, was that the family relation should be continued between the widow, children, and slaves, and the plantation be carried on for the benefit of the family until the majority of said youngest child, and that the wife took a vested interest of one-sixth part of the entire estate. McLeod v. McDonnell, 6 Ala. 236.

M. made a will directing that all his property, both real and personal, be sold and divided in fourteen shares, and naming the persons who were to take a share. One of the daughters, who was then dead, had married G., by which marriage there were several children. The will contained the following clauses: first, "one share to G. and his children," second, "Be it understood what each legatee has received heretofore, it is to be reduced out of their part." The will, then proceeding to specify what each had received in dollars and cents, whether in money or property, said: "G. and his wife have received $650, including one negro woman and her children, by the name of

Amy, that they received at ten years old, of their part." M., at the time of his death, owned the slaves but let G. have the use of them, taking his notes for their hire as it became due. It was held that the title to the slaves vested by the will, by implication, in G. and his children, and not in G. alone, as did also the one-fourteenth, minus the $650. Gannaway v. Tarpley, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 572. In delivering the opinion of the court in this case, Caruthers, J., said: "The rule that the intention of the testator must be collected from the will itself, and not elsewhere, or by parol evidence, except in cases of latent ambiguity, does not forbid a reference to the state of facts under which the will was made; but an investigation of the surrounding circumstances, often tends to illustrate the true intention and meaning of the testator. 'To this end, it is obviously essential that the judicial expositor should place himself as fully as possible in the situation of the person whose language he has to interpret; and guided by the light thus thrown on the testamentary scheme, he may find himself justified in departing from the strict construction of the testator's language.' 1 Jarm. on Wills 363, and notes. Thus facts may be proved to show the state of the testator's property, or such facts as were known to him, that may have influenced the disposition of his property in a particular way. Ellis v. Essex Merrimack Bridge, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 243. According to these rules and authorities, we may, in this case, look to the facts, that the daughter of the testator was dead; that complainants were his grandchildren, and that the woman, Amy, and her children had been claimed by him up to the time of making his will; and that this claim had always been admitted by his son-in-law, Tarpley, in executing his notes for nominal hire, and permitting him to pay taxes, doctors' bills, etc., for them. We may also take into consideration the speaking fact that these slaves were of three or four times the value of the one-fourteenth part of the estate given to Tarpley and his children. In view of these facts, it could hardly be supposed that it was the intention of the testator to give all these slaves to the son-in-law, and still make him equal with his children in the one-fourteenth."

and the intention of the testator ascertained, not from a part alone, but from the whole instrument.¹

1. Strong v. Cummin, 2 Burr. 770; Lane v. Vick, 3 How. (U. S.) 464; Cook v. Weaver, 12 Ga. 47; Hunter v. Stembridge, 12 Ga. 192; Bivins v. Crawford, 26 Ga. 227; Jackson v. Hoover, 26 Ind. 511; Baker v. Riley, 16 Ind. 479; Baker v. Reilly, 16 Ind. 475; Wing v. Mix, 17 Ind. 344; Clark v. Preston, 2 La. Ann. 581; Boone's Succession, 7 La. Ann. 127; Lebeau v. Trudeau, 10 La. Ann. 164; Parker v. Wasley, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 477; Cheshire v. Purcell, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 571; Selden v. King, 2 Call (Va.) 73; Stevenson v. Evans, 10 Ohio St. 307; Mutter's Estate, 38 Pa. St. 314; Bowly v. Lamont, 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 4; Shreiner's Appeal, 53 Pa. St. 106; Zimmerman v. Anders, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 220; Grove's Estate, 58 Pa. St. 429; Ewing v. Ewing, 2 Desaus. (S. Car.) 451; Orr v. Moses, 52 Me. 287; Dill v. Dill, 1 Desaus. (S. Car.) 241; Garrett v. Garrett, 1 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 96; Sawyer v. Baldwin, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 378; Dewey v. Morgan, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 295; Cook v. Holmes, 11 Mass. 528; Quincy v. Atty. Gen'l, 160 Mass. 431; Tuttle v. Howell, 17 N. J. Eq. 176; Campbell v. Campbell, 13 Ark. 513; Alston v. Branch, 1 Murph. (N. Car.) 356; Alexander v. Alexander, 6 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 229; Mitchener v. Atkinson, 63 N. Car. 585; Lawrence v. Mitchell, 3 Jones (N. Car.) 190; Patton v. Patton, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 494; Coakley v. Daniel, 4 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 89; Jenkins v. Hall, 4 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 334; Scales v. Scales, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 163; Benjamin v. Welch, 73 Hun (N. Y.) 371; Bundy v. Bundy, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 135; Pond v. Bergh, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 140; Hoxie v. Hoxie, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 187; Starling v. Price, 16 Ohio St. 29; Turner v. Patterson, 5 Dana (Ky.) 292; Logan v. Moore, 7 Dana (Ky.) 80; Milner v. Calvert, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 472; Dunlap v. Shreve, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 334; Levering v. Levering, 14 Md. 30; Jarnagin v. Conway, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 50; Palmer v. Benson, 19 Ala. 594; Thrasher v. Ingram, 32 Ala. 646; Coleman v. Camp, 36 Ala. 159; Young v. McIntire, 3 Ohio 502; Gold v. Judson, 21 Conn. 616; Minor v. Ferris, 22 Conn. 371.

In the case of Cook v. Holmes, 11 Mass. 528, which was a case of construction of a will, in which the language of the testator was susceptible of two constructions, it was said to be the sole duty of the court, in giving a construction, to ascertain the real intent and meaning of the testator, which could only be gathered by adverting to the whole scope of the provisions made by him for the objects of his bounty, and not by confining the attention to one isolated paragraph, which might have been drawn up without a knowledge of technical words.

"The testator's meaning," said Lord Mansfield, in Strong v. Cummin, 2 Burr. 770, "must be collected from the will itself, by attending to the several parts of it, and comparing and considering them together."

In Dill v. Dill, 1 Desaus. (S. Car.) 241, Rutledge, Ch., delivering the opinion of the court said: "It is a rule that the construction must be of what appears on the face of the will; that no technical form is necessary to convey the testator's meaning, which must be collected by attending to the several parts of it, and considering and comparing them together; not by an arbitrary construction, but by a violent and strong presumption arising from the several parts of it, compared and taken together."

In Shreiner's Appeal, 53 Pa. St. 106, it was maintained that it was of particular importance in the interpretation of wills, even more than in the case of other instruments, that the various parts should be treated as a whole, all be construed together.

Thus, where a testator evinced, by the context of his will, a clear intention to divide an estate equally between two of his sons, and a daughter and her children, the following devise, to wit, "all the property to be divided between A. and S. and M., share and share alike,—to S. and M. and their heirs and assigns as gifts—to A. as a loan for the benefit of her and her children," it was held to mean a limitation to A. for her life, remainder to her children, as well those in being, as those that might be born thereafter. Coakley v. Daniel, 4 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 89.

Children is a term of purchase, not of limitation; and being used in a will, with nothing indicating that heirs were meant by it—thus: "To my daughter C. P., I give, to her and her children, the fifty acres, etc., to each an equal part," imports that they are to take equal shares as tenants in common—the mother and seven children eight shares. And no time being fixed by the will, for enjoyment by the children, or for partition, the estate vests, at the testator's death, in the mother and children then living. But the terms, "C. P. is to have no more than the fifty acres of land above stated"—that being all devised to C. P. and her children—explain the devise, supra, and show that the intention of the testator was that his daughter (C. P.) should have the whole for life—her children the remainder; which is, therefore, the true construction of the will. Turner v. Patterson, 5 Dana (Ky.) 292.

Where a testator, in one clause of his will, limits a use in property on event of survivorship between his daughters upon the decease of his widow, but in a subsequent clause gives the use of the property to the survivor upon the death of the other without leaving a child or children, it appearing from the context that he wished to make the bulk of his estate unalienable as long as possible, it was held that the latter disposition should prevail over the former, and that the contingency was open until the death of one of the daughters without leaving a child. Jenkins v. Hall, 4 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 334.

The last will and testament of W. provided as follows: "Eighth.—After the payment of all my debts, and taking out the expenses of administration, and all legacies provided for and set apart so as to ascertain the net balance of estate, etc., I give and bequeath to my daughter S. one entire tenth part of such entire balance so ascertained,"—by the third clause one-fifteenth of such balance had been bequeathed to his granddaughter, R. "Ninth.—I give, devise and bequeath all the rest and residue of estate, real, personal, and mixed, to my three sons, A., W. and R., to them and their heirs and assigns forever, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike. Tenth.—It is my will and desire, and I hereby direct and empower my executors hereinafter named, to sell and dispose of all my real estate at public sale, and on such terms as they in their discretion may think most conducive to the interests of all those interested therein." It was held that the intention of the testator must be gathered from the whole will; from a consideration of all the provisions contained in it, without regard to the order in which those provisions occur, and that the intention of the testator, as gathered from the whole will, was that his real estate should be converted into money, and constitute, with his personal estate, a common fund, out of which should be first paid debts, legacies, and expenses, and the net balance thereof divided amongst the parties named in said third, eighth, and ninth clauses, as therein provided. Smithers v. Jackson, 23 Md. 273.

A. by his will gave to his widow the use of his farm and dwelling house, and farming utensils and stock on the farm, and his family of colored people, and his household and kitchen furniture, until his son B. (an only child of three years old) should arrive at the age of twenty-one years; and gave his widow three hundred dollars a year out of his estate during her natural life; all of which was in lieu of her dower. He next gave certain pecuniary legacies. And then gave all the residue of his property, real and personal, to his son B., to him, his heirs and assigns forever; and directed his executors to rent out his houses and lots in Paterson, and to put out the proceeds thereof, together with the moneys and securities for money, to interest, for the benefit of his son until he should arrive at the age of twenty-one years; and to give his said son, out of his estate, a college education, and a decent support until he should arrive at the age of twenty-one years. And then made provision as follows: "But if my said son B. should die having no children, then my will is, and I do dispose of my property in the following manner:" (giving the said residue of his real and personal estate, so devised and bequeathed to his said son, to other persons.) The son B. attained twenty-one, and afterward died without having a child. It was held that on B.'s attaining twenty-one, his estate was absolute and unqualified; the clause giving the property over being held to mean the death of B. under twenty-one, having no children. Pennington v. Van Houten, 8 N. J. Eq. 272.

A testator devised to his wife, during her life or widowhood, all his estate except what he should by his will otherwise dispose of. He then gave certain property to his children to be theirs at his decease. Then came this clause: "Also, at the decease of my wife, I give to my son G., my man Stephen, and to my son L., my man Charles. Also, I give and bequeath to my son L. W., all my lands, etc." (on which he had previously given his wife a life estate.) "Also, to my son L. W., I give my two boys Dick and David with their mother." It was held that these negroes did not pass immediately to L. W., but only in remainder after the death or marriage of the widow. Sherrill v. Echard, 7 Ired. (N. Car.) 161.

General Principles of Interpretation. WILLS. All Parts of a Will Construed Together.

Introductory Words to Be Considered.—A testator ordered as follows: "As to such worldly estate wherewith it hath pleased God to bless me in this life, I give and dispose of the same in the following manner, to wit: Item—It is my will, and I order and direct, that all my just debts and funeral expenses shall be first paid and satisfied. Item—It is my will, and I give, devise, and bequeath, unto my beloved wife Elizabeth, eighty-five acres and allowance of land of my dwelling plantation, whereon I now live, situate in Spring Garden township, in the county aforesaid, she to have the choice of the same wherever she thinks proper; and, further, I do give and bequeath unto my said wife all my movable property or personal estate, of what kind or nature the same may be, together with all the moneys due me, by bond, note, or book account, to and for her only proper use and behoof whatever. Item—It is further my will, that my brother and sisters divide the residue of my said plantation amongst themselves, share and share alike." He left no other real property. It was held that the introductory words in the will were to be considered in order to ascertain the intention of the testator, and that the widow took a fee in the land devised to her. Schrivver v. Meyer, 19 Pa. St. 87.

Clause Inoperative as Devise to be Considered.—Where, by a will made in 1722, real estate was devised to a religious corporation, and the will contained a devise to residuary devisees, it was held that though the devise to the corporation was void ab initio for the purpose of passing the estate, still it was operative as showing the intent of the testator, and that the devise to the corporation indicating the testator's intention not to give the property to the residuary devisees, it did not pass to them, but descended to the heir at law. Van Kleeck v. Reformed Protestant Dutch Church, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 457. See Van Cortlandt v. Kip, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 591. Compare Warley v. Warley, 1 Bailey Eq. (S. Car.) 397, in which case it was held that if a will devising both real and personal estate be not duly executed to pass real estate, the portion relating to real estate cannot be regarded to ascertain the intent of the testator.

Revoked Clauses to Be Considered.—Though a devising clause in a will be afterward annulled by a codicil, yet it may operate as a declaration of intent to prevent the property passing to the residuary devisee. Van Cortlandt v. Kip, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 591.

And in Colt v. Colt, 32 Conn. 432, it was held that while it is a rule that a will and codicil are to be read as of the date of the codicil, yet where legacies have been revoked by the codicil, it does not follow that the will is to be read as if they had never been in it; the revoked clauses may be read for the purpose of understanding better the meaning of the clauses which remain.

Will and Codicil Construed Together.—A will and its codicil are to be construed together as parts of the same instrument. Boyle v. Parker, 3 Md. Ch. 42; Gray v. Sherman, 5 Allen (Mass.) 198; Ward v. Saunders, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 174; Negley v. Gard, 20 Ohio 310; Howland v. Union Theological Seminary, 5 N. Y. 193; Collier v. Collier, 3 Ohio St. 373.

In Westcott v. Cody, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 343, Chancellor Kent, lays it down "as a clear and settled rule that a will and codicil are to be taken and construed together, in connection with each other, as parts of one and the same instrument."

A codicil is a part of a will, and is to be construed with it; and may as a context confirm, vary, or altogether change an intention expressed in the body of the will. Leavens v. Butler, 8 Port. (Ala.) 380.

The testatrix made the following devise: "I will that all my estate, both real and personal, which may come to the hands of my executors for the use and benefit of my daughters, Levisa Saunders, Catherine Campbell, and Celia Stone, remain in the hands of my executors, in trust for my said daughters during their natural lives, and to the heirs of their body forever." To which there was this codicil. "In pursuance of my last will and testament, it is my desire that my young negroes already devised by will be divided as follows, to wit: To my daughter Levisa Saunders and heirs of her body, negro

4. In What Sense Words Are to Be Understood.—In the construction of wills, words, in general, are to be understood in their plain and usual sense, in the absence of a manifest intention to the contrary.¹ Where, however, the testator uses technical words, he is girl, Polly," etc. It was held that the clause of the will above quoted fixed and controlled the rights of Levisa Saunders and the other legatees, and that the codicil only designated what particular property each legatee should take under the restrictions and limitations of the will, and that Levisa Saunders took only a life estate in the property. Ward v. Saunders, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 174.

A testator, in the body of his will, gave one-half of the residue of his property to his daughter, and the other half to certain of the children of a deceased daughter, some of whom were minors, "to be divided in equal shares between them," and appointed certain persons "to be trustees to my grandchildren above-named." By a codicil he gave to another child of his deceased daughter, who had been omitted in the former enumeration, "such an amount of my property as shall make him an equal heir with his brothers and sisters" mentioned in the will. It was held that one-half of the residue should go to the daughter of the testator and the other half to all of his grandchildren named in the will and codicil, to be divided equally between them; the legal title being vested in the first instance in the trustees, for the immediate distribution of their respective shares to those of the grandchildren who had become of age, and to the others when they should become of age. Gray v. Sherman, 5 Allen (Mass.) 198.

1. Harrison v. Ward, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 236; Logan's Appeal, 39 Pa. St. 237; Bedford's Appeal, 40 Pa. St. 18; Soohan v. Philadelphia, 33 Pa. St. 9; Gable's Appeal, 40 Pa. St. 231; Ketchin v. Beatty, 5 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 83; Nash v. Savage, 2 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 50; Seibels v. Whateley, 2 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 605; Atty. Gen'l v. Jolly, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 379; Murphey v. Murphey, 20 Ga. 549; Hunter v. Stembridge, 12 Ga. 192; Robertson v. Johnston, 24 Ga. 102; Brearely v. Lalor, 15 N. J. Eq. 108; Fisher v. Skillman, 18 N. J. Eq. 229; Crosby v. Mason, 32 Conn. 482; Hemingway v. Hemingway, 22 Conn. 462; Lord v. Lord, 22 Conn. 595; Birney v. Richardson, 5 Dana (Ky.) 424; Griffith v. Coleman, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 600; Smith v. Gage, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 60; Beck v. McGillis, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 35; Hone v. Van Schaick, 3 N. Y. 538; Harvey v. Olmsted, 1 N. Y. 483; Roosevelt v. Thurman, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 220; Roy v. Latiolas, 5 La. Ann. 557; Michel v. Beale, 10 La. Ann. 352; Leonora v. Scott, 10 La. Ann. 651; Hart v. White, 26 Vt. 260; Vannerson v. Culberston, 18 Miss. 150; Danbridge v. Washington, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 370; Wright v. Denn, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 239.

Where J. made his will as follows: "All my estate, both real and personal, to me belonging, and which I shall die possessed of, after the payment of my personal charges, and the expenses of settling my estate, I give and bequeath to my two nephews, I. and H.;" it was held that the word "possessed," as used by the testator, denoted ownership, and not merely personal and corporal occupation; and consequently that such a portion of the land devised to J. as aforesaid, by his father, as was retained until his death, and the proceeds of such part thereof as had been sold, under a resolution of the general assembly, on condition that the avails should be invested in other real estate, to be conveyed to J. on the same terms, limitations, and restrictions as the estate so sold, passed, by such will, to the devisees of J. Hemingway v. Hemingway, 22 Conn. 463.

"Children."—The word "children" does not, ordinarily and properly speaking, comprehend grandchildren or issue generally. Their being included in that term is permitted in two cases only, viz., from necessity, which occurs when the will would remain inoperative unless the sense of the word "children" were extended beyond its natural import, and where the testator has already shown by other words that he did not intend to use the term "children" in its proper actual meaning, but in a more extensive sense. Brokaw v. Peterson, 15 N. J. Eq. 194; Churchill v. Churchill, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 466; Mowatt v. Carow, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 328; Phillips v. Beall, 9 Dana (Ky.) 1; Ward v. Cooper, 69 Miss. 789; Marsh v. Hague, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.)

174; Tier v. Pennell, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 354; Walker v. Williamson, 25 Ga. 549; Willis v. Jenkins, 30 Ga. 167; Ruff v. Rutherford, 1 Bailey Eq. (S. Car.) 7; Ward v. Sutton, 5 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 421; Mordecai v. Boylan, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 365; Jarden's Estate, 3 Phila. (Pa.) 438; Tipton v. Tipton, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 252; Izard v. Izard, 2 Desaus. (S. Car.) 308; Osgood v. Lovering, 33 Me. 464; Hughes v. Hughes, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 121; Merryman v. Merryman, 5 Munf. (Va.) 440; Boylan v. Boylan, Phill. Eq. (N. Car.) 160; Schoonmaker v. Sheely, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 490; Tayloe v. Gould, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 388; Sheets v. Grubbs, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 339; Tayloe v. Mosher, 29 Md. 443; Cutter v. Doughty, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 305.

A testatrix made bequests of personal property to H. and to O., with a proviso in a subsequent part of the will that if either should die without children, the bequests made to either of them should "fall back to the survivor." On an application by A. to the orphans' court, for the absolute payment of the bequest, and without security for those to whom it was to fall back, it was held that although in a will the word "children" (which is ordinarily a word of personal description) may be construed to mean issue (which ex proprio vigore indicates succession), where the context affirmatively shows that the testator intended so to use it, it must be held to its ordinary and usual meaning when no such intention is manifest. Bedford's Appeal, 40 Pa. St. 18.

A testatrix by a will divided the residue of her estate into two parts, giving one-half to her brothers and sisters of the whole blood, and the children of such of them as were deceased, share and share alike, the children of each deceased brother or sister to take together for their share, an amount equal to the share of a surviving brother or sister, and no more; the other half of her estate was given to the brothers and sisters of her deceased husband and their children, in similar terms. It was held that under the will "grandchildren" were excluded and not entitled to any portion of the estate, as the word "children" in itself did not include "grandchildren" or "issue,"—therefore it was error in the orphans' court to award any portion of the estate to the grandchildren of the deceased brothers and sisters of her deceased husband. Gable's Appeal, 40 Pa. St. 231.

Under a devise or bequest to "children" as a class, natural children are not included unless the intention of the testator to include them is plain, either by express designation or necessary implication. Heater v. Van Auker, 14 N. J. Eq. 159. Compare In re Gray's Trusts (1892), 3 Ch. 88.

It was held, in Thompson v. McDonald, 2 Dev. B. Eq. (N. Car.) 463, that the rule, that a limitation in a will, upon the decease of a legatee leaving no "children" living, at his death, has reference to legitimate children only, is not affected by the statute enabling illegitimate children to inherit.

A testator, who was one of two illegitimate children of the same parent, devised certain land to his "mother," naming her, and "her children forever." By a later clause he made certain bequests to his sister, the other illegitimate child, by name. It was held that the term "children" in the will did not include the illegitimate child. Shearman v. Angel, 1 Bailey Eq. (S. Car.) 351.

Where a testator bequeathed a slave to his daughter, Ellenore, for life, with remainder to his granddaughter Harriet, having two granddaughters of that name, one of whom was illegitimate, and the daughter of Ellenore, and the other legitimate, it was held that the remainder went to the legitimate granddaughter, and that the term "grandchildren," in its established sense, applied strictly to the one and not to the other. Ferguson v. Mason, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 618.

Nor does the term "children" apply to any persons who are not of the blood of the testator or person designated as the parent. Barnes v. Greenzebach, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 41; Cutter v. Doughty, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 305.

The legal signification of children, grandchildren, or of issue, and every word of like species, when used in a will as descriptive of persons who are to take as devisees or legatees, applies to those only who are of the blood of the testator or person designated as the parent, and does not include those who may have acquired the name or character of children by marriage. Barnes v. Greenzebach, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 41.

But a different intent may be manifest from the will. Thus, where a testator gave certain property to his "children," to be equally divided between them, such as had received advancements to account therefor, and among them naming D. as having "in his lifetime" received a specified sum, it was held that the term "children" included his grandson B., the son of D. Scott v. Nelson, 3 Port (Ala.) 452.

"Orphan."—Stephen Girard devised certain portions of his estate to the city of Philadelphia, in trust, to found a college for white orphans. It was held that according to popular acceptation a fatherless child was an orphan. Soohan v. Philadelphia, 33 Pa. St. 9.

"Descendants."—The word "descendants" in a will cannot be construed to include any but lineal heirs, without clear indication, in the will, of the testator's intent to extend its meaning. Baker v. Baker, 8 Gray (Mass.) 101; Barstow v. Goodwin, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 413. Matter of Collins, 70 Hun (N. Y.) 273.

Thus, a sister's child is not a descendant of the testator. Armstrong v. Moran, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 314.

"Nephews and Nieces."—A testator by will made a residuary bequest to "all my nephews and nieces." It was held that only her own nephews and nieces were included, not those of her husband. Green's Appeal, 42 Pa. St. 25.

"Estate."—The word "estate," used in a will in its application to real property, may be used to express either the quantity of interest devised, or to designate the thing devised, or both, and the sense in which it is used must be determined from the will itself. Hart v. White, 26 Vt. 267; Hammond v. Hammond, 8 Gill & J. (Md.) 436. When used to designate the thing devised, the word "estate" is, in its ordinary sense, sufficiently comprehensive to embrace every description of property. Archer v. Deneale, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 585. See Thornton v. Burch, 20 Ga. 791.

"Property."—The word "property," in its ordinary sense, includes everything which may be the subject of ownership; as money and securities. Pell v. Ball, Spears Eq. (S. Car.) 48.

A bequest of "movable property" or "movables," when there is nothing in the will to restrict the meaning of those terms, includes slaves and every other specie of personal property. Whitehurst v. Harker, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 292.

But the word "property" will not be used in this unrestricted sense when the context will not allow such a construction. Alexander v. Alexander, 6

Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 229; Young v. M'Intire, 3 Ohio 499.

Thus a direction in a will to sell the testator's personal as well as real property, and divide the income among his five children, was held to mean the proceeds of the sale of the property, and not to include notes, bonds, and mortgages. Bredlinger's Appeal, 2 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 461. See Scales v. Scales, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 163; Pippin v. Ellison, 12 Ired. (N. Car.) 61. Compare Hogan v. Hogan, 63 N. Car. 222; Thornton v. Burch, 20 Ga. 791.

"Money."—The word "money" in a will may be constructed to mean cash, or may stand for the entire personal estate; and is to be received in the one or the other sense, as will best effectuate the general intention of the testator, deduced from every part of the will. Where a testator bequeathed to his daughter household goods, a horse and a cow, "and also one-third of the remainder or balance of money that may be left after paying all my just debts and funeral expenses," and his intention was manifestly to divide his personal estate equally between his two children, it was held that the nature of his personal property rendering such a construction necessary to effectuate his intention, the word "money" must be construed to mean "personalty." Smith v. Davis, 1 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 158.

But it was held in Re Carr's Estate, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 643, that the word "money" can only be used in a will to pass the whole personal estate, when the purpose of the testator is unmistakable. See In re Levy's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. Rep. 36; Sweet v. Burnett (Ct. of App.), 49 N. Y. St. Rep. 113.

In Brearily v. Lalor, 15 N. J. Eq. 108, it was held that "moneys" must be understood in its legal and popular sense, and will not include bonds, mortgages, promissory notes, or other securities for the payment of money, unless it appears by the will or from the condition and circumstances of the testator's estate that it was the intention to pass them. Compare Fulkerson v. Chitty, 4 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 244.

General Terms Restricted by Enumeration of Particulars.—General and comprehensive terms may be restrained in sense to less than their natural import by the context, as where they are coupled with an enumeration of things. Perry v. High, 3 Head (Tenn.) 349; Delamater's Estate, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 362; Allen v. White, 97 Mass. 504; presumed to employ them in a technical sense, unless a clear intention to use them in another is apparent from the context.¹

Ulrich's Appeal, 86 Pa. St. 386; Freeman v. Coit, 96 N. Y. 63; Webster v. Wiers, 51 Conn. 569. Compare Jarnagin v. Conway, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 50.

In the following cases it was held that where devises or bequests are made by words of enumeration, which are coupled in the same clause with collective words, or words of general description, the latter may be confined to matters ejusdem generis. Given v. Hilton, 95 U. S. 591; Dole v. Johnson, 3 Allen (Mass.) 364; Jameson, Appellants, 1 Mich. 99; Funchess v. Seibe, 27 Miss. 26; Lock v. Noyes, 9 N. H. 430.

1. Grandy v. Sawyer, Phill. Eq. (N. Car.) 8; Hawley v. Northampton, 8 Mass. 37; Smith v. Gage, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 60; Heuser v. Harris, 42 Ill. 425; Dean v. Lyon, 8 Ind. 71; Johnson v. Johnson, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 331; Evans v. Godbold, 6 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 26; Petrow's Estate, 58 Pa. St. 424. See Marshall v. Hodley, 50 N. J. Eq. 547.

Effect of Precedent.—In Hawley v. Northampton, 8 Mass. 3, it is said to be an important rule in the construction of wills, to give to specific words of the testator that technical effect which has been derived from usage and sanctioned by a series of decisions. Henderson v. Rost, 11 La. Ann. 541. See Annable v. Patch, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 360.

In Smith v. Bell, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 68, it is said: "The construction put upon words in one will, has been supposed to furnish a rule for construing the same words in other wills; and thereby to furnish some settled and fixed rules of construction, which ought to be respected. We cannot say this principle ought to be totally disregarded; but it should never be carried so far as to defeat the plain intent, if that intent may be carried into execution without violating the rules of law. It has been said truly that cases on wills may guide us to general rules of construction; but unless a case cited be in every respect directly in point, and agree in every circumstance, it will have little or no weight with the court, who always look upon the intention of the testator as the polar star to direct them in the construction of wills."

"Heirs."—The word "heirs," in its technical sense, includes all persons who take real estate by operation of law, upon the death of the person last seised. Seabrook v. Seabrook, 1 McMull. Eq. (S. Car.) 201; Eby's Appeal, 50 Pa. St. 311; Porter's Appeal, 45 Pa. St. 201; Rogers v. Brickhouse, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 301; Sharp v. Kleinpeter, 7 La. Ann. 264; Aspden's Estate, 2 Wall. Jr. (C. C.) 368; Croom v. Her-ring, 4 Hawks (N. Car.) 398.

If, however, a testator uses an expression that clearly indicates that he did not intend to use the word "heir" in its legal acceptance, that intention must prevail. Williamson v. Williamson, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 329; Love v. Buchanan, 40 Miss. 758; Den v. Zabriskie, 15 N. J. L. 404; Bailly v. Patterson, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 156; Gold v. Judson, 21 Conn. 616.

Thus, to effectuate the intention of the testator, the term "heirs" may be construed to mean "children." Van-norsdall v. Vandeventer, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 137; Shepard v. Nabors, 6 Ala. 631; King v. Beck, 15 Ohio 559; Eby v. Eby, 5 Pa. St. 461; Braden v. Cannon, 1 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 60; Blair v. Snodgrass, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 1; Boyd v. Robinson, 93 (Tenn.) 1; Cruger v. Heyward, 2 Desaus. (S. Car.) 94; Moore v. Henderson, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 459; Harper v. Wilson, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 465; Thomas v. White, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 177; Harris v. Philpot, 5 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 324; Trexler v. Miller, 6 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 248; Bryant v. Deberry, 2 Hayw. (N. Car.) 356; Knight v. Knight, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 167; Bowers v. Porter, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 198; Ellis v. Essex Merrimack Bridge, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 243; Den v. Wortendyk, 7 N. J. L. 363.

The word "heirs" may also be construed to mean legatees, if the testator's intention is manifest. Collier v. Collier, 3 Ohio St. 369. It has also been construed to mean devisee. Weir's Will, 9 Dana (Ky.) 434.

When the term "heirs" is used in reference to personal estate, it has been held to be equivalent to distributees. McCabe v. Spruill, 1 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 189; Corbitt v. Corbitt, 1 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 114; Kiser v. Kiser, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 28; Freeman v. Knight, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 72; Lombard v. Boyden, 5 Allen (Mass.) 249; Loring v. Thorndike, 5 Allen (Mass.) 257.

If it clearly appears from the will

Words occurring more than once in a will are presumed to be used always in the same sense when the context does not show a contrary intention.¹ The rules of grammar will be upheld and applied, unless the testator clearly uses the words or expressions incorrectly.²

that the word "heirs," as used therein, means "heir" apparent, it will be so considered in giving construction to it. Morton v. Barrett, 22 Me. 257. Also, to give effect to the intention of the testator, "heirs" may be construed to mean lineal descendants only. Bundy v. Bundy, 38 N. Y. 410.

A by his will devised his real estate to his wife during life and after her death to his heirs. At his death A. left no child nor the descendants of any, and no father, mother, brother, or sister surviving him. It was held that the words "my heirs," as used in the will, must be construed to mean the next of kin and not the widow, who, under the law, would have been the sole heir. Rusing v. Rusing, 25 Ind. 63. See Reen v. Wagner, 51 N. J. Eq. 1.

"Heirs of the Body."—It is a well settled rule that the words, "the heirs of the body," "heirs lawfully begotten of the body," and other similar expressions, are appropriate words of limitation, and must be construed as creating an estate tail (which, by our statute, is converted into a fee simple), unless there be something else in the deed or will from which a reasonable inference can be drawn that the words were used in a sense different from their legal and technical signification. (Lackland v. Downing, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 33; Richardson v. Scobee, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 58; Western v. Sharp, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 144, and other subsequent cases.) Johnson v. Johnson, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 331.

"Executor."—It is always intended that an executor takes under a bequest to him as a trustee, unless the intention to give him a beneficial interest is clearly expressed. Chestnut v. Strong, 1 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 122.

"Dower."—Where one devised to his wife "her full and reasonable dower in all his estate, according to the laws of this state," it was held that the term "dower" must be taken in its legal acceptation and be limited exclusively to the realty. Brackett v. Leighton, 7 Me. 383.

"Inherit."—Though the term "inherit" is technical, yet, to effectuate the intention of the testator, it was held applicable to lands devised or conveyed by a parent or ancestor to a child or descendant. DeKay v. Irving, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 646.

"Devise," "Legacy," "Bequest."—Though the words "devise," "legacy," and "bequest" are technical words, they may be applied indifferently to real or personal property, if such appears from the context of the will to have been the testator's intention. Ladd v. Harvey, 21 N. H. 514; Williams v. McComb, 3 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 450.

The word "bequeath," though not in its primary and legal acceptation synonymous with "devise," may be so construed if the context requires it. Dow v. Dow, 36 Me. 211.

"Legatee."—The court will apply the popular rather than the technical meaning of the term "legatee" in a will, and read it as if it was distributee, when, after looking at all the circumstances and all the clauses of the will, the alternative is between this disposition and a total failure of the dispositive scheme for want of certainty, and what seems to have been the testator's meaning. Lallerstedt v. Jennings, 23 Ga. 571.

Technical Language Unnecessary.—"The rule of construction of wills is, that no technical form is necessary to convey the testator's meaning." Mansfield, J., in Strong v. Cummin, 2 Burr. 770. See Annabel v. Patch, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 360.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 842; 2 Ch. Cas. 169; 3 Drew. 472; Eliot v. Carter, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 436; Varrell v. Wendell, 20 N. H. 431.

2. Den v. Posten, 1 Ired. (N. Car.) 166; Pond v. Bergh, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 140; Dewey v. Morgan, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 295; McGinnis v. Harris, 7 Jones (N. Car.) 213.

In delivering the opinion of the court, in Hart v. White, 26 Vt. 269, Bennett, J., said: "In the construction of a will the grammatical one, if obvious, should not be departed from, unless it would lead to absurdity or unless there is

5. Some Effect Given to a Will Rather Than None.—Some effect should be given to a will, if possible, and hence, where two constructions are possible, one of which will sustain, and the other defeat, the will, the one sustaining it should be preferred.¹

6. Effect Given to Every Part of a Will if Possible.—A will should be so construed as to give effect to every part thereof without change or rejection, provided an effect can be given to it not inconsistent with the general intent as gathered from the entire will.² Where, however, effect cannot be given to a whole will, or to an entire provision thereof, consistently with the rules of law, enough in the will to satisfy the mind that it was not the intention of the testator to have it construed according to its grammatical construction." See Putnam v. American Bible Soc., 37 Vt. 271.

Interpretation by Means of Punctuation.—In the interpretation of a will, punctuation may be resorted to perhaps, when no other means can be found absolving an ambiguity, but not in cases where no real ambiguity exists except what punctuation creates. Arclarius v. Sweet, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 403. See Napier v. Davis, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 282.

Ignorance of the Testator to Be Considered.—In Delph v. Delph, 2 Bush (Ky.) 171, it was observed that the fact that the testamentary document was unskillfully written by the testator himself, must be considered in the judicial interpretation of his pervading intent, and Lord Mansfield, in Strong v. Cummin, 2 Burr. 770, seems to have been of the same opinion. Commenting upon the will, he said: "It is very plain from the spelling and phraseology of this will that it is of a rough draft of the testator's own making or dictating, without assistance from any person capable of advising him." See Wooton v. Redd, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 196.

In Brasher v. Marsh, 15 Ohio St. 108, it was said that the rule for construing the language of a will was less rigid than it was in regard to any other instrument.

In Re Shrie's Estate, 35 W. N. C. (Pa.) 60, it was held, however, that mere illiteracy of the testator raises no presumption of an incorrect use of words in his will.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills 156; Chapman v. Brown, 3 Burr. 1626; Banning v. Banning, 12 Ohio St. 437.

In Den v. Crawford, 8 N. J. L. 97, Ewing, C. J., in giving the opinion of the court said: "It is only when a reasonable construction and the discovery of the intent of the testator are utterly hopeless that all effect should be denied to a will."

Where a spoliated will, as admitted to probate, devises a tract of land by a name, such as "Click farm," the boundaries of which farm, as existing at the time the will was made, are well known and capable of easy ascertainment, and this description by name is followed by an incorrect designation of the specific limits of the land, which erroneous limits are ambiguous, and may or may not include after acquired lands not intended to be included in the devise of the farm, such inaccurate designation of boundaries will not vitiate the devise, which ought to be so construed as to sustain the will. Banning v. Banning, 12 Ohio St. 437. The court, in delivering the opinion in the above case, said: "When the description in a deed or will is so ambiguous in its terms as to render it impossible to identify the property intended to be passed thereby, to that extent such deed or will, will be inoperative and void for uncertainty; but when a description is to some extent ambiguous, but is reasonably and fairly susceptible of two constructions, one of which would sustain and the other destroy the instrument, it is the duty of the jury to adopt such construction as will sustain, rather than that which will destroy, it; and in the present case if they find there is some degree of ambiguity in the description of the Click farm devised by the will, as found by the probate judge, but this description when fairly construed is susceptible of two constructions, one of which would render it invalid and the other give effect to it, it is their duty to adopt the latter construction."

2. Pue v. Pue, 1 Md. Ch. 382; Strong v. Cummin, 2 Burr. 770; James v. Pruden, 14 Ohio St. 254; Duncan v. Phillips, 3 Head (Tenn.) 415; Winder any part of it which is conformable to such rules will be upheld, if it can be separated from the rest of the will without violating the testator's general intent.¹

v. Smith, 2 Jones (N. Car.) 331; Jones v. Doe, 2 Ill. 276; Leavens v. Butler, 8 Port. (Ala.) 380; Dill v. Dill, 1 Desaus. (S. Car.) 237; McCasland v. Martin, 4 Bush (Ky.) 198; Bowly v. Lammot, 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 4; Owen v. Owen, Busb. (N. Car.) Eq. 121; Cheeves v. Bell, 1 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 234; Edens v. Williams, 3 Murph. (N. Car.) 27; Per Sedgwick, J., in Parsons v. Winslow, 6 Mass. 169; Per Gaston, J., in Dalton v. Scales, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 523; Mutter's Estate, 38 Pa. St. 315; Shreiner's Appeal, 53 Pa. St. 106; Wright v. Denn, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 239.

In the construction of a will the court will give effect to all the words without rejecting or controlling any of them, if it can be done by a reasonable construction not inconsistent with the manifest intention of the testator. Dawes v. Swan, 4 Mass. 208.

In Jones v. Doe, 2 Ill. 276, Smith, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said, that it was a settled maxim of interpretation, that when the court can fairly ascertain the real intent of the testator, and give effect to the several parts of the will without rendering any component part inoperative, it is bound to do so.

1. Parks v. Parks, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 107; DeKay v. Irving, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 646; Lang v. Ropke, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 363; Williams v. Williams, 8 N. Y. 525; Savage v. Burnham, 17 N. Y. 561; Tucker v. Tucker, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 99; Harris v. Clark, 7 N. Y. 242; Miller v. Chittenden, 4 Iowa 252; Lepage v. McNamara, 5 Iowa 124; Cobb v. Battle, 34 Ga. 458.

In Oxley v. Lane, 35 N. Y. 340, where the general and primary intention of the testator was in conformity with the rules of law, ulterior limitations by which a perpetuity was sought to be established were held to be void, and were disregarded, not being allowed to affect the validity of the primary disposition of the estate.

Where a will contains different trusts, some of which are valid and others void or unauthorized by law, or where there are distinct provisions as to different portions of the testator's property, some of which by law are valid and others invalid, those which are valid will be preserved unless those which are valid and those which are invalid are so dependent upon each other that they cannot be separated without defeating the general intent of the testator. Haxtum v. Corse, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 506.

A testator devised to his wife his dwelling house and furniture, and ordered the sum of $3,000 to be left or put at interest by his executor, and the interest thereof to be paid to his widow annually during her widowhood; and as to the said three thousand dollars he further directed, that at the marriage or decease of his widow, the same was to be put to interest by his executor for his son J. during his lifetime, and at his decease the principle to be paid to his sons C. and H.; and if one of them should die before his father, the survivor to take the whole. The widow refused to take under the will. It was held that as the said sum of $3,000 was to be invested for the use of J. only on the marriage or decease of the widow, that J. was not entitled to have the amount invested for his use on the refusal of the widow to take under the will; but it was directed that the balance in the hands of the administrator, which was less than $3,000, be invested, and allowed to accumulate until the marriage or decease of the widow, when the sum of $3,000 may be required to be invested for the benefit of J. if living, and if not, then to be paid to his sons as directed by the will. Knepley's Appeal, 17 Pa. St. 19.

All the parts of a will relating to the emancipation of negro slaves are void, although the rest may be valid. Pickard v. McCoy, 22 Ga. 28; Jolliffe v. Fanning, 10 Rich. (S. Car.) 186. Compare Bivins v. Crawford, 26 Ga. 225. In this case a testator bequeaths a life estate in his slaves to his widow, with directions to his executors to remove them at her death to a free country. And further, that if funds cannot be raised from the sale of his other estate, sufficient to cover the expenses of their transportation, that the negroes be hired out until money enough can be raised for that purpose. It was held that the will is void under the anti-manumission acts. And further, that in order to legalize the

7. Presumption in Favor of Construction Consistent with Law.—Where the language of a will is capable of two constructions, one of which is consistent and the other inconsistent with the law, the former must prevail.¹

8. Favor Shown by Law to Heir or Next of Kin.—In the construction of wills, it is a well established rule that the law favors the heir.² Thus, heirs at law are not to be disinherited by conjecture, but only by express words or necessary implication.³

will, it is not competent for the court to strike out one of the provisions of the instrument.

1. James v. Pruden, 14 Ohio St. 254; Thompson v. Newlin, 8 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 32; Burke v. Valentine, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 412; Butler v. Butler, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 304; DuBois v. Ray, 35 N. Y. 162; Quincy v. Atty. Gen'l, 160 Mass. 431; In re McBride's Estate, 152 Pa. St. 192.

In giving the opinion of the court in Reilly v. Fowler, Wilmot's Opinions 298, Wilmot, C. J., said: "As the law has been now settled about a century and universally known, it ought to appear clearly and explicitly that the testator meant an illegal limitation. The proof of such an intention lies upon the party who asserts it. If that intention does not appear, if there is the least doubt about it, the presumption would be that he meant a disposition he was unable to make by the rules of law, and not a disposition condemned by the law."

Ranney, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in James v. Pruden, 14 Ohio St. 254, said: "When an instrument of any kind is open to two constructions, the one consistent and the other repugnant to the law, or the one will give effect to the whole, and the other will destroy a part, the former must always be adopted."

A general direction in a will as to a trust will be taken as intended to be consistent with law, and the subsequent acts of the trustee cannot affect such intention. Thompson v. Newlin, 8 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 32.

2. Biddle's estate, 28 Pa. St. 59; Walker v. Parker, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 166; Mullarky v. Sullivan, 136 N. Y. 227; Pendleton v. Larrabee, 62 Conn. 393.

It not being clear from the language of the will that the testator, in devising a balance, intended to devise the balance of a particular fund or of his whole estate, the court of equity will give the will such a construction as will be most favorable to the heir at law. Bane v. Wick, 19 Ohio 328.

3. McIntire v. Ramsey, 23 Pa. St. 321; Bane v. Wick, 19 Ohio 328; Wright v. Hicks, 12 Ga. 155; Woolton v. Redd, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 196; Crane v. Doty, 1 Ohio St. 279; Wilkins v. Allen, 18 How. (U. S.) 385; Howard v. American Peace Soc., 49 Me. 288; Bender v. Dietrick, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 287; Hitchcock v. Hitchcock, 35 Pa. St. 397; Stewart v. Pattison, 8 Gill. (Md.) 46; Hoover v. Gregory, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 444; Thomas v. Thomas, 6 T. R. 671.

In Wright v. Hicks, 12 Ga. 155, Lumpkin, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "In the absence of anything in the will to the contrary, the presumption is, that the ancestor intended that his property should go where the law carries it, which is supposed to be the channel of natural descent. To interrupt or disturb this descent, or direct it in a different course, should require plain words to that effect."

In Bender v. Dietrick, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 287, Rogers, J., said "It is a maxim which applies here as well as in England, that an heir at law can only be disinherited by express devise or necessary implication, and that implication has been defined to be such a strong probability, that an intention to the contrary cannot be supposed."

Of two equally probable interpretations of a will, that one is to be adopted which prefers the relatives of the testators to strangers. Downing v. Bain, 24 Ga. 372.

In Vail v. Vail, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 69, Mitchell, J., said: "It is the legal duty of a father to support his children during their infancy, according to his ability; and although the legal obligation is not continued upon his estate after his death, yet every parent recognizes the moral obligation, and so natural is this feeling that, in any ambiguous case, it may be presumed that the parent was acting under its influence."

Instance of Devise Inoperative to Divest the Heir.—A will executed by the testator resident in Pennsylvania, after providing an annuity for the testator's wife, to be secured on his real and personal estate, and bequeathing different legacies, contained the following clause: "As to my debts, they will amount to very little; but, and after paying all claims and bequests, there will remain a considerable surplus which I give and bequeath in trust to my executors, be the same more or less" (to be applied to certain charities). It was held that the will did not give to the executors the testator's real estate, so as to disinherit his heirs, and that extrinsic evidence was not admissible to show, from the actual condition of his property, his own declaration and memoranda, that he must have meant to give the real estate. Wilkins v. Allen, 18 How. (U. S.) 385.

Instance of Devise Operating to Divest the Heir.—The testator gave all the rest and residue and remainder of his estate, real and personal, comprehending a large real estate in the city of New York, to the chancellor of the State of New York, and recorder of the city of New York, etc. (naming several other persons by their official description), to have and to hold the same unto them and their respective successors in office, to the uses and trusts, subject to the conditions and appointments declared in the will; which were, out of the rents, issues, and profits thereof, to erect and build upon the land upon which he resided, which was given by the will, an asylum, or marine hospital, to be called "The Sailor's Snug Harbor," for the purpose of maintaining and supporting aged, decrepit, and worn-out sailors, etc. And after giving directions as to the management of the fund by his trustees, and declaring that the institution created by his will should be perpetual, and that those officers and their successors should forever continue the governors thereof, etc., he adds, "it is my will and desire that if it cannot legally be done according to my above intention, by them, without an act of the legislature, it is my will and desire that they will, as soon as possible, apply for an act of the legislature to incorporate them for the purpose above specified; and I do further declare it to be my will and intention, that the said rest, residue, etc., of my estate should be, at all events, applied for the uses and purposes above set forth; and that it is my desire all courts of law and equity will so construe this, my said last will, as to have the said estate appropriated to the above uses, and the same should in no case, for want of legal form or otherwise, be so construed as that my relations, or any other persons, should heir, possess, or enjoy my property, except in the manner and for the uses herein above specified." It was held that this was a valid devise to divest the heir of his legal estate, or, at all events, to affect the lands in his hands with the trust declared in the will. Inglis v. Sailor's Snug Harbor, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 99.

Statutory Provision in Favor of Pretermitted Children.—Many of the states have statutes to the effect that any child for whom a testator has failed to provide in his will shall take a share of his property as if he had died intestate, unless it shall appear that such omission was intentional. See, on this point, Wilson v. Fosket, 6 Met. (Mass.) 400; Prentiss v. Prentiss, 11 Allen (Mass.) 47; Church v. Crocker, 3 Mass. 17; Wilder v. Goss, 14 Mass. 357; Blagge v. Miles, 1 Story (U. S.) 426; Loringa v. Marsh, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 337; Hargadine v. Pulte, 27 Mo. 423; Jourden v. Meier, 31 Mo. 40; Block v. Block, 3 Mo. 594; Bradley v. Bradley, 24 Mo. 311; Thomas v. Black, 113 Mo. 66; Case v. Young, 3 Minn. 209; Parker v. Parker, 10 Tex. 83; Rhoton v. Blevin, 99 Cal. 645; Mason v. McLean, 6 Wash. 31; Bower v. Bower, 5 Wash. 225; Hill v. Hill, 7 Wash. 409; In re Barker's Estate, 5 Wash. 390; Forbes v. Darling, 94 Mich. 621; In re Stebbins, 94 Mich. 304.

Presumption of Equality Among Children.—Where the meaning of a will is doubtful, the rule of equality among children may be taken as a guide of the interpretation. Thus, where a testator gave to his son J. $500, as an advancement, and afterward made his will devising all his estate equally among his seven children, in which he refers to the fact of the advancement and then says, "further I will that, if my estate amounts to more than seven times five hundred dollars, my son J. is to have a proportional part of it," it was held that J. was entitled to nothing until the other children received $500 each, and that in all beyond that, he was entitled to share equally with them. Malone v. Dobbins, 23 Pa. St. 296. See also Willcox v. Beecher, 27 Conn. 135.

A clause in the testator's will was as follows: "And whereas my wife has by will given her property to my said daughters, my will is, that the property of my said wife shall be estimated at its fair value, and the share of my son Edward, and the share given to the children of my son Seymour, and the share given to the children of my son George, shall, each share, be three hundred dollars more than the share each, given to my said daughters, after the estimated value of my wife's property is added to their respective shares." It was held that it was not the testator's intention that a son should receive a larger inheritance from both parents than a daughter, but that a son's proportion of the father's property should be large enough to counterbalance the disparity created by the mother's disposition of her estate, thereby securing to all his children an equal inheritance. Taylor v. Taylor, 23 Conn. 579.

Nor will mere negative words suffice; there must be an actual disposition of the estate to some other person.¹ And words equally plain are requisite to charge the estate of an heir, for a charge is pro tanto a disinheritance.²

9. Presumption Against Partial Intestacy.—The natural and reasonable presumption is, that when a will is executed, the testator does not intend to die intestate as to any part of his property.³

Presumption in Favor of the Statutory Form of Distribution.—Where a testator gives the whole or a part of his property to his next of kin, and leaves the proportion doubtful, it is natural to suppose that he intended the statutory form of distribution to prevail. Dunlap's Appeal, 116 Pa. St. 500; Geery v. Skelding, 62 Conn. 499.

1. Den v. Gaskin, Cowp. 657; Howell v. Barnes, Cro. Car. 382; Schauber v. Jackson, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 13; Wright v. Hicks, 12 Ga. 163; Gordon v. Blackman, 1 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 61; Hitchcock v. Hitchcock, 35 Pa. St. 393.

Where a will directed the executors to sell the lands to pay legacies and distribute the residue, and expressly disinherited the heir at law and declared that he should take nothing as heir, it was held that the direction to the executors to sell, conveyed merely a naked power without interest, and that until the power was executed, the fee of the land and the right to receive the profits was vested in the heir at law. Jackson v. Schaubert, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 187.

A testator devised real and personal property to be divided between a widow and her children, designating them, each child to have his or her share as he or she should arrive at maturity or marry, and the widow to have her portion for her natural life and to give or will to any of her children she might think proper; and in another clause of the will he declared it to be his will that "those of my children that I have heretofore given portions to, shall have no part nor portion in the estate that I may die possessed of" (naming them). The wife died intestate. It was held that the wife took an estate for life only, and that the share allotted to her should be divided among all the children of the testator. Haralson v. Redd, 15 Ga. 148.

But it has been held where there is a provision in a will that the share therein bequeathed to one of the next of kin is all that the testator intends he shall have, it will exclude him from the distribution of an undisposed of residue. Ford v. Whedbee, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 16.

2. Davis v. Gardiner, 2 P. Wms. 188; Leigh v. Savidge, 14 N. J. Eq. 134.

3. Leigh v. Savidge, 14 N. J. Eq. 124; Doe v. Latham, Busb. (N. Car.) 365; Apple v. Allen, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 120; Foust v. Ireland, 1 Jones (N. Car.) 184; Robertson v. Roberts, 1 Jones (N. Car.) 74; Gilpin v. Williams, 17 Ohio St. 396; Jarnagin v. Conway, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 50; Deadrick v. Armour, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 588; Gourley v. Thompson, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 387; Dole v. Johnson, 3 Allen (Mass.) 364; Dill v. Dill, 1 Desaus. (S. Car.) 241; Saxton v. Webber, 83 Wis. 619. Compare Reimer's Estate, 23 Pitts. L. J. N. S. (Pa.) 452.

In James v. Pruden, 14 Ohio St. 253, Ranney, J., said: "It very seldom happens that a man who goes to the trouble of making a will intends to die intestate as to any part of the property that he may own at the time of his death."

In Jarnagin v. Conway, 2 Humph.

XV. ADMISSIBILITY OF EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE.—See AMBIGUITY, vol. 1, p. 525; EVIDENCE, vol. 7, p. 92.

XVI. DETAILS OF TESTAMENTARY CONSTRUCTION—1. Words Descriptive of the Objects of the Gift—To What Period Referred.—In the absence of a contrary intent, words descriptive of the objects of a gift refer to the death of the testator, and not to the date of the will or period of execution.¹ Thus, under a gift to fluctuating (Tenn.) 50, this rule of construction is laid down in almost the exact words of our text. It was here held to be a principle, sanctioned by reason and authority, that when one engages in an act so solemn and important as the execution and publication of a last will and testament, he is not to be presumed as intending, with reference to any portion of his property, to die intestate.

In Doe v. Latham, Busb. (N. Car.) 365, Pearson, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The rule, ut res magis valeat quam pereat, comes in aid of the general presumption that one who makes a will intends to dispose of all his property."

On account of this presumption a will will be so construed as to embrace all the testator's property, if the words used, by any fair interpretation, or allowable implication, will embrace it. Gourley v. Thompson, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 387.

Where a testator, by his will, gave a tract of land and a slave to his wife for life, the balance of his estate, both real and personal, to his daughter for life, with remainder to her children, it was held that it was not to be presumed that he intended to die intestate as to any portion of his estate, and therefore, at the death of his wife, the tract of land and slave went to his daughter for life, with remainder to her children. Deadrick v. Armour, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 588.

A provision in a will that "all the money that I have on hand, or loaned out," shall accumulate for ten years, will embrace all the funds of the testator, from whatever source arising, especially where such a construction is necessary to prevent an intestacy as to a part of the estate. Apple v. Allen, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 120.

A present bequest of a slave or money is not to be postponed till the expiration of a life estate, although connected by the word "also" with a devise of an estate thus postponed, where the effect of such a construction would be an intestacy, as to this property, for the interim. Robertson v. Roberts, 1 Jones (N. Car.) 74.

But this rule applies only in the construction of a will the language of which is of equivocal import.

Thus, where a testator devised to his "daughter R. during her natural life, and to her children after her death forever," one-eighth part of his real estate, and there is no provision in the will in respect to a disposition of the remainder in case R. should die without having had issue, and there is nothing in the will showing a contrary intention on the part of the testator, R. takes a life estate only; although on the death of R. without having had issue, the testator will have died intestate as to the contingent reversion of her share, and the same will revert to his heirs general. Gilpin v. Williams, 17 Ohio St. 397. See also Given v. Hilton, 95 U. S. 591; Leigh v. Savidge, 14 N. J. Eq. 124; Doe v. Latham, Busb. (N. Car.) 365; Gourley v. Thompson, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 387; Randenbach's Appeal, 87 Pa. St. 51; Daman v. Bibber, 135 Mass. 458.

1. Meares v. Meares, 4 Ired. (N. Car.) 192; Shinn v. Motley, 3 Jones. Eq. (N. Car.) 490; Lynes v. Townsend, 33 N. Y. 564; Van Alstyne v. Van Alstyne, 28 N. Y. 377; Goodall v. McLean, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 306; Cherbonnier v. Goodwin (Md. 1894), 28 Atl. Rep. 894; In re Swenson's Estate, 55 Minn. 300; Miles v. Boyden, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 213; Turner v. Patterson, 5 Dana (Ky.) 292; Wood v. McGuire, 15 Ga. 202; Arnold v. Arnold, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 81; Abbott v. Essex Co., 18 How. (U. S.) 202; Trustees v. Sturgeon, 9 Pa. St. 321; Stook's Appeal, 20 Pa. St. 349. Compare Cowan v. Epes, 2 Patt. & H. (Va.) 520; Bullock v. Bullock, 2 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 307.

Where Date and Time of Actual Execution Differ.—As between the date of the will, and the time of its actual execution, if they differ, it seems that the will is to be construed with reference to the law in force at the time it was actually executed. Randfield v. Randfield, 8 H. L. Cas. 225. In this case, the testator prepared and dated a will in 1837 (before the Wills Act), but did not execute it till 1844, by which he devised all his freehold and copyhold estates to his son "when he have obtained the age of twenty-one years, upon the following conditions," etc., and directed that his own widow should receive an annuity out of these rents; he then gave to his son all his personal estates, consisting of ships, bonds, and funded stock, etc., "but should the hand of death fall upon my widow and son, and my having no other children, or my son any issue, my will is then that should he leave a widow, she shall receive an annuity out of my real estates as before mentioned, the residue then to be equally divided, share and share alike, after paying such legacies as I may hereafter name, the division to be" between certain persons specifically mentioned "(they paying all my son's debts, funeral expenses, and demands, or my wife's, should she be the longest liver)." The son became twenty-one some years before the will was executed; he married, but died without ever having had issue. It was held, varying the decree of the court below, that the gift over affected only the real estate; also, that the will must be read as if made in 1844; that the contingency of attaining twenty-one was to be disregarded, and that the gift over took effect on the son dying without issue. In this case Lord Kingsdown said: "If the testator in this case had executed his will at the time at which he prepared and dated it, October, 1837, it appears to me that none of the questions now raised at the bar could have arisen. At that time the Wills Act had not come into operation. All wills made before January, 1838, are expressly excluded from its operation. The will, therefore, would have been interpreted according to the rules of construction which then prevailed, and the testator's son being, at the date of the will, under twenty-one, the construction would have been reasonably clear. As regards the real estate, the first devise to the son would have given him an estate for life at twenty-one, and the subsequent words would either have enlarged that interest to an estate tail, with remainder to the nephews and nieces, or would have contained a contingent remainder to the nephews and nieces, to take effect if the son died without ever having had any issue. In either construction there would have been no previous estate in fee to be cut down by a subsequent executory devise. The gift of the personal estate to the son was absolute, without any contingency, and no question could have arisen with respect to it.

"When the will was actually executed in 1844, the son had long attained twenty-one, and the legislature had declared that the words which the testator had used originally to give, and which would have given only a life estate, should give a fee; that the words which he had used with respect to issue should not mean an indefinite failure of issue, and should not create, therefore, an estate tail. In what sense, then, are we to read the testator's will? I apprehend we must understand him as declaring: 'This instrument, in the new sense given to the words by the legislature, contains my intentions, and those I mean to be carried out as far as the altered circumstances of my family will allow.' If this be so, the testator, knowing that his son had attained twenty-one, must have considered, of course, that the gift which had been previously contingent on that event could no longer be subject to that contingency, and that what he had previously meant to be a life estate should be an estate in fee."

R. makes a will bequeathing legacies "to the two oldest children" of G. One of the two oldest at the date of the will died. R. afterward, by a codicil, confirmed the will except in some particulars, saying nothing of these bequests. It was held that the two oldest children living at the testator's death were entitled to the legacies. Miles v. Boyden, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 213.

Though, for some purposes, a will is considered as speaking from its execution, the time of its inception, and for others, from the death of the testator, the time of its consummation; yet the general rule is that it speaks from the death of the testator, where there is nothing in its language indicating a different intention. Where the testator, after giving different portions of his estate to each of his brothers and sisters, and a nephew, or to the representatives of such as were deceased, devised to the heirs of each of his brothers and sisters, including the heirs of his sister N., the residue of the classes, as children or descendants, all who answer the description at the death of the testator are entitled, irrespectively of those to whom the description was applicable at the date of the will, but who subsequently died in the testator's lifetime.¹ But when the gift is to persons actually existing, as to descendants of A now living, or to his servants simply, as distinguished from those who "shall be in his service at his decease," the language is referred to the date of the will and not to the death, as the latter is a prospective event, and those only are entitled who answer the description at that time.² So a gift to a particular individual living at the date of the will, as to "my son," or "my son John," will take effect in favor of the person answering the description estate, to be equally divided between said heirs, each individual having an equal portion of the same; N. died before the death of the testator, leaving a son who died before the execution of the will, and he left a daughter, C., who is a party to the present suit; on an appeal from the decree of probate, it was held, first, that the will spoke from the death of the testator; second, that as N. and her son the father of C., were dead at the time of that event, C. was the heir of N., both in its technical and its popular sense. Gold v. Judson, 21 Conn. 616.

A testator made his will, giving all the residue of his estate to be equally divided between the children of M. and N. When the will was made, M. had six children, of whom D., the mother of the plaintiff, died before the testator, her father. It was held that the terms "the children of M.," being predicable not less truly of the children only who should be living at the time when the testator should die, than of the children who were living when he made his testament, neither exposition being decisively favored by the other clauses of the testament, the former was to be preferred. Pendleton v. Hoomes, Wythe (Va.) 4.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *326; Ringrose v. Bramham, 2 Cox 384. See Sharpe v. Allen, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 81; Udike v. Tompkins, 100 Ill. 406; Cannfield v. Bostwick, 21 Conn. 553; Meares v. Meares, 4 Ired. (N. Car.) 192; Shinn v. Motley, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 490; Petway v. Powell, 2 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 308; Robinson v. McDiarmid, 87 N. Car. 455; Joundan v. Green, 1 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 270; Den v. Sayre, 3 N. J. L. 183; Chase v. Lockerman, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 185; Conn v. Conn, 1 Md. Ch. 212; Myers v. Myers, 2 Mc-

Cord Eq. (S. Car.) 214; Walker v. Williamson, 25 Ga. 549; State v. Raughley, 1 Houst. (Del.) 561; Lorillard v. Coster, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 172; Jenkins v. Freyer, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 47; Merriam v. Wolcott, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 380; Van Vechten v. Van Veghten, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 104; Campbell v. Rawdon, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 494. Compare Lewis v. Lewis, 62 Ga. 265; Matter of Green's Estate (Supreme Ct.), 15 N. Y. Supp. 240; M'Lemore v. Blocker, 1 Harp. Eq. (S. Car.) 272.

Gifts to Children.—"In regard to gifts to children, indeed, an anxiety to include as wide a range of objects as possible has so powerfully influenced the construction that such cases are to be regarded as sui generis. To this anxiety is also to be ascribed the rule, which constitutes another exception to the doctrine under consideration, that a gift to children 'begotten' extends to children born after the date of the will; and a gift to children 'to be begotten,' includes those antecedently in existence." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *320. See "Gifts to Children," Post. Co. Litt. 20 b.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *318, 326; Merriam v. Wolcott, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 380. See McNaughton v. McNaughton, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 50. As to gifts to descendants now living, see Crossly v. Clare, Ambli. 397; Abney v. Miller, 2 Atk. 593; All Soul's College v. Coddington, 1 P. Wms. 597; Ellis v. Ellis, 2 Desaus. (S. Car.) 556; Starling v. Price, 16 Ohio St. 29. Compare Rowland v. Gorsuch, 2 Cox 187; Gold v. Judson, 21 Conn. 616; Mackie v. Alston, 2 Desaus. (S. Car.) 362.

A testator bequeathed legacies to "each of the daughters that is now living of my niece G., as follows: To at the date of the will, and of him only. If, therefore, such son should die in the testator's lifetime, and he should afterwards have another son of the same name, who survived him, such after-born son would not be an object of the gift.¹ A gift to the wife of A, her eldest daughter," specified sums at certain intervals; "and to the remaining daughters each now living," certain other sums payable at fixed intervals; and at the expiration of the tenth year after his decease $6,000 to be paid "to each of said remaining daughters respectively." It was held that the intention to be gathered from the whole will, and the circumstances in which the testator was placed, was that the words "remaining daughters now living," and the like, were descriptive of persons known to the testator, and did not designate a class; so that a daughter of G. who was living en ventre sa mère when the will was made, and was born afterward, was not included. Starling v. Price, 16 Ohio St. 29.

So a gift to "my present attending physician," refers to the date of the will. Everett v. Carr, 59 Me. 325.

As to gifts to servants, see Parker v. Marchant, 1 Y. & C. C. 290; Darlow v. Edwards, 1 H. & C. 547.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *323. See Morse v. Mason, 11 Allen (Mass.) 37; Everett v. Carr, 59 Me. 325; Board of Education v. Ladd, 26 Ohio St. 213; Butler v. Butler, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 309; Eells v. Lynch, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 481; Anshutz v. Miller, 81 Pa. St. 212.

Reference to Existing State of Affairs.—It may be laid down as a general rule, that wherever a testator refers to an actually existing state of things, his language is referential to the date of the will and not to his death, as this is then a prospective event. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *318.

In Board of Education v. Ladd, 26 Ohio St. 213, White, J., said: "It is true that as a general rule a will speaks from the death of the testator, and not from its date, unless its language, by fair construction, indicates the contrary intention." To the same effect, see Sharpe v. Allen, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 81.

In Morse v. Mason, 11 Allen (Mass.) 36, a devise to the "surviving children, not knowing all their names, of my late sister A., they living in the State of Maine, to be divided equally between them all," was construed as a devise to all those children surviving at the date of the will; and one of the children, having afterward died in the testator's lifetime, leaving issue who survived the testatrix, such issue were allowed to take the share of their deceased parent. It was observed by Gray, J., who delivered the opinion of the court, that the presumption, that as a will speaks from the death of the testator it refers to the state of things then existing, that such presumption must yield when the will manifests the testator's intention to refer to the state of things existing at the time of making it. See also Simms v. Garrot, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 393. Infra, this title, Survivorship.

Gift to Unborn Child.—"A gift to the child with which the testator's wife was pregnant, which child was still-born, was held not to take effect in favor of another child of which the testator's wife was pregnant at the time of his death, though the result was that all the testator's property was devised away, and the last-mentioned child left unprovided for." Foster v. Cook, 3 Bro. C. C. 346.

In Hawkins v. Garland, 76 Va. 155, the facts were these: Samuel Garland, Sr., departed this life in November, 1861. He left a will wholly written by himself, which bore date December 7, 1857. He left a very large estate valued at nearly $800,000, a widow, but no issue surviving him. His next of kin consisted of a number of nephews and nieces, to all of whom he left liberal bequests. The fifteenth clause of his will was in these words: "I give to each of my namesakes, Samuel G. Slaughter, son of Chas. R. Slaughter, Samuel G. White, son of Samuel G. White, Samuel, son of S. Garland, Jr., and Samuel G., son of Capt. Jno. F. Slaughter, a bond of one thousand dollars of the S. S. Railroad." At the date of the will there was no such person in existence as Samuel G., son of Capt. Jno. F. Slaughter, and no such person came into existence until three or four years after the date of said will. Then there was born to Jno. F. Slaughter a son whom he named Samuel G. The testator, however, had a namesake, Samuel G., son of Capt. Jno. F. Hawkins, who was an intimate friend of the

who has a wife at the date of the will, relates to that person, notwithstanding any change of circumstances which may render the description inapplicable at a subsequent period, and by parity of reasoning is under all circumstances confined to her; but if A have no wife at the date of the will, the gift embraces the individual sustaining that character at the death of the testator; if there be no such person, either at the date of the will or at the death of the testator, it applies to the woman who shall first answer the description of wife, at any subsequent period.¹

2. Words Descriptive of Property—To What Period Referred.—At common law, a general bequest of all the testator's personal estate, or all the residue of his personal estate, carries all his personal estate existing at the time of his death,² and the better testator. In a controversy between Samuel G., son of Capt. Jno. F. Hawkins, and Samuel G., son of Jno. F. Slaughter, it was held by the court that parol evidence was admissible to show the facts above, and that the testator never knew or called Jno. F. Slaughter "Captain," but that he was known to the testator as, and was called by him, "Jack" Slaughter, and that Jno. F. Slaughter had no such title as "Captain," and was never known as "Captain," or called such by anyone else, and the court decided in favor of Samuel G. Hawkins, son of Capt. Jno. F. Hawkins.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *324; Niblock v. Garrett, 1 Ry. & M. 629; Bryan's Trust, 2 Sim. N. S. 103; Franks v. Brooker, 27 Beav. 635; Anshutz v. Miller, 81 Pa. St. 212. See Lloyd v. Davis, 14 C. B. 76; 80 E. C. L. 75; Beers v. Narramore, 61 Conn. 13; Humphrey v. Winship, 28 Hun (N. Y.) 33.

As to where a gift to a wife is by way of remainder after the death of the husband, see Radford v. Willis, L. R., 7 Ch. 7; Boreham v. Bignall, 8 Hare 131; Driver v. Frank, 3 M. & S. 25.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *326; Hawkins on Wills *17; Wilde v. Holtz-meyer, 5 Ves. Jr. 816; Donaugher's Estate, 2 Pars. Sel. Cas. (Pa.) 164; Philadelphia v. Davis, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 509; Walton v. Walton, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 59; Marshall v. Porter, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 2; Curling v. Curling, 8 Dana (Ky.) 38; Warner v. Swearingen, 6 Dana (Ky.) 196; Atwood v. Beck, 21 Ala. 625; Canfield v. Bostwick, 21 Conn. 554; Gold v. Judson, 21 Conn. 616; Dennis v. Dennis, 5 Rich. (S. Car.) 468; Garrett v. Garrett, 2 Strobb. Eq.

(S. Car.) 283; Dalrymple v. Gamble, 68 Md. 523; Nichols v. Allen, 87 Tenn. 131. See also Cairns v. Chanbert, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 160.

What Passes Under a Bequest of Personality.—In the case of Kinsman v. Kinsman, 1 Root (Conn.) 180, it was decided that growing crops did not pass under a bequest of personality. The controversy arose over the action of the testator's executor, in entering and cutting rye growing on the testator's leaseholds at his death, notwithstanding a bequest of all his personality to the wife of the testator. The executor's action was approved by the court, who held that the rye was the property of the said testator, but that as it was not severed from the land, it did not pass by the bequest of personal estate.

Possession of Chattel.—It is not indispensable to the valid bequest of a chattel, that the testator should have had actual possession of it. Puryear v. Beard, 14 Ala. 121.

Effect of the Word "Now" Upon the Construction.—"For some purposes, a will is considered to speak from its execution, and for others, from the death of the testator; the former being the period of inception, and the latter that of the consummation of the instrument. To determine to which of these the language points, is not generally attended with difficulty, and certainly not, where the language used, is, as in this case, general, and not limited, and is broad enough, in describing the subject-matter of the bequest, to embrace all the residuum, and as to the devisees, all the persons who claim to take. Wherever a testator refers to an actually existing state of things, his language should be held as referring to opinion is that, upon the same principle, a bequest of all the property of a particular kind or description, as "all household goods," carries property of this description belonging to him at his death.¹ But where a testator refers to a specific subject of gift, he is considered as pointing at the state of facts existing the date of the will, and not to his death, as this is then a prospective event. Such, it is clear, is the construction of the word 'now.' Thus, to the descendants now living of a person, means those living at the date of the will, exclusive of such as come into being between that period and the death of the testator. Crossly v. Clare, Ambl. 397; Abney v. Miller, 2 Atk. 593; Blundell v. Dunn, 1 Madd. 433; All Soul's College v. Coddington, 1 P. Wms. 597. And the same is true where the word 'now' is combined with a term which could not have full effect according to its technical import, unless used prospectively, as in the case of a devise to the heir male of the body of A, now living; under which the heir apparent of A, living at the date of the will, has been held to be entitled. 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 214; 1 Vent. 334. So words in the present tense have a similar effect; thus, all the property I am possessed of at this date (Wilde v. Holtzmeier, 5 Ves. Jr. 816), the devisee takes only what the testator then had. So in Bridgman v. Dove, 3 Atk. 201, it was held that a charge of all the debts I have contracted since 1735, extended to all debts owing by the testatrix at her decease, including those she contracted after the period referred to. So in the description of the thing given, and the person or persons to whom given, it may be such as to embrace only the specific thing or persons described; as thus, the stock I now hold in Hartford bank, or the children of my brother, already born. But if the language is general, not specific, and not limited, the will speaks from the testator's death, and of course disposes of whatever property the testator had at the time, or to such persons as answer the description. So a general bequest of any particular species of personal property, as 'my furniture and effects,' has been held to embrace property of this description belonging to the testator at his death." Ellsworth, J., in Gold v. Judson, 21 Conn. 622.

A devise of "all the real estate I 'now' possess" will not carry after acquired realty, under a statute providing that after acquired realty shall pass by a general devise. Quinn v. Hardenbrook, 54 N. Y. 88.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *326; Masters v. Masters, 11 P. Wms. 424; Banks v. Thornton, 11 Hare 176; Gold v. Judson, 21 Conn. 623; Van Vechten v. Van Veghten, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 118. See Bridgman v. Dove, 3 Atk. 201; Gilmer v. Gilmer, 42 Ala. 9.

In Hawkins on Wills *17, it is said that the principle in the text is confined to bequests of household goods. But in one of the two cases relied upon, the bequest was specific. In Miller v. Little 2 Beav. 259; and in the other, the subject of the gift was "all the property that I possess in the public funds," which was held to mean "all I now possess." Cockran v. Cockran, 14 Sim. 248.

The tendency of American authority sustains the text. See cases in preceding note. In Van Vechten v. Van Veghten, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 105, the testator directed in his will that his son should be discharged from all notes which he held against him, and from all charges made against him by the testator for loans or advances, and all claims against him for the occupation or rents of certain premises specified. It was held that the son was entitled to a discharge from all such claims which existed at the death of the testator, and not merely those which were in existence at the date of the will. Walworth, Ch., said: "Although, as a general rule, it is well settled that a will of personal property relates to the time of the death of the testator, both as to the legatees and the subjects of the bequests mentioned in the will, yet in the case of specific legacies, it is sometimes very difficult to ascertain whether he intended to confine the bequests to the subject-matter thereof as it existed at the time of making the will, or as it might exist at the time when such will should take effect by his death. But to take the case out of the general rule, that in a will of personal estate, the testator is presumed to speak with reference to the time of his

while penning the instrument, and not that existing at his decease.¹ Upon the same principle, it has been held that verbs in the present tense, as where the bequest is of "all property that I possess in the public funds," have the effect of restricting a bequest of property of a particular description to objects existing at the date of the will.² At common law, after acquired lands could not be devised, and hence, every devise of freehold lands death, there must be something in the nature of the property or thing bequeathed, or in the language used by the testator in making the bequest thereof, to show that he intended to confine his gift to the property, or subject of the bequest, as it existed at the time of the making of the will."

Leaseholds.—In James v. Dean, 11 Ves. Jr. 390, Lord Eldon said: "Where there is a general bequest, in the terms 'all my leasehold estates,' and the testator afterwards surrenders and takes a new lease, that is a revocation. But it depends upon the context of the whole will, whether that general doctrine is to be applied. A leasehold interest for years may be disposed of by a will, made before the testator acquired that interest. But the general doctrine is, that you must show that intention." Coppin v. Fernyhough, 2 Bro. C. C. 291; Hone v. Medcraft, 1 Bro. C. C. 266.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *320; Pattison v. Pattison, 1 Myl. & K. 12; Cockran v. Cockran, 14 Sim. 248; Miller v. Little, 2 Beav. 259; Quinn v. Hardenbrook, 54 N. Y. 89; Phillipsburgh v. Bruch, 37 N. J. Eq. 482; Farish v. Cook, 78 Mo. 212; Sharpe v. Allen, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 81. As to nature of specific legacies and devises, see LEGACIES AND DEVISES, vol. 13, p. 10 et seq.; Evertson v. Tappen, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 497.

Effect of Renewal Upon Bequests of Leaseholds.—"A new estate in leasehold property, acquired by a subsequent renewal of the lease or otherwise, is no less out of the reach of a specific disposition of such property, as ordinarily expressed, than an interest in any other property answering to the same locality; it being considered that the testator, when referring to the property in question, had in his contemplation exclusively the specific interest in it of which he was possessed when he made his will, though he has not in terms referred to such interest, but has used expressions descriptive of the corpus of the property; as in the case of a bequest of 'all my tithes and ecclesiastical dues at W.' (Rudstone v. Anderson, 2 Ves. 418); or 'the perpetual advowson and disposal of the living or rectory of W. forever, together with the tithes of all sorts thereof' (Hone v. Medcraft, 1 Bro. C. C. 261); or 'all my leasehold estates in the parish of C.' (Coppin v. Fernyhough, 2 Bro. C. C. 291). In all such cases the renewal of the lease under the old law revoked the bequest, or rather, to speak more accurately, withdrew from its operation the property which was the subject of disposition; in short, effected what is technically called an ademption. But though the general principle has long been settled, yet questions often arose in consequence of the context of the will affording ground to contend that the testator intended any after acquired interest, of which he might become possessed by renewal, to pass under the bequest. The renewed lease will pass where the testator includes in the bequest the right of renewal as an accessory to the immediate subject of disposition. And where the lease of which a bequest is made is vested in a trustee for the testator, and is renewed by the trustee, the gift of the property comprised in the lease being in fact a gift of the equitable interest which includes the benefit of renewal, the trust of any renewed term granted to the trustee would pass under such bequest. And the same principle applies to the case of a lease for lives with a covenant for perpetual renewal." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *321. See Poole v. Coates, 2 D. & W. 493; Colegrave v. Manby, 2 Russ. 238; Carte v. Carte, 3 Atk. 174; Slatter v. Norton, 16 Ves. Jr. 197.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *319; Cockran v. Cockran, 14 Sim. 248; Sharpe v. Allen, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 81; Urdike v. Tomkins, 100 Ill. 409. Compare Wagstaff v. Wagstaff, L. R., 8 Eq. 229. But a bequest of "all the property I am possessed of" would speak from the death. Wilde v. Holtzmeier, 5 Ves. Jr. 816. See also Bridgman v. Dove, was construed to speak from the date of the will, and described only the land then belonging to the testator.¹

At the present time, statutes exist in nearly all the United States which enable a testator to devise his after acquired real estate;² and in England, and some states it is expressly provided that a will is to be construed, both as to real and personal estate, unless a contrary intention appear, as if made immediately before the death of the testator.³

3 Atk. 201; Bland v. Lamb, 2 J. & W. 399.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *326; Hawkins on Wills *14; Brouncker v. Colbe, Holt 248. See Delacherois v. Delacherois, 11 H. L. Cas. 62.

For instances in which the common-law doctrine has been recognized in the United States, before the introduction of the changes in the statutes referred to in the text, see Smith v. Edrington, 8 Cranch (U. S.) 66; Canfield v. Bostwick, 21 Conn. 554; Brewster v. McCall, 15 Conn. 284; Blaney v. Blaney, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 107; Hays v. Jackson, 6 Mass. 149; Wait v. Belding, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 129; George v. Green, 13 N. H. 521; Douglass v. Sherman, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 358; Livingston v. Newkirk, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 312; Parker v. Bogardus, 5 N. Y. 309; Green v. Dikeman, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 537; McNaughton v. McNaughton, 34 N. Y. 201; Quinn v. Hardenbrook, 54 N. Y. 83; Borden v. Borden, 2 R. I. 94.

Lanning v. Cole, 6 N. J. Eq. 102; Van Wagnen v. Brown, 26 N. J. L. 196; Bruen v. Bragaw, 4 N. J. Eq. 261; Gardner v. Gardner, 37 N. J. Eq. 487; Philadelphia v. Davis, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 509; Girard v. Philadelphia, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 323; Donaugher's Estate, 2 Pars. Sel. Cas. (Pa.) 164; Allen v. Harrison, 3 Call (Va.) 289; Raines v. Barker, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 128; Gibson v. Carrell, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 136; Clements v. Kyles, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 468; Atwood v. Beck, 21 Ala. 625; Beall v. Schley, 2 Gill (Md.) 198; Jones v. Shewmaker, 35 Ga. 153; Den v. Maney, 1 Murph. (N. Car.) 264; Drayton v. Rose, 7 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 328; Ross v. Ross, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 438; Halloway v. Doe, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 294; Roberts v. Elliott, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 396; McGavock v. Pugsley, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 689; Bowen v. Johnson, 6 Ind. 110.

2. LEGACIES AND DEVISES, vol. 13, p. 9, note 2; Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2809, and Supp. See Church v. Warren Mfg. Co., 14 R. I. 539; James v.

Pruden, 14 Ohio St. 251; Briggs v. Briggs, 69 Iowa 617; Lent v. Lent, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 436; Green v. Dikeman, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 535; Winchester v. Forster, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 366; Cushing v. Aylwin, 12 Met. (Mass.) 169; Pray v. Waterston, 12 Met. (Mass.) 262; Magruder v. Carroll, 4 Md. 335.

As these statutes differ slightly in the several states, the practitioner should consult the local code. Authorities upon construction will be found in LEGACIES AND DEVISES, vol. 13, p. 9, note 2.

3. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2806. For references to codes, see LEGACIES AND DEVISES, vol. 13, p. 9, note 2. See Edwards v. Warren, 90 N. Car. 604; Rogers v. Brickhouse, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 301; Turnage v. Turnage, 7 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 127; Watson v. Butler, 26 Miss. 178; Doe v. Wynne, 23 Miss. 251; Henderem v. Ryan, 27 Tex. 670; Overten v. Mahen, 10 Leigh (Va.) 639; Donaugher's Estate, 2 Pars. Sel. Cas. (Pa.) 164. In these states, the construction placed upon the corresponding provision of the English Wills Act, 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 24, which reads, "every will shall be construed, with reference to the real estate and personal estate comprised in it, to speak and take effect as if it had been executed immediately before the death of the testator, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will," is of interest. Under this act, "descriptions of real or personal estate, the subject of gift, prima facie, refer to and comprise the property answering to the description at the death of the testator."

"Thus, a devise of 'all my freehold lands,' or 'all my leasehold estates' (Langdale v. Briggs, 3 Sm. & G. 246; 2 Jur. N. S. 982), passes after acquired freeholds or leaseholds. So a bequest of 'my new $\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. annuities' passes all the stock of that description possessed by the testator at his death (Goodlad v. Burnett, 1 K. & J. 341)." Hawkins on Wills *18.

3. Inconsistency and Repugnance.—If possible, the court will reconcile two dispositions apparently inconsistent, and in so doing will endeavor not to disturb the first further than is absolutely necessary to give effect to the second.¹ But if they are absolutely

A devise was made in the following words: "I give to my much beloved wife, M., all the balance of my property, both real and personal, to have and to hold to her own benefit, to the exclusion of all others." It was held to convey to the devisee all real estate held by the testator at his death. Wynne v. Wynne, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 405.

Intent of Testator.—It seems that the enactment of statutes allowing the testamentary disposition of after acquired lands, renders the construction of a will, as far as this question is concerned (as indeed is the case in all others), a mere question of intention proved or presumed. See Peters v. Spillman, 18 Ill. 370; Flournoy v. Flournoy, 1 Bush (Ky.) 515; O'Brien v. Heeney, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 242. Thus, the words "all my wagons" and "all my stock" have been held sufficient to pass after acquired horses and a road wagon. Dennis v. Dennis, 5 Rich. (S. Car.) 468.

See also Decker v. Decker, 121 Ill. 341; Roney v. Stiltz, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 381; Dickerson's Appeal, 55 Conn. 223; Kimball v. Ellison, 128 Mass. 41.

What Is a Contrary Intent—Words in Present Tense—Now.—"A contrary intention is not sufficiently manifested by a gift of the freeholds 'to which I am entitled,' though there may be a subsequent devise of copyholds 'to which I am or at the time of my death shall be entitled.' Lilford v. Powys Keck, 30 Beav. 300. The fact that the testator gives property he 'now' possesses, or that the property is described as 'now' charged with certain sums, will not exclude after acquired property. Wagstaff v. Wagstaff, L. R., 8 Eq. 229; Hepburn v. Skirving, 4 Jur. N. S. 651; In re Ord, 12 Ch. Div. 22. But if the testator expressly distinguishes between the two periods, by giving such freeholds and leaseholds as are 'now vested in me,' 'or as to the said leasehold premises as shall be vested in me at the time of my death,' the word 'now' must be referred to the date of the will. Cole v. Scott, 1 Mac. & G. 518." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 162. Compare Hutchinson v. Barron, 6 H. & N. 583; Jepson v. Key, 10 Jur.

N. S. 392; Williams v. Owen, 2 W. R. 585; Everett v. Everett, 7 Ch. Div. 428.

Specific Description.—"The operation of the rule will be excluded by a sufficient particularity in the description of the specific subject of gift, showing that an object in existence at the date of the will was intended. If the thing intended be individualized by a special description, as if the gift be of 'my brown horse,' or 'that freehold estate which I purchased of Mr. B.' (Emuss v. Smith, 2 De G. & S. 722), the description shows that it must have been intended to refer to the state of things existing at the date of the will, and not at the death of the testator. But the word 'my' alone, is insufficient to show a contrary intention; for a gift of 'my 3 per cent. consols' may mean 'the 3 per cent. consols which I may possess at my death.' When a bequest is of that which is generic, of that which may be increased or diminished, then I apprehend the Wills Act requires something more on the face of the will, for the purpose of indicating a contrary intention, than the mere circumstance that the subject of the bequest is designated by the pronoun 'my.' (Per Wood, V. C., Goodlad v. Burnett, 1 K. & J. 341.) In Webb v. Byng, 1 K. & J. 580, the devise was of 'my Quendon-Hall estates in Essex,' which was held to be 'an arbitrary designation which had acquired a particular meaning in the mind of the testatrix,' and, for that reason not to include certain small properties acquired after the date of the will, though merely additions to the main subject of the devise. But it would seem that the meaning attached to the term, 'my Quendon-Hall estates,' by the testatrix, might well include, prospectively, such additions as might afterwards be made by her to the subject of the devise, as in the case of any collective bequest, e. g., of 'my household goods,' or 'my furniture.'" Hawkins on Wills *20.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.), *475; Doe v. Davies, 4 M. & W. 599; Langham v. Sandford, 19 Ves. Jr. 647; Briggs v. Penny, 3 De G. & S. 539; Brocklebank v. Johnson, 20 Beav. 205;

Shipperdson v. Tower, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 459; Jackson v. Forbes, Tyrw. 88; Kerr v. Baroness Clinton, L. R., 8 Eq. 462; Crossman v. Bevan, 27 Beav. 502. See Smith v. Bell, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 74; Tiers v. Tiers, 98 N. Y. 568; Sweet v. Chase, 2 N. Y. 73; Van Vechten v. Keator, 63 N. Y. 52; Wager v. Wager, 96 N. Y. 164; Harrison v. Jewell, 2 Dem. (N. Y.) 37; Matter of Van Beur-en's Estate (Surrogate Ct.), 13 N. Y. Supp. 261; Covenhoven v. Shuler, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 122; M'Donald v. Wal-grove, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 274; West-cott v. Cady, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 334; Kane v. Astor, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 467; Sweet v. Geisenhainer, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 114; Tyson v. Blake, 22 N. Y. 558; Crozier v. Bray, 120 N. Y. 374. See Parks v. Parks, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 107; Henning v. Varner, 34 Md. 106; Igle-hart v. Kirwan, 10 Md. 559; Pue v. Pue, 1 Md. Ch. 382; Chase v. Lockerman, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 185; Boyle v. Par-ker, 3 Md. Ch. 42; Pue v. Pue, 1 Md. Ch. 382; Lee v. Pindle, 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 289; Davis v. Hoover, 112 Ind. 423; Parks v. Kimes, 100 Ind. 151; White v. Allen, 81 Ind. 224; Anderegg v. Ross, 13 Ind. 413; Jenks v. Jackson, 127 Ill. 342; Brownfield v. Wilson, 78 Ill. 467; Rountree v. Talbot, 89 Ill. 246; Doe v. Crissman, 5 Ired. (N. Car.) 498; Baird v. Baird, 7 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 265; Jones v. Paschall, 1 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 430; Jenkins v. Maxwell, 7 Jones (N. Car.) 612; Bradley v. Gibbs, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 13; Biddle v. Car-raway, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 95; Payne v. Sale, 2 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 455; Dalton v. Houston, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 401; Dalton v. Scales, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 521; Weathers v. Patterson, 30 Ala. 404; Walker v. Walker, 17 Ala. 396; Leavens v. Butler, 8 Port. (Ala.) 396; Wynne v. Walthall, 1 Ala. Sel. Cas. 273; Stallsworth v. Stallsworth, 5 Ala. 143; Miller v. Flourney, 26 Ala. 724; Pace v. Bonner, 27 Ala. 307; Thrasher v. Ingram, 32 Ala. 646; Petters v. Pet-ters, 4 McCord (S. Car.) 151; Fraser v. Boone, 1 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 360; Sea-brook v. Seabrook, 1 McMull. Eq. (S. Car.) 201; Tisdale v. Mitchell, 12 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 263; Dawes v. Swan, 4 Mass. 215; Cushing v. Burrell, 137 Mass. 21; Chaffin v. Ashton, 128 Mass. 443; Gray v. Sherman, 5 Allen (Mass.) 198; Lamb v. Lamb, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 371; Hibbard v. Hurlburt, 10 Vt. 173; Conant v. Palmer, 63 Vt. 310; Car-ter v. Alexander, 71 Mo. 585; Prosser v. Hardesty, 101 Mo. 593; Austin v.

Watts, 19 Mc. 293; Young v. M'Intire, 3 Ohio 499; Baxter v. Bowyer, 19 Ohio St. 490; Jones v. Strong, 142 Pa. St. 496; Shreiner's Appeal, 53 Pa. St. 106; Sheetz's Appeal, 82 Pa. St. 213; Fahr-ney v. Holsinger, 65 Pa. St. 388; Fin-ney's Appeal, 113 Pa. St. 11; McDe-vitt's Appeal, 113 Pa. St. 103; Newbold v. Boone, 52 Pa. St. 167; Mutter's Es-tate, 38 Pa. St. 314; Sullivan v. Strauss, 161 Pa. St. 145; Stebbins v. Stebbins, 86 Mich. 474; Houser v. Ruffner, 18 W. Va. 245; Warner v. Willard, 54 Conn. 470; Heidlebaugh v. Wagner, 72 Iowa 601; Rayfield v. Gaines, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 1; Hooe v. Hooe, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 245; Ward v. Amory, 1 Curt. 419; Jones v. Creveling, 19 N. J. L. 127; Robert v. West, 15 Ga. 122; Hunt v. Johnson, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 342; Jacob v. Jacob, 4 Bush (Ky.) 110; Proctor v. Duncan, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 318; Delph v. Delph, 2 Bush (Ky.) 171; Hickman v. Holliday, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 582; Ives v. Harris, 7 R. I. 413; Lyon v. Fisk, 1 La. Ann. 444; Vancil v. Evans, 4 Coldw. (Tenn.) 340; Dean v. Nunnally, 36 Miss. 358; Lane v. Vick, 3 How. (U. S.) 464; Wal-ker v. Parker, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 166.

Reconciliation of Inconsistencies.—

"The rule which sacrifices the former of several contradictory clauses is never applied but on the failure of every at-tempt to give to the whole such a con-struction as will render every part of it effective. In the attainment of this object, the local order of the limitations is disregarded, if it be possible, by the transposition of them, to deduce a con-sistent disposition from the entire will. Thus, if a man, in the first instance, devise lands to A in fee, and in a sub-sequent clause give the same lands to B for life, both parts of the will shall stand, and, in the construction of law, the devise to B shall be first, the will being read as if the lands had been de-vised to B for life, with remainder to A in fee. Per Anderson, Anonymous, Cro. Eliz. 9. See also Ridout v. Dowd-ing, 1 Atk. 419; Plenty v. West, 6 C. B. 201; 60 E. C. L. 199; Ustick v. Peters, 4 K. & J. 437. . . . By parity of reason, where a testator gives to B a specific fund or property at the death of A, and in a subsequent clause disposes of the whole of his prop-erty to A, the combined effect of the several clauses, as to such fund or property, is to vest it in A for life, and after his decease, in B. Blamire v. Geldart, 16 Ves. Jr. 314. Again, where a testator gave his real and personal estate to A, his heirs, executors, and administrators, and in a subsequent part of his will gave all his property to A and B, upon trust for sale, and to pay the interest of the proceeds to A for life, and at her decease, upon trust to pay certain legacies, leaving the residue undisposed of, A was held to be entitled, under the first devise, to the beneficial interest in reversion, not exhausted by the trust for the payment of legacies created by the second. Brine v. Ferrier, 7 Sim. 549." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *475, *476.

The following illustrations of the doctrine are given by Mr. Theobald: "If the same property is given to two persons in fee, in two different parts of the will, they will take as joint tenants. Paramour v. Yardley, Plow. 541; Bennett's Case, Cro. Eliz. 9; Sherratt v. Bentley, 2 Myl. & K. 162. This does not, however, apply as between will and codicil. In re Hough's Will, 15 Jur. 943; 20 L. J. Ch. 422; Evans v. Evans, 17 Sim. 107. So, too, if land is given to one person without, and to another person with, words of limitation, the latter will take a fee in remainder. Gravenor v. Watkins, L. R., 6 C. P. 500. Similarly, where immediate interests in fee and in tail, or in fee and for life, are given in the same lands, the devise of the fee will be construed as a remainder, whether the devise of particular estate precedes the devise of the fee or not. Wallop v. Darby, Yelv. 209; Conquest v. Conquest, 16 W. R. 453. In cases where the whole personality is given to a person absolutely, and then there is a gift of the residue at her decease, the earlier gift has been held to be for life only. Sherratt v. Bentley, 2 Myl. & K. 149; In re Brook's Will, 13 W. R. 573; Hare v. Westropp, 2 W. R. 689. And the same construction has been adopted where there were no words referring to the death of the first legatee, but the gift was to her children. In re Bageshaw's Trusts, 24 W. R. 875; 46 L. J. Ch. 567. So, if a testator gives the remainder of his property to A, and makes B his residuary legatee, B. will take only lapsed legacies. In re Jessop, 11 Ir. Ch. Rep. 424; Davis v. Bennett, 30 Beav. 226; Kelvington v. Parker, 21 W. R. 121. But a residuary gift by codicil revokes a residuary gift by will. Hardwicke v. Douglas, 7 Cl. & F. 795. Similarly a gift of all the testator's property, followed by gifts of specific portions of it or vice versa, may both take effect. Cuthbert v. Lempriere, 3 M. & S. 158; Roe v. Neville, 11 Q. B. 466; 63 E. C. L. 465; Blamire v. Geldart, 16 Ves. Jr. 314; In re Arrow-smith's Trusts, 8 W. R. 555; 2 De G. F. & J. 474; Robertson v. Powell, 3 N. R. 433. Where, however, all the testator's personal property was given to his widow for life, subsequent legacies were held to be not payable till after her death. Burdett v. Young, 9 Madd. 93; 5 Bro. P. C. 54. As between a will and codicil, however, the argument is much stronger in favor of revocation. At any rate, where a testator by his will distinguishes between specific legacies and residue, and by a codicil gives all his personal property, the codicil revokes the specific legacies as well as the residuary gift. Kermode v. Macdonald, L. R., 1 Eq. 457; L. R., 3 Ch. 584." Theobald on Wills 578.

To render a subsequent provision in a will repugnant to a previous one, the last provision must be absolutely incompatible with the first, so that, if effect be given to the last, the other must entirely fail; but no such incompatibility exists where a testator, by one clause of his will, gives in absolute terms a legacy to his wife, to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale of his real estate, and by a subsequent clause orders his executors to sell such real estate after the decease of his wife; because under such will, the legacy becomes vested on the death of the testator, although not payable until after the death of the legatee, and the legatee has the same right to dispose of it, that she has in respect to any other property, and on her death, if undisposed of, it goes to her personal representatives, who may enforce the payment against the executors. Sweet v. Chase, 2 N. Y. 73.

A testator gave "the use and profits of all my estate, real and personal, to my daughters who may remain single. Should they all marry, or when they die, then it is my will that my property shall be equally divided among my surviving children. My land in the county of F., called M., I give to my son R." On considering the circumstances of the family and the property, as they appeared in proof, it was held that an estate for life was given to the daughters in all the estate, real and personal, determinable as to each on her marriage or death; that the devise of the land to R. in the third clause of the will, was not an exception out of the general devise to the daughters, nor a revocation of said devise pro tanto, upon the ground of its being repugnant thereto; and that, accordingly, the estate given to R. in M. would not become vested in possession as long as either of the daughters should remain in life and unmarried. Hooe v. Hooe, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 245.

irreconcilable, the posterior in local position is to be preferred.¹

M., being the owner of two adjoining surveys of land, devised to his children different quantities, to be taken out of those surveys, without describing the boundary. The aggregate of these quantities fell short of the amount called for in the two surveys only one and a half acres. He then gave to F. all the surplus in two said surveys, "and also all land that I may obtain, to be equally divided among all my children." In various codicils he described the boundaries to each lot devised, and finally ordered that "the land that has been sold for my use is to be equally taken out of each legatee's part;" "and all other lands not particularly pointed out, to be equally divided amongst my children, and to pass in the same way and manner as above specified, to each of said legatees." Two hundred and fifty acres of the land contained in the two surveys were sold in the life of the testator, and those surveys were found to contain six hundred and fifty acres more than the nominal quantity of four thousand acres. It was held that F. should hold the surplus, and that it was not included in the expression, "all other lands and estate not particularly pointed out," and that the devises of particular tracts should be diminished proportionally by the sales made by the testator. Hickman v. Holliday, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 582.

A testator, in the first testamentary disposition of his estate, gave to his wife, with the exception of one bequest, all he possessed of every description, and afterwards settled another disposition of it, made to provide for the contingency that he should survive his wife, but by which, in the event of his non-survivorship, he gave her the use of his estate for life, and in fee to will at her death, subject to the payment of four certain legacies at her death. It was held that she took a fee in the entire estate, subject to the payment of the legacies at her decease, the interest of which was adjudged to her for life; and that the legacies were vested in the legatees living at the death of the testator. Mütter's Estate, 38 Pa. St. 314.

A testator by his will made provision that certain property should be kept on interest, and the interest added to the principal, until the decease of R., and that at R.'s death the principal and accumulated interest should be paid to R.'s children; and in a subsequent clause provided, that, if M. should outlive R., the interest of the principal should be paid to M. annually during his life, and at his decease the principal should be disposed of as above directed. M. outlived R. It was held that, on the decease of R., the interest which had accumulated during his life should be distributed among his children, and that M. was entitled only to the interest on the original principal during his life. Lillie v. Pierce, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 566.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *472; 1 Redfield on Wills (4th ed.) *443; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 578; Crone v. Odell, 1 Ball & B. 449; Ulrich v. Litchfield, 2 Atk. 372; Paice v. Canterbury, 14 Ves. Jr. 366; Morrall v. Sutton, 1 Ph. 533. See also Roe v. Avis, 4 T. R. 605; Sherratt v. Bentley, 2 Myl. & K. 149; Gravenor v. Watkins, L. R., 6 C. P. 500; In re Brook's Will, D. & S. 362; Wykham v. Wykham, 18 Ves. 421; Doe v. Biggs, 2 Taunt. 109; Sims v. Doughty, 5 Ves. Jr. 243; Constantine v. Constantine, 6 Ves. Jr. 100; Smith v. Bell, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 74; Marks v. Solomon, 19 L. J. Ohio 555; Sheets' Appeal, 82 Pa. St. 213; Stickles' Appeal, 29 Pa. St. 234; Seibert v. Wise, 70 Pa. St. 147; Snively v. Storer, 78 Pa. St. 484; Newbold v. Boone, 52 Pa. St. 167; Stickle's Appeal, 29 Pa. St. 324; Lewis' Estate, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 162; Ulrich's Appeal, 86 Pa. St. 386; Drinker's Estate, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 330; Dawes v. Swan, 4 Mass. 215; Pratt v. Rice, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 209; Homer v. Shelton, 2 Met. (Mass.) 104; Pace v. Bonner, 27 Ala. 307; Thrasher v. Ingram, 32 Ala. 646; Griffin v. Pringle, 56 Ala. 486; Parks v. Kimes, 100 Ind. 151; Evans v. Hudson, 6 Ind. 293; Holdefer v. Teifel, 51 Ind. 343; Covert v. Sebern, 73 Iowa 564; Hendershot v. Shields, 42 N. J. Eq. 317;

4. Rule as to the General and Particular Intent.—If the general intention of the testator can be collected upon the whole will, particular terms used which are inconsistent with that intention may be rejected, as introduced by mistake or ignorance on the part of the testator, as to the force of the words used.¹

Lippincott v. Davis (N. J. 1894), 28 Atl. Rep. 587; Carter v. Lowell, 76 Me. 342; Woodbury v. Woodbury, 74 Me. 413; Orr v. Moses, 52 Me. 287; Ramsdell v. Ramsdell, 21 Me. 287; Pickering v. Langdon, 22 Me. 413; M'Donald v. Walgrove, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 274; Van Vechten v. Keator, 63 N. Y. 52; Van Nostrand v. Moore, 52 N. Y. 12; Parks v. Parks, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 107; Covenhoven v. Shuler, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 122; Matter of Manice, 31 Hun (N. Y.) 119; Waljor v. Hemmer (Ill. 1891), 28 N. E. Rep. 806; Brownfield v. Wilson, 78 Ill. 467; Ives v. Doe, 2 Ill. 276; Hollins v. Coonan, 9 Gill (Md.) 62; Lee v. Puel, 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 288; Pue v. Pue, 1 Md. Ch. 382; Boyle v. Parker, 3 Md. Ch. 42; McKenzie v. Roleson, 23 Ark. 102; Jones v. Paschall, 1 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 430; Warner v. Howell, 3 Wash. (U. S.) 12; Fraser v. Boone, 1 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 360; Hayes v. Davenport, 25 Vt. 109; Robert v. West, 15 Ga. 122; Lyon v. Fisk, 1 La. Ann. 444; Flinn v. Davis, 18 Ala. 132; Miller v. Flournoy, 26 Ala. 724; Hunt v. Johnson, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 342; Adie v. Cornwell, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 279; Howard v. Howard, 4 Bush (Ky.) 495; Mancil v. Evans, 4 Coldw. (Tenn.) 340; Rona v. Meier, 47 Iowa 607; Bradstreet v. Clarke, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 602; Davis v. Boggs, 20 Ohio St. 550; Petters v. Petters, 4 McCord (S. Car.) 151; Mandlebaum v. McDonell, 29 Mich. 78; Leavens v. Butler, 8 Port. (Ala.) 380; Heidlebaugh v. Wagner, 72 Iowa 601; Hitchcock v. U. S. Bank, 7 Ala. 386; Armstrong v. Armstrong, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 269; Hendershot v. Shields, 42 N. J. Eq. 317; Brimmer v. Sohler, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 118; Carter v. Alexander, 71 Mo. 585; Baird v. Baird, 7 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 265; Iglehart v. Kirwan, 10 Md. 559; Lamb v. Lamb, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 371; Mutter's Estate, 38 Pa. St. 314; Jacob v. Jacob, 4 Bush (Ky.) 110; Hunter v. Green, 22 Ala. 329; Bosley v. Wyatt, 14 How. (U. S.) 390; Sweet v. Chase, 2 N. Y. 73.

A testator directed that his wife should have, during life, the annual interest, or income, arising from the rents and sales of one equal third part of his whole estate, lands and tenements, whether the same consisted of legal or equitable titles, after all necessary expenses, etc., in recovering the same and completing the titles thereof, etc., were first deducted. In a subsequent clause, he directed that his personal estate, after certain deductions, "and also deducting thereout so much as may be necessary for discharging my just debts and completing my titles to my Kentucky lands," should be divided among certain persons. It was held that the cost and charges of completing the titles to the Kentucky lands were to be paid out of the general estate. Lewis' Estate, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 162.

Two clauses of a devise were as follows: "First. Devise of all testator's property to his wife during her natural life, if she remained unmarried; a portion of it to her, if she married again, for her life, balance to be divided among his children." Second clause was to "the creditors of M., deceased, a sum of money sufficient to make up their loss in his final account, as passed by his executor." After payment of debts, it appeared that the testator's property (personal) would be more than enough to pay the legacies to the creditors and leave the widow as large a share as she would have had if he had died intestate. It was held that M.'s creditors were entitled to the payment of their legacies, before payment to the wife, whether the two clauses were regarded as inconsistent dispositions, or the last a revocation pro tanto of the first; that the creditors' legacies could not be postponed till the termination of the wife's estate in the property, the presumption being, no time being fixed for such payment by the testator, that they were intended to be payable at the time limited by law. Iglehart v. Kirwan, 10 Md. 559.

Will and Codicil.—Where a will and codicil are irreconcilable, the codicil, as the last indication of the testator's mind, must prevail. Boyle v. Parker, 3 Md. Ch. 42; Gray v. Sherman, 5 Allen (Mass.) 198.

1. Sir J. Leach, M. R., in Sherratt v.

Bentley, 2 Myl. & K. 157. See St. John's Mite Assoc. v. Buchly, 5 Mackey (D. C.) 406; Dawes v. Swan, 4 Mass. 208; Cook v. Holmes, 11 Mass. 528; Urich's Appeal, 86 Pa. St. 390; Shreiner's Appeal, 53 Pa. St. 106; Schott's Estate, 78 Pa. St. 40; Hitchcock v. Hitchcock, 35 Pa. St. 393; Jones' Appeal, 3 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 169; Roe v. Vingut, 117 N. Y. 204; Earl v. Grim, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 494; Parks v. Parks, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 107; Kane v. Astor, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 467; Barheydt v. Barheydt, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 576; Hoppock v. Tucker, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 132; Stimson v. Vroman, 99 N. Y. 74; Wasser v. Wasser, 96 N. Y. 164; Phillips v. Davies, 92 N. Y. 199; Haxtun v. Corse, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 506; Georgia Code, § 2248; Robert v. West, 15 Ga. 122; Nussbaum v. Evans, 71 Ga. 753; Hollingsworth v. Hollingsworth, 65 Ala. 321; Thrasher v. Ingram, 32 Ala. 645; Leavens v. Butler, 8 Port. (Ala.) 380; Stallsworth v. Stallsworth, 5 Ala. 143; Watson v. Blackwood, 50 Miss. 15; Den v. Wortendyk, 7 N. J. L. 363; Den v. McMurtrie, 15 N. J. L. 276; Baldwin v. Taylor, 37 N. J. Eq. 78; Chase v. Lockerman, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 185; Pue v. Pue, 1 Md. Ch. 382; Bivens v. Phifer, 2 Jones (N. Car.) 436; Adie v. Cornwell, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 279; Houser v. Ruffner, 18 W. Va. 245; Bell v. Humphrey, 8 W. Va. 1; McMurry v. Stanley, 69 Tex. 230; Cooper v. Horner, 62 Tex. 357; Price v. Cole, 83 Va. 343; Hart v. Brooks, 16 Va. L. J. 654; Purnell v. Dudley, 4 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 203; Clark v. Preston, 2 La. Ann. 580; Lassiter v. Wood, 63 N. Car. 360; Peters v. Carr, 16 Mo. 54; Workman v. Cannon, 5 Harr. (Del.) 91; Pickering v. Langdon, 22 Me. 413; Rose v. McHose, 26 Mo. 590; Smith v. Bell, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 68. See also Van Vechten v. Van Vechten, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 104; Sorsby v. Vance, 36 Miss. 564. Compare Allen v. White, 97 Mass. 504; Lucas v. Lockhart, 18 Miss. 466.

Sherratt v. Bentley, 2 Myl. & K. 149, stated 1 Jarm. on Wills 473, is a good illustration of the way in which this principle, and that discussed in the last section, may be applied together. In this case, "a testator, after bequeathing several legacies, devised unto his wife a certain messuage and all other his real estates, and his household goods and all other his personal estate, to hold to his said wife, her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns forever.

The testator then directed that none of the legatees should be entitled until twelve months after his wife's decease; and, in case his wife should happen to die in his lifetime, and the before-mentioned devises and bequest to her should thereby lapse, the testator gave the estate and effects, as well real as personal comprised therein, to S., his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, to the use of such persons as his wife should, in her lifetime, by writing under her hand, appoint. The testator then gave some pecuniary legacies, and proceeded to devise and bequeath to W. A., and his (the testator's) brother-in-law's children, the residue of his real and personal estates, to be equally divided amongst them, share and share alike, at the decease of his said wife. The heir at law contended that the will was void for uncertainty, on account of the repugnance between the gift to the wife, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, and the subsequent gift of the residue to others, to be divided at her decease. The person claiming under the wife contended that the pecuniary legacies and the gift of the residue were only to take effect in the event of her decease in the testator's lifetime." It was held that the wife took for life only. In this case Sir. J. Leach, Master of the Rolls said as to the rules governing: "In this most inaccurate will it is impossible to give effect to every expression used by the testator, several of those expressions being necessarily inconsistent with each other. There are, however, two principles of construction upon which it appears to me that a court may come to a conclusion without the necessity, which, if possible, is always to be avoided, of declaring void for uncertainty. First, if the general intention of the testator can be collected upon the whole will, particular terms used which are consistent with that intention may be rejected, as introduced by mistake or ignorance, on the part of the testator, as to the force of the words used; secondly, where the latter part of the will is inconsistent with a prior part, the latter part of the will must prevail. . . . Although the terms of the first gift to the wife would give her the whole real and personal estate, it appears to me that it is to be intended that the testator did not understand the force of the words used; that his general intention was to give to the wife the full enjoyment of all his property during her life, and to give it over to the persons named in the latter part of his will, after her decease. To give effect to that general intention, I reject the words 'heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns forever,' as used by the testator without full knowledge of their force; and I call in aid the second rule to which I have referred, that, if there be doubts as to the general intention, the latter part of a will shall prevail against inconsistent expressions in the prior part of it." And this was affirmed by Lord Brougham on appeal. The general intent, if clear, must prevail over the rule that of two inconsistent clauses the last must prevail. Price v. Cole, 83 Va. 343.

5. A Clear Gift Not to Be Cut Down by Doubtful Expressions.—It has become a rule of construction that a clear gift is not to be cut down by any subsequent provision, unless the latter is equally clear; but perhaps the better statement is that a clear gift is not to be cut down by anything which does not, with reasonable certainty, indicate an intention to cut it down. Whichever form be adopted, the plain intention of the testator, and not the comparative lucidity of the two parts of the will, is to be regarded.¹

1. Randfield v. Randfield, 8 H. L. Cas. 225; Davis v. Bennett, 30 Beav. 226; Crozier v. Crozier, L. R., 15 Eq. 282; Kern v. Clinton, L. R., 8 Eq. 462; Goods of Larkin, 2 Jur. N. S. 229; Clavering v. Ellison, 3 Drew. 451; Schmaunz v. Goss, 132 Mass. 141; Martin v. Smith, 124 Mass. 111; Rhodes v. Rhodes, 137 Mass. 343; Damrell v. Hartt, 137 Mass. 218; Parker v. Iasigi, 138 Mass. 416. See Freeman v. Coit, 96 N. Y. 67; Temple v. Sammis, 48 N. Y. Super. Ct. 324; 97 N. Y. 526; Roseboom v. Roseboom, 81 N. Y. 356; Field v. New York, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 590; Oathout v. Rogers (Supreme Ct.), 13 N. Y. 120; Casper v. Walker, 33 N. J. Eq. 36; Kendall v. Kendall, 36 N. J. Eq. 91; Hoxsey v. Hoxsey, 37 N. J. Eq. 21; Collins v. Collins, 40 Ohio St. 364; Bills v. Bills, 80 Iowa 269; Alden v. Johnson, 63 Iowa 127; Judevine v. Judevine, 61 Vt. 587; Biddle's Estate, 28 Pa. St. 59; Urich's Appeal, 86 Pa. St. 386; Hopkins v. Ghent, 111 Pa. St. 287; Gillmer v. Daix, 141 Pa. St. 507; Good v. Fichthorn, 144 Pa. St. 287; Commons v. Commons, 115 Ind. 162; Hochstetler v. Hochstetler, 108 Ind. 510; Potter v. Merrill, 143 Mass. 189; Olney v. Balch, 154 Mass. 318; Conant v. Palmer, 63 Vt. 310; Wicker v. Ray, 118 Ill. 472; Rountree v. Talbot, 89 Ill. 250; Seigwald v. Seigwald, 37 Ill. 430; Wilmoth v. Wilmoth, 34 W. Va. 426; Bowen v. Bowen, 87 Va. 438; Barksdale v. White, 28 Gratt. (Va.) 224; Hall v. Palmer, 87 Va. 354; Cole v. Cole, 79 Va. 251; Hodges v. Potter, 12 R. I. 245; McMurry v. Stanley, 69 Tex. 233; Webb v. Lines, 57 Conn. 154; Weatherhead v. Baskerville, 11 How. (U. S.) 329; Dean v. Munnally, 56 Miss. 358; In re Veller's Estate, 11 Lanc. L. Rev. 185.

"If there be a clear gift, it is not to be cut down by anything subsequent which does not, with reasonable certainty, indicate the intention of the testator, to cut it down; but the maxim cannot mean that you are to institute a comparison between the two clauses as to lucidity." Lord Campbell, in Randfield v. Randfield, 8 H. L. Cas. 235.

Revocation by Construction—Inconsistent Provisions.—"The cases upon revocation as a question of construction are so special that they are of little use as general authorities, and hardly admit of a satisfactory classification. The following general rules may, however, be laid down with regard to revocation: First. To cut down a previous gift it must be reasonably clear that it was meant to be cut down. The rule is not that the words of revocation must be as clear as the words of original gift. See Randfield v. Randfield, 8 H. L. Cas. 225; Wallace v. Seymour, 20 W. R. 334; Beamish v. Beamish, L. R., 1 Ir. 501. Thus, if property is given to A for life, with remainder for her children, and by a codicil all gifts in favor of A are revoked, the remainder to the children remains. Green v. Tribe, 27 W. R. 39. On the other hand, where property is given to A for life, with remainders over, and the gift to A only is revoked, but the property is given absolutely to B, the whole original gift is revoked. Murray v. Johnston, 3 D. & W. 143; Fry v. Fry, 9 Jur. 894. See Wells v. Wells, 2 W. R. 6; 17 Jur. 1020; Hargreaves v. Pennington, 12 W.

R. 1047. So, when there is a gift to A, with executory limitations over, and the trusts of the will as regards the gift to A are revoked, the gifts over are revoked as well. Boulcott v. Boulcott, 2 Drew. 25. Second. The disposition of the will will not be disturbed more than is necessary to give effect to a revocation by codicil. Thus, where a legacy is charged on real and personal estate, and the charge on the personal estate is revoked by a codicil, the charge on the realty remains. Kermod v. Macdonald, L. R., 3 Ch. 585; Leese v. Knight, 12 W. R. 1097. Where a legacy is charged on two funds, one of which is afterwards by a codicil given free from the charge, the charge remains on the other fund and does not abate in the proportion of the two funds. Tatlock v. Jenkins, Kay. 654. So, too, when land is given subject to a charge to A, and the devise is afterwards revoked, the charge remains. Beckett v. Harden, 4 M. & S. 1. See Grice v. Funnell, 1 S. & G. 130. A legacy which is revoked is not set up again because the disposition in favor of which the revocation is made is incomplete, or incapable of taking effect. Tupper v. Tupper, 1 K. & J. 665; Nevill v. Boddam, 28 Beav. 584; Quinn v. Butler, L. R., 6 Eq. 225. See Onions v. Tyrer, 1 P. Wms. 343; 2 Vern. 741; Baker v. Story, 23 W. R. 147. When personalty is directed to go upon the same trusts as realty, and the trusts of the realty are afterwards revoked, the gift of the personalty remains. Beauclerk v. Mead, 2 Atk. 167; Darley v. Longworth, 3 Bro. P. C. 359; Agnew v. Pope, 1 De G. & J. 49; Martineau v. Briggs, 23 W. R. 889; Bridges v. Strachan, 26 W. R. 691; Carrington v. Payne, 5 Ves. Jr. 404, would probably not be followed. See In re Gibson, 2 J. & H. 656. But if the gift is of money to be laid out in repairing certain premises, and the surplus is given to the same persons to whom the premises are devised, and this latter devise is revoked, the gift of personalty also fails. White-way v. Fisher, 9 W. R. 433. Third. A gift by will is not revoked by an erroneous recital of it by a codicil. In re Smith, 2 J. & H. 594; Mann v. Fuller, Kay 624. Fourth. An alteration or an addition to a gift in a will, expressed to be made upon an assumption of fact, which turns out to be erroneous, does not take effect. Campbell v. French, 3 Ves. Jr. 321;

Doe v. Evans, 2 P. & D. 378; 10 Ad. & El. 228; 37 E. C. L. 102; Barclay v. Maskelyne, Johns. 124. But if the alteration or addition is made because the testator is doubtful whether some fact is true or not, the alteration takes effect. Atty. Gen'l v. Lloyd, 3 Atk. 552; 1 Ves. 32; Atty. Gen'l v. Ward, 3 Ves. Jr. 327. The distinction seems to be, not between the fact and the testator's belief in the fact, but between a fact and a possibility which the testator is unable to verify, and, therefore, an additional gift founded upon an erroneous belief, would fall under the former head. Thomas v. Howell, L. R., 18 Eq. 198." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 576.

Instances Illustrating the Rule.—A devise was in the following words: "I give to my daughter A everything of which I die possessed. In the event of my daughter's death without children:" then specifying subsequent dispositions to be made. It was held that the devise to A was absolute, and that the subsequent dispositions were intended to take effect only in the event of A's death in the lifetime of testator. Biddle's Estate, 28 Pa. St. 59. Lowrie, J., in giving the opinion in the above case, said: "If the intention of the substitutionary clauses is truly uncertain—in one sense leaving the estate of Anne absolute, and in another taking it away—it is a mere matter of logic that what is expressly given must stand. The first gift is absolute, and the subsequent clauses make no profession of reducing it, and must therefore be taken as intended to provide for its failure to take effect by Anne's death before her mother."

The testator desired that his wife should have his entire estate, "to have and to hold, and to sell any part thereof she may think best for her interest and that of the children, during her natural life or widowhood;" that the estate should be kept together during her life or widowhood; that, if the children married or came of age during her life, she should give them such property as she should think best; that the children should be educated out of the estate, and should have the whole on the widow's death; he requested B and A to "take his entire business in hand, and act as executors." It was held that the first clause clearly gave the widow a legal estate until death or marriage; that the power of sale did not enlarge that estate; that the request to B and

6. Rejecting Words.—Words and passages absolutely irreconcilable with the general context may be rejected,¹ but not upon mere conjecture, nor unless absolutely irreconcilable with the context, even though their intention may sometimes produce rather absurd consequences.²

A was to act as executors, and that it was the widow, not B and A as executors or trustees, who was to keep the property together and divide it, and therefore that these clauses confirmed in her the legal estate and right of possession as well as the beneficial life estate, both of which the first clause gave her. Dean v. Nunnally, 36 Miss. 358.

For further discussion see supra, this title, Revocation.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *480; Boon v. Conforth, 2 Ves. 277; Coryton v. Helyar, 2 Cox 340; Doe v. Stinlake, 12 East 515; Doe v. Thomas, 3 Ad. & El. 123; Smith v. Pybus, 9 Ves. Jr. 566. See further Smith v. Crabtree, 6 Ch. Div. 591; Hanbury v. Tyrell, 21 Beav. 322; Campbell v. Bonskell, 27 Beav. 325; Jones v. Price, 11 Sim. 557; Aspinall v. Andus, 7 M. & G. 912; Lunn v. Osborne, 7 Sim. 56; Towns v. Wentworth, 11 Moo. P. C. C. 545; Hugo v. Williams, L. R., 14 Eq. 224; McKeehan v. Wilson, 53 Pa. St. 74; Pond v. Bergh, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 140; Phillips v. Davies, 92 N. Y. 109; Mason v. Jones, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 229; Lottimer v. Blumenthal, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 360; Den v. Young, 24 N. J. L. 775; Hendershot v. Shields, 42 N. J. Eq. 317; Newburyport Bank v. Stone, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 420; Needham v. Ide, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 510; Duncan v. Philips, 3 Head (Tenn.) 415; Hamilton v. Boyles, 1 Brev. (S. Car.) 414; Jackson v. Hoover, 26 Ind. 511; Wright v. Denn, 18 Wheat. (U. S.) 239; Wright v. Denn, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 239; McBride v. Smyth, 54 Pa. St. 248; Burke v. Chamberlain, 22 Md. 298; Davis v. Boggs, 20 Ohio St. 550; Hall v. Hall, 123 Miss. 120; Wootten v. Redd, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 196; Prosser v. Hardesty, 101 Mo. 596; In re Wood's Estate, 36 Cal. 81; Jameson, Appellants, 1 Mich. 99; McMurry v. Stanley, 69 Tex. 227; Drew v. Drew, 28 N. H. 489; East v. Garrett, 84 Va. 523. Mere surplusage may be rejected. Wright v. Denn, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 239; Bartlet v. King, 12 Mass. 542.

If the contents of a will show that a word has been undesignedly omitted or inserted, and demonstrate what addition by construction or what rejection by construction will fulfill the intention with which the document was written, the addition or rejection will, by construction, be made. Knight v. Bruce, in Pride v. Fooks, 3 De G. & J. 266.

Thus a will made by a woman after marriage, bequeathing "all my estate, real and personal, meaning all the estate and property secured, etc., to me, etc., by certain articles of agreement" (referring to the marriage contract), was held to be a valid appointment under such contract, the intent of disposing of all her personal estate being manifest, the term "real estate," although inoperative, because there was no real estate, did not invalidate the appointment, as far as it was pursuant to the power. Newburyport Bank v. Stone, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 420.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *483; Chambers v. Brailsford, 18 Ves. Jr. 368. See Goodright v. Hall, 1 Wills. 148; Mellish v. Mellish, 4 Ves. Jr. 48; Roe v. Foster, 9 East 405; Ridgeway v. Munkittrick, 1 D. & W. 91; Langley v. Thomas, 6 De G. M. & G. 645; Ridout v. Pain, 3 Atk. 493; Greenwood v. Greenwood, 5 Ch. Div. 954; Daniel's Settlement Trusts, 1 Ch. Div. 375; Sweeting v. Prideaux, 2 Ch. Div. 413; Graham v. Graham, 23 W. Va. 36; Caldwell v. Willis, 57 Miss. 555; Baxter v. Bowyer, 19 Ohio St. 490.

The rejection of one clause to uphold another is a desperate remedy, to be resorted to only in case of necessity. Jenks v. Jackson, 127 Ill. 350.

Thus in Chambers v. Brailsford, 18 Ves. Jr. 368 (cited 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 483); affirmed on appeal 19 Ves. Jr. 652. "A testator, after bequeathing certain property to Thomas Brailsford, son of his nephew Samuel Brailsford, devised his real estate to the use of the said Thomas Brailsford and his assigns, for and during the term of his natural life, and after his decease, to the use of the said Thomas

7. Supplying Words.—Where it is clear on the face of the will that the testator has not accurately or completely expressed his meaning by the words he has used, and it is also clear what are the words which he has omitted, those words may be supplied in order to effectuate the intention as collected from the context.¹

Brailsford, son of my nephew Samuel Brailsford, his heirs and assigns forever.' The only Thomas Brailsford mentioned in the will was the son of Samuel, but the testator had another nephew of that name (who was uncle of the legatee), to whom, therefore, it was contended that the devise to 'the said Thomas Brailsford,' applied, though he was not before named, according to the case in Hawkins, 2 Hawk. P. C. 271, § 106, that father and son having the same name, the son, not the father, is distinguished by an addition. The words 'the said,' it was observed, might be considered surplusage; and that the devise was either void for uncertainty, or, there must be an inquiry. It was held that by the words, 'the said Thomas Brailsford,' the Thomas Brailsford who had been before mentioned was intended. Sir W. Grant, M. R., said: "The argument on the other side 'rests chiefly on the inconsistency of giving to the same person, in the same sentence, an estate for life and also an estate in fee; there is certainly a particularity in that, but the devise as it stands is not so insensible or contradictory as to drive the court to the necessity of expunging or adding words to give it a meaning.'"

Devise Not Controlled by Reason Assigned.—Thus where testator stated that he vested a general power to distribute his property in his trustees, by reason of his personal confidence in them, and then conferred the power upon them, and the heirs, executors, and administrators of the survivor of them, Sir W. Grant said: "Though it seems very incongruous and inconsequential to extend to unknown and unascertained persons the power which personal knowledge and confidence had induced the testator to confide to his original trustees and executors, yet I am not authorized to strike these words out of the will, upon the supposition, though not improbable, that they were introduced in this part by inadvertence and mistake. I do not apprehend that a bequest actually made or a power given can be controlled by the reason assigned. The assigned reason may aid in the construction of doubtful words, but cannot warrant the rejection of words that are clear." Cole v. Wade, 16 Ves. Jr. 46. See Thompson v. Whitelock, 5 Jur. N. S. 991.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *486; Goods of Morony, L. R., 1 Ir. 483; Doe v. Turner, 2 D. & R. 398; Abbot v. Middleton, 7 H. L. Cas. 68; Atkins v. Atkins, Cro. El. 248; Spalding v. Spalding, Cro. Car. 185; Sheppard v. Lessingham, Amb. 122; Radford v. Radford, 1 Keen 486; Jackson v. Hoover, 26 Ind. 511; Lang v. Pugh, 1 Y. & C. C. 718; McKeehan v. Wilson, 53 Pa. St. 74; Den v. McMurtrie, 15 N. J. L. 276; Sessoms v. Sessoms, 2 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 453; Jameson, Appellant, 1 Mich. 99; Creswell v. Lawson, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 227; Lynch v. Hill, 6 Munf. (Va.) 114. See Heald v. Heald, 56 Md. 300; Greenough v. Cass, 64 N. H. 327; Aulick v. Wallace, 12 Bush (Ky.) 531; Patterson v. Read, 42 N. J. Eq. 149; Den v. Young, 24 N. J. L. 775; Mumford v. Rochester, 4 Redf. (N. Y.) 451; East v. Garrett, 84 Va. 523; Thompson v. Thompson, 115 Mo. 56; In re Keller's Estate, 11 Lanc. L. Rev. (Pa.) 185; Selden v. King, 2 Call (Va.) 73; Duncan v. Phillips, 3 Head (Tenn.) 415; Cleland v. Waters, 16 Ga. 496; Howerton v. Henderson, 88 N. Car. 597; Dew v. Barnes, 1 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 149.

The statement of the doctrine in the text is taken from Mr. Jarman's work on Wills, vol. 1, p. 486, and is probably more widely accepted than any other. In Re Morony, L. R., 1 Ir. 483, Warren, J., said there could be no doubt as to its accuracy. In Pride v. Fooks, 3 De G. & J. 266, Knight Bruce, L. J., substantially announced the same proposition, in another form, by saying that if the contents of a will showed that a word had been undesignedly omitted, and demonstrated what addition by construction would fulfill the intention with which the document was written, the addition would be made. In Hope v. Potter, 3 K. & J. 209, Sir W. Pagewood, V. C., said: "With regard to the discretion of the court to supply words in a will, the cases are very numerous, but I think they may be classed under two heads. The first is, when the will is in itself incapable of bearing any meaning unless some words are supplied, so that the only choice is between an intestacy and supplying some words; but even there, as in every case, the court can only supply words if it sees on the face of the will itself, clearly and precisely, what are the omitted words, which may then be supplied upon what is called a necessary implication from the terms of the will, and in order to prevent an intestacy. The second class of cases is like Spalding v. Spalding, Cro. Car. 185, where there is a clear and precise gift and a contingent limitation over, which is clearly expressed, but is not commensurate with the previous gift, the contingency being either in excess, as in many cases where the gift over has been upon a death without issue, and the court has thought itself at liberty to curtail that gift over by introducing the words 'such' issue, or where there has been a defect, as in Spalding v. Spalding, Cro. Car. 185; Abbot v. Middleton, 1 Jur. N. S. 1126, where the limitation has been to one for life, with remainder to his children, or to one in tail, with a limitation over on a contingency, and the court has held the gift over to be by way of substitution for the original gift in the event of the original gift failing, and has found the contingency too narrow to fit that event and has thought itself at liberty, from the whole context of the will, to supply words, there being a necessary implication that the gift over was intended to be reduced so as to suit the previous gift."

Hence, it was held that where there was a devise of a particular property to the testator's daughter A, her heirs and assigns, and if she should die under the age of twenty-five years, "without having left any child or children," over, and subsequently, a devise of other real estate to trustees in fee, in trust for A, for her separate use; and after her death, in trust to convey the same "unto and equally amongst such children of A as tenants in common, the rents and profits in the meantime to be applied for their maintenance; and in case A should die without leaving any child or children, or, leaving such child or children, all should die under twenty-one," over, the court could not, after "such children of A," supply the words "as should attain twenty-one," but was at liberty, as against the testator's heir, to construe the word "such" as relating to all children of A, as they had been mentioned in the previous limitation. Hope v. Potter, 3 K. & J. 206.

In Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 582, the doctrine is stated as follows: "With regard to supplying words in a will, the rule seems to be that where the will as it stands is clearly inconsistent, so that the choice lies between rejecting some portion of it or supplying some word, while, at the same time, the latter course will make the will consistent, the court will be justified in making the necessary addition. See Hope v. Potter, 3 K. & J. 206; In re Morony, L. R., 1 Ir. 483. Thus, in a devise to A for life, remainder 'to the first son of A, severally and successively in tail, male,' the devise will be construed as to the first and other sons of A. Parker v. Tootal, 11 H. L. Cas. 143. See Newburgh v. Newburgh, Lord St. Leonards' Law of Property 367. Under a bequest in trust for the testator's widow for her life, in trust for his children, followed by power of maintenance and advancement after the widow's death, with an ultimate gift over after her death, in default of children attaining vested interests, the court supplied the words 'and after her death' after the words 'for her left.' Greenwood v. Greenwood, 5 Ch. Div. 954. So, too, where there was a limitation in a settlement to the children of the marriage, who, being a son or sons, should attain twenty-one years; and if there should be but one such child, the whole to be in trust for such one child, his or her executors or administrators, and there were powers of applying the presumptive share of every such child for his or her maintenance until his or her share should become vested, the court held daughters to be included in the gifts. In re Daniel's Settlement Trusts, 1 Ch. Div. 375. In a somewhat similar case, where there were limitations to daughters for life, with remainders to their children, and the limitation to the children of one daughter was omitted, it was supplied upon the general intention of the will. In re Redfern, 6 Ch. Div. 133. So, when there is a gift to A in tail, and, if he die, over, the words without issue will be supplied in the gift over to satisfy the implied contingency. Anonymous, 1 And. 33. And in a similar case, where there were devised to several in tail, and the interest of one of the tenants in tail was given over to another 'if he died living Alice,' the words 'without issue' were supplied, there being a gift over of the whole upon death of all the tenants in tail without issue. Spalding v. Spalding, Cro. Car. 185. The extreme limit to which the court will go, in supplying words in such cases, is probably marked by Abbott v. Middleton, 7 H. L. Cas. 68. The gift there was of personalty to the testator's wife for life, and then to his son for life, with remainder to the son's children and 'in case of my son dying before his mother,' over. The son died, leaving a child, and the House of Lords held (Lords Cranworth and Wensleydale dissenting) that the words 'without children' must be supplied in the gift over, so as to leave the child of A in possession of the property. However, if the testator expressly distinguishes death in the lifetime of a tenant for life from death without issue; if, for instance, the gift over is either in the event of death before the tenant in tail, or in the event of death without issue at any time, the gift over must be literally construed. Eastwood v. Lockwood, L. R., 3 Eq. 487. Where a testator bequeathed the remainder of his property 'and any other property of which I may die possessed, and I nominate my son my executor,' it was held that the residue was undisposed of. Driver v. Driver, 43 L. J. Ch. 279."

See also the following cases, in which the doctrine was examined: Pickering v. Langdon, 22 Me. 413; Boston Safe Deposit, etc., Co. v. Coffin, 152 Mass. 98; Metcalf v. First Parish, 128 Mass. 375; Couch v. Gorham, 1 Conn. 39; Kellogg v. Mix, 37 Conn. 243; Heald v. Heald, 56 Md. 300; Creswell v. Lawson, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 227; Jackson v. Hoover, 26 Ind. 511; Grimes v. Harmon, 35 Ind. 198; State v. Joyce, 48 Ind. 310; Bishop v. Morgan, 82 Ill. 354; Covenhoven v. Shuler, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 122; Pond v. Bergh, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 140; Drake v. Pell, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 251; Carter v. Bloodgood, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 293; McKeehan v. Wilson, 53 Pa. St. 74; Zerbe v. Zerbe, 84 Pa. St. 147; Wurts v. Page, 19 N. J. Eq. 365; Den v. Combs, 18 N. J. L. 27; Creveling v. Jones, 21 N. J. L. 573; Van Houten v. Pennington, 8 N. J. Eq. 745; Augustus v. Seabolt, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 156; Hunt v. Johnson, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 344; Aulick v. Wallace, 12 Bush (Ky.)

533; Barclay v. Dupuy, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 98; Cleland v. Waters, 16 Ga. 507; Wootton v. Redd, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 196; Lynch v. Hill, 6 Munf. (Va.) 114; Dew v. Barnes, 1 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 149; Sessoms v. Sessoms, 2 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 453; Geiger v. Brown, 4 McCord (S. Car.) 418; Reid v. Hancock, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 368.

In the case of Kellogg v. Mix, 37 Conn. 243, the trustees, under the will of John G. Mix, applied to the superior court in equity for advice as to the proper construction of a certain clause contained in the will. The provision about which the trustees found themselves in doubt was in the following language: "After paying my debts, I give to my beloved wife C., in trust for the maintenance of herself during life, and of my daughter E., so long as she remains single; and to my son G. $400 a year to be paid to him by my trustees." A previous clause had given the entire property to trustees for the purposes to be stated in the will. No other disposition of the income, which was over $400, was made during the life of the widow, but the income was given to his children after her death, and any appropriation of any part of the principal before her death was forbidden, unless with her consent; and there was a provision that she should have the entire use of her portion of the estate until her death. The court, in its construction of the provision in question, declared that it was clear that the testator intended to give his widow the net income of the estate during her life, except the $400 given to his son, and hence, that those words might be supplied in construing the legacy to her. It was also held, generally, that where a testator has omitted words in a will which are necessary to express the meaning intended, which is clearly inferable from the will taken as a whole, the court may, by construction, supply the omitted words.

"Without Issue" Read "Without Leaving Issue."—See Sheppard v. Lesingham, Ambli. 122; Pye v. Linwood, 6 Jur. 618; Radford v. Radford, 1 Kee. 486.

Supplying the Words "Under Twenty-one."—See Kirkpatrick v. Kilpatrick, 13 Ves. Jr. 476; Wheable v. Withers, 16 Sim. 505; Else v. Else, L. R., 13 Eq. 196; Radby v. Lees, 3 M. & G. 327; Pennington v. Van Houten, 8 N. J. Eq. 272; affirmed 745; Den v. Combs, 18 N. J. L. 27.

In all such cases the court acts upon the assumption that the contingency or state of circumstances which was present to the testator's mind was imperfectly described, and hence, when the testator has himself overlooked a particular event, which, had it occurred to him, he would probably have guarded against, the omission cannot be supplied by inserting the necessary clause; to do so would be too much like making a will for the testator, rather than construing that already made.¹

8. Changing Words.—To authorize the court in changing the language employed by the testator, it must be apparent, not only that the testator has used the wrong word or phrase, but also

On Marriage Read at Twenty-One or Marriageable.—Lang v. Pugh, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 718; King v. Cullen, 2 De G. & S. 252; Woodburne v. Woodburne, 3 De G. & S. 643.

As to Supplying Objects by Reference to Preceding Limitations.—See Doe v. Turner, 2 D. & Ry. 308; Langston v. Pole, 2 M. & P. 490; Parker v. Tootal, 11 H. L. Cas. 143; Clarke v. Clemmens, 36 L. J. Ch. 171; Biss v. Smith, 2 H. & M. 105; Grimson v. Downing, 4 Drew. 132; Simpson v. Smith, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 394; Marsh v. Hague, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 174.

As to Supplying Words to Provide for an Alternative Event.—See Doe v. Scudamore, 2 B. & P. 296; Doe v. Micklem, 6 East 486; Pearsall v. Simpson, 15 Ves. Jr. 29.

Effect of Arranging Clauses Numerically.—Where a testator divides his will into sections numerically arranged, and in some instances places the words of limitation at the end of each section, they will be considered applicable to the several devises contained in the section, and not be confined to those in immediate juxtaposition. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 499; Fenny v. Ewestace, 4 M. & S. 58; Child v. Elsworth, 2 De G. M. & G. 679; Gordon v. Gordon, L. R., 5 H. L. 282.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *489; Eastwood v. Lockwood, L. R., 3 Eq. 487; Augustus v. Seabolt, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 156. See Abbott v. Middleton, 7 H. L. Cas. 80; Murgitroyd's Estate, 1 Brewst. (Pa.) 317; Varner's Appeal, 87 Pa. St. 422; McKeehan v. Wilson, 53 Pa. St. 74; Butterfield v. Hamant, 105 Mass. 339; Hollingsworth v. Hollingsworth, 65 Ala. 321; Heald v. Heald, 56 Md. 300; Caldwell v. Willis, 57 Miss. 571. See also Hamilton v. Boyles, 1 Brev. (S. Car.) 414; Simpson v. Smith, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 394; Lynch

v. Hill, 6 Munf. (Va.) 114; Liston v. Jenkins, 2 W. Va. 62; Pickering v. Langdon, 22 Me. 413; Arthur v. Arthur, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 9.

Thus, it has been held that, while a word may be rejected, if the other parts of the will show that it was improperly or incautiously used, it will not be discarded on a mere conjecture, based upon a presumption that the testator intended a provision similar to the Statute of Distributions. Caldwell v. Willis, 57 Miss. 555.

The testator made a devise of his real estate to his daughter, "to her, her heirs, and assigns forever;" but if she died before the age of twenty-one or marriage, in the lifetime of the testator's wife, then to the wife, "to her, her heirs, and assigns forever." He also bequeathed certain personal estate to his said daughter, "to her and her heirs forever." He then bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his said wife and daughter, "to be equally divided between them, share and share alike, by two indifferent persons to be chosen by the executors, to them, the said wife and daughter their, and each of their, heirs forever;" after which the will contained the following clauses: "And in case of the death of either of them, then my will and desire is, that the survivor shall enjoy the whole, to them and their heirs, forever. But in case of the death of both my said wife and daughter, then I give my estate, real and personal, above mentioned, to my brothers, James, etc., to them and each and every of their heirs, and assigns forever, to be equally divided," etc. It was held that the words, "without issue," could not be supplied after the words "death of either of them," and "death of both my said wife and daughter." Hamilton v. Boyles, 1 Brev. (S. Car.) 414.

what is the right one; if this be clear, the change is warranted by established principles of construction.¹

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *504; Taylor v. Richardson, 2 Drew. 16; Doe v. Gallini, 5 B. & Ad. 621; 27 E. C. L. 138; Hart v. Tulk, 2 De G. M. & G. 300; Woodstock v. Shillito, 6 Sim. 416; Cox v. Britt, 22 Ark. 567. See Taylor v. Creagh, 8 Ir. Ch. Rep. 281; In re Bayliss' Trust, 17 Sim. 178; Pasmore v. Huggins, 21 Beav. 103; Philipps v. Chamberlaine, 4 Ves. Jr. 50; Dent v. Pepys, 6 Madd. 350; Horridge v. Ferguson, Jac. 583; Minot v. Tappan, 122 Mass. 535; Dow v. Dow, 36 Me. 211; Butterfield v. Haskins, 33 Me. 393; Phelps v. Bates, 54 Conn. 11; Roe v. Vingut, 117 N. Y. 204; Matter of Thompson, 5 Dem. (N. Y.) 393; Pond v. Bergh, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 140; DuBois v. Ray, 35 N. Y. 163; Patchen v. Patchen, 121 N. Y. 432; Den v. McMurtree, 15 N. J. L. 276; Den v. Combs, 18 N. J. L. 27; Cody v. Bunn, 46 N. J. Eq. 131; Hawes v. Foote, 64 Tex. 27; Castner's Appeal, 88 Pa. St. 491; Horwitz v. Morris, 60 Pa. St. 261; Hancock's Appeal, 112 Pa. St. 543; Hallowell's Estate, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 55; Fulford v. Hancock, Busb. Eq. (N. Car.) 55; Tayloe v. Johnson, 63 N. Car. 383; East v. Garret, 84 Va. 523; Taylor v. Meador, 66 Ga. 232; Armstrong v. Moran, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 314; Sloan v. Hanse, 2 Rawl. (Pa.) 28; Tennell v. Ford, 30 Ga. 707; Collier v. Collier, 3 Ohio St. 369. But see Sayward v. Sayward, 7 Me. 210; Morton v. Banett, 22 Me. 257; Fiske v. Keene, 35 Me. 349; Sawyer v. Baldwin, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 384; Robb v. Belt, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 643; Taylor v. Conner, 7 Ind. 115; Roome v. Phillips, 24 N. Y. 463; Jackson v. Blanshan, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 54; Drake v. Pell, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 251; Hawn v. Banks, 4 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 664; Phye v. Phye, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 45; Pratt v. Flamer, 5 Har. & J. Md.) 10; Raborg v. Hammond, 2 Har. & G. (Md.) 42; Janney v. Sprigg, 7 Gill (Md.) 197; Vaden v. Hance, 1 Head (Tenn.) 300; Booth v. Terrell, 16 Ga. 20; State Bank v. Ewing, 17 Ind. 68; Tayloe v. Johnson, 63 N. Car. 381; Fulford v. Hancock, Busb. Eq. (N. Car.) 55; Bostick v. Lawton, 1 Spears (S. Car.) 258; Brooke v. Croxton, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 506; Kindig v. Deardorff, 39 Ill. 300; Den v. Young, 24 N. J. L. 775. Compare Barnes v. Simms, 5 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 392.

"Or" Construed "And."—As the words "or" and "and" are often carelessly interchanged, in many instances the court has been called upon to rectify the blunder to preserve the manifest intention of the testator. Thus, where there is a gift to two objects, or classes of objects, in the alternative, to avoid holding the gift void for uncertainty, "or" has frequently been read "and." Richardson v. Spragg, 1 P. Wms. 434; Eccard v. Brooke, 2 Cox 213; Maude v. Maude, 22 Beav. 200.

Gifts Over on Death Under Age "or" Without Issue.—In the case of a gift over if the first taker die under age "or" without issue, "or" is construed "and," and the gift over does not take effect unless both events happen. See Issue, vol. 11, p. 910.

In addition to the authorities there cited, see 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 505; Soule v. Gerrard, Cro. Eliz. 525; Walsh v. Paterson, 3 Atk. 193; Doe v. Burnsale, 6 T. R. 34; Fairfield v. Morgan, 2 B. & P. N. R. 38; Doe v. Selby, 4 D. & Ry. 608; Eastman v. Baker, 1 Taunt. 174; Phelps v. Bates, 54 Conn. 11; Neal v. Cosden, 34 Md. 421; Raborg v. Hammond, 2 Har. & G. (Md.) 42; Ward v. Barrows, 2 Ohio St. 242; Tennell v. Ford, 30 Ga. 707; Parrish v. Vaughan, 12 Bush (Ky.) 97. Compare Doe v. Watson, 8 How. (U. S.) 263; Robertson v. Johnston, 24 Ga. 102; Den v. Lake, 24 N. J. L. 686; affirmed 25 N. J. L. 605; Den v. English, 17 N. J. L. 280; Carpenter v. Boulden, 48 Md. 122; Dallam v. Dallam, 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 220; Chrystie v. Phye, 19 N. Y. 344; Armstrong v. Moran, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 314; Carpenter v. Heard, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 449; Griffith v. Woodward, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 316; Den v. Mugway, 15 N. J. L. 330; Ray v. Enslin, 2 Mass. 554; Turner v. Whitted, 2 Hawks (N. Car.) 613; Montgomery v. Wynns, 4 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 527; Harrison v. Bowe, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 478; Kindig v. Deardorff, 39 Ill. 300; Scanlan v. Porter, 1 Bailey (S. Car.) 427; Witsell v. Mitchell, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 289; Brewer v. Opie, 1 Call (Va.) 212; Betzhooover v. Costen, 7 Pa. St. 13; Shands v. Rogers, 7 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 422; Munro v. Holmes, 1 Brev. (S. Car.) 319; Seabrook v. Mikell, 1 Cheves Eq. (S. Car.) 80. See also O'Brien v. Heeney, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 242.

Thus, a devise of slaves to M., his heirs and assigns, and, "if the said M. should die without heirs of his body lawfully begotten, or before he shall arrive unto the full age of twenty-one years, then to F.," etc., is good, by way of executory devise to F., the word "or" in this limitation being construed to mean "and." Raborg v. Hammond, 2 Har. & G. (Md.) 42.

B. devised "all his estate, real and personal, to his six children, by name, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike; but if any one of them should die before reaching maturity, or without lawful issue, that then his, her, or their part should devolve upon, and be equally divided among, the surviving children and their heirs and assigns forever." All the children survived the testator. Four of them subsequently died, leaving issue; and the fifth, after reaching maturity, died intestate, and without lawful issue, having previously conveyed his share of the estate. It was held that the word "or" was to be construed as "and," so that the devise over did not take effect; and the surviving child was not entitled to the share of the one dying without lawful issue. Jackson v. Blanshan, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 54. See also Kindig v. Deardorff, 39 Ill. 300.

A testator made the following devise: "I give, devise, and bequeath unto my daughter M., and to her heirs and assigns forever, all that tract of land purchased of B., and also that part of tract marked D., in the first purchase from C., not given to my son-in-law E., as will more fully appear by reference to a deed given to F. and E., together with a tract in the last purchase marked G, together with an equal portion of my personal property with the rest of my children, not hereinbefore bequeathed;" and in a subsequent clause: "It is my will, that if any of my children, in age from my daughter M. down to the youngest, die under age or before marriage, that the portion of personal estate bequeathed to them be equally divided amongst my surviving six minor children; and the real estate, if not otherwise devised, to be equally divided between all my surviving children." It was held that "or" must be construed "and." Bostick v. Lawton, 1 Spears (S. Car.) 258.

Compare Brooke v. Croxton, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 506. In this case a testator, after directing that his estate should be equally divided among his seven children, added: "It is my will and desire that if any of my children should die before they attain to legal age, or without a lawful heir, in either case, that all such property as they may receive in the division of my property, return to my surviving children or their lawful heirs." It was held that the limitation over took effect upon the happening of either contingency, and that upon the death of one under age, or without heirs, his share vested absolutely in the survivors; and upon the death of one of such survivors, under age, or without children, the portion which he received as survivor would not pass to his survivors.

The following analysis of the English decisions upon this subject is given by Theobald: "First. If there is a devise to A in fee, if she dies leaving lawful issue, but if she dies under age or without lawful issue, over, 'or' will be read 'and.' Johnson v. Simcock, 6 W. & N. 6; 9 W. R. 895. Second. If the devise is to A in fee, and if he dies under twenty-one or without issue, over, 'or' will be read 'and' to favor the issue of A. Fairfield v. Morgan, 2 B. & P. N. R. 38; Denn v. Kemeys, 9 East 366; Eastman v. Baker, 1 Taunt. 174; Morris v. Morris, 17 Beav. 198. Third. If the devise is to A for life, remainder to his children in tail, and if A dies under twenty-one or without children, over, it is doubtful whether 'or' would be read 'and.' According to the earlier authorities the change would be made. Hasker v. Sutton, 1 Bing. 501; 8 E. C. L. 611; 9 J. B. Moo. 2. But see Cooke v. Mirehouse, 34 Beav. 27. Fourth. And where, after a prior absolute gift, the gift over is upon failure of issue or some other event, such as not making a will, 'or' will be read 'and,' though the gift over may thereby become void: Incorporated Society v. Richards, 1 D. & W. 258; Greated v. Greated, 26 Beav. 621; Green v. Harvey, 1 Hare 428. Fifth. But if the devise is to A in tail, and if he dies under twenty-one or without issue, over, 'or' will not be construed 'and,' though, on the other hand, it seems that if the devisee died under twenty-one leaving issue, the gift over would not be held to have taken effect, so that the devise would, in fact, be construed as equivalent to 'if A dies under twenty-one without issue, or without issue at any time.' Mortimer

9. Transposing Words.—Where a clause or expression, otherwise senseless and contradictory, can be rendered consistent with the context by being transposed, the court is warranted in making the transposition.¹

v. Hartly, 6 Exch. 47; Soulle v. Gerard, Cro. Eliz. 525; Woodward v. Glasbrook, 2 Vern. 388; and Lord St. Leonard's judgment in Grey v. Pearson, 6 H. L. Cas. 61. The devise over in this case takes effect as a remainder after an estate tail. Sixth. But if the devise over, after an estate tail to A, is in case of the death of A, or for want of his issue, 'or' must be read 'and,' in order to preserve the prior estate. Monkhouse v. Monkhouse, 3 Sim. 119. Seventh. 'Or' will be read 'and' when a gift is given upon either of two events, as, upon attaining twenty-one or marriage, and there is a gift over upon death under twenty-one or unmarried, the gift over being otherwise inconsistent with the prior gift. Grant v. Dyer, 2 Dow. 87; Thompson v. Tenlon, 22 L. J. Ch. 243; Thackeray v. Hampson, 2 Sim. & Stu. 214; Grimshawe v. Pickup, 9 Sim. 591; Collett v. Collett, 35 Beav. 312. Eighth. In some cases, where there has been a gift contingent upon attaining twenty-one, subject to a life interest, and a gift over upon death before the tenant for life or under twenty-one, 'or' has been read 'and.' Miles v. Dyer, 5 Sim. 435; 8 Sim. 330; Bentley v. Meech, 25 Beav. 197. And if a gift over upon death under age, or without leaving a husband, is afterwards referred to as 'in case of death under age as aforesaid,' 'or' will be read 'and.' Weddell v. Mundy, 6 Ves. Jr. 341. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 530.

"And" Construed "Or."—In some cases, from the context of the will "and" has been read "or," so as to vest a gift in the alternative in lieu of cumulative events. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 581; Hawes v. Hawes, 1 Ves. 13; Jackson v. Jackson, 1 Ves. 217; Stapleton v. Stapleton, 2 Sim. N. S. 212. See Sayward v. Sayward, 7 Me. 210; Scott v. Guernsey, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 163; East v. Garrett, 84 Va. 523; Janney v. Sprigg, 7 Gill (Md.) 197; Engleried v. Woelpart, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 41; Boyd's Estate, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 337; Turner v. Whitted, 2 Hawks (N. Car.) 613; Shands v. Rogers, 7 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 422; Cornish v. Wilson, 6 Gill (Md.) 299. Compare Malmesbury v. Malmesbury, 31 Beav. 407; Maynard v.

Wright, 26 Beav. 285; Butterfield v. Haskins, 33 Me. 393; Brewer v. Ople, 1 Call (Va.) 212; Jackson v. Topping, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 388; Roome v. Phillips, 24 N. Y. 463; Courter v. Stagg, 27 N. J. Eq. 305; Ely v. Ely, 20 N. J. Eq. 43; Harrison v. Bowe, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 478.

As to the construction of the phrase "unmarried and without issue," disjunctively, see Issue, vol. 11, p. 910.

"Nor" Construed, "or Not."—In a condition precedent, "nor" will mean "or not," if the result is to vest the gift in either of two events. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 581; Mackenzie v. King, 17 L. J. Ch. 448.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) §499; Marshall v. Hopkins, 15 East 309; Doe v. Allcock, 1 B. & Ald. 137; Mason v. Robinson, 2 Sim. & Stu. 295; Mosley v. Massey, 8 East 149; Bradwin v. Harpur, Ambl. 374; Mutter's Estate, 38 Pa. St. 314. See Spark v. Purnell, Hob. 75; Cole v. Rawlinson, 1 Salk. 236; Mohun v. Mohun, 1 Sw. 201; East v. Cook, 2 Ves. 32; Jackson v. Hoover, 26 Ind. 511; Wager v. Wager, 96 N. Y. 172; Pond v. Bergh, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 140; Ex p. Hornby, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 420; Ferry's Appeal, 102 Pa. St. 207; Pennsylvania Co. v. Stokes, 1 Brewst. (Pa.) 486; Leidich v. Leidich, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 363; Merkel's Appeal, 109 Pa. St. 235; Davis v. Callahan, 78 Me. 318; Linstead v. Green, 2 Md. 82; Walker v. Walker, 17 Ala. 396; Creveling v. Jones, 21 N. J. L. 573; Hawes v. Foote, 64 Tex. 27; Baker v. Pender, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 351; O'Neill v. Boozer, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 22; Hunt v. Johnson, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 344; Augustus v. Seabolt, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 156. Compare Mooberry v. Marye, 2 Munf. (Va.) 453.

Thus, land was given, by will, to the two sons of the testator, who ordered that, if either or both of the sons should die without issue, the share given to each by the will should go to the surviving son and the daughters of the testator in fee. It was held that the will must be construed as if the words, "or the son who has died leaving issue, who are then living," had followed the words "to the surviving son." Pond v. Bergh, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 140.

10. Uncertainty.—If it is impossible to ascertain the subject-matter or the objects of a gift, it will be void for uncertainty.¹

To justify such a transposition the meaning and purpose of the testator must be certain. Latham v. Latham, 30 Iowa 297. But it is not necessary that the words, as they stand, should be absolutely senseless or contradictory; it will be sufficient if the transposition is required to give effect to an intention clearly expressed or indicated by the context. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 502; Eden v. Wilson, 1 Exch. 772; 14 Q. B. Cas. 256; 4 H. L. Cas. 257. Compare Patchen v. Patchen, 121 N. Y. 432.

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 584. See Mather v. Mather, 103 Ill. 607; Woods v. Moore, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 579; Hoppen's Estate, 70 Wis. 522; Tucker Seaman's Aid Soc., 7 Met. (Mass.) 188; Hosea v. Jacobs, 98 Mass. 65; Darcy v. Kelley, 153 Mass. 433; In re Traylor's Estate, 81 Cal. 9; Smith v. Smith, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 271; New York Inst., etc. v. How, 10 N. Y. 84; Beekman v. Bonsor, 23 N. Y. 298; Bascom v. Albertson, 34 N. Y. 584; Ryers v. Wheeler, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 148; Cresap v. Cresap, 34 W. Va. 310; Wilson v. Perry, 29 W. Va. 170; Howe v. Wilson, 91 Mo. 45; Byers v. Byers, 6 Dana (Ky.) 313; Tewksbury v. French, 44 Mich. 100; Stith v. Barnes, 1 Law Repos. (N. Car.) 484; Ballantyne v. Turner, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 224; Timberlake v. Harris, 7 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 188; Taylor v. American Bible Soc., 7 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 20; Taylor v. Tolen, 38 N. J. Eq. 95; Pocock v. Redinger, 108 Ind. 573; Piercy v. Piercy, 19 Ind. 467; Kelley v. Kelley, 25 Pa. St. 460; M'Cullough v. Gilmore, 11 Pa. St. 370; Wooton v. Redd, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 196; Howard v. American Peace Soc., 49 Me. 288; Drane v. Beall, 21 Ga. 21; Inglis v. Sailor's Snug Harbour, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 99; Treat's Appeal, 30 Conn. 113; White v. Fisk, 22 Conn. 31; Heuser v. Harris, 42 Ill. 425; Armistead v. Armistead, 32 Ga. 597; Lepage v. McNamara, 5 Iowa 124. Compare Stokeley v. Gordon, 8 Md. 496; Heller v. Heller, 147 Ill. 621; Nelson v. Pomeroy, 74 Conn. 257; McAllen v. Schneider, 22 Wash. L. Rep. 193; Eckford v. Eckford (Iowa, 1894), 58 N. W. Rep. 1093.

The conclusion that a will is too uncertain to be allowed to operate, will not be adopted while effect can by any means be given to it. Winder v. Smith, 2 Jones (N. Car.) 327.

Uncertainty as to Subject-matter of Gift.—The words at the close of a will, "if I have not given my wife a sufficient support, she is to have enough of the interest of my money to make her a plentiful support," are not sufficiently certain to impose any duty on the executor. Ballantyne v. Turner, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 224.

A devise of a portion of the residue of certain property was held void for uncertainty as to amount, and a devise of a residue consequently void for the same reason. Beekman v. Bonsor, 23 N. Y. 298.

A will contained twelve items, by most of which the testator gave specific legacies to each of his eleven children. The third item contained a bequest to one of his children of "one equal share of whatever property remains after I have given the property stated in each separate item to each individual child." The fifth and eleventh items contained similar bequests to other children, except that in the fifth item the words "a full share," and in the eleventh item the words "one-fourth of a share," were substituted for the words "one equal share" in the third item. It was held that parol evidence was not admissible to show what the testator meant by the word "share," and that these three items were void for uncertainty. Armistead v. Armistead, 32 Ga. 597.

A gift of some of my linen, not saying how much, or of a handsome gratuity, is void. Peck v. Halsey, 2 P. Wms. 387; Jubber v. Jubber, 9 Sim. 503. See Jones v. Hancock, 4 Dow. 145.

On the other hand, if a testator supplies a measure of the bequest, the court will ascertain how much ought to be expended; thus, a gift of a sum of money to an executor for his trouble, or even of a house or garden to be built at the expense of his executors, is good, and the court will fix the amount. Jackson v. Hamilton, 3 J. & L. 702; Edwardes v. Jones, 35 Beav. 474. See Dundee v. Morris, 3 Macq. H. L. Cas. 134.

A gift of £50 or £100, or of a sum not exceeding a certain amount, will be construed in favor of the legatee as a gift of the larger sum. Seale v. Seale, 1 P. Wms. 290; Thompson v. Thompson, 1 Coll. 395; Cope v. Wilmot, 1 Coll. 396 n; Gough v. Bult, 16 Sim. 45.

Upon similar principles, the gift of the rest of a fund, if the rest cannot be ascertained, is void; as in a devise of such houses as she shall elect to A, and the others to B, where A dies before the testator. Boyce v. Boyce, 16 Sim. 476; Jerningham v. Herbert, 4 Russ. 388.

Where an estate was devised to one generally, without expressing what estate, and the direction was added, that if he should die without children all the property remaining at his death should go over, it was held that the description of what went over was sufficiently certain. Burton v. Black, 30 Ga. 638.

A devise of "what shall remain" or "be left" at the death of a legatee, where the property, or a part of it, is household furniture, farming utensils, and farm stock, expressly limited to the first taker for life, is not void for uncertainty, since these words may be construed as referring to the expected diminution of the property from its perishable nature, or by the use and wear of the first taker. Sarle v. Probate Court, 7 R. I. 270.

In the case of a fund bequeathed upon trust, to apply a portion to a purpose which is void and the surplus to charity, it seems the whole fund may be applied to charity, though the amount applicable to the invalid object may not be ascertainable. For instance, if a fund is given upon trust to apply the income in repairing a tomb, and to give the surplus to a charitable object, the charitable object is entitled to the whole fund. Fisk v. Atty. Gen'l, L. R., 4 Eq. 521; Hunter v. Bullock, L. R., 14 Eq. 45; Dawson v. Small, L. R., 18 Eq. 114; In re Williams, 5 Ch. Div. 735; In re Birkett, 9 Ch. Div. 576. See Fowler v. Fowler, 33 Beav. 616; Kirkman v. Lewis, 38 L. J. Ch. 570.

Possibly, if the invalid object is such that the whole fund might fairly be expended upon it, the whole gift will be void. Chapman v. Brown, 6 Ves. Jr. 404; Cramp v. Playfoot, 4 K. & J. 479.

The court will, if possible, ascertain the amount necessary for each object, in order to prevent the gift of the surplus from being void for uncertainty. Mitford v. Reynolds, 1 Ph. 185; Dundee v. Morris, 3 Macq. H. L. Cas. 134; Fisk v. Atty. Gen'l, L. R., 4 Eq. 521.

A direction that a legatee shall be maintained according to her condition in life, is not void for uncertainty. Cresap v. Cresap, 34 W. Va. 310.

A testator, by his will, gave to his wife absolute control of his estate, as to the settlement or income thereof, trusting that she "would advance the best interests of herself and children," and ordered that, if either of the children should treat her with disobedience or disrespect, such child should have no benefit of the property until his return to duty; also, that, upon the second marriage of the wife during the minority of the children, a person named in the will should have full power to invest the property for the benefit of the testator's heirs, the income to be subject to the control of the widow; also, that, upon the marriage of either of the children without the consent of the mother, he should forfeit all benefit arising from the estate; and, finally, that, upon the decease of the wife during the minority of the children, the before-mentioned trustee should be sole executor, to invest and dispose of the property so as to advance the interests of the heirs of the testator. It was held that the will contained no valid disposition of any part of the property of the testator. Bayeaux v. Bayeaux, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 333.

Where There Are Two Subjects, One of Which Partially, and the Other Entirely, Satisfies the Description.—Where a subject is found that fits and satisfies a description in every particular, and another is found that does not satisfy the description in an important particular, the former, it is to be presumed, is the subject for which the description was intended. Thus M., by will, devised and bequeathed to his wife all the property, both real and personal, "that I made a deed of gift unto her dated Sept. 17, 1851." There were two deeds of gift to take effect at his decease, one of a number of negroes, and the other of real estate, horses, stock, farm utensils, etc. It was held that the property mentioned in the latter instrument alone passed by the will. Booker v. Booker, 20 Ga. 786.

For a careful classification of the recent cases, upon the subject of uncertainty, see 1 Jarm. on Wills (6th ed.) 369.

Uncertainty as to Objects of Gift.—A testator, by one clause of his will, gave to "C. and D., sons of M., $500 each;" by another clause, "to the seven children of R., $200 each;" by another clause, to the heirs of F., $600 each. F. was still living. It was held that the devise to the heirs of F. was void for uncertainty. Timberlake v. Harris, 7 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 188.

A testator domiciled in New York, devised and bequeathed certain property to "five persons who shall be named and appointed as trustees by the supreme court of Vermont, to establish an institution for the education of females," to be located in Middlebury, Vermont. It was held that the bequest was void for uncertainty as to the objects of the gift. Bascom v. Albertson, 34 N. Y. 584.

A testatrix made the following devise: "I desire that, at my decease, after my just debts are paid, my property may be divided in the following manner,—To the Bible Society, Education, Colonization, and Home Missionary Societies, each five hundred dollars." It was admitted that these societies were not described by their proper corporate names, though they were well known and usually called by those names. It was held, the descriptions not being correct on the face of the will, so as to designate with certainty what were the objects of her bounty, that the legacies were void for uncertainty in the description of the persons who were to take. Taylor v. American Bible Soc., 7 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 201.

A testator devised and bequeathed to his executors real and personal estate, for the purpose of creating three institutions of learning, in certain places specified, and ordered that any overplus of the property given for that purpose should "be used for the education of such youth as are not able to pay teachers fees," and that his "relations be admitted as students, free of tuition fees," at any of such seminaries. It was held that the devise and bequest were void for uncertainty as to the beneficiaries thereof. Literary Fund v. Dawson, 10 Leigh (Va.) 153.

A bequest in the following language: "Any surplus income that may remain, to the extent of $1,000 per annum, I direct to be expended, by my trustees, for the support of indigent, pious young men preparing for the ministry, in New Haven, Connecticut," is void for uncertainty. White v. Fisk, 22 Conn. 31.

A devise to the persons who at the time constitute a voluntary association, is not void for uncertainty, but they will take in their individual and not in their associate character. Bartlet v. King, 12 Mass. 537.

A legacy to an unincorporated society is good, if there be enough to identify the party intended. Parker v. Cowell, 16 N. H. 149.

A bequest of the proceeds of a certain estate for a son and his family, or such of them as the trustees may think proper, in such manner and at such times as the trustees may think proper, support in this clause being meant to include education as to the children, is not void for uncertainty, "his family" being construed to mean his children. Whelan v. Reilly, 3 W. Va. 597.

A clause in a will, in the words, "the remainder of my estate I do hereby devise to the poor and needy, fatherless, etc., of (two townships named), to such poor as are not able to support themselves, to be divided as my said executors may think proper without any partiality," is a valid bequest. Landis v. Wooden, 1 Ohio St. 160.

A will, after appointing an "administrator," and making provision for the sale of certain lands, ordered the proceeds to be divided as follows: "One-half shall go to the school district in which the farm lies, and shall be under the control of one person elected by the people of the district, and he shall be elected for four years at one time, and be required to give security for the faithful trust put in his hands, and no one shall receive any per cent. for their trouble; this shall be loaned out, and none of it shall be used except the interest, and it for no other purpose than for schooling the children; and the other half shall go to the support of the poor of Madison county, but none of it shall be used but the interest; but first the administrator shall have a reasonable pay out of the proceeds of the land for his labor." It was held that these bequests were not uncertain as to object or recipient. Heuser v. Harris, 42 Ill. 425.

A testator made the following bequest: "I give and bequeath to M., N., and G., and to their successors forever (who shall, as a board of trustees, add to and perpetuate their number, so long as in their opinion the objects of this bequest shall require it), all my estate, to be held by them in trust, for the promotion of education among the Indian and African children and youth of the United States or elsewhere, as in their judgment they shall deem best. I leave it entirely with them to decide

11. Implication—Estates Arising Therefrom—a. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.—Implication may arise from a recital, reference, or elliptical expression, which necessarily implies something else as contemplated by the testator, from the form of gift or from a direction to do something which cannot be carried into effect without of necessity involving something else as a necessary consequence.¹ The weight of authority sustains the position that the implication, to be effective, must be necessary, by which is meant, in the language of Lord Eldon, "not natural necessity, but so strong a probability of intention that an intention contrary to that which is imputed to the testator cannot be supposed." Mere conjecture must not be taken for implication,² nor can in what manner to expend the bequest to secure this object, either by using the principal for the education of a number of youth, and thus prepare them for immediate usefulness; or to use only the annual interest, and educate a smaller number, and thus continue; or if they shall judge it best, let them use the whole amount and establish an academy, to be a lasting benefit to that class of my fellow-men for whose benefit I have given all my property; wishing it to be used in that way, time, and place which they shall judge best, after due consideration, upon the condition that the people of color shall be in, in the United States, at the time that this bequest shall be at their disposal." It was held that the bequest was not void for uncertainty, either as to the objects of the charity, or as to the mode of carrying the charity into effect. Treat's Appeal, 30 Conn. 113. See further, on this question, Carter v. Balfour, 19 Ala. 814; State v. Wiltbank, 2 Harr. (Del.) 18; State v. Walter, 2 Harr. (Del.) 151; Sweeney v. Sampson, 5 Ind. 465; State v. McDonogh, 8 La. Ann. 171; Preachers' Aid Soc. v. Rich, 45 Me. 552; Trippe v. Frazier, 4 Harr. & J. (Md.) 446; Dashiell v. Atty. Gen'l, 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 392; Phillips Academy v. King, 12 Mass. 546; First Universalist Soc. v. Fitch, 8 Gray (Mass.) 421; Dexter v. Gardner, 7 Allen (Mass.) 243; Atty. Gen'l v. Reformed Protestant Dutch Church, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 303; State v. McGowen, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 9; Hester v. Hester, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 330; Bridges v. Pleasants, 4 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 26; Witman v. Lex, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 88; Gallego v. Atty. Gen'l, 3 Leigh (Va.) 450.

Misnomer as to Object or Subject-matter.—A gift by a will to a corporation by an erroneous name, will not be defeated where the description of the corporation given by such name, or otherwise, is sufficient to enable the court to identify the legatee with certainty by the aid of extrinsic evidence. Moore v. Moore, 50 N. J. Eq. 554; Tallman v. Tallman (Super. Ct.), 23 N. Y. Supp. 734.

A devise in a will of land described as the southeast quarter of a certain section of land, which southeast quarter did not belong to the testator, will pass the title to the southwest quarter of such section, which testator did own, where, in the preceding clause, the testator had accurately described the property which he owned, and the identification of such southwest quarter as the subject of the devise would be complete, if the reference to the southeast quarter were rejected without any substitute therefor. Eckford v. Eckford (Iowa, 1894), 58 N. W. Rep. 1093.

1. See the remarks of Lord Westbury in Parker v. Tootal, 11 H. L. Cas. 161; Onsley v. Anstruther, 10 Beav. 459; Ives v. Dodgson, L. R., 9 Eq. 401; Ex p. Wynch, 5 De G. M. & G. 221; Langston v. Langston, 2 Cl. & F. 194; Matter of Vower, 113 N. Y. 569. See Deering v. Adams, 37 Me. 264; Chinn v. Respass, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 25; Peckham v. Lego, 57 Conn. 559; Bentley v. Kaufman, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 435; Metcalf v. First Parish, 128 Mass. 370; Masterson v. Townshend, 123 N. Y. 458; Sibert v. Cox, 100 Ind. 392; Hollingsworth v. Hollingsworth, 65 Ala. 321; Boston Safe Deposit, etc., Co., v. Coffin, 152 Mass. 98.

2. Lord Eldon in Wilkinson v. Adams, 1 Ves. & B. 466; McKeehan v. Wilson, 53 Pa. St. 77; Piper's Estate, 33 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 228; DeSilver's Estate, 142 Pa. St. 75; Jacob's Estate, 140 Pa.

even necessary implication overrule the express language of the will.¹

6. IMPLICATION FROM RECITALS.—A recital which, in effect, merely amounts to a declaration that the testator supposes the party referred to has an interest independent of the will, is no evidence of an intent to give by the will, and does not raise a gift by implication.² But if a testator unequivocally refers to a disposition as made in the will itself, which, in fact, he has not made, the erroneous recital is taken as conclusive evidence of an intent to give by the will, and has the effect of an actual gift.³

St. 268. See Post v. Hover, 33 N. Y. 593; Sutherland v. Sydnor, 84 Va. 880; In re Reinhardt's Estate, 74 Cal. 371; Grout v. Hapgood, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 164; Ferson v. Dodge, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 287; Hayden v. Stoughton, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 536; Denise v. Denise, 37 N. J. Eq. 163; McCoury v. Leek, 14 N. J. Eq. 70; McMichael v. Pye, 75 Ga. 191; Rusing v. Rusing, 25 Ind. 63; Waugh v. Riley, 68 Ind. 482; Kelly v. Stinson, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 387; Howard v. American Peace Soc., 49 Me. 288; Hollingsworth v. Hollingsworth, 65 Ala. 321; Ridgely v. Bond, 18 Md. 448; Edens v. Williams, 3 Murph. (N. Car.) 27; Eneberg v. Carter, 98 Mo. 647.

1. Pullen v. Randell, 1 J. & W. 106; Wright v. Denn, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 204; McLellan v. Turner, 15 Me. 436; More v. Diamond, 5 R. I. 126; Bowers v. Porter, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 198; Crane v. Doty, 1 Ohio St. 279; Burkhart v. Bucher, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 455; Dewitt v. Eldred, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 414; Dixon v. Ramage, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 142. See Den v. Cook, 7 N. J. L. 41; In re Reinhardt's Estate, 74 Cal. 365; Dudley v. Mallory, 4 Ga. 52; Kelly v. Stinson, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 387; Matter of Herrick's Estate (Surrogate Ct.), 12 N. Y. Supp. 105; Manigault v. Holmes, 1 Bailey Eq. (S. Car.) 298; Carr v. Porter, 1 McCord Eq. (S. Car.) 60.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 525; Harris v. Harris, Ir. L. R., 3 C. L. 294; Circuitt v. Perry, 23 Beav. 275; Wigram, V. C., in Adams v. Adams, 1 Hare 540; Lord Brougham in Yates v. Thomson, 3 Cl. & F. 572; Bibin v. Walker, Ambl. 661; Hunt v. Evans, 134 Ill. 496; Marsh v. Hague, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 174; Hyatt v. Pugsley, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 285; Atwood v. Geiger, 69 Ga. 498.

3. Thus a gift alleged to be 'in addition' to a prior gift, where there is, in fact, no such prior gift, is sufficient evidence of an intention to confer the supposed prior gift. Jordan v. Fortescue, 10 Beav. 259; Farrar v. St. Catherine's College, L. R., 16 Eq. 24. So a statement that the testator does not give a legatee a certain sum because she is absolutely entitled to it, when, in fact, it is in the disposition of the testator, amounts to a gift of the sum in question. Hall v. Leitch, L. R., 9 Eq. 376. But a mere recital in a codicil of

L. J. Ch. 328; West v. Culliford, 3 Hare 265; Poulson v. Wellington, 2 P. Wms. 533; Hunt v. Evans, 134 Ill. 496; Clamorgan v. Lane, 9 Mo. 446; Gaines v. Spann, 2 Brock. (U. S.) 81.

A testatrix recited in her will that she wished to place all her children on an equal footing as to their worldly advancement, and that, inasmuch as her son B had been better provided for by his uncle A than she could do for her other children, she therefore gave him nothing. It appeared that the property devised by A to B was in fact the property of the testatrix. It was held that the above recital was not a ratification of the will of A, and did not adopt such devise, and that the heirs of the testatrix were not estopped by it to deny the validity of the will of A. Clamorgan v. Lane, 9 Mo. 446.

Upon the same principle, a gift to A cannot be implied from a recital that the testator is about to make a conveyance to him. Hurlbut v. Holton, 42 N. J. Eq. 16.

3. Wigram, V. C., in Adams v. Adams, 1 Hare 540; Lord Brougham in Yates v. Thomson, 3 Cl. & F. 572; Bibin v. Walker, Ambl. 661; Hunt v. Evans, 134 Ill. 496; Marsh v. Hague, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 174; Hyatt v. Pugsley, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 285; Atwood v. Geiger, 69 Ga. 498.

"Thus a gift alleged to be 'in addition' to a prior gift, where there is, in fact, no such prior gift, is sufficient evidence of an intention to confer the supposed prior gift. Jordan v. Fortescue, 10 Beav. 259; Farrar v. St. Catherine's College, L. R., 16 Eq. 24. So a statement that the testator does not give a legatee a certain sum because she is absolutely entitled to it, when, in fact, it is in the disposition of the testator, amounts to a gift of the sum in question. Hall v. Leitch, L. R., 9 Eq. 376. But a mere recital in a codicil of provided it be clear that there is nothing in the will to which it can refer.¹

c. GIFTS IMPLIED TO EFFECTUATE THE INTENT.—A gift may be implied when necessary to carry out the testator's intention or direction. Thus, from a direction that certain persons shall deal with the rents of an estate in a particular manner, a devise of the estate to those persons has been implied.² So from a direction a supposed gift by will, will not amount to a gift. In re Arnold's Estate, 33 Beav. 171." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 574.

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 574; Sherratt v. Oakley, 7 T. R. 488; Smith v. Fitzgerald, 3 Ves. & B. 2; Mackenzie v. Bradbury, 35 Beav. 620; Nugent v. Nugent, 1r. R., 8 Eq. 78; Ives v. Dodgson, L. R., 9 Eq. 401.

The principle will not be applied where its effect would be to take away an express bequest by an earlier instrument to some one else. Thus, in Re Smith, 2 Johns. & H. 594, a testator gave by will £3,000, upon trust for A and her children, and after the decease of A, without issue, for the children of B. By a codicil of later date, the testator recited that he had, by his will, given the £3,000 to A for life, with remainder to her children, and afterward to B for life, with remainder to his children, and revoked the will as to £2,000, part of the £3,000, from and after the devise to A and her children, and, instead of giving the said sum of £2,000 to B and his children, bequeathed the same to C. It was held that the erroneous recital in the codicil that the £3,000 was given to B for life, did not amount to a gift of a life estate in the £1,000 which remained unrevoked. Wood, V. C., said: "It was clear, therefore, that he intended to raise the whole legacy to £2,000, though he made a mistake in reciting the amount of the previous gift. But in this case I am asked to deprive a class of legatees of a clear specific gift, by force of an erroneous recital in a subsequent instrument. The codicil does not purport to give anything additional to the objects of the original gift, but to take away part of what the testator supposed himself to have given. It would be a perversion of the principle, that an erroneous recital of a gift by the same instrument may be equivalent to an actual gift, to apply it so as to take away an express bequest by an earlier instrument to some one else, and this where the codicil is not intended to confer any bounty upon the real or supposed objects of the original gift."

References to a Person as Heir Held to Create a Devise by Implication to That Person.—"Where the testator has evidently mistaken the law respecting the devolution of his property, yet, if he has by his will shown very clearly an intention that it shall devolve according to such mistaken notion, the intention will prevail. An early case presents a very nice question of this nature. A testator having issue, by C., three daughters, S., A. and E., devised to C., for life, all his freehold wherever, until S., his heir came to twenty-one, paying to the heir 10 s. during the term, and to the rest, after fifteen years old, 20 s. apiece, and the heir to pay A. and E. £100 apiece, £40 at the decease of the wife, etc.; and if S., his heir, died without heir before twenty-one, so that the lands descended and fell to A., and then A. to pay to E., etc. It was argued that S. took nothing under the will by implication, there being no express devise to her. But, on the other side, it was contended that S. was the sole heir; for it was all one to devise to her as to make a stranger heir of his land; and here the daughter S. was not sole heir unless made so by the intent of the will, which six times called the eldest daughter his heir; otherwise, A., the younger daughter, would have equal share in the land, and also the legacies. Hale, C. J., said: 'The testator was mistaken in his intent that the eldest daughter was his heir; . . . also she that is called heir is to pay the portions to the younger daughters, and no provision is made for her. Therefore, albeit there is no express devise to S., yet, she being named his heir, this is sufficient to exclude the rest, and to make her sole heir.'" 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *530. See Taylor v. Webb, Sty. 331; Parker v. Nickson, 1 De G. J. & S. 177. Compare Jackson v. Craig, 15 Jur. 811.

2. 1 Jarm on Wills (5th ed.) *528;

to invest real and personal estate is implied a trust to sell the real estate.¹ To this principle may also be referred the doctrine that trustees take an estate of such quantity as may be necessary to enable them to discharge their duties.² So where a testator expresses an intention to make up a person's fortune to a certain sum, and for that purpose gives a legacy, which proves to be insufficient, the legatee will, nevertheless, be entitled to the sum specified and intended for him.³

d. INTENT TO CHARGE THE REALTY WITH DEBTS AND LEGACIES IN EXONERATION OF THE PERSONALTY WHEN IMPLIED.—See LEGACIES AND DEVICES, vol. 13, p. 120.

e. IMPLICATION OF ESTATES TAIL—GIFTS OVER IN DEFAULT OF ISSUE.—Under a will containing a provision for a devise to A and his heirs, or to A for life, followed by a gift over on an indefinite failure of issue,⁴ A takes an estate tail by implication.⁵

Ex p. Wynch, 5 De G. M. & G. 221. See Langston v. Langston, 2 Cl. & F. 194; Masterson v. Townshend, 123 N. Y. 458; Sibert v. Cox, 100 Ind. 392.

1. Affleck v. James, 17 Sim. 121.

2. Doe v. Homfray, 33 E. C. L. 55; Oates v. Cooke, 3 Burr. 1686; Deering v. Adams, 37 Me. 273; Post v. Hover, 33 N. Y. 599.

3. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *529; Onsley v. Anstruther, 10 Beav. 459. Compare Thompson v. Whitelock, 5 Jur. N. S. 991.

4. As to definite and indefinite failure of issue, see ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 899.

5. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *554; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) *563; Macbell v. Weeding, 8 Sim. 4; Daintry v. Daintry, 6 T. R. 307; In re Bank's Trusts, 2 K. & J. 387. For other authorities, see ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 899 et seq.

"It has long been settled, however, that a devise in a will which is regulated by the old law, to a person and his heirs or to a person indefinitely, with a limitation over in case he die without issue, confers an estate tail, on the ground, in the former case, that the testator has explained himself to have used the word 'heirs' in the qualified and restricted sense of heirs of the body, and in the latter case, on the ground that he has, by postponing the ulterior devise until the failure of the issue of the prior devisee, afforded an irresistible inference that he intended that the estate to be taken by the prior devisee, under the indefinite devise, should be of such a measure and duration as to fill up the chasm in the disposition, and prevent the failure of the ulterior devise, which, as an executory devise to take effect on a general failure of issue, would, of course, be void for remoteness." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *554.

"If the limitation is to A simply, or to A for life, with a gift over in default of issue, A will take an estate tail, though there are words which might constructively limit the failure of issue within a definite period, since this is the only construction which will carry anything to the issue. Wyld v. Lewis, 1 Atk. 432; Simmons v. Simmons, 8 Sim. 22, where the devise was in effect to A for life, and if she dies without issue, over, the power to appoint to issue being merely discretionary. Butt v. Thomas, L. R., 11 Exch. 235; 1 H. & N. 109. Quære whether an estate tail will be implied in a person from a gift over in default of his issue simply, where no interest is given to him by the will. Parker v. Tootal, 10 H. L. Cas. 143. See Walter v. Drew, Comyns Rep. 373. And where, in a devise to A for life, remainder to his children, either for life or in tail, an estate tail is implied in A from a gift over in default of issue, the estate tail so implied will be in remainder, to take effect after the prior estates expressly limited. Doe v. Halley, 8 T. R. 5; Doe v. Gallini, 5 B. & Ad. 621; 27 E. C. L. 138; 3 Ad. & E. 340; 30 E. C. L. 112; Forsbrook v. Forsbrook, L. R., 3 Ch. 93; Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Ch. Div. 410. And where an estate tail is to be implied either in an ancestor or his issue, it will be implied in the ancestor, so as to take in the whole line of issue. Atkinson v. Holtby, 10 H. L. Cas. 313; Forsbrook

On the other hand it is held that a gift over on a definite failure of issue has no such effect.¹

f. GIFT TO ISSUE NOT IMPLIED FROM GIFT OVER IN DEFAULT OF ISSUE.—It has been held that a gift to issue is not implied from a gift over upon a definite failure of issue,² but a contrary construction has in several instances been adopted.³

v. Forsbrook, L. R., 3 Ch. 93. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 563, 564.

American Cases Illustrating the Rule.
—B., by his will, dated April 5, 1771, made the following devise: "My will and pleasure is, that my son W. shall have the farm I now live on," etc., together with some articles of personal property specified; "but if my said son may happen to die unmarried, or without lawful issue, then it is my will and pleasure that the said estate shall descend to my next heir of the name of B., and that he may not sell, exchange, or dispose of any part of said estate, without the consent, approbation, and concurrence of my executors." The testator died in August, 1775, leaving five sons and eight daughters; W., the devisee, died April 20, 1817, unmarried and without issue, leaving one sister, and nephews and nieces, living. It was held that W., the devisee, took an estate tail by implication. Jackson v. Billinger, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 368.

A testatrix made the following devise: "I give and devise all the remainder of my real estate unto all my grandchildren, in equal shares, and to their heirs and assigns forever. And it is hereby provided, and my will is, that if any of my grandchildren should die, leaving no surviving issue, then I give and devise all the estate, both real and personal, herein given to such grandchild, unto the survivor or survivors of such as shall die as aforesaid, and to their heirs and assigns forever; provided, that none of my grandsons shall, in any event, have any of my personal estate, other than the specific legacies herein bequeathed unto them, as long as any of my granddaughters, or any of their issue, be living. It is also further provided, and my will is, that if all my grandchildren should die leaving no surviving issue, then I give and devise all my estate unto two of the daughters of my uncle, Thomas Field, to wit: Mary and Sally, and unto two of my said uncle's granddaughters, to wit: Mary and Elizabeth Thornton, and to their heirs and assigns forever."

It was held that the grandchildren of the testatrix took estates tail in her real estate, and not fee simples conditional upon their dying without issue. Burrough v. Foster, 6 R. I. 534.

A testator devised real and personal estate in trust "to pay one-fifth of the rents, income, and interest thereof to each of my four sisters now living, M., E., F. and A., for and during all the term of their natural lives; and the remaining fifth part of my said residuary estate, real and personal, to the children of my deceased sister S., in equal parts and shares in fee." And "upon the decease of any and either of my said sisters or nieces, without issue (if with issue, the issue to inherit their shares), I grant and convey their portion of my estate for the use of my other sisters and children, in equal parts and shares in fee." It was held that the devisees took an estate tail in the realty. Pott's Appeal, 30 Pa. St. 168.

See further M'CIntic v. Manns, 4 Munf. (Va.) 328; Den v. Taylor, 5 N. J. L. 417; Smith's Appeal, 23 Pa. St. 9.

At the present time the rule has been altered by statute in most states, see ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 918.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *555; Den v. Snitcher, 14 N. J. L. 53; Turner v. Withers, 23 Md. 18.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *561; Monypenny v. Dering, 7 Hare 588.

3. Bentley v. Kaufman, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 435. In this case, a testatrix by her last will and testament directed that all her estate, real and personal, should be converted into money by her executors, and the proceeds invested; the interest to be paid to her son during his lifetime, and if he should die without issue, then the whole amount was given to charitable purposes. In the construction of this language, it was held that the words "die without leaving issue" were to be construed as meaning issue living at the death of the son, and the son, therefore, took not an absolute interest in the fund, but only a life interest in the income, and that there was a gift by implication of the corpus of

g. GIFT TO CHILDREN NOT IMPLIED FROM GIFT OVER IN DEFAULT OF ISSUE.—A gift to children is not implied from an absolute gift of personalty to A, and if he shall die without having or without leaving children (which means without having had a child born, or without leaving a child living at his decease), nor from a gift to several as tenants in common, and if any die, without issue, their shares to those then living or their children.¹ And even if the gift to the parent is expressly for life, the children will not be held to take by implication in the absence of special circumstances,² although in such case the court will lay hold of any indication of intention to raise a gift to them, and avoid imputing to the testator so extraordinary an intent as that the gift over is to take effect if the first taker have no child, but that the property is not to go to the child, if there is one, or its parent.³

h. IMPLICATION OF LIFE ESTATES.—A devise to the testator's heir at law, after the death of A, gives A an estate for life by implication; but under a devise to B, a stranger, or to the heir and the legacy to the son's issue if he should have any, and if not, a gift over. Another case very similar in its characteristics, was that of Still v. Spear, 3 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 307, to which the court, in the above case of Bentley v. Kaufman, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 435, referred in maintaining its position in the controversy at bar. "The case Still v. Spear, 3 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 307," said the court, "was as near the present case as possible. There was a bequest of a certain fund in trust, to pay the interest to Levi Still, and, in case of his death 'without leaving issue,' to pay the principal to the children of Chas. Still; and it was held that Levi Still took no absolute interest under the will, but only an interest in the income for life; that the failure of issue contemplated was not an indefinite failure of issue, but a failure of issue living at the death of Levi Still, that there was by implication a gift to such issue, and on failure of such issue, the bequest over to the children of Charles Still was good, etc."

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *563; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 568; Addison v. Busk, 14 Beav. 459; Cooper v. Pitcher 4 Hare 485; Dowling v. Dowling, L. R., 1 Eq. 442.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *564; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 568; Green v. Ward, 1 Russ. 262; Ranelagh v. Ranelagh, 12 Beav. 200; Sparks v. Restal, 24 Beav. 218; Neighbour v. Thurlow, 28 Beav. 33; Hayton's Trusts, 4 N. R. 54; Seymour v. Kilbee, L. R., 3 Ir. 33; Cooper v. Pitcher, 4 Hare 485.

3. 1. Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 564; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 569; Es. p. Rogers, 2 Madd. 576; Kinsella v. Caffrey, 11 Ir. Ch. Rep. 154.

Thus C. by his will, after providing for his wife, divided his real property into five parts, which were nearly equal. He first gave one of the portions to his executors in trust, and they were to hold it for the separate use of his daughter J. during her life; but the will was silent as to the trust estate after her death. The next portion he gave to his son T. in fee. The next portion he gave to his executors in trust for the use of the wife of his son H. during her life, and on her decease the estate was to descend to H.'s children. The fourth portion was given to his trustees in like manner for the use of his son E. during life, and after his death the estate was to go to E.'s right heirs. And the fifth and last portion he gave in part to his son D. in fee, and in part to D. for life, with remainder to his right heirs. The residue of his estate, the testator gave to his executors in trust, to divide it among his children and daughter-in-law, before named, to and for the same estates, uses, limitations and trusts, etc., as before provided. He authorized his executors to sell any of the real property, and on their selling any, they were to arrange it so as to make up the share out of which it was to be sold equal to the other shares, so that no one of his children, or such devisees, should be losers by such sales, or less benefited by his bounty, thereby devised to them severally and respectively. At the date others jointly, after the death of A, A takes no estate by implication, since the heir at law may have been intended to take in the meantime.¹ So a devise to one of several coheiresses, after of the will his daughter J. had a large family of children, and her husband was, in the testator's opinion, unfit to manage her estate. No reason or circumstance appeared which could have induced the testator to omit a provision for these children. On the construction of the will, it was held that the effect of the devise was to vest the first parcel in the trustees, in trust for J. for life, with remainder to her children. Sturges v. Cargill, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 318. But compare remarks of Lord Cranworth in Lee v. Busk, 2 De G. M. & G. 812; Lord Romilly in Neighbour v. Thurlow, 28 Beav. 33; Turner, L. J., in Dowling v. Dowling, L. R., 1 Ch. 615; Jussel, M. R., In re Coleman, 4 Ch. Div. 165.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *532; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 564; King v. Ringstead, 9 B. & C. 224; 17 E. C. L. 359; Gardner v. Sheldon, Vaughan 259; Tuder L. C. 541; Aspinall v. Petvin, 1 Sim. & Stu. 544; Upton v. Ferrers, 5 Ves. Jr. 804; Dyer v. Dyer, 1 Meriv. 414. See Lovett v. Gillender, 35 N. Y. 617; Rathbone v. Dyckman, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 9; Kelly v. Stinson, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 387; Anders v. Gerhard, 140 Pa. St. 156; McCoury v. Leek, 14 N. J. Eq. 70; Den v. Holton, 23 N. J. L. 425.

In Ralph v. Carrick, 11 Ch. Div. 878, where it was held that if the gift over was to the heir at law conjointly with other persons, no estate arose by implication, Cotton, L. J., said: "As regards the raising gifts for life by implication arising from a gift to some person after the death of the person to whom it is sought to give a life estate by implication, we have two rules. As to real estate, if there is a gift to a testator's heir at law after the death of A, that does give by implication a life estate to A. If there is a gift of the testator's real estate to a stranger after the death of A, that does not raise the implication.

"Then, for the purpose of seeing whether the principle of one of those rules or of the other applies to the present case, we must consider what is the principle of the two rules. As regards an heir at law, if the real estate is given to him alone after the death of A B, there is a gift to him at that time of what, in the absence of any gift, he would take immediately after the death of the testator. To make sense of this you must take it as expressing an intention to exclude the heir at law till that time arrives. Now an heir at law can only be excluded by giving the property to somebody else, and, therefore, when there is a gift to the heir at law alone of real estate after the death of A, a gift of a life estate to A is implied, because in no other way can the heir at law be excluded. But if the gift of the estate after the death of A is to a stranger, that reasoning does not apply, for the stranger takes simply and entirely by the bounty of the testator, and in the absence of any gift, neither after the death of the named person nor at any other time, will he take anything, and it is not necessary to give anything to A in order to postpone the gift to the stranger, for there is no difficulty in giving an estate to the stranger on the death of A, leaving it in the meantime to go to the heir at law.

"Is there any rule established by the authorities as applicable to a gift to the heir at law and another person jointly after the death of A. I am of opinion that none of the cases establish any rule of construction applicable to such a case. Although cases have been cited in which, in a gift to an heir at law and others after the death of A, a life estate to A has been implied, none of the judges have laid down that there is a general rule of construction which, unaided by anything else in the will, will raise the implication from a devise in those terms. In each case the decision has been rested on the particular expressions of the will, and this negatives the existence of any such general rule of construction as has been contended for. . . . That being so, does this case come within the principle of the rule applicable to a gift to the heir at law after the death of A, or within the principle of the rule applicable to a gift to a stranger after the death of A? In my opinion it comes within the latter, because, although the heir at law is one of the persons to whom the gift is made, it is not necessary to give to anybody else in order to postpone the interest he is to take under the will, as he does not, under the gift, take that which, independently of gift, would come to him. Independently of gift he takes the whole real estate, but under that gift he takes only a share in it. So that, both as regards the interest given to the stranger, and as regards the modification of the interest which the heir at law takes, it cannot be said that the gift after the death of A., is inoperative, unless you treat it as a postponement of the gift and give a life interest to A."

Rebuttal by Contrary Implication.—

Where a testator, being seized of a dwelling house and farm, and of other property, both real and personal, gave a pecuniary legacy to his daughter, payable at twenty-one, or on her marriage; and gave to his wife the house and farm and his furniture for life, and one-third of his personal property absolutely, and then concluded as follows: "And after the death of my wife, in case I should have no more children, I give, devise, and bequeath unto my said daughter, my said dwelling house and farm, together with all the rest and residue of my personal and real estate," it was held that the wife did not take a life estate in such residue, by implication. Rathbone v. Dyckman, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 10. In giving the opinion in the above case the court used the following language: "It is upon the principle of carrying into effect the supposed intention of the testator that all the cases of devises and bequests by implication have been decided. If the particular devise or bequest cannot reasonably be accounted for, except upon the supposition that the testator intended to make the corresponding disposition of other parts of his property, or of previous estates therein, the courts will carry into effect the intention of the testator, by implying such corresponding disposition. Thus, if the devisor gives to his heirs at law the whole of any portion of his real estate after the death of his wife, and there is nothing in the will from which that particular devise can reasonably be accounted for, except upon the supposition that the decedent intended to give the wife the use of the property in the meantime, the law supplies the deficiency in the declared intention of the testator, and gives to the wife a life estate by implication. On the other hand, if the particular devise or bequest can be reasonably accounted for, taking the whole will together, without supposing that the testator must have intended to make some corresponding disposition of other parts of the property or previous estates therein, not expressed, such corresponding disposition will not be implied. An implication may also be rebutted by a contrary implication which is equally strong. Thus, if a testator should devise his estate to his wife during her widowhood only, and to his heir at law after the death of his wife, the limitation in the first devise could not reasonably be accounted for upon the supposition that the testator intended his wife should enjoy the estate after her second marriage, and consequently it would rebut the presumption arising from the last devise, that he intended to give her an estate for life absolutely. In such a case, upon the second marriage the estate would go to the heir at law.

"In the case under consideration the will was made by the decedent a few days before his death; probably in his last sickness, and in contemplation of his approaching dissolution. He had at that time but one child, an infant between one and two years of age. There appears to have been a solicitude on the part of the testator to provide for other children, if he should have any, which I cannot reasonably account for under the circumstances, except upon the supposition that he expected posthumous issue. The general intention of the testator appears to have been to give to his widow the farm and dwelling house in the county of Westchester, during her life, and to his child or children a corresponding equivalent in legacies out of his personal estate; and then to divide the residue of his personal estate between the widow and his child or children, one-third to the former and two-thirds to the latter. The legacies to the daughter and to his other children, if he should have any, were not to be paid to them until they arrived at the age of twenty-one, or were married; and from the age of his wife it was hardly probable that she would remain single until that time. It is, therefore, rather an unnatural presumption to suppose the testator intended to give all the residue of his property to his wife for life, leaving his infant child or children wholly unprovided for in the meantime, and dependent upon a stepfather for subsistence."

the death of A, gives A an estate for life.¹ Upon the same principle, if personal property be given to the next of kin, or to Devisee Need Not Be Described as Heir—Time When Heir Is to Be Ascertained.—"Of course, it is not essential to the doctrine that the will should describe the devisee as the heir apparent or heir presumptive of the testator. Thus, a devise 'to my eldest son B, after the death of A,' would raise an implied estate for life in A, the fact being that B is the heir apparent, though not designated as such. The authorities do not distinctly inform us, however, whether, in order to raise the implication, the devise must be to the person who, according to the state of events at the making of the will, would be the testator's heir, or the person who eventually becomes such. The former seems to be the preferable doctrine; for to treat it as applying to the eventual heir, would be to construe the will according to subsequent events, in opposition to a fundamental principle of construction. If, therefore, a testator having two sons, A and B, devise real estate to B (the younger son) after the decease of his (the testator's) wife, this would not, it is conceived, give to the wife an estate for life by implication, though it should happen that, by the decease of A, the elder son, without issue, in the testator's lifetime, the younger son (i. e., the devisee) had become his heir. On the other hand, if a testator, whose issue was an only daughter, devised real estate to such daughter after the death of his wife, and it happened that he had a son afterwards born, who survived him, the sound conclusion would seem to be, that the wife would take an implied estate for life, though the ulterior devisee was not in event the testator's heir; the result, in short, being that the implication occurs wherever the express devise is to the person who is the testator's heir apparent or presumptive at the date of the will, and not otherwise. Perhaps, when the distinction between a devise to the heir and to a stranger was originally established, the difficulty attending the application of the doctrine to an heir or heiress presumptive, who is liable to be superseded by the birth of a son of the testator, was not sufficiently considered." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *533.

Further Qualifications.—"The express gift of certain lands to A does not in itself prevent him from taking other lands by implication. See 13 H. 7, f. 17; Brook, Devise, pl. 52, cited in Gardner v. Sheldon, Vaughan 259; Tudor L. C. 547. Therefore, where lands are devised to A for life, and after the death of A, the lands previously devised, together with other lands, are devised to B, A will, or will not, take an estate for life, by implication, in the other lands, according as he is the heir, or a stranger. Aspinwall v. Petvin, 1 Sim. & Stu. 544; King v. Ringstead, 9 B. & C. 218; 17 E. C. L. 359; Attwater v. Attwater, 18 Beav. 330. But words which, taken in their grammatical sense, are joint, and apply to the two classes of property, will be construed distributively if the intention of the testator is manifest that the lands not expressly devised for life, are to go to the devisees at once. Cook v. Gerard, 1 Saund. 183, citing 9 B. & C. 225; Hutton v. Simpson, 2 Vern. 723; Prec. Ch. 452; Doe v. Brazier, 5 B. & Ald. 64. The mere fact that provision has already been made for A will be an argument against giving a life estate by implication, and, therefore, in favor of a distributive construction. See Stevens v. Hale, 2 Dr. & Sm. 22; James v. Shannon, 1 R., 2 Eq. 118. Of course, if the devise after the death of A can be construed as merely postponing the vesting in possession till the death of A, no argument in favor of implication can arise. Barnet v. Barnet, 29 Beav. 239. And in the same way, if there is a residuary devise, so that nothing is undisposed of, there can be no implication. Horton v. Horton, Cro. Jac. 74." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 565. 1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 564; Hutton v. Simpson, 2 Vern. 723; Rex v. Ringstead, 9 B. & C. 218; 17 E. C. L. 359.

"This, it must be admitted, is a considerable extension of the doctrine, and carries it beyond the principle on which it is founded, since there seems to be not the same absurdity in supposing a testator to give to one of his co-heiresses after the death of another person, intending it to descend to all in the meantime, as where the devisee is the same and the only individual upon whom the intermediate interest would have descended. The point, too, rests rather on dictum than decision, for the one of the next of kin, after the death of A, A will take a life interest by implication, if there is no residuary bequest.¹ But if the gift over be to other persons than the next of kin, or to the next of kin along with others, A takes no interest by implication.²

i. GIFT TO A TILL TWENTY-ONE, WITH A GIFT OVER IN CASE OF DEATH UNDER AGE.—Under a limitation of real or personal property to A, till twenty-one, with a gift over if he dies under twenty-one, A takes by implication the fee in realty, or an absolute interest in personalty, defeasible upon death under twenty-one.³

case in which Lord Cowper advanced this position was decided upon another point, and it is not to be found in the contemporary reports of the same case; but it was referred arguendo as a settled rule of law in another case." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *534. See Rex v. Ringstead, 9 B. & C. 218; 17 E. C. L. 359.

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 566; 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *544; Stevens v. Hale, 2 D. & S. 22; Cock v. Cock, 21 W. R. 807; Blackwell v. Bull, 1 Keen. 176. Compare White v. Green, 1 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 45.

"So after a life interest to A., with a life interest in certain events to B., followed by a gift over after the deaths of A. and B., a life interest has been implied in B. though the events did not happen. In re Betty Smith's Trusts, L. R., 1 Eq. 79; In re Blake's Trust, L. R., 3 Eq. 799. See Isaacson v. Van Goor, 42 L. J. Ch. 193; 21 W. R. 156. Where the testator's widow was directed to carry on the testator's business, and after his death he directed his property to be divided among his children, the widow took a life interest in the property, upon the general intention to keep the family together. Blackwell v. Bull, 1 Keen. 176. See Cockshott v. Cockshott, 2 Colly. 432. A residuary bequest, or a gift in default of appointment, where the bequest after the life of A. is made under a power, affords an argument against the implication of a life interest. Cranley v. Dixon, 23 Beav. 512; Henderson v. Constable, 5 Bear 297. There is no implication in favor of A. where the gift is if A. dies under twenty-one or unmarried, since in such a case an absolute interest and not a life estate would have to be implied. James v. Shannon, Ir. R., 2 Eq. 118; Harris v. DuPasquier, 20 W. R. 668." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 566.

2. Ralph v. Carrick, 11 Ch. Div. 873.

3. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) *567; 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *548; Tomkins v. Tomkins, cited 1 Burr. 234; Paylor v. Pegg, 24 Beav. 105. See Gardiner v. Stevens, 30 L. J. Ch. 199; In re Harrison's Estate, L. R., 5 Ch. 408; Cropton v. Davies, L. R., 4 C. P. 159; Wilks v. Williams, 2 J. & H. 125; Savage v. Tyers, L. R., 7 Ch. 356.

But in Fitzhuny v. Bonner, 2 Drew. 36, a testator gave his residue to his wife, for her own and her son's support; clothing, and education, until the son should attain twenty-one. If the son died under twenty-one, then the testator gave all the interest of his bank stock to his wife for life; after her death, he gave all his property to his daughter. It was held that the son did not take any estate by implication on attaining twenty-one; but there was an intestacy. Kindersley, V. C., saying: "The testator having provided for his widow and his son, till he should attain twenty-one, and having provided what is to take place, if his son should die under twenty-one, has not in express terms made any provision for the event of his living to attain twenty-one. Now, can I imply a gift to the son, in the event of his attaining twenty-one, of the whole of the property? No doubt there are many cases where the court will, in the absence of express gift, raise a gift by implication; but it will not do so unless the implication is necessary, irresistible, that is, where, looking at the language, at all the dispositions of the will, and the circumstances, there is an irresistible inference in favor of implying a gift. But do I find here any such irresistible inference? What are the previous dispositions? Until the son attains twenty-one, they are in favor of the widow and the son; if he dies under twenty-one, they are in favor of his widow. What is there to lead to an

j. ABSOLUTE INTEREST NOT IMPLIED FROM GIFT TILL TWENTY-ONE.—A simple gift to trustees in trust for A till he attains twenty-one, will not, in the absence of special circumstances, give A the absolute interest.¹

k. NO IMPLICATION THAT EQUITABLE DISPOSITIONS COINCIDE WITH LEGAL.—Where a testator gives several distinct subjects of disposition to trustees, and then proceeds to dispose of the equitable or beneficial interest in terms applicable to one of those subjects only, there is no necessary implication that he intended the legal and equitable disposition to be coextensive,² though it may be highly probable that he did so, especially when the omitted subject is convenient (though not essential) to the enjoyment of the other.

irresistible inference that, if the son should attain twenty-one, he is to be benefited, exclusively of the testator's widow? Then, as to the circumstances, there is not even a probability that a man leaving a widow and a son should intend to provide for the son exclusively, leaving the mother at the mercy of the son, who may or may not fulfill the moral obligation cast upon him; still less is there anything in the circumstances in this case to lead to an irresistible inference of any such intention."

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 567; Hedley's Trusts, 25 W. R. 529. See McCutcheon v. Allen, L. R., 5 Ir. 268.

In Hedley's Trusts, 25 W. R. 529, a testatrix, after directing payment of debts and legacies, gave all the residue of her estate and effects to a trustee, upon trust for her daughter till she should attain the age of twenty-one years or marry, whichever should first happen, and appointed the trustee sole executor of her will. It was held that there was no implied gift of the capital to the daughter on her attaining twenty-one or marrying.

"But very slight indications of intention have been held sufficient to give the absolute interest, though possibly some of the earlier decisions may be difficult to support. In some cases the court has found a direct gift to the legatee, with a superadded direction that it was to be in trust till he should come of age. Atkinson v. Naice, 1 Bro. C. C. 91; Hale v. Beek, 2 Eden 229. See Tunaley v. Roch, 3 Drew. 720. In others an absolute interest has been implied from a direction that the trust is to cease at twenty-one, or from a reference to the trustees as trustees for the legatees. Peat v. Powell, Ambl. 387; 1 Eden 479; Wilks v. Williams, 2 J. & H. 125. Or again, an absolute interest has been given because the trustees are directed to apply, not only the interest, but the produce, till the legatees attain twenty-one. Newland v. Shephard, 2 P. Wms. 194." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 567.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *549; Stubbs v. Sargon, 2 Keen 255; 3 Myl. & C. 507; Jackson v. Noble, 2 Keen 590. Compare Ackers v. Phipps, 9 Bligh 431; 3 Cl. F. 665.

In Stubbs v. Sargon, 2 Keen 255; 3 Myl. & C. 507, as stated in 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *549, "a testatrix devised to trustees and their heirs her copyhold dwelling house (wherein she principally resided), garden and ground, together with the furniture and effects therein, and the coach-house and stable thereto belonging, and also the ten cottages, and two new cottages built by her, with their appurtenances, at L., upon trust, that the trustees and the survivors, etc., and the heirs or assigns of the survivor, should pay the rents of the said hereditaments to her niece S. S., the wife of G. S., or permit and suffer her to use and occupy the said hereditaments, during her life, to the intent that the same hereditaments, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof, might be for her separate use; and after her decease to G. S. for his life; and after his decease, upon trust, that the trustees and the survivors and survivor of them, and the heirs or assigns of such survivor, should be possessed of and interested in the said hereditaments, in trust for such of the testatrix's nephews and nieces, or grandnephews and grandnieces, as S. S. should

1. GIFTS IMPLIED FROM POWERS OF APPOINTMENT.—Where property is given, or appointed under a general power, to A for life, and after his death to such children, relations or other defined class of objects, or in such shares, as he shall appoint, a gift over will be implied to the objects in default of appointment, on the assumption that the testator could not have intended the objects to be disappointed by the neglect of the donee to exercise the power in their favor.¹

appoint; and in default of appointment, upon trust that the said trustees and the survivors and survivor of them, or the heirs or assigns of such survivor, should sell and dispose of the said hereditaments and premises; and the testatrix directed that the produce of such sale should constitute part of her residuary personal estate. The will contained a general residuary clause. Lord Langdale, M. R., held that the furniture and effects did not pass to S. S., but belonged to the residuary legatees, the testatrix having, in the statement of the trusts, employed words only applicable to the real estate; and Lord Cottenham, on appeal, was of the same opinion, observing, that it was probable the testatrix intended that the furniture and effects should accompany the copyholds, but she had omitted to declare such to be her intention."

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *551. See Brown v. Higgs, 4 Ves. 708; 5 Ves. 495; 8 Ves. 561; Cruwys v. Colman, 9 Ves. Jr. 319; Forbes v. Ball, 3 Meriv. 437; Walsh v. Wallinger, 2 R. & M. 78; Fordyce v. Bridges, 10 Beav. 90; Fenwick v. Greenwell, 10 Beav. 412; Reid v. Reid, 25 Beav. 469; Izod v. Izod, 32 Beav. 242; Salisbury v. Denton, 3 K. & J. 535; Alloway v. Alloway, 4 D. & W. 380; Burrough v. Philcox, 5 Myl. & C. 73; Falkner v. Wynford, 15 L. J. Ch. 8; Caplin's Will, 2 D. & S. 527; Varell v. Wendell, 20 N. H. 431; Smith v. Floyd, 140 N. Y. 337.

A bequest was in the following language: "I give to my wife my estate, for her to divide amongst my children as she may think best. If she should marry it is my desire that the property be divided between my wife and my children, share and share alike." By this clause the children received an interest in the property. It is a gift to them; and though the wife might postpone the division, and, when it was made, divide the estate unequally, she could not defeat the gift. In the event she did not divide the estate, the children were entitled to equal portions. Cathey v. Cathey, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 470. Compare Word v. Morgan, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 407.

In this case the second clause in a will was as follows: "I give and bequeath to my beloved wife, all my estate, both real and personal, to dispose and divide among my children as she may think best." It was held that the will did not vest in the widow an absolute interest in the property of the testator, but only a qualified interest in the same, with power of appointment, in the exercise of a sound discretion, to the children. And thus the exercise of this power of appointment is a condition precedent to the actual enjoyment of the estate, in whole or in part, by the children, and no beneficial interest in them can be enjoyed until the power is exercised. Word v. Morgan, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 407.

Time When Objects Are Ascertained.—"A gift arising by implication from a power of selection or distribution, however, applies to the persons who are objects of the power, and to them only; and, consequently, if the appointment is to be testamentary, the gift takes effect in favor of the objects living at the decease of the donee, to the exclusion of any who may have died in his lifetime, and who, of course, could not have been made objects of an appointment by will. Walsh v. Wallinger, 2 R. & M. 78. See also Kennedy v. Kingston, 2 J. & W. 431; Freeland v. Pearson, L. R., 3 Eq. 658. In Falkner v. Wynford, 15 L. J. Ch. 8; 9 Jur. 1006, the power was to appoint by deed or will, and, consequently, the gift by implication was not restricted to the objects living at the decease of the donee. An express gift, in default of appointment, applies to the same class of persons as a simple gift unconnected with any power. Pattison v. Pattison, 19 Beav. 638; Richards v. Davies, 13 C. B. N. S. 69, 861; 106 E. C. L. 69, 861. And it is said that a gift to a class

An express gift over in default of appointment precludes all implication,¹ but a gift over in default of objects of the power, strengthens the implication in their favor.² The principle does not apply where the donee has absolute discretion to appoint,³ nor where the power is to be exercised only in events which never happen,⁴ nor where the power is to appoint in favor of some one person or of a certain member out of a class.⁵ A bare power to appoint a sum of money to a particular person will not give that person any interest if the power is not exercised.⁶

m. IMPLICATION OF CROSS-REMAINDERS.—(See REMAINDERS AND EXECUTORY INTERESTS, vol. 20, p. 868).—The conclusions from the authorities upon the subject are thus stated by Mr. Jarman and his English editors:⁷

1. Under a devise to several persons in tail, being tenants in common, with a limitation over for want, or in default, of such in such shares as A shall by will appoint, is to be distinguished from a mere power for A to give among the class, and is for this purpose equivalent to an express gift in default. Lambert v. Thwaites, L. R., 2 Eq. 151. But in Woodcock v. Renneck, 1 Ph. 72; 4 Beav. 190, it was held by Lords Lyndhurst and Langdale, that the question who were entitled under such gift depended upon the construction of the whole clause, including the words importing power. Consequently, if all the objects die in the donee's lifetime, no gift at all can be implied. So, although the power be to appoint by deed or will; yet, if, upon the true construction of the instrument creating it, the objects of it are required to be living at a deferred period, the implied gift in default will also be to those persons only. Halfhead v. Shepherd, 28 L. J. Q. B. 248; 5 Jur. N. S. 1162; In re White's Trust, Johns. 656; In re Phene's Trusts, L. R. 5 Eq. 346; Winn v. Fenwick, 11 Beav. 438; Stolworthy v. San-croft, 33 L. J. Ch. 708; 10 Jur. N. S. 762. But it has been doubted whether the point of construction in the last two cases was rightly decided. L. R., 2 Eq. 160; 4 Ch. Div. 68." 1 Jarman on Wills (5th ed.) *552.

1. Pattison v. Pattison, 19 Beav. 638; Roddy v. Fitzgerald, 6 H. L. Cas. 823; Goldring v. Inwood, 3 Giff. 139. Compare In re Jeffery's Trusts, L. R., 14 Eq. 136.

2. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 570; 1 Jarman on Wills (5th ed.) *552; Butler v. Gray, L. R., 5 Ch. 30. See Kellett v. Kellett, Ir. R., 5 Eq. 298.

"And there is, it seems, no necessary inference that the testator intends that a qualification, applied by him exclusively to the objects of the power, should be extended to the objects of the gift expressly limited, in default of appointment to a class of objects identical in other respects with that of the power. Thus, where (Smith v. Death, 5 Madd. 227) the devise was to A for life, with remainder to such child and children of A, and him surviving, who should be educated as a member of the Church of England, in such parts and proportions, etc., as A should appoint, and, in default of such appointment, to the first son of A who should be educated as aforesaid, and the heirs of the body of such son, with divers remainders over; it was contended that as the power of appointment was restricted to "surviving" children, the gift over was to be construed with a like limitation; but Sir J. Leach, M. R., held that such a construction would be contrary to the force of the expressions used, and was not warranted by necessary or rational inference." 1 Jarman on Wills (5th ed.) *552.

3. In re Eddowes, 1 D. & S. 395; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 570. Compare Brook v. Brook, 3 S. & G. 280.

4. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 570; Halfhead v. Shepherd, 28 L. J. Q. B. 248; 5 Jur. N. S. 1162.

5. 1 Jarman on Wills (5th ed.) *552; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 570; Sugd. on Powers (8th ed.) 593; Carthew v. Enraght, 20 W. R. 743.

6. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 570; Bull v. Vardy, 1 Ves. Jr. 270. See Tweedale v. Tweedale, 7 Ch. Div. 633.

7. 2 Jarman on Wills (5th ed.) *555.

issue, cross-remainders are to be implied among the devisees in tail.¹

2. This rule applies whether the devise be to two persons, or a larger number, though it be made to them "respectively," and though in the devise over the testator have not used the words "the said premises," or "all the premises," or "the same," or any other expression denoting that the ulterior devise was to comprise the entire property, and not undivided shares.²

3. The rule applies though the ulterior devise is on a failure of issue, at a particular period.³

1. See Taaffe v. Conmee, 10 H. L. Cas. 85; Hannaford v. Hannaford, L. R., 7 Q. B. 116; Holmes v. Meynel, Raym. 452; Lillibridge v. Adie, 1 Mason (U. S.) 224; Seabrook v. Mikell, Cheeves Eq. (S. Car.) 80; Allen v. Ashley School Fund, 102 Mass. 262; Dow v. Doyle, 103 Mass. 489; Parker v. Parker, 5 Met. (Mass.) 134; Hoxton v. Archer, 3 Gill & J. (Md.) 199; Kerr v. Verner, 66 Pa. St. 326; Pierce v. Hakes, 23 Pa. St. 231; Wall v. Maguire, 24 Pa. St. 248; Turner v. Fowler, 10 Watts (Pa.) 325. Compare Fenby v. Johnson, 21 Md. 106.

A testator, after giving the use and improvement of all his real and personal property to his wife during her widowhood, made the following residuary devise: "I give to my five sons all the residue and remainder of my real estate, to be equally divided among them, they to come into possession when my wife's improvement ends; and if any or either of my said sons should die before they arrive to the age of twenty-one years, or should die without any legal heir of their body, then, and in that case, their share or shares shall descend equally to their surviving brother or brothers." It was held that each of the sons took an estate tail in one-fifth of the land devised, with cross-remainders. Parker v. Parker, 5 Met. (Mass.) 134.

2. Taaffe v. Conmee, 10 H. L. Cas. 85; Hannaford v. Hannaford, L. R., 7 Q. B. 116.

But of course, if the several shares are to go over to the ulterior devisee upon the failure of issue of any of them, cross-remainders will not be implied. Baldrick v. White, 2 Bailey (S. Car.) 442; Fenby v. Johnson, 21 Md. 106. See REMAINDERS, vol. 20, p. 868.

3. Maden v. Taylor, 45 L. J. Ch. 539. In this case, a testator devised free-hold estate on trust for his nieces, M., B., S., and J., for their respective lives, as tenants in common, and on the death of all or any of them, then as to the part of her or them so dying, in trust for all and every child and the children of them respectively, and the heirs of their bodies; and if any of them should die without leaving issue living at her death, then in trust for the survivors and survivor of them and the heirs of her and their bodies, and if all except one should die without leaving lawful issue, then in trust for such only or surviving niece and the heirs of her body, and in case of a total failure of issue of them, then in trust for his heirs. B. died having had four children, three of whom died infants and unmarried. J. died having had three children, one of whom died an infant and unmarried. M. died a spinster. S. was a spinster, and over sixty. It was held that cross-remainders in tail were to be implied between the children of the tenants for life. Sir G. Jessel, M. R., said: "The difficulty I feel in implying cross-remainders here is that the gift over is on failure of issue at a particular period. In the ordinary case where the gift over is on an indefinite failure of issue, the implication makes an exhaustive disposition; nothing can descend to the heir. But where the failure of issue is restricted to the death of the tenant for life, the heir may come in after all, notwithstanding the implication, for the tenant in tail may survive the tenant for life, on the particular period, and then die without issue. Still, I am in favor of extending the rule, if it is an extension. . . . I think the true rule is laid down in the old case of Doe v. Webb, 1 Taunt. 234, that in order to ascertain whether you should imply cross-remainders, you have to ascertain whether the testator intended that the whole

4. The rule applies in regard to executory trusts at least, though there be an express direction to insert cross-remainders among another class of objects, or a limitation over among some of the same objects, and even in direct devises an express limitation of cross-remainders among another class of objects has been held not to repel the implication.¹

5. The word remainder following a devise to several in tail will raise cross-remainders among them.²

estate should go over together. If you once get to that point that he intends the whole estate to go over together, you are not to let a fraction of it descend to the heir at law in the meantime. You are to assume that what is to go over together, being the entire estate, is to remain subject to the prior limitations, until the period when it is to go arrives.

"Now, if this is the true principle, I think it applies to a case like this, where it is plain in one event the whole estate is to go over together, although it is possible that another event may happen in which that intention may, to a certain extent, be suspended. The trust here is for all the nieces for their respective lives, and after the death of any of them (I read the substance of the limitations) in trust for the children of her or them, respectively, and the heirs of their bodies (whether they take as tenants in common, or as joint tenants with several inheritances, it is not necessary to decide—that would depend on the word "respectively"), and in case any of them shall die without leaving lawful issue living at her or their decease, then in trust for the survivors or survivor of them in tail, and if all except one should die without leaving lawful issue, then in trust for such only or surviving niece in tail, and in case of a total failure of his nieces (I think it must still mean at the death), then in trust for his own right heirs—so that there is a gift over of the whole estate on failure of some kind of prior limitations. Now, if I do not imply cross-remainders, the result will be that in the case of Betsy, who had four children, there will be an intestacy as to three shares, that is, as to three-fourths of her fourth share, until it shall be ascertained that the remaining child dies also without issue; if that is the meaning of the words total failure of issue, or if it is to be limited to dying without issue at her own death, then, of course, there would be an absolute intestacy as to those three-fourths. That, as I said before, is not to be read as being the meaning of the testator where he intends obviously to keep the estate together; and I think I am not unfairly extending the rule, for I take that to be the rule in implying cross-remainders, and consequently I so hold."

1. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *554-555; Horne v. Barton, Coop. 257; 19 Ves. Jr. 398. See Green v. Stephens, 12 Ves. Jr. 419.

In Horne v. Barton, 19 Ves. Jr. 398, under a devise in trust to settle on the testator's children in equal shares and proportions, undivided, for and during their respective lives, the remainder to their issue, severally and respectively in tail general, with cross-remainders over, there being two daughters, cross-remainders were inserted, not only among the several children of each, but also as between the two families. Sir W. Grant said: "This is not a question about raising cross-remainders by implication; but the settlement contains an express direction to insert cross-remainders. Estates for life only are given to the children, with remainders in tail to their several and respective issue; and the cross-remainders are directed to be inserted after such limitation. That direction would not be substantially complied with without inserting a direction that, upon failure of issue of the one, the estate should go to the other. Even under a direction that in default of such issue it should go over, upon the modern decisions cross-remainders would be implied. Here is no disposition of the reversion, but it is not probable that he meant his children, to whom he intended to give only estates for life, should take the fee, while there was any issue to take the inheritance."

2. Doe v. Burville, 2 East 47, n.; stated 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *552. Compare Pery v. White, Cowp. 777.

6. It is no objection to the implication of cross-remainders that there is an inequality among the devisees whose issue is referred to; some of them being tenants in tail and others tenants for life, with remainder to their issue in tail.¹

7. A devise to the children of A for life, and for want and in default of such issue then over, creates cross-remainders, by implication, for life among such devisees.²

8. The better opinion is that statutes which provide that the words "die without issue," and similar expressions, shall be construed to mean a definite failure of issue, do not affect the foregoing principles.³

1. See Vanderplank v. King, 3 Hare 1.
2. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *554, 555; Ashley v. Ashley, 6 Sim. 358. See also Pearce v. Edmeades, 3 Y. & C. 246; Walmsley v. Foxhall, 1 De G. J. & S. 605; Loring v. Coolidge, 99 Mass. 191; Cudworth v. Thompson, 3 Desaus. (S. Car.) 256; Williams v. Kibler, 10 S. Car. 427.

3. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *555, note. Compare Forrest v. Whiteway, 3 Exch. 367.

Mr. Theobald's Conclusions.—Mr. Theobald deduces the following propositions from the English cases:

"First. If there is a devise of lands to two or more as tenants in common, and the heirs of their bodies respectively, followed by a gift over in default of such issue, the gift over takes effect only in default of all such issue as would take under the antecedent limitations, and therefore cross-remainders are implied between the tenants in tail. Doe v. Webb, 1 Taunt. 234; Powell v. Howells, L. R., 3 Q. B. 655; Hannaford v. Hannaford, L. R., 7 Q. B. 116. And if the gift over is limited, not expressly in default of issue, but as a remainder, the same result follows. Doe v. Burville, 2 East 47, n. The word 'reversion' would probably now be held to have the same force, notwithstanding Pery v. White, Cowp. 777. The arguments against the implication of cross-remainders, founded upon the number of the devisees and such words as 'severally' and 'respectively,' or the fact that the whole is not expressly given over, must now be considered exploded.

"Second. The result will be the same if the gift over is in default of issue, to take under the preceding limitations, living at the death of their parents. Maden v. Taylor, 45 L. J. Ch. 569.

"Third. It has been said that if crossremainders are provided between certain objects in certain events, the implication of cross-remainders between those objects in different events, does not arise; so that, for instance, if cross-remainders are provided between the children of separate families among themselves, cross-remainders would not be implied between the children of one family and those of the other. Clache's Case, Dyer 330, however, which is usually cited on this point, is no authority for any such proposition. All that case decides is, that cross-remainders cannot be implied in the face of an express limitation over in a certain event with which such an implication would be inconsistent. See the remarks of the Lord Justice Turner in Atkinson v. Barton, 3 De G. F. & J. 339; and the decision in Rabbeth v. Squire, 19 Beav. 77; 4 De G. & J. 406, was based on totally different grounds. The true rule is laid down by Turner, L. J.: 'Cross remainders are to be implied or not, according to the intention. The circumstance of remainders, having been created between the parties in particular events, is a circumstance to be weighed in determining the intention, but is not decisive upon it,' Atkinson v. Barton, 3 De G. F. & J. 338 (reversed on appeal, but on different grounds, 10 H. L. Cas. 313). See too Vanderplank v. King, 3 Hare 1; In re Ridge's Trusts, L. R., 7 Ch. 665.

"Fourth. Cross-remainders will be implied even though, as the result of legal rules and not of the testator's intention, the class of persons between whom they are implied take different interests, if, for instance, some are tenants in tail, others only tenants for life, with remainders to their children in tail. Vanderplank v. King, 3 Hare 1.

"Fifth. Cross-remainders will be implied in a devise to the children of A, n. IMPLICATION OF CROSS EXECUTORY LIMITATIONS.—In the case of limitations in fee of the realty, or of absolute interests in personalty among several devisees or legatees, as tenants in common, with a limitation over in case they all die under age, the better opinion is that cross executory limitations among the several devisees or legatees will not be implied, and hence the share of any one of them dying during his minority will devolve upon his representatives, unless and until they all die under age.¹

which carries to them only a life estate, with a gift over for want of such issue of A. Ashley v. Ashley, 6 Sim. 358.

"Sixth. And where realty or personalty is given to several persons as tenants in common for life, with remainders to their issue, followed by a gift over if all should die without leaving issue, cross-limitations between the first takers and their families will be implied. In re Ridge's Trusts, L. R., 7 Ch. 665; In re Clark, 11 W. R. 871. See also Coates v. Hart, 3 De G. J. & S. 504.

"Seventh. But cross-limitations will not be implied so as to divest vested interests. The implication arises from the presumption against intestacy, but where there are vested interests there can be no intestacy. See Rabbeth v. Squire, 19 Beav. 70; 4 De G. & J. 406; In re Clark, 11 W. R. 871. "Upon the same principal, when the testator has disposed of his whole interest in realty or personalty, if, for instance, absolute vested interests have been given to several tenants in common, with a gift over upon the death of all in certain events, cross-limitations cannot be implied between them, as there can be no intestacy, and cross-limitations would divest vested interests. Skey v. Barnes, 3 Meriv. 334; Bromhead v. Hunt, 2 J. & W. 459; Baxter v. Losh, 14 Beav. 612; Beaver v. Nowell, 25 Beav. 551.

"Eighth. If, however, the interests are not vested, but contingent, with a gift over upon the death of all before the interests vest, the argument against an intestacy applies, and no argument can be raised against cross-limitations, on the ground that they would divest vested gifts, and therefore, in all probability, cross-limitations would be implied. Mackell v. Winter, 3 Ves. Jr. 236, 536; Scott v. Bargeman, 2 P. Wms. 68; 2 Eq. Abr. 542; Graves v. Waters, 10 Ir. Eq. 234. There are no grounds for supposing Scott v. Bargeman, 2 P. Wms. 68, to be overruled. The point in Beauman v. Stock, 2 B. & B. 406, was totally different. It was whether benefit of survivorship would be implied between tenants in common taking vested interests, and the incidental remarks of Lord Manners cannot be considered as overruling a case expressly approved by Lord St. Leonards in Vize v. Stoney, 1 D. & W. 348, and followed by Graves v. Waters, 10 Ir. Eq. 234." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 571.

1. "The question whether cross executory limitations can be implied among devisees in fee, arises when real estate is devised to several persons in fee, with a limitation over, in case they all die under a given age, or under any other prescribed circumstances; in which case it is by no means to be taken as a necessary consequence of the doctrine respecting the implication of cross-remainders among devisees in tail, discussed in the last chapter, that reciprocal executory limitations will be implied among such devisees in fee. The principal difference between the two cases seems to be this: In the case of a devise to several persons in tail, assuming the intention to be clear that the estate is not to go over to the remainder-man until all the devisees shall have died without issue, the effect of not implying cross-remainders among the tenants in tail would be to produce a chasm in the limitations, inasmuch as some of the estates tail might be spent, while the ulterior devise could not take effect until the failure of all. On the other hand, in the case of limitations in fee of the realty, and of absolute interests in personalty (both which are clearly governed by the same principle), as the primary gift includes the testator's whole estate or interest, and that interest remains in the objects in every event upon which it is not divested, a partial intestacy can never arise from want of a limitation over. To introduce cross-limitations among the devisees in such a case, would be to

12. What Passes Under a General or Residuary Bequest.—See LEGACIES AND DEVICES, vol. 13, p. 45.

13. What Passes Under a General or Residuary Devise.—See LEGACIES AND DEVICES, vol. 13, p. 51. See also supra, this title, Words Descriptive of Property—To What Period Referred; infra, this title, "Lands"—"Real Estate."

14. Under What Circumstances a General Devise or Bequest Operates as a Good Execution of a Power.—See POWERS, vol. 19, pp. 929, 936.

15. Construction of Words Descriptive of Property—a. "LANDS"—"REAL ESTATE"—(1) Reversionary Interests.—A general devise of lands or "real estate" carries reversionary interests, in the absence of an intent to the contrary;¹ as where the testator treats the reversion as undisposed of² by the will. A devise of lands "not settled" includes an unsettled reversion in settled lands.³ A charge of annuities upon the lands passing by the general words will not exclude reversions,⁴ nor will the fact that some of the limitations of the will are inapplicable to the reversion.⁵

divest a clear absolute gift upon reasoning merely conjectural; for the argument that the testator could not intend the retention of the property by the respective devisees to depend upon the prescribed event not happening to the whole, however plausible, scarcely amounts to more than conjecture. He may have such an intention; and, if not, the answer is, voluit sed non dixit. If, therefore, a gift is made to several persons in fee simple, as tenants in common, with a limitation over in case they all die under age, the share of one of the devisees dying during minority will devolve upon his representatives, unless and until the whole die under age." 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *556. See Skey v. Barnes, 3 Meriv. 354; Turner v. Frederick, 5 Sim. 466; Templeman v. Warrington, 13 Sim. 267; Cohen v. Waley, 15 Sim. 318; Baxter v. Fish, 14 Beav. 612; Edwards v. Tuck, 23 Beav. 268; Beaver v. Nowell, 25 Beav. 551; Mair v. Quilter, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 465; In re Ridge's Trusts, L. R., 7 Ch. 665; Fenby v. Johnson, 21 Md. 111.

Cross excepting limitations, however, were implied in regard to bequests of personality in some earlier cases. Scott v. Bargeman, 2 P. Wms. 68; Mackell v. Winter, 3 Ves. Jr. 236, 536. Supposed by Jarman to have been overruled. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *561.

1. Hawkins on Wills *33; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 162; 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *663; Church v. Mundy, 15

Ves. Jr. 396; Ford v. Ford, 6 Hare 486; Chester v. Chester, 3 P. Wms. 56; Doe v. Fossick, 1 B. & Ad. 186; 20 E. C. L. 374; Mostyn v. Champneys, 1 Scott 293; 1 Bing. (N. Car.) 341. See Brown v. Boyd, 9 W. & S. (Pa.) 128; M'Cay v. Hugus, 6 Watts (Pa.) 347; Drew v. Wakefield, 54 Me. 297; O'Neale v. Ward, 3 Har. & M. (Md.) 93; Hayden v. Stoughton, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 538.

2. Strong v. Teatt, 2 Burr. 912.

3. Hawkins on Wills *34; Glover v. Spendlove, 4 Bro. C. C. 337. "A devise of land not settled, or out of settlement, is equivalent to a devise of lands not otherwise disposed of, over which the testator has absolute dominion, and will therefore pass a reversion in fee in settled lands, though the testator may confirm the settlement. Incorporated Soc. v. Richards, 1 D. & W. 258; Chester v. Chester, 3 P. Wms. 56; Atty. Gen'l v. Vigor, 8 Ves. 256; Jones v. Skinner, 5 L. J. Ch. N. S. 87; Kelley v. Duffy, 4 L. R. Ir. 601;" Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 162.

4. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 162; Doe v. Fossick, 1 B. & Ad. 186; 20 E. C. L. 374; Doe v. Ieyes, 1 B. & Ad. 593; 20 E. C. L. 448.

5. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 163.

"The fact that the limitations on which the reversion is dependent are such that some of the limitations of the will cannot take effect upon the reversion, will not prevent the reversion from passing. If there are other causes besides the reversion, the limitations inapplicable to the reversion will be

(2) Leaseholds for Lives.—A devise of all testator's "lands and hereditaments," or all his "real estate," carries leaseholds for lives as well as freeholds in fee, notwithstanding some parts of the will are inapplicable to them.¹

(3) Leaseholds for Years.—At common law, a devise of "real estate," "lands," "lands and tenements," or "lands, tenements, and hereditaments," did not carry leaseholds for years, unless at the time of the devise the testator had no freehold lands answering the description.² The rule, however, readily yielded to indications from the context of an intent to pass leaseholds, as where the devise was of lands of which the testator stood "seised or possessed or in any way interested."³ Under the English Wills Act, a devise of "lands" includes leaseholds, unless an intent to the contrary appears;⁴ but it seems that a devise expressly of "freehold" lands or "real estate" is not within the act and only passes leaseholds, if there are no freeholds.⁵ Statutes similar referred to the other lands reddendo singula singulis. Doe v. Weatherby, 11 East 322; William v. Thomas, 12 East 141; Freeman v. Chandos, Cowp. 363; Doe v. Bartle, 5 B. & Ald. 492; Morris v. Lloyd, 33 L. J. Exch. 202. Under this head would come all wills since the Wills Act, where such of the limitations as can never take effect, upon the reversion, may be looked upon as intended to operate upon after acquired lands. And even if there are no other lands, the reversion will pass if some of the limitations of the will are applicable to it. Church v. Mundy, 12 Ves. Jr. 426; Tennant v. Tennant, Dru. temp. Sugden 161; 1 J. & L. 379; Ford v. Ford, 6 Hare 486; Roe v. Avis, 4 T. R. 605; Goodtitle v. Miles, 6 East 494, must be considered overruled. If, however, none of the limitations of the will could take effect upon the reversion, there seems no reason for supposing the reversion would pass. Tennant v. Tennant, Dru. temp. Sugden 161; 1 J. & L. 379, is not contra, since the devise of the reversion was capable of taking effect so far as the life interest given to R. was concerned. Goodtitle v. Miles, 6 East 494, seems to have been decided upon this principle, though the facts did not justify its application." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 163.

1. Weigall v. Brome, 6 Sim. 99; Fitzroy v. Howard, 3 Russ. 225.

2. Hawkins on Wills *30; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 165; 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *668; Rose v. Bartlett, Cro. Car. 293; Thompson v. Lawley, 2 Bos. & P. 313; Gully v. Davis, L. R., 10 Eq.

562; Chapman v. Hart, 1 Ves. 271. See Day v. Trig, 1 P. Wms. 286; Doe v. Cranstoun, 7 M. & W. 1; Minnis v. Aylett, 1 Wash. (Va.) 300. But see Shreve v. Shreve, 17 N. J. Eq. 487.

Under statutes which provide that the will shall speak from the death, the question would seem to be whether the testator had freeholds at his death, not when the will was made. See Gully v. Davis, L. R., 10 Eq. 562.

3. Addis v. Clement, 2 P. Wms. 456. See Hartley v. Hurle, 5 Ves. Jr. 540; Swift v. Swift, 1 De G. F. & J. 160.

Somewhat similar limitations, however, without the word "possessed," have been held not to pass leaseholds. Pistol v. Richardson, 2 P. Wms. 459, note; Davis v. Gibbs, 3 P. Wms. 26.

4. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 165.

Stat. 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 26. "And be it further enacted, that a devise of the land of the testator, or of the land of the testator in any place, or in the occupation of any person mentioned in his will, or otherwise described in a general manner, and any other general devise, which would describe a customary copyhold or leasehold estate, if the testator had no freehold estate which could be described by it, shall be construed to include the customary copyhold and leasehold estates of the testator, or his customary copyhold and leasehold estates, or any of them, to which such description shall extend, as the case may be, as well as freehold estates, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will."

5. Gully v. Davis, L. R., 10 Eq. 562. See Emuss v. Smith, 2 De G. & S.

to the English Wills Act exist in the States of Virginia, West Virginia, and Kentucky.¹

(4) Beneficial Interest in Mortgages.—A general devise of all testator's lands, tenements, and hereditaments, does not carry the beneficial interest in money secured by mortgages.² But a devise of particular lands of which the testator is only mortgagee, to several persons in succession, would, it seems, pass the beneficial interest, as something was clearly intended to pass, and the limitations are inappropriate to a devise of the mere legal estate.³

(5) Trust and Mortgage Estates.—A general devise of testator's "lands," "lands in A," or "real estate," includes lands of which the testator was seised as trustee or mortgagee, unless an intention to the contrary appear.⁴

722; Stone v. Greening, 13 Sim. 390; Turner v. Turner, 21 L. J. Ch. 843.

1. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2808; Virginia Code, ch. 118, § 15; Kentucky Gen. Stat., ch. 113, § 21; West Virginia Laws (1882), ch. 84, § 14.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *689; Hawkins on Wills *38; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 167; Strode v. Russel, 2 Vern. 624; Casborne v. Scarfe, 1 Atk. 605; 2 J. & W. 194. See Martin v. Weston, 2 Burr. 969; Martin v. Smith, 124 Mass. 111.

In Casborne v. Scarfe, 2 J. & W. *195, Lord Eldon said: "The person having the equity of redemption is considered as owner of the land, and the mortgagee as entitled only to retain it as a security or a pledge for a debt. For this reason a mortgage, though a fee, is considered in this court as personal assets, and shall go to the executor, notwithstanding that the legal estate vests in the heir in point of law. The husband of a feme mortgagee shall not be tenant by the curtesy of the mortgage, unless the mortgage be foreclosed, by which it ceases to be a pledge. It shall not pass by a devise of all his lands, tenements, and hereditaments. This was unanimously resolved by Lord Cowper, assisted by Lord C. J. Trevor and Mr. J. Tracy, in the case of Litton v. Falkland, 2 Vern. 625. The words are: 'It was unanimously agreed, first, that mortgages in fee, although forfeited when the will was made, did not pass by the general words; although he afterwards foreclosed those mortgages, or obtained a release of the equity of redemption, they should not pass by a will,' but go to the heirs at law; this shows that the release of the equity of redemption or foreclosure is considered in equity as a new purchase or acquisition of the real estate in the land."

3. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 167; Woodhouse v. Meredith, 1 Meriv. 450. See Burdus v. Dixon, 4 Jur. N. S. 967; Knollys v. Shepherd, 1 J. & W. 499; Clarke v. Abbott, Barn. Ch. 461.

4. Hawkins on Wills *35; 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 693; Braybroke v. Inskip, 8 Ves. Jr. 435; Bainbridge v. Ashburton, 2 Y. & C. C. 347. See Leeds v. Munday, 3 Ves. Jr. 348; Wall v. Bright, 1 J. & W. 494; Galliers v. Moss, 9 B. & C. 267; 17 E. C. L. 375. See Taylor v. Benham, 5 How. (U. S.) 270; Richardson v. Woodbury, 43 Me. 206; Abbott, Petitioner, 55 Me. 580; Jackson v. DeLancey, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 537; Merritt v. Francis F. Ins. Co., 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 547; Downing v. Marshall, 23 N. Y. 366; Bangs v. Smith, 98 Mass. 270; Ballard v. Carter, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 112; Martin v. Smith, 124 Mass. 111; Cogdell v. Widow, etc., 3 Desaus. (S. Car.) 346; Gibbes v. Holmes, 10 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 484; Drane v. Gunter, 19 Ala. 731; Wills v. Cooper, 25 N. J. L. 161; Van Wageningen v. Brown, 26 N. J. L. 196; Marshall v. Hadley, 50 N. J. Eq. 547; In re Clowes (1893), Ch. 214; Heath v. Knapp, 4 Pa. St. 230. Compare Breckinridge v. Waters, 4 Dana (Ky.) 620.

B., in 1770, being indebted to A., by three several bonds, in order to secure the payment of the same, executed to A. a mortgage on all his lands in the province of New York, a portion of which lands were referred to by name and part, consisting of the premises in question, passing under a general clause, and covenanted that on default, the mortgagee, his heirs, etc., might enter. A. died, having ordered by her will all her estates in certain patents and elsewhere, wheresoever and whatsoever, to be converted into money by her executors, and to be equally divided among her five children, who were to be tenants in common in fee of the realty until such sale and distribution. In 1771, before the death of A., the mortgage had become forfeited, and a judgment had also been recovered by A. against B. B., by his will, executed in 1780, made a devise of his estate to his wife, and in the event of her death without disposing of the same by grant or devise, he devised it over to his daughter D. In 1788, the judgment against B. was revived by the executors of A., and the scire facias was directed to the heirs of B., who were summoned, but not to the wife of B., the tenant for life, who was not summoned; and execution was issued thereon and the lands of B. sold and purchased by R., who had married one of the daughters and devisees of A., and conveyed to him, who took possession of the premises in question under that deed, which, however, it was now conceded did not pass the premises. R. procured conveyances from three of the other devisees of B., and the tenants of the land in 1790 attorned to R. and surrendered their possession to him, and agreed to hold under him. The wife of B. having died after devising her estate to trustees in trust for her daughter D, it was held, in an action for ejectment on the demise of D. and her trustees, against persons claiming under R., that R. had a right of entry under the will of A., as devisee of the mortgage which passed by the general words of the will, such appearing to be the intention of the testatrix, and that the defendant could set it up as an outstanding title to defeat the action of the plaintiff. Jackson v. DeLancey, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 537.

"There is, however, a distinction between cases where the testator is mortgagee, in trust, and where he is also beneficially entitled to the mortgage money. First. Where the testator has the legal estate in a mortgage, and the beneficial interest is also vested in him, the legal effect passes under a gift of 'all the rest of my real and personal estate to A for her own use and benefit,' though there may be a charge of debts. In re Stevens' Will, L. R., 6 Eq. 597. In such a case it is reasonable to suppose that the beneficial ownership and the legal estate were meant to go together. If the devise is to trustees, subject to a charge of debts, apparently the legal estate would not pass, the arguments from the convenience of uniting the legal estate with the beneficial interest being away. In re Horsfall, McClell. & Y. 292. This is a fortiori the case where the devise is to trustees subject to the payment of debts upon trusts inapplicable to the legal estate. See In re Packman, 1 Ch. Div. 215, where the testator was beneficially interested in a moiety of the equity of redemption. But if the trustees are directed to get in debts due on any security, they take the legal estate. In re Arrowsmith's Trusts, 6 W. R. 642. The legal estate will not pass where the devise is after payment of debts to two persons as tenants in common. Doe v. Lightfoot, 8 M. & W. 553. Or where it is to several persons in definite shares, though not subject to debts. Martin v. Laverton, L. R., 9 Eq. 563. Or where it is to an indefinite class, as tenants in common. In re Finney's Estate, 3 Giff. 465. Second. Mere trusts estates will not be prevented from passing under a general devise by words of benefit superadded. Bainbridge v. Ashburton, 2 Y. & C. 347; Sharpe v. Sharpe, 12 Jur. 598; Lewis v. Mathews, L. R., 2 Eq. 177; and see Ex p. Shaw, 8 Sim. 159. But they will not pass if there is a charge of debts, whether by express words or by implication from a residuary devise, where legacies have been previously given. Roe v. Reade, 8 T. R. 118; Leeds v. Munday, 3 Ves. Jr. 348; Hope v. Liddell, 21 Beav. 183; In re Bellis' Trusts, 5 Ch. Div. 504. See, however, In re Brown, 3 Ch. Div. 156. Nor where the devise is on trust for sale. Ex p. Marshall, 9 Sim. 555; In re Cantley, 17 Jur. 124; Morley's Will, 10 Hare 293; In re Smith's Estate, 4 Ch. Div. 70. Nor where the devise is to uses in strict settlement. Thompson v. Grant, 4 Madd. 232. As to whether a devise to the separate use will prevent trust estates from passing, see Lindsell v. Thacker, 12 Sim. 178." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 168.

A devise of a freehold estate will not pass a mortgage taken back by a testator, upon a sale of the property subsequent to making the will. In re Clowes (1893), 1 Ch. 214.

(6) Lands Contracted for.—Lands contracted for pass by a general devise of all the testator's lands, although not actually conveyed.¹

(7) Lands Contracted to Be Sold.—A general devise of lands carries the legal estate in lands which the testator has contracted to sell, but the devisee will not be entitled to the purchase-money beneficially.²

(8) "Lands" Includes Houses, Mines, Wells.—(See LAND, vol. 12, p. 655).—Prima facie the word "land" includes houses, mines, wells, and whatever else the soil may hold above or below it, the maxim being cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad cælum.³ The term may, however, be restricted by the context to the earth's surface.⁴

b. TENEMENTS—HEREDITAMENTS.—These words are broader than "lands," and include every species of realty, corporeal or incorporeal, that may be holden or inherited.⁵ In many states, "land" by statute includes "tenements and hereditaments."⁶

c. MESSAGE.—See MESSAGE, vol. 15, p. 386.

d. PREMISES.—See PREMISES, vol. 19, p. 4.

e. HOUSE.—See HOUSE, vol. 9, p. 777.

f. CURTILAGE.—See CURTILAGE, vol. 1, p. 968.

g. APPURTENANCES.—See APPURTENANCES, vol. 1, p. 644.

h. FARM.—See FARM, vol. 7, p. 811.

i. DEVISE OF FREE USE—USE AND OCCUPATION.—A devise of the "free use" or of the "use and occupation" of land, passes an estate in the land, and, consequently, a right to let or assign it, and is not confined to the personal use or occupation of the property, unless the context clearly calls for a more limited construction.⁷

1. Collinson v. Girling, 4 Myl. & C. 75; Atcherley v. Vernon, 10 Mod. 518. See In re Champion, 1 Busb. Eq. (N. Car.) 248; Gist v. Robinet, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 4; Livingston v. Newkirk, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 316; Smith v. Jones, 4 Ohio 121.

2. Wall v. Bright, 1 J. & W. 494; Knollys v. Shepherd, 1 J. & W. 479. See Jackson v. DeLancey, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 554; Atwood v. Weems, 99 U. S. 183.

"Where a testator has contracted to sell real estate, so that he is a constructive trustee of the legal estate, it will pass under a devise of trust estates, and not under a general devise upon trusts for sale. Lysaght v. Edwards, 2 Ch. Div. 499. Purser v. Darby, 4 K. & J. 41, only decides that, where the estate contracted to be sold is specifically devised, it is excepted from a general devise of trust estates. If there is no devise of trust estates, the legal estate in lands contracted to be sold will pass under a general devise of real and personal estate, upon trust to get in and dispose of the personality; the legal estate being required for the purpose of the trust. Wall v. Bright, J. & W. 494; Lysaght v. Edwards, 2 Ch. Div. 515. But it will not if the devise is to tenants in common with limitations over. Thirtle v. Vaughan, 24 L. T. 5; 2 W. R. 632. A devise of mortgaged estates on trust, to get in the mortgage debts, will not pass a legal estate which has descended to the testator as heir of a deceased mortgagee. Ex p. Morgan, 10 Ves. 100." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 169.

3. Co. Litt. 4 a; 3 Kent's Com. (13th ed.) 378; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 498.

4. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 498; Haydon's Will, 2 And. 123.

5. Bouv. Dict. "Tenements," "Hereditaments;" Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 498.

6. Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, §§ 1300, 1301 and Supp.

7. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *798.

j. DEVISE OF "RENTS AND PROFITS" OR "INCOME" OF LAND.—A devise of the "rents and profits" or of the "income" of land, passes the land itself, both at law and in equity.¹ At common law, such a devise carried only an estate for life, unless words of inheritance were added;² but under the English Wills Act of Victoria, and corresponding statutes in nearly all the United States, it passes a fee, or at least the whole estate of which the testator had power to dispose.³ It seems to be the better opinion that a direction to trustees to pay an annuity out of "rents and profits" creates a charge upon the corpus of the land where the purposes of the trust require it, unless the context shows that 'rents and profits' means only 'annual rents and profits.'⁴

See Cook v. Gerrard, 1 Saund. 186 e; Whittome v. Lamb, 12 M. & W. 813; Rabbeth v. Squire, 4 De G. & J. 406; Mannox v. Greener, L. R., 14 Eq. 456; Fillingham v. Bromley, T. & R. 536; Maclaren v. Staintor, 27 L. J. Ch. 442; Stone v. Parker, 29 L. J. Ch. 874. See Tobias v. Cohn, 36 N. Y. 363; Beekman v. Hudson, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 53; Garland v. Garland, 73 Me. 97; Pardue v. Givens, 1 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 307; Hogan v. Hogan, 44 Mich. 147.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *797. As to devise of "rents and profits" see Co. Litt. 4 b. Parker v. Plummer, Cro. Eliz. 190; Johnson v. Arnold, 1 Ves. 171; Baines v. Dixon, 1 Ves. 42; Doe v. Lakeman, 2 B. & Ad. 42; 22 E. C. L. 19; South v. Alleine, 1 Salk. 228; Blann v. Bell, 2 De G. M. & G. 781; Cooke v. Husband, 11 Md. 492; France's Estate, 75 Pa. St. 220; Anderson v. Greble, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 138; Sill's Appeal, 1 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 235; Baker v. Scott, 62 Ill. 86; Cassilly v. Meyer, 4 Md. 1; Earl v. Rowe, 35 Me. 419; Smith v. Dunwoody, 19 Ga. 237; Craig v. Craig, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 94; Chapman v. Nichols, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 275.

Thus a testator ordered certain "real estate to remain as at present as long as the law will allow," the rent to be divided equally among his children and their legal representatives, and his "bank stock also to remain unsold, and the dividends divided in the same manner, and any money" he might "have at interest, the interest to be divided in the same manner, and the principal, as fast as the same may be paid, to be re-invested, and the interest to be divided as aforesaid." It was held that under this devise, the stock itself and the principal of the debts passed to the devisees, and that the direction that the one should remain unsold and the other be re-invested as it might be received, could not prevent the children from now claiming the principal. Cassilly v. Meyer, 4 Md. 1.

A testatrix bequeathed all her estate, real and personal, after the payment of her debts, to trustees, to collect rents and dividends, and pay one-half thereof to her granddaughter, for her separate use; and to divide the other half equally among the children of her said granddaughter. It was held that the equitable title to one-half the property was vested in the granddaughter. Sill's Appeal, 1 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 235.

As to devise of income, see Mannox v. Greener, L. R., 14 Eq. 456; Sampson v. Randall, 72 Me. 109; Reed v. Reed, 9 Mass. 372.

The principle in the text, of course, like all other rules of construction, yields to anything in the context indicating a contrary intent. Collier v. Grimesey, 36 Ohio St. 17; Boyle v. Parker, 3 Md. Ch. 45.

2. Hodson v. Ball, 14 Sim. 571; 1 Jarm. on Wills *798.

3. Penty v. West, 6 C. B. 201; 60 E. C. L. 199; Mannox v. Greener, L. R., 14 Eq. 456.

4. Hawkins on Wills 121, citing Traford v. Ashton, 1 P. Wms. 415; Allan v. Backhouse, 2 Ves. & B. 64; Bootle v. Blundill, 1 Meriv. 232; Wilson v. Halliley, 2 R. & My. 590; Phillips v. Gutteridge, 3 De G. J. & S. 332. But in Delaney v. Aulen, 84 N. Y. 16, the rule was said to be much relaxed. In this case, the will of K. gave her residuary estate, real and personal, to her executors in trust, to receive the rents and profits of the real estate, to invest and keep invested the personal estate, and to apply such rents and profits and the interest or income of the personality to the use of her husband for life, except that they should apply to the use of the plaintiff, who, the will states, was brought up by the testatrix, "the sum of $500 per annum thereout," until he reached the age of twenty-one, after that, "the sum of $1,000 thereout," during the life of her husband, and after that, "$2,000 thereout, during his natural life." There was no gift of the remainder. The testatrix had a brother living at the time of making the will, who survived her; at the date of the will, and at the time of the death of the testatrix, the income from the residuary estate was ample to pay the annuities so given to the plaintiff and leave a larger sum for the husband. After the death of the latter, the property did not yield enough to keep the real estate in good repair, to pay taxes and incidental expenses, and to pay the plaintiff his annuity. In an action asking for a construction of the will, and that the deficiency be paid out of the corpus of the estate, it was held that the intention of the testatrix was that the gift to the plaintiff should be paid only from the annual profits of the estate; and that no part of the corpus of the estate could be applied to make up the deficiency. In this case Folger, C. J., said: "There can be no question that the testatrix, when she made her will, looked upon the rents, profits and income of her estate as enough to pay this annuity, to leave a larger sum for the use of her husband during his life, and for a surplus for her next of kin after his death. She designated the profits as the fund from which the sum should come with which to pay the annuity. But the inquiry may not stop there. It is to be pushed further, until it is learned whether she meant, if that fund failed, that, nevertheless, the plaintiff should be paid his annuity every year in full, though the body of the estate should be impaired or consumed, and her husband in his lifetime, and her next of kin after his death, get nothing. This at first blush seems a purpose so extreme as not to be attributed to the testatrix, unless the words she has used, as construed by inexorable rules, and the circumstances of the case, clearly lead thereto. The words of the will are to the effect that the rents, profits, and income of the estate shall furnish the means to pay the plaintiff's annuity. They are given to the executors in trust to receive and apply. Generally speaking, the interpretation of the words 'rents and profits' is, that they mean the annual rents and profits. (Heneage v. Andover, 3 Y. & J. 360; Allan v. Backhouse, 2 Ves. & B. 65.) If there were no contrary adjudication, it could be fairly argued that a direction to raise money by annual rents and profits is to be put in contradistinction to a sale and mortgage. (Allan v. Backhouse, 2 Ves. & B. 65.) Indeed the Vice-Chancellor of England, in Forbes v. Richardson, 11 Hare 354, said: 'I do not find any case where a direction for payment out of annual rents and profits has been held to give a right against the corpus, or beyond the annual or current rents and profits.' This remark, however, in view of other decisions, must be confined to a direction, where the word 'annual' is expressly, or by most clear implication, attached to the words 'rents and profits.' It is not too much to say, however, that the meaning most naturally to be got from a direction to take rents and profits, and thereout to pay a sum of money, would confine the means to pay to the moneys derived from the rents and profits as they came to hand from year to year, and would not extend to an appropriation of the body of the estate. Lord Eldon said, in Boote v. Blundell, 1 Meriv. 102: 'If I were asked this question anywhere but in Westminster Hall, I should answer in the affirmative, that by profits he probably meant annual profits only.' Judge Cowen, in Bloomer v. Waldron, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 361, indicates the same opinion, and says that the natural and obvious meaning of the words has been departed from in chancery to such a degree as may entrap a plain man; and that a forced and unnatural interpretation has been gone into in pressing exigencies. Yet that interpretation has become, with some limitations, a well established rule of chancery. 'Whatever might have been the interpretation of these words had the case been new, whatever doubt might arise upon them as denoting annual or permanent profit,' says Sir Thomas Plumer, 'it is now too late to speculate, this court having, by a technical, artificial, but liberal construction, in a series of authorities, admitting it to be the natural meaning, extended those words, when applied to the object of raising a gross sum at a

h. ESTATE.—“Estate” is a word of comprehensive signification, and carries both real and personal property, unless confined to the personalty by the context or by clear intent, apparent upon fixed time, when it must be raised and paid without delay, to a power to raise by sale or mortgage, unless restrained by other words.’ Allan v. Backhouse, 2 Ves. & B. 65. He cites and discusses many cases, and adds: ‘The rule has now become an established one of construction, not permitting the court to exercise any discretion.’ That was in 1813. Two things are to be noticed in the first of these remarks, as somewhat limiting the extent of it. First, that the object of the power is to raise a gross sum at a fixed time, which must be raised and paid without delay, and, second, that the direction is not restrained by other words. Many of the cases are where legacies are to be paid out of the profits; a legacy is a gross sum, and generally to be paid at a fixed time and without delay. Some of them are cases of annuities which, though payable from time to time, are at each time of payment gross sums and payable at fixed times. An annuity falls within the rule, unless the other words of the will restrain it. We think, though, that later adjudications have somewhat relaxed the rule, looking at the purpose that first set it up, viz.: by a liberal construction of the words of the testator, taking them to amount to a direction to sell, so as to obtain the end that the testator intended by raising the money. (2 Story’s Eq. Jur., § 1064 a; Green v. Belcher, 1 Atk. 505.) So that it has come in the course of judgment, that not only the other words of the will may restrain the operation of the rule, but so may all other indications which courts are wont to note, in order to gather the intention of the maker of a disposing instrument in writing. The courts have been ready to take hold of the context of wills to hold the rule in check. (Wilson v. Halliley, 1 Russ. & M. 590; Small v. Wing, 5 Bro. P. C. (Tomlin’s ed.) 66; 3 Y. & J.) And where the rule has been applied, the use of it has at times been justified, only by such being the intention of the testator as derived from all the words of the will. (Schermerhorne v. Schermerhorne, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 70.) Indeed, it may now be said that there is no principle whatever involved in these cases, save to ascertain what is the testator’s intention and to carry that intention into effect (Baker v. Baker, 6 H. L. Cas. 616); wherein that construction is to be given that, under the circumstances, appears to be the correct one, each case getting little aid from the authorities, and depending, in a great degree, upon its own circumstances and language. (Id.; per Lord Chelmsford, Lord Chancellor; per Lord Cairns, L. J.; Birch v. Sherratt, L. R., 2 Ch. 644.) As expressed by Lord Cranworth, in Baker v. Baker, 6 H. L. Cas. 616, the real question is, is that which is given, given as an annuity, or as the interest of a fund; does the language of the testator import that a sum at all events is annually to be paid out of his general estate, or only that it is the interest, or a portion of the interest, of a capital sum that is to be set apart. So Denio, J., says: ‘No positive rule of ready application to every case can be laid down, but each will depend upon a consideration of all the material provisions of the will to be construed, and of the extrinsic circumstances respecting the testator’s family and estate, which may be fairly brought to bear on the question of intent.’ See Pierrepont v. Edwards, 25 N. Y. 128, the authority of which case, it is plain, fettered the judgment of the learned General Term. He further says that ‘the leading principle of the cases is that when the testator bequeaths a sum of money, or which is the same thing, a life annuity, in such a manner as to show a separate and independent intention that the money should be paid to the legatee at all events, that intention will not be permitted to be overruled merely by a direction in the will that the money is to be raised in a particular way or out of a particular fund,’ and cites Dicken v. Edwards, 4 Hare 273. We cannot fail to perceive that the rigid rule stated in Allan v. Backhouse, 2 Ves. & B. 65, has been relaxed, and that the courts may now exercise their judgment. And the question arises in every such case, which was the primary and most material portion of the testator’s intent, and which was, in his mind, the incident to such primary intention (Id.), and this may be gathered from the context of the will, and from such extrinsic circum-

the whole will;¹ and, a fortiori, the word "estate," if coupled with other words which are themselves sufficient to carry the whole stances as are properly taken into view in such a case."

1. Hamilton v. Hodsdon, 6 Moo. P. C. 76; Hawksworth v. Hawksworth, 27 Beav. 1; Doe v. Morgan, 6 B. & C. 512; 13 E. C. L. 239. See Stump v. De Neale, 2 Cranch (C. C.) 640; Blagge v. Miles, 1 Story (U. S.) 426; Archer v. Deneale, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 585; Jackson v. Merrill, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 191; Jackson v. DeLancey, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 365; 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 537; Turbett v. Turbett, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 187; Davies v. Miller, 1 Call. (Va.) 127; Cole v. Clayborn, 1 Wash. (Va.) 262; Doe v. Kinney, 3 Ind. 50; Houghton v. Hapgood, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 154; Doe v. Roe, 1 Dev. L. (N. Car.) 382; Den v. Drew, 14 N. J. L. 68; Norris v. Clark, 10 N. J. Eq. 51; Andrews v. Brumfield, 32 Miss. 107; Blewer v. Brightman, 4 McCord (S. Car.) 60; Mumford's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 133; Den v. Snitcher, 14 N. J. L. 53; Naglee's Estate, 52 Pa. St. 154; Smith v. Smith, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 268; Matthews v. Matthews, 13 La. Ann. 197; Dole v. Johnson, 3 Allen (Mass.) 364; Dewey v. Morgan, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 295; Havens v. Havens, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 329; Shumate v. Bailey, 110 Mo. 411.

In Hamilton v. Hodsdon, 6 Moo. P. C. 76, a testator, by his will, devised to J. (his heir at law) part of his estate in fee, and also a life estate in another portion of his estate named P.; and also gave to F. (his wife), a life estate in part of P., during her viduity, with remainder to his other son N., in tail, remainder to his (the testator's) daughters for life; and after giving certain specific chattels to F., the will proceeded as follows: "I give all the remainder of my estate that is now in my possession, or may hereafter be mine, excepting what I have particularly given away, unto my wife F. And it is my will that, whatever my estate may consist of, after debts and legacies are paid, it be kept together under the direction of my wife F." N. died without issue, and F., the widow, also died, unmarried and intestate. The heirs at law of J. sold the estate P. to the appellants, subject to the life estate of the daughters. In a suit by the appellants, against the daughters of the testator, the co-heiresses of F., for a partition, it was held, by the judicial committee, affirming the decree of the court in Bermuda, that the remainder in fee, in the estate "P.," passed to F., under the residuary clause. In this case Lord Brougham said: "The principle is now (whatever it may have been anciently) perfectly recognized, nor do I understand it to be substantially disputed on the side of the appellant at the bar, that the word 'estate' is genus generalissimum, and will, by its own proper force, without any proof aliunde of an intention to aid the construction, carry the realty as well as personalty; and is not to be confined and restrained to personalty only, unless there is a clear intent expressed in other parts of the will, to be gathered either from the whole will, which (I agree with what Lord Eldon has said in one or two of the cases cited) you are always to look to, or from the way in which the word is used in the particular part of the will where the contested use of it arises; or in some other way it is shown to be restricted to mere personal estate, contrary to the strict, usual, and now established force, effect, and value of the word.

"Now, that being the case, the only question is whether, in this case, the natural force and effect of the word is restricted, for it is admitted, on the part of the respondents, in favor of the judgment of the court below, and not denied at all in that judgment, that it may be so qualified and restricted as not to have its proper and natural force; if I may so speak, that force which naturally and properly would belong to it if not so restrained; or that it may be so restrained by matter showing the general intention to be to restrain it, or any words used in collocation; for instance, with the other words, or the particular mode in which it is used by the maker of the instrument. Now, it is needless to cite cases upon this, either upon the legal force and effect of the word if not restrained, or upon the power of circumstances to except it from that general rule, or to restrain its meaning, for it seems to be generally admitted. It must always be kept in view that nobody here contends, nor does the judgment of the court below require such contention, that the word 'estate' should be here used to mean only real personal estate, will carry the realty, as otherwise it would be inoperative.¹ Whether the word will be confined to personalty, by a context composed of words ejusdem generis exclusively applicable to that species of property which are not in themselves sufficient to pass the entire personal estate, is very doubtful. The weight of authority is, perhaps, in favor of the restriction.²

l. PROPERTY.—(See PROPERTY, vol. 19, p. 283).—The principles applicable to the construction of the word "estate," apply equally to the construction of the word "property."³

m. EFFECTS.—See EFFECTS, vol. 6, p. 174.

n. MORTGAGES—SECURITIES FOR MONEY—MONEY ON SECURITY.—A bequest of "mortgages," "securities for money," or estate. In means both realty and personalty, and the fallacy of the argument for the appellants throughout appears to me to be this: They say, 'How can this mean real estate, when you have the word "effects," which only applies to personalty?' The real meaning of the word 'estate' is not 'real estate,' but 'real' plus 'personal,' and so reddendo singula singulis, these words which are to be restricted words, because they only apply to personal estate as they include future acquisitions, which would not, in the case of lands, pass under such a gift. As the words are not intended to be used as excluding personalty, those words which are added here will apply to the personal part of the estate, and it does not follow on that account that, because there is personalty whereon they can operate, therefore the realty is to be excluded."

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 157; Tilley v. Simpson, 2 T. R. 659 n; Edwards v. Barnes, 2 Bing. N. Cas. 252; 29 E. C. L. 324; Doe v. Langlands, 14 East 370; Jongsma v. Jongsma, 1 Cox 362; Patterson v. Huddart, 17 Beav. 210; Hamilton v. Buckmaster, L. R., 3 Eq. 323; Sanderson v. Dobson, 7 C. B. 81; 10 B. C. 47. See Dobson v. Bowness, L. R., 5 Eq. 404; Loftus v. Stoney, 17 Ir. Ch. 178; Mayo v. Bland, 4 Md. Ch. 484.

2. Lord Hardwicke, in Tilley v. Simpson, 2 T. R. 659, n.; D'Almaine v. Moseley, 1 Drew. 632; contra, Loftus v. Stoney, 17 Ir. Ch. 178; In re Greenwich Hospital Imp. Act, 20 Beav. 458.

Cases in Which the Trusts Are Inapplicable to Realty.—"If there are any words in the gift accurately applicable to realty, such as 'devise,' the fact that the trusts declared are only applicable to personalty will not prevent the real estate from passing. Doe v. Chapman, 1 H. Bl. 223; Dunnage v.

White, 1 J. & W. 583; Stokes v. Salomons, 9 Hare 75; Lloyd v. Lloyd, L. R., 7 Eq. 458; Longley v. Longley, L. R., 13 Eq. 133. Real estate will pass even if there are no words technically appropriate, and the trusts declared are not literally applicable to realty, if they can be held popularly applicable. Saumarez v. Saumarez, 4 Myl. & C. 331; D'Almaine v. Moseley, 1 Drew. 632; Morrison v. Hoppe, 4 De G. & S. 234. Thus the words 'collect and get in' will not prevent realty from passing. Hamilton v. Buckmaster, L. R., 3 Eq. 323. So, too, if the trust is for sale or investment, the inapplicability of the subsequent trusts to realty is immaterial. O'Toole v. Browne, 3 El. & Bl. 572; Streatfield v. Cooper, 27 Beav. 338; Fullerton v. Martin, 22 L. J. Ch. 893; Dobson v. Bowness, L. R., 5 Eq. 404. See also Affleck v. James, 17 Sim. 121. If, however, the gift is to trustees, their executors, administrators, and assigns, on trusts exclusively applicable to personalty, real estate will not pass. Doe v. Buckner, 6 T. R. 610; Pagson v. Thomas, 6 Bing. N. Cas. 337; Coard v. Holderness, 20 Beav. 147." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 158.

3. Theobald on Wills (2d ed) 157; See Brawley v. Collins, 88 N. Car. 605; Taubenhan v. Dunz, 20 Ill. App. 262; Johnson v. Goss, 128 Mass. 433; Otis v. Coffin, 7 Gray (Mass.) 511; Gibbens v. Curtis, 8 Gray (Mass.) 392; Wheeler v. Dunlap, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 291; Rossetter v. Simmons, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 452; Fraser v. Hamilton, 2 Desaus. (S. Car.) 573; M'Lenore v. Blocker, 1 Harp. Eq. (S. Car.) 272; Pell v. Ball, Spears Eq. (S. Car.) 48; Den v. Payne, 5 Hayw. (Tenn.) 104; Atkins v. Kron, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 58; Jameson, Appellant, 1 Mich. 99; Seekright v. Carlington, 1 Wash. (Va.) 45.

"money as securities," carries both the beneficial interest in the security and the legal estate in the land, subject to the mortgage, upon the principle that the testator meant the legatee to receive the money and possess all powers necessary to recover it.¹

o. GROUND RENTS.—A devise of freehold or leasehold ground rents passes the reversion.²

p. MONEY OR MONEYS.—See MONEY, vol. 15, p. 702.

q. "MONEY DUE AND OWING."—"Money due and owing at the testator's decease" will pass a balance at bank, damages recovered by the executor and unliquidated at death, money due on a policy of insurance upon the testator's life, and money due the testator from an executor where the estate has been got in before the testator's death;³ but will not pass money due on a contract not completed till after the testator's death,⁴ nor a distributive share in the residuary personal estate of another person, not ascertained at the time of the testator's death.⁵

r. READY MONEY—CASH.—(See READY MONEY, vol. 19, p. 971).—Ready money will pass money in bank or in the hands of an agent used as a banker; but not notes of hand, debts due from

1. Hawkins on Wills *48; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 524; 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *699; In re Ring's Mortgage, 5 De G. & S. 644; Renvoize v. Cooper, 6 Madd. 371; Knight v. Robinson, 2 K. & J. 563; Arrowsmith's Trusts, 4 Jur. N. S. 1123.

In Re Cantley, 17 Jur. 124, Kincrosley, C. C., held that a bequest of "money on securities" did not pass the legal estate. But in Doe v. Bennett, 6 Exch. 892, it was expressly ruled that the words "to receive all moneys upon mortgage," were sufficient to pass both the money on mortgage and the legal estate upon which it was secured. Parke, B., said: "It must be assumed that the testator meant his wife to receive the money, and to possess all powers necessary for the purpose of recovering it." And this was approved in Arrowsmith's Trusts, 4 Jur. N. S. 1123, by the Lords Justices. See Brown v. Brown, 6 W. R. 613.

It seems that the Conveyancing Act of 1881 has altered the law in this respect in England. See MONEY, vol. 15, p. 701.

What Securities for Money Will Not Pass.—"Securities for money" will not pass a balance on current account at the bank (a), money on a deposit account (b), I. O. U.'s (c), shares (d), bank stock (e), mere debts (f), a lien for unpaid purchase-money (g), or money lent on mortgage where the legal estate is in trustees, and the testator is entitled only to the residue after certain payments (h). Vaisey v. Reynolds, 5 Russ. 12 (a); Hopkins v. Abbott, L. R., 19 Eq. 222 (b); Barry v. Harding, 1 J. & L. 475 (c); Hudleston v. Gouldsbury, 10 Beav. 547; Turner v. Turner, 21 L. J. Ch. 843 (d); Ogle v. Knipe, L. R., 8 Eq. 434 (e); In re Mason's Will, 34 Beav. 494 (f); Goold v. Teague, 7 W. R. 84; 5 Jur. N. S. 116 (g); Ogle v. Knipe, L. R., 8 Eq. 434 (h). Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 148.

2. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 155; Maundy v. Maundy, 2 Stra. 1020; Kaye v. Laxon, 1 Bro. C. C. 76; Alexander v. Paxson, 47 Pa. St. 12.

3. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 147, citing Carr v. Carr, 1 Meriv. 541; Waite v. Combes, 5 De G. & S. 676; Bide v. Harrison, L. R., 17 Eq. 76; Petty v. Willson, L. R., 4 Ch. 574; Bainbridge v. Bainbridge, 9 Sim. 16. See Byron v. Brandreth, L. R., 16 Eq. 475. See Delamater's Estate, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 362.

4. Stephenson v. Dowson, 3 Beav. 342.

5. Martin v. Hobson, L. R., 8 Ch. 401. Otherwise, however, if the estate has been got in by the executor so as to constitute a debt due from him. James, L. J., in Martin v. Hobson, L. R., 8 Ch. 406, citing Bainbridge v. Bainbridge, 9 Sim. 16.

an agent or salesmaster, dividends not demanded, rent or interest due on mortgage.¹ "Cash" will not include bonds, long annuities, or promissory notes.²

s. GOODS AND CHATTELS—(See CHATTELS, vol. 3, p. 163; GOODS, vol. 8, p. 1362).—The phrase "goods and chattels," unrestrained by the context, will carry the whole personal estate.³ "Chattels, real and personal," unexplained by the context, will not pass realty.⁴ Under a bequest of goods and chattels in a particular place, choses in action, as bonds or securities for money, will not pass, since they have in themselves no locality distinct from the domicile of the owner, except for purposes of probate jurisdiction.⁵

t. THINGS.—See THINGS, vol. 25, p. 1058.

u. POSSESSIONS.—See POSSESSION, vol. 18, p. 842, note.

v. HOUSEHOLD EFFECTS — FURNITURE — GOODS.—See HOUSEHOLD, vol. 9, p. 782, note 3.

16. Meaning of Certain Words Descriptive of Objects—a. CHILDREN.—See CHILDREN, vol. 3, p. 229.

b. GRANDCHILDREN.—See GRANDCHILDREN, vol. 8, p. 1412.

c. COUSINS.—See COUSINS, vol. 4, p. 462.

d. NEPHEWS, NIECES.—See NEPHEWS, vol. 16, p. 485.

e. FAMILY.—See FAMILY, vol. 7, p. 807.

f. NEXT OF KIN.—See NEXT OF KIN, vol. 16, p. 703; KINDRED, vol. 12, p. 521.

g. ISSUE.—See ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 868.

h. DESCENDANTS.—See DESCENDANTS, vol. 5, p. 641; ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 868.

i. RELATIONS.—See RELATIONS, vol. 20, p. 728.

17. Construction of Gifts to Classes—a. DISTINGUISHING CHARACTERISTICS OF SUCH GIFTS.—See LEGACIES AND DEVISES, vol. 13, p. 60.

b. TIME OF ASCERTAINING THE CLASS—(1) In Gifts to Children.—In the case of gifts of real or personal property to children as a class, the following distinctions have been adopted:

1. If the gift be immediate (i. e., to take effect in possession eo instanti the testator dies) all children living at the testator's death

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 147; Parker v. Marchant, 1 Y. & C. C. 290; Powell's Trust, Jo. 49; Vaisey v. Reynolds, 5 Russ. 12; Fryer v. Rankin, 11 Sim. 55; Smith v. Butler, 1 J. & L. 692; May v. Grove, 3 De G. & S. 462. See Smith v. Burch, 92 N. Y. 228.

2. Beales v. Crisford, 13 Sim. 592.

3. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 508; 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *751; 1 Schouler on Pers. Prop. (2d ed.), § 16; Kendall v. Kendall, 4 Russ. 370; Moore v. Moore, 1 Bro. C. C. 127. See also Jackson v. Robinson, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 101.

4. Grayson v. Atkinson, 1 Wils. 333; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 160.

5. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 508; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 154; Moore v. Moore, 1 Bro. C. C. 127; Burke v. Turner, 7 Sim. 681; Fleming v. Brook, 1 Sch. & Lef. 318; Chapman v. Hart, 1 Ves. 271; Lady Aylesbury's Case, 11 Ves. 662; Hertford v. Lowther, 7 Beav. 1. See Kingsley v. Blackmer (Vt. 1891), 22 Atl. Rep. 600; Pennimen v. French, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 404.

It has been held, however, that debts due from persons living in the county pass under a gift of property in the take, to the exclusion of those born afterwards.¹ The fact that there is a gift over in default of children or in case any die under age, does not enlarge the class.² If there are no children in esse at the testator's death, the better opinion is that all children born at any time afterwards are entitled.³

2. Under a gift to children by way of remainder, all are entitled who come into existence before the period of distribution, to the exclusion of those who may come into existence at any time afterwards.⁴ Under such a limitation the children in esse at the death of the testator take vested interests, subject to open up and let in those afterwards born before the period of distribution.⁵ The county. Tyrone v. Waterford, 1 De G. F. & J. 613.

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 243; 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *156; Singleton v. Gilbert, 1 Cox 68; Viner v. Francis, 2 Cox 190; Heathe v. Heathe, 2 Atk. 121; Scott v. Harwood, 5 Madd. 205; Hill v. Chapman, 1 Ves. Jr. 405; Garbrand v. Mayot, 2 Vern. 105. See Merriam v. Simonds, 121 Mass. 198; Gardiner v. Guild, 106 Mass. 25; Yeaton v. Roberts, 28 N. H. 459; Hall v. Smith, 61 N. H. 144; Meares v. Meares, 4 Ired. (N. Car.) 192; Knight v. Knight, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 167; Gross' Estate, 10 Pa. St. 361; Shotts v. Poe, 47 Md. 514; Post v. Herbert, 27 N. J. Eq. 540; Chasmar v. Bucken, 37 N. J. Eq. 415; Downing v. Marshall, 23 N. Y. 373; Tucker v. Bishop, 16 N. Y. 402; Mowatt v. Carow, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 339; Palmer v. Horn, 20 Hun (N. Y.) 70; Springer v. Congleton, 30 Ga. 977. But see Cook v. Cook, 2 Vern. 545; Northey v. Strange, 1 P. Wms. 341; Wood v. McGuire, 15 Ga. 202; Abbott v. Essex Co., 18 How. (U. S.) 202; Conner v. Ogle, 4 Md. Ch. 425; Griffin v. Lynch, 16 Ind. 396; Soteldo v. Clement, 29 Ohio L. J. 384.

A devise to "B's children, their heirs and assigns forever," vests the property in such as may be in esse at the testator's death. Wood v. McGuire, 15 Ga. 202.

2. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 244; Davidson v. Dallas, 14 Ves. Jr. 576; Berkeley v. Swinburne, 16 Sim. 275; Andrews v. Cartington, 3 Bro. C. C. 401; Scott v. Harwood, 5 Madd. 205. See Hutcheson v. Jones, 2 Madd. 406; Chasmar v. Bucken, 37 N. J. Eq. 415; Den v. Sayre, 3 N. J. L. 183; Chase v. Lockerman, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 185; Walker v. Williamson, 25 Ga. 549; Lorillard v. Coster, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 172.

3. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 244;

Shep. Touch. 438; Weld v. Bradbury, 2 Vern. 705; Harris v. Lloyd, T. & R. 310; Hutcheson v. Jones, 2 Madd. 124; Shephard v. Ingram, Ambl. 448.

Formerly there was some doubt as to whether a devise of realty in such case would not fail altogether; but the better opinion now is that such a devise would go to all after born children. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 544, citing Fear. Rem. 532; Shep. Touch. 438.

4. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 244; 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *156. REMAINDERS, vol. 20, p. 855; Hamletts v. Hamlett, 12 Leigh (Va.) 350. See Knight v. Knight, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 167; Heilman v. Heilman, 129 Ind. 59; Lombard v. Willis, 147 Mass. 13; Britton v. Miller, 63 N. Car. 268; Teed v. Morton, 60 N. Y. 503; Haskins v. Tate, 25 Pa. St. 249; Wilson v. Corbin, 1 Pars. Sel. Cas. (Pa.) 347; Sorver v. Berndt, 10 Pa. St. 213; Swinton v. Legare, 2 McCord Eq. (S. Car.) 440; Cole v. Creyon, 1 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 311; Clarke v. Terry, 34 Conn. 176; Hill v. Rockingham Bank, 45 N. H. 270.

5. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 157; McGregor v. Toomer, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 51; Crim v. Knotts, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 340; Hamletts v. Hamlett, 12 Leigh (Va.) 350; Denny v. Allen, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 147; Annable v. Patch, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 360; Johnson v. Valentine, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 36; Nordine v. Greenfield, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 544; Campbell v. Stokes, 142 N. Y. 23; Harris v. Alderson, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 250; Hovey v. Nellis, 98 Mich. 374; Budd v. Haines (N. J. Eq. 1894), 29 Atl. Rep. 170.

REMAINDERS, vol. 20, p. 854. Compare Cleghorn v. Scott, 86 Ga. 496; Bruce v. Bissell, 119 Ind. 529; Dole v. Keyes, 143 Mass. 237; Ballard v. Ballard, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 41; Haskins v. Tate, 25 Pa. St. 249; Yeaton v. Roberts, 28 N.

rule is the same whether the gift over be a remainder or an executory interest,¹ nor does the fact that there is a gift over in case of

H. 459; Phillips v. Johnson, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 140; McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 340.

R. devises real and personal estate, after the death of his wife, to whom he gives the use and profits during her life, to all the children of his brothers and sisters, "as well of those brothers and sisters who are deceased, as of those who still survive, in equal proportions." At the time of making the will, and of the death of R., there were living forty-seven nephews and nieces; thirty-eight of them, together with three others born after his death, survived the wife. It was held that the forty-seven took a vested remainder in the land, which opened to let in the three; and that the personal estate belonged to the forty-one who survived the wife. Denny v. Allen, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 147.

The testator bequeathed the residue of his estate, after his wife's death or marriage, to be equally divided among James, Mary, Patsey, Nancy and Narcissa (who were the testator's children), the children of his son George, the children of his daughter Elizabeth, the children of his son Bedford, deceased, and the children of his daughter Obedience; his five children legatees were all married, and had, in all, thirty-one children living at his death; his son Bedford left three children; and his son George and daughters Elizabeth and Obedience were married, and these four had, in all, eighteen children living at testator's death; and the three last had five children born after his death and during the widow's life. It was held, first, that the children of George, Elizabeth, and Obedience, born after the testator's decease and during the widow's life, as well as those in being at the testator's death, are entitled to shares; second, that such of the grandchildren as were in being at the testator's death took vested interests, subject, however, to be diminished by the birth of other grandchildren, and the after born grandchildren, as soon as they came in being, took likewise vested interests. Hamletts v. Hamlett, 12 Leigh (Va.) 357.

B. made the following devise: "If I should have no child by my wife R., I do then give the use of all my personal estate, not mentioned, to my daughter C., during her natural life, at her decease to be equally divided, share and share alike, amongst all her children, to them and their heirs; and if I should have no child by my wife, I do then give and bequeath the use of all my estate, both real and personal, to C., during her life, and at her decease to be equally divided amongst her children, to them, etc.; if I should leave no children, and my daughter should die and leave no children, then, at the decease of my wife," over. It was held that, upon the decease of B., without other children, those of his daughter took a vested remainder, which opened to let in after born children. McGregor v. Toomer, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 51.

A testator provided: "It is my will and desire, that the rest and remainder of my estate be divided into equal shares among my brothers John and Henry's lawful children, and that my said brothers have the use of their children's portion, or part, during their natural lives, and at their death, to their children forever." At the death of the testator, John had eight children living, and Henry had three; and Henry had nine children born afterwards. It was held that John and Henry were each entitled to take one moiety of the estate for life, and that at Henry's death all his children, as well those born after the decease of testator as those born before, were entitled to his moiety as remainder-men. Crim v. Knotts, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 340.

A testator, by his will, empowered his executors to sell his property, real and personal, and gave the interest of the proceeds, and the rents and profits of such of the real estate as should remain unsold, to his wife for life, with remainder to the children of his brother who should be living at the decease of the widow, and to the lawful issue of such children. It was held that, upon the testator's death, the widow took a life estate in the property unsold, and that the brother's children then living took vested remainders in fee, subject to open and let in after-born children, and to be divested by death during the life of the widow, or by the execution of the executor's power of sale. Nodine v. Greenfield, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 544.

1. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 157, 158; Stanley v. Wise, 1 Cox 432; Ellison v.

the decease of any of the children under age, affect the construction.¹ The principle seems to extend to all cases in which the distribution is postponed, as to a gift to be divided twenty years after testator's death.² If no children are born before the death of the tenant for life, all after born children are admitted, unless there is a clear intent to make distribution once for all when the funds fall into possession.³

Airey, 1 Ves. 111; Haughton v. Harrison, 2 Atk. 329; Baldwin v. Rogers, 3 De G. M. & G. 649.

1. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 157; Berkeley v. Swinburne, 16 Sim. 275.

2. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 158; Oppenheim v. Henry, 10 Hare 441; Webster v. Welton, 53 Conn. 184; McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 340; Phelps v. Phelps, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 121; Fulkerson v. Bullard, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 260. But see, as to postponement of possession for special purposes, as to pay annuities and the like, Singleton v. Gilbert, 1 Cox 68; Coventry v. Coventry, 2 D. & S. 470; Hill v. Chapman, 1 Ves. Jr. 405; Cort v. Winder, 1 Coll. 320; Thomman's Estate, 161 Pa. St. 444.

Cases Illustrating the Rule.—A testator ordered that his negroes should be hired out by his executors for five years, "and at the expiration of five years that my executors divide said negroes equally among all my children, and in case any of my children should die before said time, leaving lawful children, said children shall take the shares of their parents." It was held that this was a bequest to a class answering a certain description at the end of five years, and no interest vested until that time. Fulkerson v. Bullard, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 260.

A testator, after bequeathing several specific legacies in former clauses of his will, provided that, after paying, etc., such legacies, as to all the rest, residue, and remainder of his property, he bequeathed, etc., the same to his children and grandchildren, as follows: He ordered the same to be divided into as many shares as he should have children and grandchildren living at the end of ten years after his decease, provided A. or D. should either of them be living at the time. But if, before the expiration of ten years from his death, A. and D. should both die, then, at the death of the survivor of them, he ordered his said residuary estate to be divided into as many shares as he should have children and grandchildren living at the death of the survivor.

By another clause, he provided that if his wife should die before the division of the residuary estate, an annuity previously granted to her in the will should be incorporated with such residue; but if she should die after such division, the annuity fund should be divided among as many children and grandchildren as he should have at the time of her decease. It was held that the interests taken by the children and grandchildren were not vested by the death of the testator, to be paid at the end of ten years, but that they were executory, and that only such grandchildren as were alive at the expiration of the ten years would be entitled to a share of the property. Phelps v. Phelps, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 121.

3. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 246, citing Chapman v. Blissett, Cas. temp. Talb. 145; Wyndham v. Wyndham, 3 Bro. C. C. 58; Conduitt v. Soane, 4 Jur. N. S. 502, explaining Grodfrey v. Davis, 6 Ves. Jr. 43.

Such, at least, is the case in bequests of personality by way of remainder. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 346; 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 176.

Or in the case of remainders of freehold, where the legal estate is in trustees or mortgagees. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 245; 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 171; In re Eddell's Trusts, L. R. 11 Eq. 559; Berry v. Berry, 7 Ch. Div. 657; Astley v. Micklethwait, 15 Ch. Div. 59.

And such would also seem to be the case in regard to remainders of freehold, in states in which statutes exist, which provide that the remainder shall not be destroyed by the determination of the particular estate. See 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 171-176; REMAINDERS, vol. 20, p. 892.

But in states in which a contingent remainder of freehold still continues liable to destruction, by the determination of the particular estate (see REMAINDERS, vol. 20, p. 886) before it is ready to vest, a remainder of freehold fails if there are no children in esse when the prior life estate determines.

3. Upon the same principle, if the interest bequeathed is reversionary, the class remains open till the interest falls into possession.¹

4. When there is a bequest of an aggregate fund to children as a class, and the share of each child is made payable on attaining a given age or marriage, the period of distribution is the time when the first child becomes entitled to receive his share, and children coming into existence after that period are excluded.² If

Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 244; 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 176; Rhodes v. Whitehead, 2 D. & S. 532; Price v. Hall, L. R., 5 Eq. 399; Perceval v. Perceval, L. R., 9 Eq. 386; Brackenbury v. Gibbons, 2 Ch. Div. 417; Cunliffe v. Branker, 3 Ch. Div. 393.

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 246; Walker v. Shore, 15 Ves. Jr. 122; Harvey v. Stracey, 1 Drew. 122.

"But this does not apply where a residue is given, and some portion of the property which falls into it is reversionary, unless there are provisions indicating an intention to treat the reversionary property separately. Hill v. Chapman, 1 Ves. Jr. 40; 53 Bro. C. C. 391; Hagger v. Payne, 23 Beav. 474; Coventry v. Coventry, 2 D. & S. 470; King v. Cullen, 2 De G. & S. 252." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 246.

2. Hawkins on Wills *75; 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *160. *163; Andrews v. Partington, 3 Bro. C. C. 403; Whitbread v. St. John, 10 Ves. Jr. 152; Dawson v. Massey, 2 Ch. Div. 753; Brandon v. Aston, 2 Y. & C. C. 24; Clarke v. Clarke, 8 Sim. 59; Buckley v. Reed, 15 Pa. St. 83; Heisse v. Markland, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 274; Wilson v. Corbin, 1 Pars. Sel. Cas. (Pa.) 347; Drake v. Pell, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 251; Collin v. Collin, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 636; Double-day v. Newton, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 431; Tucker v. Bishop, 16 N. Y. 404; Hubbard v. Lloyd, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 522; Emerson v. Cutter, 141 Pick. (Mass.) 108; Fosdick v. Fosdick, 6 Allen (Mass.) 43; Handberry v. Doolittle, 38 Ill. 206; Hempstead v. Dickson, 20 Ill. 193; Travis v. Morrison, 28 Ala. 494; Hocker v. Gentry, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 463; Richardson v. Sinkler, 2 Desaus. (S. Car.) 127; Simpson v. Spence, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 208; Fleetwood v. Fleetwood, 2 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 222; Vanhook v. Rogers, 3 Murph. (N. Car.) 178.

Thus, a bequest of a residue "unto all the children of M. equally, when they shall severally attain the age of twenty-five years," includes all the children born before one attains that age, although born after the death of the testator, but does not include those born after one attains that age. Hubbard v. Lloyd, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 522.

The following distinctions are said to be sustained by the English authorities:

"If there is a direct gift 'to be paid at twenty-one, or to such as attain twenty-one,'

"a. If any member of the class attain twenty-one in the testator's lifetime, the class is fixed at the testator's death. Hagger v. Payne, 23 Beav. 474. A child en ventre at the testator's death was held not to be included in Re Gardiner's Estate; Garratt v. Weeks, L. R., 20 Eq. 647, sed quare. See Bortoft v. Wadsworth, 12 W. R. 523.

"b. If none attain twenty-one in the testator's lifetime, all born at the testator's death, and coming into existence before the eldest attains twenty-one, are admitted. Hoste v. Pratt, 3 Ves. Jr. 730; Balm v. Balm, 3 Sim. 492; Blease v. Burgh, 2 Beav. 221; Oppenheim v. Henry, 10 Hare 441; Gillman v. Daunt, 3 K. & J. 48; Lock v. Lamb, L. R., 4 Eq. 372; Gimblett v. Purton, L. R., 12 Eq. 427. As a rule, each child attaining twenty-one is entitled to have his share paid to him, but this is not so if the whole income is given for maintenance and there are children who require maintenance. Berry v. Bryant, 2 D. & S. 1.

"c. It seems doubtful whether, if there are no children at the testator's death, all would be admitted, whether born before or after the eldest attains twenty-one. Armitage v. Williams, 27 Beav. 346, better reported in 7 W. R. 650, which seems an authority for the affirmative, was probably decided on the authority of Mainwaring v. Beevor, 8 Hare 44. See Harris v. Lloyd, T. & R. 310. There are the following exceptions to the rule: (a) If the time fixed for payment would carry the class beyond the limits of perpetuity, members the gift is to A for life, and then to children who attain twenty-one, the class will be fixed as regards exclusion at the death of A, or when the eldest attains twenty-one, whichever is last.¹

5. A child en ventre at the time when the class closes, is admitted even though the word "living" or "born" be added to the description.²

coming into existence after the testator's death, and before the time of payment, will not be admitted. Kevern v. Williams, 5 Sim. 171; quare as to Elliott v. Elliott, 12 Sim. 276. (b) Maintenance out of the shares or presumptive shares of children will not extend the class. Gimblett v. Purton, L. R., 12 Eq. 427. But if maintenance and advancement are continued beyond the time when the eldest child attains twenty-one, if, for instance, advancement is directed out of vested and presumptive shares, all children will be let in. Iredell v. Iredell, 25 Beav. 485; Bateman v. Gray, L. R., 6 Eq. 215. In Deffis v. Goldschmidt, 19 Ves. Jr. 566; 1 Meriv. 417, where expressions were used showing that the parents could not die leaving a child who would not be entitled to maintenance, all children were included. See Evans v. Harris, 5 Beav. 45. (c) If distribution is to be made when all attain twenty-one, or when the youngest attains twenty-one, all children will be admitted. Hughes v. Hughes, 3 Bro. C. C. 434; 14 Ves. Jr. 256; Mainwaring v. Beevor, 8 Hare 44, and perhaps Armitage v. Williams, 27 Beav. 346; 7 W. R. 650. On the other hand, the class would again be restricted if the distribution is to be made when the youngest for the time being attains twenty-one. Gooch v. Gooch, 14 Beav. 565; 3 De G. M. & G. 366.

"(d) When the gift is of a particular sum to each member of the class, the class is fixed at the death of the testator, whether possession is postponed to twenty-one or not. Ringrose v. Braham, 2 Cox 384; Storrs v. Benbow, 2 Myl. & K. 46; 3 De G. M. & G. 390; Butler v. Lowe, 10 Sim. 317. And if there are no children then in existence, the gift fails. Mann v. Thompson, Kay 638; Rogers v. Mutch, 10 Ch. Div. 25." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 246-248.

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 248; 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *161; Clarke v. Clarke, 8 Sim. 59; Robley v. Ridings, 11 Jur. 813; Beckton v. Barton, 27

Beav. 99; Parsons v. Justice, 34 Beav. 598; Emmet v. Emmet, 13 Ch. Div. 484; Brandon v. Aston, 2 Y. & C. C. 24.

2. Theobald on Wills (2d ed) 249; Doe v. Clarke, 2 H. Bl. 399; Clarke v. Blake, 2 Bro. C. C. 319; Trower v. Butts, 1 Sim. & Stu. 181.

"It is now fully settled, that a child en ventre sa mere is within the intention of a gift to children living at the death of a testator; not because such a child (and especially in the early stages of conception) can strictly be considered as answering the description of a child living, but because the potential existence of such a child places it plainly within the reason and motive of the gift. Sir J. Leach in Trower v. Butts, 1 Sim. & Stu. 184. Similarly, when there is a gift to the children of a tenant for life, a gift over if at the end of five years she has not had a child, will not take effect if she then has a child en ventre. Pearce v. Carrington, L. R., 8 Ch. 969. A child en ventre is for this purpose supposed to be born at the time of distribution; if, therefore, supposing it to have been then born, it would have been illegitimate, it will not be admitted to take, notwithstanding the marriage of its parents before its birth. In re Corlass, 1 Ch. Div. 460. But though a child en ventre is looked upon as existing for the purpose of receiving a benefit, it is not looked upon as existing for any other purpose, if, for instance, distribution is to be made when the youngest child for the time being attains twenty-one; the fact that there is a child en ventre when the youngest attains twenty-one will not postpone the division. Blasson v. Blasson, 2 De G. J. & S. 665." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 249.

In the United States, the doctrine that a child en ventre will be considered a child living whenever it is for his benefit to be so considered, has been frequently recognized. Groce v. Rittenberry, 14 Ga. 234; Hone v. Van Schaick, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 508;

6. It seems to be the better opinion that the words "to be born" or "to be begotten," annexed to an immediate gift to children, so that, but for the words, it would have been confined to children existing at the testator's death, will have the effect of extending the gift to all children who shall ever come into existence, since by such construction only, can the words in question be given some operation.¹ But this rule does not apply to general pecuniary legacies, since its effect would be to postpone the distribution of the general estate (out of which the legacies are payable) until the death of the parent of the legatees,² nor does it apply to gifts preceded by a life estate, or where distribution is to be made at some future time, as when the children attain a specified age, or marry; since the words may be satisfied without departure from the ordinary construction.³

Burke v. Wilder, 1 McCord Eq. (S. Car.) 551; Swift v. Duffield, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 38; McKnight v. Read, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 213; Laird's Appeal, 85 Pa. St. 339; Steadfast v. Nicoll, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 18; Smart v. King, Meigs (Tenn.) 149; Picot v. Armistead, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 226; Petway v. Powell, 2 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 312; Jenkins v. Freyer, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 47. Compare Armistead v. Dangerfield, 3 Munf. (Va.) 20; Starling v. Price, 16 Ohio St. 29.

But whether he can take as a child "born," has been seriously questioned. Hall v. Hancock, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 258.

1. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *178; Mogg v. Mogg, 1 Meriv. 654; Gooch v. Gooch, 14 Beav. 565; 3 De G. M. & G. 366; Eddowes v. Eddowes, 30 Beav. 603; Shinn v. Motley, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 490; Napier v. Howard, 3 Ga. 202. See Butterfield v. Haskins, 33 Me. 392; Bullock v. Bullock, 2 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 316. Compare Burke v. Wilder, 1 McCord Eq. (S. Car.) 551. In some cases it has been said that the doctrine of the text is confined to devises of realty. Sprackling v. Ranier, 1 Dick. 344; Dias v. DeLivera, L. R., 5 App. Cas. 132. The soundness of any such distinction may well be questioned. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *180, note (h), by Randolph & Talcott.

2. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *179; Storrs v. Benbow, 2 Myl. & K. 46; Townsend v. Early, 28 Beav. 429; Whitbread v. St. John, 10 Ves. Jr. 152; Gilbert v. Boorman, 11 Ves. Jr. 238. But see Bullock v. Bullock, 2 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 316; Shinn v. Motley, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 491.

3. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *180;

Whitbread v. St. John, 10 Ves. Jr. 152; Gilbert v. Boorman, 11 Ves. Jr. 238; Paul v. Compton, 8 Ves. Jr. 375. See Brown v. Williams, 5 R. I. 318; Yeaton v. Roberts, 28 N. H. 459; Jackson v. Housel, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 281.

But of course if the testator shows an intent not to exclude any after born children, such intention will be carried into effect. Wms. on Exrs. 1092. See Deffis v. Goldschmidt, 1 Meriv. 417; 19 Ves. Jr. 566; Hutcheson v. Jones, 2 Madd. 406. Compare Ballard v. Ballard, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 41; Moore v. Weaver, 16 Gray (Mass.) 305; Moore v. Dimond, 5 R. I. 121; Hawkins v. Everett, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 45; Harris v. Alderson, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 254.

The following principles, which differ somewhat from the text, have been deduced from the English cases by Mr. Theobald: "Mere words of futurity, as, for instance, a gift to the children that may be born, will not extend the class. Storrs v. Benbow, 2 Myl. & K. 46; 3 D. M. & G. 390; Townsend v. Early, 3 De G. F. & J. 1. Where the words are 'born or to be born,' the rules appear to be: When the gift is after a life estate, such words will not extend the class. Sprackling v. Ranier, 1 Dick. 344; Whitbread v. St. John, 10 Ves. Jr. 152; Parsons v. Justice, 34 Beav. 598. The case is, of course, different if the gift is to children 'now born or who shall be born in the lifetime of their parents.' Scott v. Scarborough, 1 Beav. 154. The rule is the same where the gift is to children now born, or who may be born hereafter, who shall attain twenty-one. Iredell v. Iredell, 25 Beav. 485; Bateman v. Gray, 20 Beav. 447; L.

7. The words "which shall be begotten," "to be begotten," or even "hereafter to be born," annexed to the description of children or issue, will not exclude those in existence before the making of the will.¹

8. A gift to children "born" or "begotten" extends to children coming in esse, after the making of the will, and even after the death of the testator, where the time of distribution being posterior to that event, the gift would, by the general rule of construction, include such after born children.²

9. Under a devise to children born at a particular time, children take a vested interest immediately on their birth, not subject to be divested by death before the specified period.³

R., 6 Eq., 215. In a case of a direct gift of personality to children, the words 'now born or to be born hereafter' would probably be held to be intended to refer to children born between the date of the will and the death. Dias v. DeLIVERA, L. R., 5 App. Cas. 123. In case, however, of a direct devise of realty under similar words, children born after the testator's death have been included. Mogg v. Mogg, 1 Meriv. 654; Gooch v. Gooch, 14 Beav. 565; Eddowes v. Eddowes, 30 Beav. 603. If, however, the gift is of a legacy to each of the children begotten or to be begotten, the class will not be extended beyond the testator's death, as not merely the distribution of what the children are to take, but of the whole estate of the testator, would be indefinitely postponed. Butler v. Lowe, 10 Sim. 317." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 251.

1. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *182; Doe v. Hallett, 1 M. & S. 124; Hebblethwaite v. Cartwright, Cas. temp. Talb. 31; In re Pickup's Trusts, 1 J. & H. 389; Almack v. Horn, 1 H. & M. 630. Compare Matchwick v. Cock, 3 Ves. Jr. 611; Freemantle v. Taylor, 15 Ves. Jr. 363; Christopherson v. Naylor, 1 Meriv. 326; In re Sheppard's Trusts, 1 K. & J. 269; Early v. Benbow, 2 Coll. 342; Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 Ves. & B. 468.

2. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *184; Browne v. Groombridge, 4 Madd. 262; Ringrose v. Bramham, 2 Cox 384; Doe v. White, 1 Exch. 526; 2 Exch. 797.

3. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *185; Patterson v. Mills, 18 L. J. Ch. 449.

Class to Take in Default of Appointment—How Ascertained.—"When there is a gift to children, as A may appoint, with no gift in default of appointment, and no appointment is made, similar rules apply as to the period at which the class is to be ascertained. First. A direct gift to children, as A may appoint, goes apparently to all the children living at the death of the testator, to the exclusion of those born afterwards, though before the death of A. Coleman v. Seymour, 1 Ves. 209. Second. A gift to A for life, with remainder to his children, as he shall appoint, goes to all the children born in the testator's lifetime and coming into being before A's death. Crone v. Odell, 1 Ball & B. 449; 3 Dow. 68; Norman v. Norman, Beav. 430; Lambert v. Thwaites, L. R., 2 Eq. 151. Third. If the only gift is through the power, so that the children take by implication only, in default of appointment, the rules are the same. Thus, where there is a power to A to dispose of certain property among children, the gift, in default of appointment, goes to those born at the testator's death, to the exclusion of those born subsequently. Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. Jr. 124. And where the gift is to A for life, and then to dispose of the capital among his children, all children born before A's death take a share. Grieverson v. Kirsopp, 2 Keen 653. Fourth. If the donee of the power and the tenant for life are different persons, and the donee dies before the tenant for life, the class is ascertained at the death of the latter. White's Trusts, Johns. 656. And, apparently, if there is anything to show that personal enjoyment by the beneficiaries was intended, those dying before the tenant for life would be excluded. In re White's Trusts, 1 Johns. 656; Carthew v. Enraught, 20 W. R. 743; In re Phene's Trusts, L. R., 5 Eq. 346. At what time the class would be ascertained, if the donee of the power survives the tenant for life, is uncertain; though by analogy to the case of a direct gift, it seems, it would be ascertained at the death of the tenant for life, and not of the donee of the power. Fifth. When there is a direct vested gift to children as A shall appoint, the fact that the power is to appoint by deed or will, or by will only, will not affect the class to take in default of appointment. Casterton v. Sutherland, 9 Ves. Jr. 445; Falkner v. Wynford, 15 L. J. Ch. 8; Lambert v. Thwaites, L. R., 2 Eq. 151. See Winn v. Fenwick, 11 Beav. 438, there discussed. Sixth. If the only gift is through the power, only those will take in default of appointment who could have taken under the power, and therefore, if the power is to dispose of certain property by will, only those who survive the donee can take in default of appointment. Walsh v. Wallinger, 2 R. & M. 78; Kennedy v. Kingston, 2 J. & W. 431; Reid v. Reid, 25 Beav. 469; Freeland v. Pearson, L. R., 3 Eq. 658; In re Susanne's Trusts, 47 L. J. Ch. 65; Sinnot v. Walsh, L. R., 5 Ir. 27. See Brown v. Pocock, 6 Sim. 257, where it does not appear from the report whether the wife survived the husband or not. See Lambert v. Thwaites, L. R., 2 Eq. 157." Theobald on Wills (2nd ed.) 249.

(2) Gifts to Other Classes of Relatives—Grandchildren, Great-Grandchildren, Brothers, Nephews, Nieces, Cousins.—The foregoing principles applicable to the construction of gifts to children as a class, apply equally to gifts to issue of every degree, as grandchildren, great-grandchildren, etc., as well as to gifts to brothers, sisters, nephews, nieces, and cousins.¹

(3) Gifts to Relations.—Under a gift to relations, prima facie the class is to be ascertained at the death of the propositus. Therefore, where the gift is immediate, or in remainder to the testator's relations after gifts to persons who are some of the next of kin, his next of kin at his death alone take.² If the gift is to such relatives as survive the tenant for life, the class is ascertained at the death of the ancestor, while those who die before the tenant for life are excluded.³ But where there is a gift to A, either for life with remainder to her children, or to A absolutely, followed by a gift over, if A dies without issue, to the testator's relations, and A is the sole next of kin at the date of the will and death, the class will be ascertained at A's death.⁴ The testator may, himself, of course, fix the exact time at which the class is to be ascertained, as where he bequeaths the property to such of them as claim within a specified time after advertisement.⁵

1. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 156, 160. See Chase v. Peckham, 17 R. I. 385;

Matter of Woodward, 117 N. Y. 523. The fact that a legacy is given a member of a class as an individual does not prevent his sharing in the gift to the class. Cushing v. Burrell, 137 Mass. 21. See REMAINDERS, vol. 20, p. 855, and cases cited.

As to gifts to more remote relatives as relatives, heirs, or next of kin, see the next two subdivisions.

2. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 264, citing Raynes v. Mowbray, 3 Bro. C. C. 234; Masters v. Hooper, 4 Bro. C. C. 207; Pearce v. Vincent, 1 C. & M. 598. See further Eagles v. Le Breton, L. R., 15 Eq. 148; Stert v. Platel, 5 Bing. N. Cas. 434; 35 E. C. L. 165; Jones v. Oliver, 3 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 373. But see Hardy v. Gage (N. H. 1891), 22 Atl. Rep. 558.

3. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 264, citing Bishop v. Cappel, 1 De G. & S. 411.

4. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 265; citing Marsh v. Marsh, 1 Bro. C. C. 293; Jones v. Colbeck, 8 Ves. Jr. 38; Lees v. Massey, 3 De G. F. & J. 113.

5. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 265, citing Tiffin v. Longman, 15 Beav. 275. See, upon the general subject, 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *129 et seq.

Ascertaining the Class of Relations to Take in Default of Appointment.—
"Where there is a power to appoint to

(4) Gifts to Heirs or Next of Kin.—Under a gift to heirs or next of kin, the objects of the gift are to be ascertained at the death of the ancestor, and where there is, in addition, a reference to the Statute of Distributions, or to intestacy, this rule is almost without exception.¹

relations and no gift in default of appointment: First. If there is no life interest, and the power is a general power to appoint to the testator's relations, it seems the class to take will be ascertained at the death of the testator, and not when the power expires. Cole v. Wade, 16 Ves. Jr. 27, in which case, however, the actual point did not arise, since the next of kin at the testator's death, and the time when the power expired, were the same. Second. If there is a life interest, and the tenant for life has power to appoint to the testator's or his own relations, the class is to be ascertained at the death of the tenant for life, whether the power is to appoint by deed or will. Harding v. Glyn, 1 Atk. 468; Birch v. Wade, 3 Ves. & B. 198. See too in Brown v. Higgs, 8 Ves. Jr. 561. And it makes no difference whether the power is one of selections or distribution merely. Pope v. Whitcombe, 3 Meriv. 689, as corrected by Lord St. Leonards on Powers 662, and Finch v. Hollingsworth, 21 Beav. 112; Caplin's Will, 2 D. & S. 527. See too Atty. Gen'l v. Doyley, 4 Vin. Abr. 485, where the tenant for life and the donee of the power were different persons, and the class was ascertained at the death of the tenant for life." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 265.

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 280. See 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *129; 1 Powell on Devises 282, note; Van Tilburgh v. Hollinshead, 14 N. J. Eq. 36, note; Whittaker v. Whittaker, 40 N. J. Eq. 33; Killett v. Shepard, 139 Ill. 433; Rand v. Butler, 48 Conn. 293; Dove v. Torr, 128 Mass. 38; Whall v. Converse, 146 Mass. 348; In re Tucker's Will, 63 Vt. 104; Bullock v. Bullock, 2 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 307; Jones v. Oliver, 3 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 373; Lawton v. Corlies (Supreme Ct.), 12 N. Y. Supp. 484; Woodward v. James, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 95; Buzly's Appeal, 61 Pa. St. 111. Compare Wood v. Bullard, 151 Mass. 325; Proctor v. Clark, 154 Mass. 45; Peck v. Carlton, 154 Mass. 231; Sears v. Russell, 8 Gray (Mass.) 95; Hardy v. Gage (N. H. 1891), 22 Atl. Rep. 557; Delaney v. McCormack, 88 N.

Y. 174; Gourdin v. Shrewsbury, 11 S. Car. 1.

"The same rules apply to realty, personality, and to a mixed fund. Cusack v. Rood, 24 W. R. 391. First. Thus the rule applies, whether the bequest to next of kin is immediate, or preceded by a life interest or contingent. Moss v. Dunlop, Johns. 490; Bird v. Luckie, 8 Hare 301. Second. And, if the gift is to next of kin living at a particular time, it will go to such of the next of kin at the testator's death as are living at that time. Spink v. Lewis, 3 Bro. C. C. 355. Third. If there is a devise to A for life, with remainder to his eldest son for life, with a direction on his death to convey the estate to the heir male of A, the eldest son of A is entitled, on A's death, to have the fee conveyed to him. In re Grayson, 48 L. J. Ch. 354. Similarly, if personality is given to A for life, and then to the testator's next of kin, though A may be one of the next of kin, or even the only next of kin, at the testator's death, or even the only next of kin at the date of the will as well as at the testator's death, the class will, nevertheless, be ascertained at the testator's death. Doe v. Lawson, 3 East 278; Ware v. Rowland, 2 Ph. 635; Holloway v. Holloway, 5 Ves. Jr. 399; Barker's Trust, 1 Sm. & G. 118; Gorbell v. Davison, 18 Beav. 556; Starr v. Newberry, 23 Beav. 436. The mere exception from the class of next of kin of certain persons, who could only be members of the class on the supposition of the death of the tenant for life, will not alter the time for fixing the class. Lee v. Lee, 1 D. & S. 85. See Cooper v. Denison, 13 Sim. 290. Fourth. Where, however, the gift is to the next of kin of a deceased person, and the tenant for life is the sole next of kin at the date of the will, so that the class cannot be increased if the tenant for life survives the testator, there is a stronger argument against ascertaining the next of kin at the testator's death; but probably this circumstance would not alone be sufficient to oust the rule. Wharton v. Baker, 4 K. & J. 483. Fifth. The same rules apply where the

c. TAKING PER CAPITA OR PER STIRPES.—When the objects of a gift take as individuals in their own right, they are said to take per capita; when by right of representation, per stirpes. Thus, where all the beneficiaries stand in the same degree of relationship to the propositus, as children or grandchildren, and claim directly from him in their own right, and not through some intermediate relation, they take per capita, in equal shares. But where gift to the next of kin is not by way of remainder, but by way of executory limitation. Thus, in a gift to A for life, where A is sole next of kin at the date of the will and death, and then to her children, or to A absolutely, and if she dies without children or under twenty-one, to the testator's next of kin, the next of kin are ascertained at the testator's death. Long's Will, 9 W. R. 589; Murphy v. Donegan, 3 J. & L. 534; Baker v. Gibson, 12 Beav. 101; Harrison v. Harrison, 28 Beav. 21; Mitchell v. Bridges, 13 W. R. 200. See Urquhart v. Urquhart, 13 Sim. 613; Minter v. Wraith, 14 Sim. 549. The case is, however, different if the gift is not to next of kin, but to the 'nearest of kin of my own family,' or to relations. Clapton v. Bulmer, 5 Myl. & C. 108; see pp. 264, 265. In the former case the intention is to let the property go as the law would give it; in the latter, to make a complete disposition by the will to a particular class contemplated by the testator, though, owing to the vagueness of the description, the courts may be compelled to have recourse to the statute, that the gift may not be void for uncertainty. Sixth. Even if the gift be to a class of persons who must be the testator's next of kin, if any survive him, and if they die without issue, to his next of kin, the next of kin are ascertained at his death. Seifferth v. Badham, 9 Beav. 372. Seventh. The testator may of course direct the class of next of kin to be ascertained at any time or in any manner he chooses. Pinder v. Pinder, 28 Beav. 44; White v. Springett, L. R., 4 Ch. 300.

"The mere use of words of futurity will not alter the ordinary rule; for instance, if the bequest be to A for life, and after his death for such persons as shall be my next of kin. Holloway v. Holloway, 5 Ves. Jr. 399; Doe v. Lawson, 3 East 278; Rayner v. Mowbray, 3 Bro. C. C. 234.

"But if the gift is, after the decease of the tenant for life, to such persons as shall then be my next of kin, the word

'then' must refer to the death of tenant for life. Long v. Blackall, 3 Ves. Jr. 486; Wharton v. Barker, 4 K. & J. 483. See Clowes v. Hilliard, 4 Ch. Div. 413; In re Morley's Trusts, 25 W. R. 825. But it must be clear that the word 'then' is used temporally and not equivalent to thereupon, and that it may not be referred to other words pointing to the testator's death, as will be the case if the gift is, for instance, 'to such persons as would, by virtue of the statutes for the distribution of intestates' estates, have become and been then entitled thereto in case I had died intestate.' Bullock v. Downes, 9 H. L. Cas. 1; Doe v. Lawson, 3 East 278; Cable v. Cable, 16 Beav. 507; Wheeler v. Addams, 17 Beav. 417; Fletcher v. Fletcher, 3 De G. F. & J. 775; Day v. Day, Ir. R., 4 Eq. 385; Mortimore v. Mortimore, L. R., 4 App. Cas. 448. Where the gift is to next of kin of a person dead at the date of the will, the class is ascertained at the testator's death. Phillips v. Evans, 4 De G. & S. 188. And the rule would be the same if the person, whose next of kin are the legatees, is not dead at the date of the will, but dies in the testator's lifetime. Vaux v. Henderson, 1 J. & W. 388; In re Gryll's Trusts, L. R., 6 Eq. 589. But this rule gives way to an intention that the next of kin of the deceased person are to be ascertained at his death. In re Harris, 2 Sim. N. S. 106; 15 Jur. 1121. And if the gift is to the next of kin of a person who survives the testator, the class is ascertained at the death of that person. Gundry v. Pinniger, 1 De G. M. & G. 502; Jacobs v. Jacobs, 16 Beav. 557; Markham v. Ivatt, 20 Beav. 579." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 280.

Heirs Construed Next of Kin.—In bequests of personalty the expression "heirs," or "heirs at law," has frequently been construed next of kin. Hardy v. Gage (N. H. 1891), 22 Atl. Rep. 557; Tillman v. Davis, 95 N. Y. 17; McCormick v. Burke, 2 Dem. (N. Y.) 137; Matter of Sinzheimer, 5 Dem.

they are of different degrees of kindred, as in the case of grandchildren and great-grandchildren, the latter representing some deceased grandchild, they take per stirpes or according to the stock they represent, and hence the children of a deceased grandchild take only their deceased parents' share, and not equally with the other grandchildren, while the children of living grandchildren are entirely excluded.¹ Such is the rule where the testator provides that each grandchild "shall take his parents' share or title by right of representation," or the like, or where such intent may be gathered from the will.² But under a gift to "children and grandchildren," or to A, and the children of B,³ or the children of A and (N. Y.) 321; Hascall v. Cox, 49 Mich. 435. But compare Gordon v. Small, 53 Md. 550.

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 538; 2 Bl. Com. 218; 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *101, *106, 112; Kean v. Hoffecker, 2 Harr. (Del.) 103; Cureton v. Moore, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 204. For further illustration, see the following cases: Allender v. Kepling, 62 Md. 7; Huston v. Crook, 38 Ohio St. 328; McKelvey v. McKelvey, 43 Ohio St. 213; Ferrer v. Pyne, 89 N. Y. 281; Vincent v. Newhouse, 83 N. Y. 505; Lemacks v. Glover, 1 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 141; Allen v. Allen, 13 S. Car. 512; Harris v. Philpot, 5 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 324; Gerrish v. Hinnan, 8 Oregon 348; Peale's Estate, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 147; John's Estate, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 144; Wistar v. Scott, 105 Pa. St. 200; Clifton v. Holton, 27 Ga. 321; Huggins v. Huggins, 72 Ga. 825; Kelley v. Vigas, 112 Ill. 242; De Laurencel v. De Boom, 67 Cal. 362; Hayes v. King, 37 N. J. Eq. 1; Walker v. Hill, 22 N. J. Eq. 520; Niles v. Almy (Mass. 1894), 36 N. E. Rep. 582; Hamletts v. Hamlett, 12 Leigh (Va.) 350; Minot v. Taylor, 129 Mass. 160; Morrill v. Phillips, 142 Mass. 240.

2. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 538; Wessenger v. Hunt, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 459. See Farmer v. Kimball, 46 N. H. 435; Dible's Estate, 81 Pa. St. 279; Huston v. Crook, 38 Ohio St. 328; Kimbrow v. Johnston, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 78; Kean v. Hoffecker, 2 Harr. (Del.) 103.

3. Wells v. Newton, 4 Bush (Ky.) 158; Clifton v. Holton, 27 Ga. 321; Howard v. Howard, 30 Ala. 391; Bunner v. Storm, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 357; Seabury v. Brewer, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 662; Stokes v. Tilly, 9 N. J. Eq. 130; Owen v. Owen, 13 N. J. Eq. 188; Burnet v. Burnet, 30 N. J. Eq. 595; Pemberton v. Parke, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 601;

Waller v. Forsythe, Phill. Eq. (N. Car.) 353; McCartney v. Osburn, 118 Ill. 404; Martin v. Gould, 2 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 305; Dowding v. Smith, 3 Beav. 541; Rickabe v. Garwood, 8 Beav. 579; Tyndale v. Wilkinson, 23 Beav. 74; Lenden v. Blackmore, 10 Sim. 626; Payne v. Webb, L. R., 19 Eq. 26. But see Green's Estate, 140 Pa. St. 253; Osburn's Appeal, 104 Pa. St. 637; Roome v. Counter, 6 N. J. L. 113; Lachland v. Downing, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 32; Grandy v. Sawyer, Phill. Eq. (N. Car.) 8.

A testator directed the residue of his personal estate, after the death of his wife who was tenant for life, to be divided as follows: To his five nephews and nieces, A, B, C, D and E, two shares each, and to their children, one share each; the nephews and nieces surviving the testator. It was held that the residue vested in the nephews and nieces, and their children living at the testator's death, or born in the lifetime of the tenant for life; the children taking per capita, but the shares of each of the nephews and nieces being double that of each child. Cooke v. Bowen, 4 Y. & C. 244.

In delivering the opinion of the court in Hoxton v. Griffith, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 574, Joynes, J., said: "Where a bequest is made to several persons, in general terms indicating that they are to take equally as tenants in common, each individual will, of course, take the same share; in other words, the legatees will take per capita. The same rule applies where a bequest is to one who is living, and to the children of another who is dead, whatever may be the relations of the parties to each other, or however the Statute of Distributions might operate upon those relations in case of intestacy. Thus, where property is given 'to my brother A, and to the children of my brother B,' A takes a share only equal to that of each of the children of B. So, where the gift is to A's and B's children, or to the children of A and the children of B, the children take as individuals, per capita. The substance of this rule of construction is, that, in the absence of explanation, the children in such a case are presumed to be referred to as individuals, and not as a class, and that the relations existing between the parties, and the operation which the statute would have upon those relations in case of intestacy, are not sufficient to control this presumption. The general rule is well established, and has been fully recognized by the decisions of this court. Brewer v. Opie, 1 Call (Va.) 212; Crow v. Crow, 1 Leigh (Va.) 74; McMasters v. McMasters, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 275."

B,¹ or to the children of A and the children of B,² or to A and B and

A testator gave land and slaves to his daughter for life, and then "to be equally divided between the children of the said daughter and my sons M. and R." It was held that the property, at the decease of the daughter, should be divided, per capita, between M., R. and the children of the daughter. Waller v. Forsythe, Phill. Eq. (N. C.) 353.

A testator ordered that the rest of his estate, movable and immovable, including the homestead, should be divided equally between his children individualized by their respective names, and his grandchildren by a deceased daughter, designating them also by their names. The testator also bequeathed to each grandchild special legacies, the same as he had given to each of his children. It was held that each of the grandchildren took the same as each child. Wells v. Newton, 4 Bush (Ky.) 158.

Where a bill was filed to settle the construction of a will containing the following residuary clause, viz., "All the residue and remainder of my moneys not above disposed of, that is, of moneys which I have at the time of my decease, I direct to be equally divided among my children and grandchildren living at the time of my decease;"—"whatever personal property is not hereinbefore disposed of I direct to be sold by my executors, and the moneys thereon arising to be divided equally between my son and my two daughters," it was held that, by these two clauses, a clear distinction was made between moneys and personal property; that the residue of the one was given to all the children and grandchildren equally; what remained of the other not disposed of was to be divided equally between the children. Brearley v. Lalor, 15 N. J. Eq. 108.

Under a will, a testator left two thousand pounds "to the children and grandchildren of his brother M., deceased, excepting J." (who was a grandchild of M.), "and her children, she and they not needing it, to be equally divided among those then living" (i. e., at the death of the testator's widow), "saving that his cousin S. should have two shares thereof." It was held that the great grandchildren of M. took equally with children and grandchildren; and that all who were alive at the death of the testator's widow, whether born before or after the death of the testator, were entitled to take. Pemberton v. Parke, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 601. Compare Lachland v. Downing, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 32, where a testator ordered in his will that the rest of his property should be divided between his brothers and sisters, and the children of a deceased sister, "to them and their children forever." It was held that the latter clause gave the children of the devisees named no share in the division, and that the children of the deceased sister were not equal participants with the other devisees, but that a class was intended who took the share of their mother.

1. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) * 194; Weld v. Bradbury, 2 Vern. 705; Lugar v. Harman, 1 Cox 250; Pattison v. Pattison, 19 Brew. 638; Armitage v. Williams, 27 Beav. 346; Ward v. Stow, 2 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 509; Ex p. Leith, 1 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 152; Adams v. Adams, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 215. See Hoxton v. Griffith, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 574; West v. Rassman, 135 Ind. 278; Budd v. Haines (N. J. 1894), 29 Atl. Rep. 170; Thompson v. Young, 25 Md. 461. But see Raymond v. Hillhouse, 45 Conn. 467; Lowe v. Carter, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 377.

2. Gifts to the Children of A and B.—
"In a gift to the children of A and B:
a. If A and B are described as bearing the same relation to the testator, and equal legacies have been given to them, the children of both take as in their children, or to a class and their children, all take per capita.¹ But if the gift to the children is merely substitutional, as in the case of a bequest to A and B, "or their children," the distribution will be per stirpes.² The presumption in favor of a per a gift to the children of my brother A and my brother B. Mason v. Baker, 2 K. & J. 567. See Whicker v. Mifflord, 3 Bro. P. C. 442. b. If they do not bear the same relation to the testator, and A has children at the date of the will, while B is unmarried, the gift goes to B and the children of A. Stummvoll v. Hales, 34 Beav. 124. c. So, too, if A is described as deceased; for instance, if the gift be to the children of the late A, and B, B and the children of A will take. Lugar v. Harman, 1 Cox 250; Hawes v. Hawes, 14 Ch. Div. 614. But see In re Davies' Will, 29 Beav. 93. This is a fortiori the case where B is referred to as a legatee. In re Ingle's Trusts, L. R., 11 Eq. 578. d. A gift for 'the benefit of the children of A and of B,' goes to the children of A and of B. Peacock v. Stockford, 3 De G. M. & G. 73." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 241.

In Burnet v. Burnet, 30 N. J. Eq. 595, it was held that a gift to the children of A and B (they being persons who could not have offspring jointly) must be construed according to the plain grammatical sense of the words used, and constitutes a gift to B himself and to the children of A.

2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *194; Lincoln v. Pelham, 10 Ves. Jr. 166. See Barnes v. Patch, 8 Ves. Jr. 604; Walker v. Moore, 1 Beav. 607; Bolger v. Mackell, 5 Ves. Jr. 509; Heron v. Stokes, 2 D. & W. 89; Hill v. Bowers, 120 Mass. 135; Britton v. Miller, 63 N. Car. 268; Bryant v. Scott, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 156; Ward v. Stowe, 2 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 509; Senger v. Senger, 81 Va. 687; Hamletts v. Hamlett, 12 Leigh (Va.) 350; Wessinger v. Hunt, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 459; Scott v. Terry, 37 Miss. 65. See Allender v. Keplinger, 62 Md. 7. Compare Alder v. Beall, 1 Gill & J. (Md.) 123; Levering v. Levering, 14 Md. 30; Ingram v. Smith, 1 Head (Tenn.) 427. But compare Bassett v. Granger, 100 Mass. 348; Young's Appeal, 83 Pa. St. 59.

Where a testatrix, by will, gave "to the children of my brother, Stephen W. Britton, and of my sister, Mary F. Miller, all of my property of every description, to them and their heirs forever," it was held that the children of Stephen and Mary took per capita. Britton v. Miller, 63 N. Car. 268. Compare Hamletts v. Hamlett, 12 Leigh (Va.) 357, where a testator bequeathed the residue of his estate, after his wife's death or marriage, to be equally divided among James, Mary, Patsey, Nancy, and Narcissa, who were the testator's children, the children of his son George, the children of his daughter Elizabeth, the children of his son Bedford, deceased, and the children of his daughter, Obedience; his five children legatees were all married, and had, in all, thirty-one children living at his death; his son Bedford left three children, and his son George and daughters Elizabeth and Obedience were married, and these four had, in all, eighteen children living at the testator's death; and the three last had five children born after his death and during his widow's life. It was held that the grandchildren took per stirpes and not per capita.

1. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *195; Cunningham v. Murray, 1 De G. & S. 366; Abbay v. Howe, 1 De G. & S. 470; Northey v. Strange, 1 P. Wms. 340; Murray v. Murray, 3 Ir. Ch. Rep. 120; Law v. Thorp, 4 Jur. N. S. 447; Farmer v. Kimball, 46 N. H. 435; Soteldo v. Clement (Ohio C. P.), 29 L. J. 384. But see Ferry v. Langley, 1 Mackey (D. C.) 140.

2. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 540; 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *195, *196; Price v. Lockley, 6 Beav. 180; Minchell v. Lee, 17 Jur. 727; Armstrong v. Stockham, 7 Jur. 230; Shailer v. Groves, 6 Hare 162; Burrell v. Baskerville, 11 Beav. 525; Congreve v. Palmer, 16 Beav. 435; Timins v. Stackhouse, 27 Beav. 434; In re Sibley's Trusts, 5 Ch. Div. 494. But compare Atkinson v. Bartrum, 28 Beav. 219.

"A single gift, however, to several or their issue, though it would import a stirpetal distribution among the families, would not prevent all the issue of each family from taking per capita inter se. Gowling v. Thompson, 19 L. T. N. S. 242; In re Sibley's Trusts, 5 Ch. Div. 494. In ascertaining the stirpes, reference is to be made to the original stirpes pointed out by the testator, and not to capita distribution yields readily in favor of any indication of a contrary intent.¹ Under a gift to two or more for their lives as the stirpes existing at his death, so that there will be as many primary shares as there are original stirpes who, at the testator's death, have descendants living. Gibson v. Fisher, L. R., 5 Eq. 51. See, however, Robinson v. Shepherd, 12 W. R. 234; 10 Jur. N. S. 53; 4 De G. J. & S. 129." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 256.

1. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *195; Hawkins on Wills 114, note. See Brett v. Horton, 4 Beav. 239; Crone v. Odell, 1 Ball & B. 449; Noccholds v. Locke, 3 K. & J. 6; Nettleton v. Stephenson, 18 L. J. Ch. 191; Archer v. Legg, 31 Beav. 187; Bivens v. Phifer, 2 Jones (N. Car.) 436; Roper v. Roper, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 16; Rogers v. Brickhouse, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 301; Adams v. Adams, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 215; Lockhart v. Lockhart, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 205; Spivey v. Spivey, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 100; Walker v. Griffin, 11 Wheat (U. S.) 375; Rushmore v. Rushmore (Supreme Ct.), 12 N. Y. Supp. 776; Carter v. Lowell, 76 Me. 342; Hoxton v. Griffith, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 574; Burnet v. Burnet, 30 N. J. Eq. 599; Fisher v. Skillman, 18 N. J. Eq. 229; Osburn's Appeal, 104 Pa. St. 637; Young's Appeal, 83 Pa. St. 59; Ashburne's Estate, 159 Pa. St. 545; Shrie's Estate, 162 Pa. St. 369; Alder v. Beall, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 123; Balcom v. Haynes, 14 Allen (Mass.) 204; Leland v. Adams, 12 Allen (Mass.) 286; Minot v. Taylor, 129 Mass. 160; Ferrer v. Pyne, 81 N. Y. 281; Vincent v. Newhouse, 83 N. Y. 505; Woodward v. James, 115 N. Y. 359; Randolph v. Bond, 12 Ga. 362; Billinslea v. Abercrombie, 2 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 24; Seay v. Winston, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 472; Collier v. Collier, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 555; Britton v. Johnson, 2 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 430; Levering v. Levering, 14 Md. 30; Fields v. Fields, 93 Ky. 619; Geery v. Skelding, 62 Conn. 499; Conklin v. Davis, 63 Conn. 377; White v. Holland, 92 Ga. 216.

The general rule in the interpretation of wills is, that persons described as a class take in the same way as if each individual embraced in the class were designated by his proper name, though, where such an interpretation would have the effect to break up every division of the property that might be made under the will, and require a new one whenever, and as often as, a child might be born in any one of the four families, the testator will be presumed not to have intended a division per capita but per stirpes. Roper v. Roper, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 16.

A testator made a bequest of his property "to be equally divided, share and share alike, between my children and their legal heirs, that is to say, to M., G., F., R. and H., each a share, and the children and heirs of P. and of S. and of N., each a share. The subsequent clause of the will, which gave to his daughter A., to whom he had given no outset, $2,000, contained this comment: "This is my view, making her equal with my other children." It was held that this latter clause expressly declared an intention on the testator's part to make his children equal, and that consequently the legatees take per stirpes. Fisher v. Skillman, 18 N. J. Eq. 229.

Instances Where Children Take per Stirpes.—A testatrix ordered "all my landed estate in M. to be equally divided between my nephew R. and the children of F." After giving certain government claims "to be equally divided between R. and the surviving children of F.," she added: "Should any of the children of F. die without heirs, the property left them shall be divided among the survivors." F., the niece, was dead when the will was made. It was held that R. took one moiety, and the children of F. the other moiety, of the M. land. Hoxton v. Griffith, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 574.

A testator gave, by his will, the income of his estate for eighteen years to his three sons, and made provision during that time for a granddaughter, the child of a deceased son. At the expiration of that time he ordered that his property should be sold and divided, "one-half of the same between" the three sons, "and the other half to be divided between my grandchildren," namely, his granddaughter aforesaid and the children of his three sons, in equal proportions. "Should either of said grandchildren have deceased at that time, the part that would have come to him or her, had they lived, to go to the others of the same family, if living; if not, to their parents." It was held that after the sale the granddaughter should receive one-fourth of the whole property. Leland v. Adams, 12 Allen (Mass.) 286.

A testator, A, after bequeathing a pecuniary legacy "to the heirs of my sister G.," gave the rest of his estate "to my brothers M., R. and F., and my sisters H. and S., and the heirs of G., and their heirs respectively," to be divided in equal shares between them. It was held that the heirs of G. took as a class one-sixth of the residue. Balcom v. Haynes, 14 Allen (Mass.) 204.

A testator, by his will, gave to his children M., N., O. and R. certain specific legacies which he had previously conveyed to them, and ordered that those who had received a part of the estate should account therefor to the other children, and concluded as follows, viz: "Then it is my will that all the balance of my property not given away shall be equally divided between the heirs of M., N., O. and R., to them and their heirs forever." It was held that "the heirs of A." took per stirpes as a class. Spivey v. Spivey, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 100.

A bequeathed to his deceased "son M.'s children" a negro; to his deceased "son J.'s children" another negro; to his "daughter I.," and to each of his other four children, naming them, certain negroes; and, "tenthly, all the rest of my estate not yet disposed of I give to be equally divided among my above-named heirs." It was held that under the tenth clause, the legatees took per stirpes and not per capita. Collier v. Collier, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 555.

Under a will devising certain property to be divided equally between two individuals named, and the lawful children of another, the children take per stirpes and not per capita, where it appears by evidence aliunde that the first two persons were sisters and the latter a brother of the testatrix, and that the testatrix was very fond of her sisters, had a favorite among the children in each of the three families, and did not desire her brother to have any property on account of his conduct and his financial embarrassment. White v. Holland, 92 Ga. 216.

"A gift over of the share of any child dying before attaining a vested interest in possession, not to the other members of the class, but to the brothers and sisters of the child so dying, will import a stirpital distribution. Archer v. Legg, 31 Beav. 187. See too Ayscough v. Savage, 12 W. R. 373. Similarly, a gift to several and their issue, or to the children and grandchildren of A, goes to all the children and grandchildren coming into being before the period of distribution per capita. Barnaby v. Tassell, L. R., 11 Eq. 363; Lea v. Thorp, 6 W. R. 480; 4 Jur. N. S. 447; 27 L. J. Ch. 649. In the same way a gift, after a life interest, to surviving children and their issue, goes to all the children and issue who survive the period of distribution per capita. In re Fox's Will, 35 Beav. 163; 13 W. R. 1013; Cancellor v. Cancellor, 11 W. R. 16; 2 D. & S. 199. Shailer v. Groves, which, as reported in 6 Hare 162, might be cited in favor of a different construction, is there wrongly reported. See 11 Jur. 485; 16 L. J. Ch. 367. A direction that parents and children are to be classed together, and share in equal proportions, will not import a stirpital distribution. Turner v. Hudson, 10 Beav. 222. But the word 'respective' has a strong stirpital force. Davis v. Bennett, 4 De G. F. & J. 327; Ayscough v. Savage, 13 W. R. 373. As to the word 'devolve,' see Stonor v. Curwen, 5 Sim. 264. And if the issue of a stirpes are treated as taking among them only one equal share, the stirpital construction will be adopted. Brett v. Horton, 4 Beav. 239; Hunt v. Dorsett, 5 De G. M. & G. 570. A gift to several, and their issue per stirpes, or a direction that issue are to take only their parents' share, is sufficient to show that the issue were not meant to take in competition with the original takers. Pearson v. Stephen, 2 Dow & Cl. 328; 5 Bligh. N. S. 203; Johnson v. Cope, 17 Beav. 561. Whether a direction that issue are to take only the share their ancestor would have taken will have the effect of making the distribution stirpital throughout, seems not to be settled. Where the direction is that the issue are to take a parent's share, and the word 'parent' is used in a recurring or sliding sense, so as to apply to successive generations of issue, it is clear that the distribution will be stirpital throughout. Ross v. Ross, 20 Beav. 645; In re Orton's Trust, L. R., 3 Eq. 375; Palmer v. Crutwell, 8 Jur. N. S. 479. So, too, where the direction is that the children or grandchildren are to take an original share between them. Powell v. Powell, 28 L. T. N. S. 730. But a mere direction that the share of any of the original takers dying is to go to his issue would, it seems, not tenants in common, without right of survivorship, with remainder to their children, it seems to be the better opinion that the children take per stirpes,¹ but if the tenants for life take jointly, or as tenants in common with right of survivorship, the children take per capita;² so also, if the general distribution among children is postponed until after the death of the last surviving tenant for life, even though the life interest does not survive.³ have the effect of preventing remoter issue from taking that share with issue less remote per capita between them. Birdsall v. York, 5 Jur. N. S. 1237; Southam v. Blake, 2 W. R. 446; Weldon v. Hoyland, 4 De G. F. & J. 564. Robinson v. Sykes, 23 Beav. 40, which is contra, was on a marriage settlement. If the gift is to several, and their issue per stirpes, the stirpital distribution will be carried throughout, so that no children of remoter issue can take in competition with the parents. Dick v. Lacy, 8 Beav. 214; Gibson v. Fisher, L. R., 5 Eq. 51." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 252.

1. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *196, citing Pery v. White, Cowp. 777; Taniere v. Pearkes, 2 Sim. & Stu. 383; Willes v. Douglas, 10 Beav. 47; Flinn v. Jenkins, 1 Coll. 365; Arrow v. Mellish, 1 De G. & S. 355; Doe v. Royle, 13 Q. B. 100; 66 E. C. L. 100; In re Lavenck's Estate, 18 Jur. 304; Bradshaw v. Mellong, 19 Beav. 417; Hunt v. Dorsett, 5 De G. M. & G. 570; Coles v. Witt, 2 Jur. N. S. 1226; Turner v. Whittaker, 23 Beav. 196; Archer v. Legg, 31 Beav. 187; Milnes v. Aked, 6 W. R. 430; Wills v. Wills, L. R., 20 Eq. 342.

For, otherwise, it would follow that the different shares would go to different classes of children; for after the death of the tenant for life who first died, another might have more children, who would be entitled to participate in a share of any tenant for life who died afterward. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *196.

2. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *197, citing Malcolm v. Martin, 3 Bro. C. C. 50; Pearce v. Edmeades, 3 Y. & C. 246; Stevenson v. Gullan, 18 Beav. 590; Parker v. Clarke, 6 De G. M. & G. 110; Parfitt v. Hember, L. R., 4 Eq. 443. Compare Shant v. Kidd, 19 Beav. 310; Begley v. Cook, 3 Drew. 662; Taaffe v. Connee, 10 H. L. Cas. 533.

3. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *197, citing Nockolds v. Locke, 3 K. & J. 6.

The following distinctions have been adopted by Theobald: "First. It seems clear that a gift to A and B, as tenants in common, for their lives, and then at their death, or at their deaths, or at the death of A and B, to their children, goes, upon the death of each tenant for life, to his children. Flinn v. Jenkins, 1 Coll. 365; Taniere v. Pearkes, 2 Sim. & Stu. 383; Willes v. Douglas, 10 Beav. 47; Arrow v. Mellish, 1 De G. & S. 355; Turner v. Whittaker, 23 Beav. 196; Sarel v. Sarel, 23 Beav. 87. See too Doe v. Royle, 13 Q. B. 100; 66 E. C. L. 100; Brown v. Jarvis, 2 De G. F. & J. 168. If the gift is after the deaths of tenants for life to their children and grandchildren, the families take per stirpes, but the children and grandchildren take per capita, inter se. Barnaby v. Tassell, L. R., 11 Eq. 363. But if the testator goes on to explain what he means by 'their children,' by adding, 'that is to say, the children of A and B,' they take per capita. Abrey v. Newman, 16 Beav. 431. Second. If the gift be to 'A and B for their lives, and at their death,' not to 'their children' but to 'the children of A and B,' there seems less reason for contending that the children are to take per stirpes. However, in Wills v. Wills, L. R., 20 Eq. 342, the stirpital construction was adopted. See Milnes v. Aked, 6 W. R. 430; Sutcliffe v. Howard, 38 L. J. Ch. 472; In re Nott's Trusts, 20 W. R. 569. In such a case, a superadded direction, that 'if there is but one child the whole is to go to such only child,' would afford an argument that the distribution was meant to be per capita. Pearce v. Edmeades, 3 Y. & C. 246; 2 W. R. 672; Swabey v. Goldie, 1 Ch. Div. 380. See too Peacock v. Stockford, 7 De G. M. & G. 129. Third. If the gift to the children is not till after the death of the survivor of the tenants for life, it would seem the distribution would be per capita; at any rate if the gift is to the children of A and B, and not merely to 'their chil-

Under a gift to descendants, prima facie all living at the time of distribution take per capita,¹ yet the word when used as a word of purchase and coupled with a gift to the ancestor, has a substitutional and representative sense, so that in a gift to several and their descendants, descendants would not take in competition with their ancestor.² Under a gift to relatives, persons capable of taking within the Statute of Distributions, take per capita and not in the proportions fixed by the statute.³ Under a gift to dren.' Malcom v. Martin, 3 Bro. C. C. 50; Pearce v. Edmeades, 3 Y. & C. 246; Stevenson v. Gullan, 18 Beav. 590; Nockolds v. Locke, 3 K. & J. 6; Swabey v. Goldie, 1 Ch. Div. 380. See Alt v. Gregory, 8 De G. M. & G. 221. Perhaps Smith v. Streatfield, 1 Meriv. 358, comes under this head." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 254, 255.

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 262; Crosley v. Clare, Ambl. 397; Butler v. Stratton, 3 Bro. C. C. 367; Corbett v. Laurens, 5 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 301; Pearce v. Richard (R. I. 1893), 26 Atl. Rep. 38. See Wistar v. Scott, 105 Pa. St. 200. But the expression "descendants or representatives," imports a distribution per stirpes. Rowland v. Gorsuch, 2 Cox 187.

2. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 263; Tucker v. Billing, 2 Jur. N. S. 483. See Jones v. Torin, 6 Sim. 255; Smith v. Pepper, 27 Beav. 86; Best v. Stonehewer, 2 De G. J. & S. 537; Baskin's Appeal, 3 Pa. St. 304; McNeilledge v. Galbraith, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 43; Thompson v. Young, 25 Md. 450; Grandy v. Sawyer, Phill. Eq. (N. Car.) 8. Compare Ort's Appeal, 35 Pa. St. 267.

A testator, after making certain bequests, ordered thus: "Then my will is, that the remaining part of my goods, stocks, etc., shall be impartially appraised; and after such appraisement made, that the same shall be equally divided between all the heirs." It was held that the testator, by this language, and his intention as gathered from the whole will, meant his own heirs, who could only be ascertained by resorting to the Statute of Distribution; and that taking the statute for the rule, the remaining part of his property bequeathed descended to his children and grandchildren, per stirpes; the rule under the statute not only designating who are to take, but also the quantum of the estate to be taken; and that by "all the heirs" the testator meant his children and his grandchildren, who, in his eye and by intendment of the law, constituted but one heir. Baskin's Appeal, 3 Pa. St. 304.

3. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 263, citing Tiffin v. Longman, 15 Beav. 275; Eagles v. Le Breton, L. R., 15 Eq. 148.

Property to Be Equally Divided Between Her Relations and Mine.—In Young's Appeal, 83 Pa. St. 59, a testator devised "the residue of my estate, real, personal, and mixed, to my beloved wife, for and during her life; and further, I will that at her decease such moneys or property as she may possess be equally divided between her relations and mine, or such of them as she shall believe most worthy." The testator's wife survived him, and died, leaving a will, in which she directed the estate to be equally divided between her late husband's relations and her own, one half to go to six of her relations, share and share alike, and the other half to nineteen of her husband's relations, in proportions named in her will. The court below held that the wife had power to appoint the beneficiaries under the will of her husband, but that she should have distributed the funds among the appointees per capita. It was held (reversing the court below) that the division of the property made by the wife was in accordance with the true intent of the testator. In this case Mercur, J., said: "After the expiration of the life estate of his wife, he directs the property to 'be equally divided between her relations and mine.' He and his wife were childless. There was no issue of either to whom the property could be transmitted.

"It may have been the joint product of their industry and economy. This or some other moving cause prompted him to direct that the property be 'equally divided' between families of different blood. The language clearly points to one general division, one separation of the fund. Two classes were in his mind. One class was his

"legal heirs," or next of kin, it has been held that the Statute of Distributions is to be taken as the guide in ascertaining both the beneficiaries and the proportions in which they are to take.¹

d. RULE WHERE THE NUMBER OF OBJECTS IS ERRONEOUSLY REFERRED TO.—Where the testator has described the class as consisting of a specified number, which varies from the actual number, the numerical statement is wholly disregarded.²

relations, the other class was his wife's relations. The property was to be equally divided 'between' these two classes, and each class to take one-half. His relations one-half, his wife's relations the other half. Neither the language nor the spirit of the will indicates that each relation should have an equal share. To reach such a result would require all the relations of each, the testator and his wife, to be thrown together in one class, regardless of their relative number. So, if the wife had twenty and the testator two, her relations would take ten times as much as his relations. That would be a most manifest disregard of the direction for an equal division between the two families."

So, under a bequest "to the heirs of my late husband and my heirs equally," each class of heirs take per stirpes one-half of the sum bequeathed. Bassett v. Granger, 100 Mass. 348.

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 539; Hawkins on Wills *95. See Bullock v. Downes, 9 H. L. Cas. 1; Woodward v. James, 115 N. Y. 359; Richards v. Miller, 62 Ill. 417; Baskin's Appeal, 3 Pa. St. 304; Harris' Estate, 74 Pa. St. 452; Fissel's Appeal, 27 Pa. St. 57; Hoch's Estate, 154 Pa. St. 417; Lowe v. Carter, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 377; Bailey v. Bailey, 25 Mich. 185; Fisher v. Skillman, 18 N. J. Eq. 229; Bassett v. Granger, 100 Mass. 348; Cook v. Catlin, 25 Conn. 387; Lyon v. Acker, 33 Conn. 224; Raymond v. Hillhouse, 45 Conn. 467; Heath v. Bancroft, 49 Conn. 220; Lachland v. Downing, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 34. See Hodges v. Phelps, 65 Vt. 303. Compare Bisson v. West Shore R. Co., 66 Hun (N. Y.) 604.

Where a testatrix directed her real and personal estate to be equally divided "between the children of my brother John, deceased, and the children or heirs of my sister Rosanna, deceased, and the children or heirs of my sister Catherine, deceased, and the children or heirs of my sister Julian, deceased, and my brother Jacob, or his heirs or legal representatives," it was held that the children described took by classes and not per capita. Fissel's Appeal, 27 Pa. St. 55. See Alder v. Beall, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 123; Harris' Estate, 74 Pa. St. 452; Roome v. Counter, 6 N. J. L. 114.

Next of Kin.—In England, the words "next of kin" mean those nearest in equal degree to the propositus, and are not equivalent to "next of kin according to the Statute of Distributions." Hawkins on Wills, § 97, citing Elmsley v. Young, 2 Myl. & K. 780; Withy v. Mangles, 4 Beav. 358; Avison v. Simpson, Johns. 43; Rooke v. Atty. Gen'l, 31 Beav. 313. See NEXT OF KIN, vol. 16, p. 703.

2. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *190; Stebbing v. Walkey, 2 Bro. Ch. 85; Gervy v. Hibbert, 19 Ves. Jr. 125; M'Kechie v. Vaughan, L. R., 15 Eq. 289; Berkeley v. Palling, 1 Russ. 496; Lane v. Green, 4 De G. & S. 239; Daniell v. Daniell, 3 De G. & S. 337; Harrison v. Harrison, 1 R. & M. 72; In re Proctor's Estate, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 474. See Thompson v. Young, 25 Md. 450; Shepard v. Wright, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 22; Kalbfleisch v. Kalbfleisch, 67 N. Y. 360.

Thus a testator, in the eighth item of his will, bequeathed to his grandson by name the sum of $500, "in addition to his share of the residue" of his estate as thereafter given. In the thirteenth item he bequeathed to him by name a gold watch and certain stock. In the twelfth item he provided: "As to all the rest and residue of my estate, real and personal," etc., "I give and bequeath the same to be divided equally per capita between my grandchildren as follows, to wit, the children of my deceased daughter, Sarah, except, etc.; the children of my deceased daughter, Jane, except, etc.; the child of my deceased daughter, Catherine Culbertson, etc.; they, however, to receive only such portion of this residue as shall be necessary to equalize them with the bequests with my other grandchildren, estimating the bequests heretofore given to their mother and them." Catherine had two children, viz., a son, the devisee of the eighth and thirteenth items, and a daughter, who was one of the plaintiffs. It was held that the daughter was entitled as well as the son to a part of the residuary estate. Urie v. Irvine, 21 Pa. St. 310.

"The ground on which the court has proceeded is that it is a mere slip in expression, and the circumstance that the testator knows the true number of children, is not a sufficient reason for departing from the rule. Thus, where a testatrix bequeathed to the three children of her niece, A, £500 each, knowing that A had nine children, all of the children were held entitled to a legacy." 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *192; Daniell v. Daniell, 3 De G. & S. 337; Scott v. Fenoulhett, 1 Cox 79. So in Harrison v. Harrison, 1 R. & M. 72, where a testator bequeathed "to the two sons and the daughter of A B £50 each," and at the date of the will and the death of the testator, A B had one son and four daughters; each of these five children was held entitled to a legacy of £50.

"Of course, if the number mentioned by the testator agree with the number existing at the date of the will, there is no ground for extending the gift to an after born child. "On the same principle as that which governed the preceding cases, it has been decided, that where a testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to be divided equally among his seven children, A, B, C, D, E and F (naming only six), and it turned out that he had eight children when he made his will, but from other parts of his will it appeared that he considered one of his children as fully provided for, the seven other children were entitled." 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *194. See Sherer v. Bishop, 4 Bro. C. C. 55; In re Emery's Estate, 3 Ch. Div. 300. See also Garth v. Meyrick, 1 Bro. C. C. 30; Humphreys v. Humphreys, 2 Cox 184; Eddels v. Johnson, 1 Giff. 22.

The following distinctions have been deduced by Theobald from the English authorities:

"If there is a gift to the six children of A, who has only six living at the date of the will, the legacy goes to them. Sherer v. Bishop, 4 Bro. C. C. 55. And a seventh child en ventre at the time will not be admitted to a share. In re Emery's Estate, 24 W. R. 917.

But if the number does not correspond with the number living at the date of the will, all the children then living will take, whether the gift is of a lump sum or of a distinct sum to each, in which latter case each child will be entitled to a legacy of that sum. Garvey v. Hibbert, 19 Ves. Jr. 125; Stebbing v. Walkey, 2 Bro. C. C. 85; 1 Cox 250; Lee v. Pain, 4 Hare 249; Harrison v. Harrison, 1 R. & M. 72; Morrison v. Martin, 5 Hare 507; Yeats v. Yeats, 16 Beav. 170. See Newman v. Piercey, 4 Ch. Div. 46; Lee v. Lee, 10 Jur. N. S. 1041; Spencer v. Ward, L. R., 9 Eq. 507; In re Bassett's Estate, L. R., 14 Eq. 54. The fact that a blank is left for the insertion of the names of the legatees makes no difference. McKechnie v. Vaughan, L. R., 15 Eq. 289. In such cases evidence of intention is not admissible to show that the testator meant certain of his children, or the children of a particular marriage, who may correspond in number with the number mentioned in the will. Daniell v. Daniell, 3 De G. & S. 337; Matthews v. Foulshaw, 12 W. R. 1141. Thus, under a bequest to the two children of my son Joseph, who had four living at the date of the will, two by a first and two by a second marriage, all the children took, and evidence of the intention to benefit the children of the first marriage was not admitted. Matthews v. Foulshaw, 12 W. R. 1141. On the same principle, a gift to the five daughters of A, who has one daughter and five sons; goes to the daughter. Selsey v. Lake, 1 Beav. 151. See Berkeley v. Palling, 1 Russ. 496. But a gift of £100 apiece to the four sons of A, who had three sons and a daughter, includes the daughter, the intention being to give four legacies. Lane v. Green, 4 De G. & S. 239. If there is anything to indicate which of the children the testator meant—for instance, an allusion to their residence—the rule of course does not apply. Wrightson v. Calvert, 1 J. & H. 250. See Hampshire v. Peirce, 2 Ves. 216. So where the gift was to the three children of W., widow of W., and the widow of W. had, at the date of the will, married again, and there were two children by W. and six by her second marriage then living, it was held that the two children by the first marriage were alone intended to take. Newman v. Piercey, 4 Ch. Div. 41. It appears never to have been decided whether, when the number of children living at the date of the will is erroneously stated, children born after the date of the will and before the testator's death would be included." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 241.

18. Estates in Fee and in Tail—a. WHAT SUFFICIENT TO PASS THE FEE.—A limitation to the devisee and his heirs still continues to be the most apt and proper expression to pass the fee, although even before the passage of the English Wills Act, and analogous statutes in the United States, under which every devise, unless a contrary intent appear, is construed to pass the fee, or at least whatsoever estate the deviser can lawfully convey, expressions less technical, which clearly manifested such an intent, were held sufficient.¹

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 325; 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *267 et seq.

Under the English Wills Act, 1 Vict., ch. 26, § 28, and analogous statutes in most of the United States (as to which, see Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 2808 et seq.), questions relative to estates in fee, without words of limitation, have ceased to be of practical interest. See, in this connection, the following cases upon the subject: Alabama: Parish v. Parish, 37 Ala. 591; Whorton v. Moragne, 62 Ala. 201; Connecticut: Holmes v. Williams, 1 Root (Conn.) 332; White v. White, 52 Conn. 518; Delaware: Dodd v. Dodd, 2 Houst. (Del.) 76; District of Columbia: French v. Campbell, 2 Mackey (D. C.) 321; Florida: Merritt v. Brantly, 8 Fla. 276; Georgia: Hollingshead v. Alston, 13 Ga. 277; Cook v. Walker, 15 Ga. 457; Illinois: Sidons v. Cockrell, 131 Ill. 653; Wolfer v. Hemmer, 144 Ill. 554; Indiana: Cleveland v. Spilman, 25 Ind. 95; Iowa: Sherman v. Wooster, 26 Iowa 272; Lowrie v. Ryland, 65 Iowa 584; Kentucky: Lillard v. Robinson, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 415; Chinn v. Respass, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 25; Lachland v. Downing, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 32; Carroll v. Carroll, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 637; Maine: Russell v. Elden, 15 Me. 193; Josselyn v. Hutchinson, 21 Me. 339; Varney v. Stevens, 22 Me. 331; Deering v. Tucker, 55 Me. 284; Bromley v. Gardner, 79 Me. 246; Chapman v. Chick, 81 Me. 109; Maryland: Moody v. Elliott, 1 Md. Ch. 290; Torrance v. Torrance, 4 Md. 11; Negroes Chase v. Plummer, 17 Md. 165; Burke v. Chamberlain, 22 Md. 298; Vansant v. Money, 4 Har. & J. (Md.) 313; Ownings v. Reynolds, 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 141; Beall v. Holmes, 6 Har. & J. (Md.) 205; Hammond v. Hammond, 8 Gill & J. (Md.) 436; Mewton v. Griffith, 1 Har. & G. (Md.) 111; Edelen v. Smoot, 2 Har. & G. (Md.) 285; Massachusetts: Godfrey v. Humphrey, 18 Pick (Mass.) 537; Gibbens v. Curtis, 8 Gray (Mass.) 392; Parker v. Parker, 5 Met. (Mass.) 134; Tracy v. Kilborn, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 557; Goodwin v. McDonald, 153 (Mass.) 481; Mississippi: Sims v. Conger, 39 Miss. 231; Missouri: Small v. Field, 102 Mo. 105; New Hampshire: Leavitt v. Wooster, 14 N. H. 550; Lummus v. Mitchell, 34 N. H. 39; New Jersey: Herbert v. Smith, 1 N. J. Eq. 141; Van Wagenen v. Baldwin, 7 N. J. Eq. 211; Ackerman v. Vreeland, 14 N. J. Eq. 23; Den v. Snitcher, 14 N. J. L. 53; Den v. Young, 24 N. J. L. 775; New York: Harvey v. Olmsted, 1 N. Y. 483; Jennings v. Conboy, 73 N. Y. 230; Roseboom v. Roseboom, 81 N. Y. 356; Brown v. Evans, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 594; Harris v. Slaght, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 470; Grout v. Townsend, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 554; Bradstreet v. Clarke, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 602; Jackson v. Merrill, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 185; Jackson v. Wells, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 222; Jackson v. Bull, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 148; Jackson v. Babcock, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 389; Jackson v. Wilson, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 318; Jackson v. Housel, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 281; Ferris v. Smith, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 221; North Carolina: Turner v. Kittrell, 1 Wins. Eq. (S. Car.) 38; McKrow v. Painter, 89 N. Car. 437; Ohio: Piatt v. Sinton, 37 Ohio St. 353; Flickinger v. Saum, 40 Ohio St. 600; Pennsylvania: Martin v. McDevitt, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 19; Morrison v. Semple, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 94; Harper v. Blean, 3 Watts (Pa.) 471; Frame v. Stewart, 5 Watts (Pa.) 433; McIntyre v. Ramsey, 23 Pa. St. 317; Fulton v. Moore, 25 Pa. St. 468; Williams v. Leech, 28 Pa. St. 89; Hall v. Dickinson, 31 Pa. St. 76; Schoonmaker v. Stockton, 37 Pa. St. 461; Brown's Estate, 38 Pa. St. 289; Jaurerche v. Proctor, 48 Pa. St. 466; Snider v. Baer, 144 Pa. St. 278; Rhode Island: Harris v. Dyer (R. I. 1894), 28 Atl. Rep. 971; Carpenter v. Brown, 6 R. I. 383; Atkinson v. Staigg, 13 R. I. 725; South Carolina: Moon v. Moon, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 327; Smith v. Hilliard, 3 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 211; Carr v. Jeannerett, 2 McCord. (S. Car.) 66; Bowers v. Newman, 2 McMull. (S. Car.) 472; Hall v. Goodwyn, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 383; Tennessee: Pillow v. Rye, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 185; King v. Miller, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 633; United States: Abbott v. Essex Co., 18 How (U. S.) 202; Page v. Wright, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 194; Vermont: Hart v. White, 26 Vt. 260; Virginia: Kennon v. M'Roberts, 1 Wash. (Va.) 96; Shermer v. Richardson, Wythe (Va.) 6; Wyatt v. Sadler, 1 Munf. (Va.) 537; Wisconsin: Dew v. Kuehn, 64 Wis. 293.

At common law a devise of real estate containing no words of limitation, in the absence of a contrary intent, conveys a life estate only to the devisee. McLellan v. Turner, 15 Me. 436; Varney v. Stevens, 22 Me. 331; Harvey v. Olmsted, 1 N. Y. 483; Hill v. Brown (1894), App. Cas. 125.

In Indiana, Florida, and some other states, the old rule prevails, although slight indications of an intent to pass the fee will be sufficient. Roy v. Rowe, 90 Ind. 54; Mills v. Franklin, 128 Ind. 444. See Lennen v. Craig, 95 Ind. 167; Morgan v. McNeeley, 126 Ind. 537; Robinson v. Randolph, 21 Fla. 629.

Where the land is devised expressly for life, the gift will not be enlarged merely by the absence of the gift over. Evan's Appeal, 51 Conn. 435.

Instances at Common Law.—By his will, executed prior to the Act of 1822, ch. 162, a testator devised certain real and personal property to his wife, to her use for the benefit of her and her children under age, and after they came of age to his wife during her natural life and no longer, and after her decease, the whole to be divided equally, share and share alike, between the seven children (naming them) of the testator, or equally between such as shall then be living. It was held that the children took estates for life only, there being no words of inheritance, or any language used from which the intention of the testator to pass a fee could be clearly ascertained. Moody v. Elliott, 1 Md. Ch. 290.

But see the following cases, where an intent to the contrary appeared: Thus, where a testator, by his will, after making certain specific bequests, ordered that all the rest of his estate, real and personal, should be sold by his executors, and converted into money as soon as convenient after the death of the testator, and the proceeds to be distributed among his children in the proportion of two shares to his son to one to a daughter, and that in the event of the death of any of the children, his legacy should not lapse, but should be divided among his or her issue in like proportions, and in default of issue, then among the surviving children of the testator, it was held that the children of the testator took an absolute estate and not a life interest merely, though there were no words of inheritance in their respective shares. Herbert v. Smith, 1 N. J. Eq. 141.

The introductory part of a will contained the following words: "As for my worldly estate, after my death, be disposed of in the manner following." By the third clause, the testator bequeathed to his son G., without words of inheritance, "thirty acres of land on which he now lives, my young black mare, $200 in six months after my decease, and one-sixth of the personal property not disposed of." By the fourth clause he gave and bequeathed to his son M. the home farm and a share of the personal estate, in precisely the same language with the bequest to G., but subject to a charge thereon. There was no residuary clause in regard to the real estate, as there was in respect to the personal. It was held that, looking at the entire will, it was clear the testator intended to give his son G. an estate in fee simple in the twenty-nine acres, although there were no words of perpetuity in the devise. Harris v. Slaght, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 470.

A. being seised of three tracts of land, F., C. and O., and entitled to an equity of redemption in a fourth, made his will, and after stating that "as touched his temporal estate he desires the same may be employed as follows," in the first place directed that all his just debts be paid; he then devised to his oldest son all his lands in F. and C., with some negroes and stock; to his other son all his lands in O., with some negroes and stock; to his wife and daughter, all the rest of his estate, real and personal; but no words of inheritance were annexed to any of the devises. It was held that the sons took estates in fee in the lands devised to them. Kennon v. M'Roberts, 1 Wash. (Va.) 96.

Passing of Fee By the Word "Estate."

—In a will at common law the word "estate" carries a fee where no contrary intent appears. Hammond v. Hammond, 8 Gill & J. (Md.) 441; Ferris v. Smith, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 221; Den v. Schenck, 8 N. J. L. 29; Morehouse v. Cotheal, 22 N. J. L. 430; Dewey v. Morgan, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 295; Hart v. White, 26 Vt. 260.

"I give unto my son R. all my real estate excepting such part as I give and grant unto my two daughters as hereafter mentioned." After making a devise to said daughters, he adds: "My will is, that if any of my children should happen to die without any issue alive, that such share or dividend shall be divided by the survivor of them." It was held that under the will, R. took a fee simple defeasible on specific conditions, that if he had no issue at his death, and his sisters survived him, they should take the estate. When the sisters died, the condition became impossible, and at that time it became an absolute fee simple in R. Den v. Schenck, 8 N. J. L. 29.

A testator began his will by expressing a desire "to dispose of all his worldly estate," etc.; then the clause materially affecting the question, was as follows: "I give to my wife Nancy T. Moon, the tract of land whereon I now live, containing two hundred acres, more or less; also two negroes (to wit: my man Stephen and my girl Harriet), during her natural life or widowhood," remainder over, etc. It was held that these subjects were disjoined, and that the general devise of the land carried the fee. Moon v. Moon, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 327.

In Hill v. Brown (1894), App. Cas. 125, it was held that although the words "estate" "property," or their equivalent, in the operative part of the devise, would enlarge the gift, when used in another part of the will, as words of reference only, they would not have that effect.

Fee Simple Implied from Personal Charge—On Devisees.—The following are cases in which it was held that at common law, where there are no words of limitation or inheritance in a devise of land, and the estate, with or without the personal property, is charged with the payment of a debt or legacy, the devisee takes but an estate for life, but if the charge be upon the devisee personally, he takes an estate in fee. McLellan v. Turner, 15 Me. 436; Var- ney v. Stevens, 22 Me. 331; Harvey v. Olmsted, 1 N. Y. 483; Snyder v. Nesbeth, 77 Md. 576.

A testator, whose will took effect in 1822, after making sundry devises, and among others, to his son M., devised the residue of his real estate, without words of perpetuity, to his son R., on condition that he should pay his debts, and a legacy to his daughter; and added that, if R. should die with issue at his decease, the real estate should be equally divided among the heirs of his said son M. It was held that R. took a fee by implication, on account of the charge upon him of the debts and legacy. Heard v. Horton, 1 Den (N. Y.) 105.

Instances Under Statute.—A will contained the following words: "I give and bequeath unto my son R., my home plantation, including all the lots purchased thereto, and my will is that if he shall die without issue, then at his decease the said plantation, with all the improvements thereon, shall be divided into equal parts, the one half thereof I give and bequeath to G. and S. in trust, that they do convey and assign the said equal half part," etc. It was held that, by the Act of 1784, New Jersey Rev. Laws 60, the testator intended that G. should have the whole plantation in fee simple in case he had issue, and that, at all events, he should be the absolute owner of one half of it. Den v. Snitcher, 14 N. J. L. 53.

A testator, by his will, devised in consecutive clauses, first to A., then to C., each one half of certain lands, containing — acres, to themselves for life, with the power of disposing, and, in default, with remainder over. Afterward, by a codicil to said will, he employed the following language: "I do hereby revoke that portion of my will wherein I bequeathed to the within-named A. and C. the three tracts of land between them," and afterward continued: "I bequeath to the said A. the place whereon she now lives, adjoining Neuman's land, containing three hundred acres, under the contingencies, limitations, and restrictions mentioned in my said will;" and "I revoke that part of my said will wherein I leave to the said C. that land below Silver Bluff, being a portion of the three tracts of land, and, in lieu thereof, I leave her that whole tract adjoining the point, containing upwards of three hundred acres, the lowermost part of said land. The land between the two parcels I left to the said A. and C., I leave to the said M., son of the said G." It was held that the devise to the said C. in the codicil was not merely a substitution of one tract of land for another, to be held by her for life only, and subject to the limitations of the original devise to her by the will of the testator, but by act of 1824 was a devise in fee. Bowers v. Newman, 2 McMull. (S. Car.) 472.

Where a Contrary Intent Is Manifest.—In Carroll v. Carroll, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 638, a bequest was made in the following language: "I give and bequeath to my beloved wife, Priscilla Carroll, the land on which I now live, and all other land I now have or may have hereafter; also, all my slaves, stock of all kinds, farming utensils of all descriptions, household and kitchen furniture, including all my estate, both real and personal. But should she and my executors hereafter named see proper to dispose of any part of any kind, they are at liberty to do so, and apply the proceeds thereof among my children or legatees hereafter named as may seem to them just and equitable, according to the following manner: I give to the children of my daughter Polly Creekbaum as one legatee, they being first charged with seventy-seven dollars, being the amount given to her by me in her lifetime." In this case the court, by Simpson, C. J., said: "The will proceeds in the same manner to point out which of his children the estate shall be given to, and how much each one is to be charged with, on account of advances previously made. The testator subsequently made a codicil, or, as he termed it, an appendage to his will, that reads as follows: 'It is my desire, in addition to what is bequeathed to my wife, that she and my executor are hereby authorized to sell and dispose of any of my real and personal estate they may think proper, and that my wife have as much of the proceeds of such sale as she may desire for her own use and benefit, and the overplus, if any, to be applied in manner as I have directed in the first part of the will on that subject.'"

No principle was more fairly established by the common law than that a devise of real estate without words of limitation or inheritance, conferred upon the devisee an estate for life only. But the courts in many cases, where the estate devised was not expressly defined, adopted certain rules of construction, to enlarge the estate to a fee simple where such appeared or might reasonably be inferred, to have been the intention of the testator. But this technical principle of the common law has been changed in this as well as in nearly every other state in the Union, by legislative enactments. By the eleventh section of our statute of 1796, to reduce into one the several acts for regulating conveyances (1 Kentucky Stat. Law 443), it was enacted that 'every estate in land, which shall hereafter be granted, conveyed, or devised to one, although other words heretofore necessary to transfer an estate of inheritance be not added, shall be deemed a fee simple, if a less estate be not limited by express words, or do not appear to have been granted, conveyed, or devised by construction or operation of law.' The effect of this enactment is to change the rule of construction, and make an indefinite devise, without any words of perpetuity annexed, pass an estate in fee simple to the devisee. But it does not wholly preclude the question from arising upon wills which contain an indefinite devise without words of limitation. Whether an estate in fee simple passes to the devisee, or only an estate for life, it is still a question of intention, but the rule of construction is reversed. Formerly, an estate for life only would pass by an indefinite devise, unless a contrary intention could be inferred from the will. Now an estate in fee will pass by such a devise, unless an intention to pass a less estate appear by construction or operation of law. The operation of an indefinite devise is enlarged, where it stands alone, and unaffected, by anything contained in the context. But the effect of such a devise still depends upon the intention of the testator, to be gathered from his whole will, according to the settled rules of legal construction. . . .

So, in the present case, the devise to the wife being indefinite and not expressly for life, it would have vested in her the fee-simple title to the estate devised, if a contrary intention did not certainly and manifestly appear. As the testator designated such of his children as were to be his legatees, and fixed the amount with which they were to be charged in the division of the estate, on account of previous advancements, and directed the sale money to be paid to them, if his wife and his executors chose to sell any part of the property, unless she desired to use a part of it, which she was permitted to do, no doubt

b. EXPRESSIONS WHICH PASS AN ESTATE TAIL—(1) Devise to A, and the Heirs of His Body.—A limitation to the devisee and the heirs of his body is the most apt and proper expression to pass an estate tail to the devisee.

(2) Devise to A, and His Issue.—See ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 879.

(3) Devise to A for Life and After His Decease to His Issue.—See ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 886.

(4) Devise to A, or to A for Life, or to A and His Heirs, and if He Die Without Issue Over.—See ISSUE, vol. 11, pp. 899, 921.

(5) Devise to A and His Children—Rule in Wild's Case.—A simple devise to A and his children, where A has no children at the time of the devise, gives him an estate tail, under the rule in Wild's case.¹ But if there are any children living at the time can exist that he intended them to have the property devised, after the death of his wife. The law, therefore, although there is no express devise over, vests in them, by implication, an estate in fee in remainder, in the property devised, after the death of the wife. To give effect to this implied devise over, the devise to the wife is limited by operation of law to an estate for life. Thus, the intention of the testator, instead of being defeated, is effectuated, the accomplishment of which purpose is the prime object of all the rules of construction which have been adopted on the subject." See Hammond v. Hammond, 8 Gill & J. (Md.) 436.

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 334; Wild's Case, 6 Rep. 17; Clifford v. Koe, L. R., 5 App. Cas. 447. See Williams v. Duncan, 92 Ky. 125; Butler v. Ralston, 69 Ga. 485; Ellet v. Paxson, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 436; Wheatland v. Dodge, 10 Met. (Mass.) 504; Small v. Field, 102 Mo. 105; Hubbard v. Selser, 44 Miss. 712; Wiley v. Smith, 3 Ga. 551. For discussion of the rule in Wild's Case, and American authorities thereon, see ISSUE, vol. 11, pp. 879-884.

Thus, a testator made the following devise: "I leave in the hands of my executors, in trust, all the remainder of my land, etc., and I leave in the hands of my executors, in trust, one negro man, named Sam. The aforesaid land and negro above named in this item, left in trust for my sons G. and F., and their heirs. The house and lot in S., etc., I leave in trust with my executors, for my son G. and his children. I leave two lots, etc., with my executors, in trust for my son F. and his children; and if my sons G. and F. should die without having children, in that case the portion of property I leave for them in trust with my executors, returns back to my estate, to be equally divided among all the heirs named in this will." Neither G. nor F. had at the time any child. It was held, that G. and F. took an estate tail, with remainder to the heirs named in the will. Wiley v. Smith, 3 Ga. 551.

"The rule applies, though the testator may expressly give the parent a power of appointing the property in question among his children. Seale v. Barter, 2 Bos. & P. 485; Clifford v. Brooke, 1 R., 10 C. Y. 179; L. R., 2 Ir. 184; nom. Clifford v. Koe, L. R., 5 App. Cas. 447. See In re Moyles' Estate, L. R., 1 Ir. 155." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 334.

In Seale v. Barter, 2 Bos. & P. 485, the testator devised all his estates to his son J. S., and his children lawfully to be begotten, with power for him to settle the same by will or otherwise on such of them as he should think proper; and for default of such issue then to his daughter E. S., and her children lawfully to be begotten, with a similar power; and in default of such issue, to J. S. and E. S. equally between them; and he further provided that a settlement of £200 per annum should be made on any woman whom his son should happen to marry; and that his estates should be chargeable therewith. At the time of making the devise, J. S. was married, but had no child. It was held that J. S. took "an estate tail, with a power to settle the estates on all or any of his issue in such a way as he should appoint; and thereby determine the estate tail so far as it should be inconsistent with such settlement." In this case Lord Alvanley said: "On the part of the defendants it has been contended, that admitting the of the devise, the word "children" is prima facie construed a word of purchase, and A and the children take concurrently.¹

(6) Devise to A and His Sons in Tail Male, and for Want of Such Issue Over.—By analogy to the rule in Wild's case, a devise to A and his sons in tail male, and for want of such issue male general doctrine that a devise to a man and his children, he having no children at the time of the devise, must embrace all the posterity of the devisee, yet that it appears from the circumstances of this particular case that the testator did not intend so to limit his estate; and in the course of the argument the power given to John Seale to settle the estate on such of his children as he should think proper was mainly relied upon, and contended to be inconsistent with a devise of an estate tail to John Seale himself. It was urged that the power would be altogether unnecessary if an estate tail were already given, since it would be in the power of the tenant in tail to dispose of the whole estate in such manner as he should think fit, by cutting off the entail. But it may be observed that the power had some operation, since it enabled the devisee to dispose of the estate to his children without going through the forms of a recovery. Independent, however, of the operation of this power, I think there is a fallacy in the argument; for it supposes that the testator knew the legal consequences of all the words which he had used, and all the privileges attached to a tenancy in tail. The same argument was urged in the great case of Perryn v. Blake; and in the Exchequer Chamber, Mr. Baron Perrot exposed the fallacy of it; and it was agreed that a testator cannot be presumed to know the different privileges annexed to the several estates of tenant for life or tenant in tail. The true question to be considered is, whether the testator meant to give the estate to John Seale and his posterity? Probably, if it had been asked of the testator whether he meant that his son should have a power to defeat the limitation, he would have answered, that he did not understand the effect of an estate tail, but that he wished the estate to go to his son and his posterity. If he meant to give his estate to his son and his posterity generally, it is an estate tail; on the other hand, if he meant to give it first to his son, and afterwards to select the sons and daughters of his son in order to give the estate to them, the son took only an estate for life. Now, we are of opinion, upon all the authorities, that the words 'children lawfully to be begotten,' in this case, are not to be considered as words of purchase, but that the intention of the testator was to give his estate to his son and the issue of his body generally. And though perhaps the power would not have been added had the testator known the full effect of the words which he has used, yet we do not think the power sufficient to control the effect which, according to the authorities referred to, has always been given to those words. We give no opinion what would have been the case if there had been children born at the time of the devise."

"There may, however, be an intention shown that the parent was not to take an estate tail. Thus, in Buffar v. Bradford, 2 Atk. 220, the testator showed that he contemplated the mother and children as taking joint interests at a period subsequent to his death. And in Grieve v. Grieve, L. R., 4 Eq. 180, where there was a devise of a house to the testator's nieces and their children, and if they have not any, over, a direction that the furniture was to go with the house, was held sufficient to show that an estate tail could not have been intended." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 334.

1. See infra, this title, Concurrent and Successive Interests.

"If there are any children living at the time of the devise, the term children is prima facie not a word of limitation. Byng v. Byng, 10 H. L. Cas. 171; Oates v. Jackson, 2 Stra. 1172; Jeffery v. Honynwood, 4 Madd. 211; Jones v. Jones, 13 N. J. Eq. 236; Wilde's Case, 6 Coke 16. But this rule bends to evidence of a contrary intention; thus, a direction that certain things are to go as heirlooms with the estate, is sufficient to rebut a joint tenancy, and to show that an estate tail was intended to be given. Byng v. Byng 10 H. L. Cas. 171. Jones v. Jones, 13 N. J. Eq. 236." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 334. See Allen v. Hoyt, 5 Met. (Mass.) 324.

over, has been held, where A has no sons, to give him an estate tail.¹

c. DEVISE TO A FOR LIFE, AND AFTER HIS DECEASE TO HIS HEIRS OR THE HEIRS OF HIS BODY—RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE.—See SHELLEY'S CASE, vol. 22, p. 493.

d. EFFECT OF A GENERAL POWER OF DISPOSITION AFTER A PRIOR LIFE ESTATE.—See REMAINDERS, vol. 20, p. 958.

19. Absolute Interests in Personality—a. GIFT TO A AND HIS EXECUTORS OR REPRESENTATIVES.—A gift to A and his executors, or to A and his representatives,² or to A for life, and then to his

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 335; Wharton v. Gresham, 2 W. Bl. 1083. Compare Sparling v. Parker, 29 Beav. 450.

2. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 370; Lugar v. Harman, 1 Cox 250; Taylor v. Beverley, 1 Coll. 108; Appleton v. Rowley, L. R., 8 Eq. 139; Price v. Strange, 6 Madd. 104. See Topping v. Howard, 4 De G. & S. 268; Cox v. Curwen, 118 Mass. 108; Brent v. Washington, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 529.

Representatives, Personal Representatives—Legal Personal Representatives.—“The words representatives, legal representatives, personal representatives, or legal personal representatives, must, in the absence of other controlling words, be taken to mean persons claiming as executors or administrators. In re Crawford's Trust, 2 Drew. 230; Hinchcliffe v. Westwood, 2 De G. & S. 216; Dixon v. Dixon, 24 Beav. 129; In re Turner, 2 D. & S. 501; Smith v. Barneby, 2 Colly. 728; Wyndham's Trusts, L. R., 1 Eq. 290; Alger v. Parrott, L. R., 3 Eq. 328; In re Best's Settlement, L. R., 18 Eq. 686. If, however, there is an indication of intention that the representatives are to take beneficially and not in any fiduciary capacity, the words can hardly be referred to executors or administrators, and they will generally mean statutory next of kin, including a widow, but not a husband. Cotton v. Cotton, 2 Beav. 67; Smith v. Palmer, 7 Hare 225; Holloway v. Radcliffe, 23 Beav. 163; King v. Cleaveland, 26 Beav. 166; 4 De G. & J. 477. It would seem that by analogy to the case of heirs, the statute would fix the proportions as well as the persons, and that Walker v. Camden, 16 Sim. 329, would not now be followed.

“1. If the gift is substitutional, as for instance, to A or his legal representatives, or even to A, and if he dies before me to his representatives, there is an a priori improbability that the testator meant to benefit the estate of the legatee if he died in his own lifetime, while the legatee himself could derive no benefit from the legacy unless he survived the testator, and therefore, representatives will be read as equivalent to statutory next of kin. Bridge v. Abbott, 3 Bro. C. C. 224; Cotton v. Cotton, 2 Beav. 67. See Hewetson v. Todhunter, 22 L. J. Ch. 76. And if the gift is to several related persons, or their respective representatives, representatives will mean descendants. Styth v. Monro, 6 Sim. 49. See Horaeppool v. Watson, 3 Ves. Jr. 383; Atherton v. Crowther, 19 Beav. 448; In re Booth, 1 W. N. 1877, 129.

“2. Where there is a prior life estate, the reasons for construing ‘legal representatives’ as next of kin do not apply. The substitutional words may be considered as inserted merely en abundantia cautela, to provide for the death of the legatee in the lifetime of the tenant for life. In re Crawford, 2 Drew. 242; In re Henderson, 28 Beav. 656; Hinchcliffe v. Westwood, 2 De G. & S. 216; Chapman v. Chapman, 33 Beav. 556; In re Turner, 2 D. & S. 501. The same is the case where there is a direct gift to A or his personal representatives, but the time of payment is postponed, or a gift to A, and if he dies before the whole is expended, to his representatives. Thompson v. Whitelock, 4 De G. & J. 490; Dixon v. Dixon, 24 Beav. 129.

“3. If there are words of distribution, such as ‘to and amongst,’ or ‘share and share alike,’ and similar expressions, showing that the ‘representatives’ are to take beneficially, the legacy will go to the statutory next of kin. King v. Cleaveland, 4 De G. & J. 477; Baines v. Ottey, 1 Myl. & K. 465; Smith v. Palmer, 7 Hare 225. This, executors or administrators or to his personal representatives, gives A the absolute interest.¹ But if the gift is to A expressly for life, and then to his executors or administrators for their own use and benefit, they take beneficially.²

b. GIFT TO A AND HIS HEIRS.—The better opinion is that under a gift to A and his heirs, A takes an absolute interest.³

however, does not apply where, the gift being to the representatives of several persons who take life interests, the words of distribution can be referred to the stirpes. Wing v. Wing, 24 W. R. 878.

"4. If the words executors and administrators have been used in other parts of the will, this is an argument to show that representatives must mean something else. Jennings v. Gallimore, 3 Ves. 146; King v. Cleaveland, 4 De G. & J. 477; Nicholson v. Wilson, 14 Sim. 549; Walker v. Camden, 16 Sim. 329; Briggs v. Upton, L. R., 7 Ch. 376.

"5. Where there is a direction to pay to personal representatives, the fact that an executor is appointed would be a strong argument in favor of next of kin. Robinson v. Smith, 6 Sim. 47; Walter v. Makin, 6 Sim. 148; Jennings v. Gallimore, 3 Ves. Jr. 146. See Briggs v. Upton, L. R., 7 Ch. 376.

"6. The same result will follow if there are words added to the term 'representatives' inconsistent with the meaning 'executors or administrators,' such as 'personal representatives or next of kin' (a); or 'such persons as would be the personal representatives of my daughter in case she had died unmarried' (b); or, 'legal personal representatives at the time of her death' (c); or, 'next legal or personal representatives' (d). Phillips v. Evans, 4 De G. & S. 188 (a); In re Gryll's Trusts, L. R., 6 Eq. 589 (b); Robinson v. Evans, 22 W. R. 199; 43 L. J. Ch. 82; Long v. Blackall, 3 Ves. Jr. 486 (c); Booth v. Vicars, 1 Colly. 6; Stockdale v. Nicholson, L. R., 4 Eq. 359 (d). Whether, in this latter case, the next of kin proper or the statutory next of kin take, see Booth v. Vicars, 1 Colly. 6; Stockdale v. Nicholson, L. R., 4 Eq. 359 (d). A gift to personal representatives per stirpes, and not per capita, has been held to mean descendants. Atherton v. Crowther, 19 Beav. 448. For a direction to pay to 'legal representatives according to the course of administration,' see Jennings v.

Gallimore, 3 Ves. Jr. 146; Briggs v. Upton, L. R., 7 Ch. 376. It would seem that the addition of the word assigns in a substitutional gift to heirs or representatives would make it impossible to construe these words as equivalent to next of kin. Graffley v. Humpage, 1 Beav. 46; Waite v. Temppler, 2 Sim. 524." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 283.

See further, upon the point, Thompson v. Young, 25 Md. 450; Johnson v. Johnstone, 12 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 260.

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 370; Atty. Gen'l v. Malkin, 2 Ph. 64; Saberton v. Skeels, 1 R. & M. 587; Alger v. Parrott, L. R., 3 Eq. 328; Avern v. Lloyd, L. R., 5 Eq. 383; Wing v. Wing, 24 W. R. 878.

2. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 370; Sanders v. Franks, 2 Madd. 418; Wallis v. Taylor, 8 Sim. 241. See Stocks v. Dodsley, 1 Keen 325.

Gift to Executors in Default of Appointment.—"A gift to A for life with power to appoint by will, and in default of appointment to his executors and administrators, gives an absolute interest and entitles the donee to immediate payment, and it is apparently not necessary that the power shall be released." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 371; Devall v. Dickens, 9 Jur. 550; Page v. Soper, 11 Hare 321.

3. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 371.

Construction of the Word Heirs in Bequests of Personality.—Upon this subject, Theobald lays down the following propositions: "1. A bequest of personality to the right heirs, or to the heirs at law, or the next heir of an individual, prima facie goes to such heir as persona designata, whether the bequest be to the heirs of the testator or of a stranger. Mounsey v. Blamire, 4 Russ. 384; Hamilton v. Mills, 29 Beav. 193; De Beauvoir v. De Beauvoir, 3 H. L. Cas. 524; In re Rootes, 1 D. & S. 228; Southgate v. Clinch, 27 L. J. Ch. 651; 4 Jur. N. S. 428. The rule applies, a fortiori, to a mixed fund. De Beauvoir v. De Beauvoir, 3 H. L. Cas. 524; Boydell v.

Golightly, 14 Sim. 327; Todhunter v. Thompson, 26 W. R. 883.

"2. In the same way, if the gift is to A for life with remainder to his heirs, the heir, in the strict sense, is entitled. In re Dixon, 4 Prob. Div. 81; Smith v. Butcher, 10 Ch. Div. 113, disapproving Mounsey v. Blamire, 4 Russ. 384. The cases of Evans v. Salt, 6 Beav. 266; Low v. Smith, 25 L. J. Ch. 503; 2 Jur. N. S. 344; In re Peppitt's Estate, 36 L. T. N. S. 500, must be considered overruled, unless they can be supported on the special context in each case.

"3. But the word heirs may be controlled by the context, as in Re Gamboa's Trust, 4 K. & J. 757, where a bequest to 'the heirs of my late partner for losses sustained during the time that the business of the house was under my sole control,' went to the next of kin under the statutes; and in Re Newton's Trusts, L. R., 4 Eq. 171, where the bequest to 'the heirs and assigns of my deceased sister' was shown to be quasi substitutional by other limitations to the testator's living brothers and sisters and their heirs and assigns; and see In re Steevens' Trusts, L. R., 15 Eq. 110, as to which case quare. Where the intention is to give A the absolute interest, the word heirs has been held equivalent to executors and administrators. Powell v. Boggis, 35 Beav. 535, where the gift was to A for life, then to her heirs as she shall give it by will, and if she dies without a will, to her right heirs. And, where the testator directs a division amongst the several heirs of tenants for life, who are related to each other, so that heirs cannot mean next of kin, heirs will mean children. Bull v. Comberbach, 25 Beav. 540. See Roberts v. Edwards, 33 Beav. 259.

"4. In a gift to A or his heirs, heirs means the persons entitled under the statute. Vaux v. Henderson, 1 J. & W. 388; Gittings v. M'Dermott, 2 Myl. & K. 69; Jacobs v. Jacobs, 16 Beav. 557; Doody v. Higgins, 9 Hare App. 32; 2 K. & J. 729; In re Craven, 23 Beav. 333; Powell v. Boggis, 35 Beav. 535; Parsons v. Parsons, L. R., 8 Eq. 260; Neilson v. Monro, 27 W. R. 936. If real and personal estate are given together to persons or their heirs, but the realty is not converted, the realty goes to the heir, and the personality to the statutory next of kin. Wingfield v. Wingfield, 9 Ch. Div. 658. In a bequest to children or their heirs, followed by a gift over, if all the children die without issue, the word heirs has been held to mean issue. Speakman v. Speakman, 8 Hare 180, and see Roberts v. Edwards, 12 W. R. 33. In a bequest to A or the heirs of his body, heirs of the body means such of the persons entitled under the statute as may be descendants of A. Pattenden v. Hobson, 17 Jur. 406; 22 L. J. Ch. 697. A widow is included in the persons entitled under the statute, and the statute fixes not only the persons but the proportions in which they take. In re Steevens' Trusts, L. R., 15 Eq. 110; Jacobs v. Jacobs, 16 Beav. 557; Doody v. Higgins, 9 Hare App. 32. A bequest of personality to 'the heirs of next of kin of A,' has been construed as a gift to next of kin. In re Thompson's Trusts, 9 Ch. Div. 607." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 273.

See further, upon the subject, Eddings v. Long, 10 Ala. 205; Peacock v. Albin, 39 Ind. 25; Rusing v. Rusing, 25 Ind. 63; Lord v. Bourne, 63 Me. 368; Morton v. Barrett, 22 Me. 257; Mace v. Cushman, 45 Me. 250; Daggett v. Slack, 8 Met. (Mass.) 450; Tillinghast v. Cook, 9 Met. (Mass.) 147; Bassett v. Granger, 100 Mass. 348; Holbrook v. Harrington, 16 Gray (Mass.) 102; Balcom v. Haynes, 14 Allen (Mass.) 205; Houghton v. Kendall, 7 Allen (Mass.) 76; Loring v. Thorndike, 5 Allen (Mass.) 257; Clarke v. Cordis, 4 Allen (Mass.) 480; Haley v. Boston, 108 Mass. 579; Bailey v. Bailey, 25 Mich. 185; Scudder v. Vandersdale, 13 N. J. Eq. 109; Cushman v. Horton, 59 N. Y. 149; Heard v. Horton, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 168; Whitehead v. Lassiter, 4 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 79; Freeman v. Knight, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 75; McCabe v. Sprull, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 189; Kiser v. Kiser, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 28; Corbitt v. Corbitt, 1 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 114; Henderson v. Henderson, 1 Jones (N. Car.) 221; Nelson v. Blue, 63 N. Car. 660; Ferguson v. Steuart, 14 Ohio 140; Heyward v. Heyward, 7 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 289; Templeton v. Walker, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 543; Evans v. Godbold, 6 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 26; Evans v. Harlee, 9 Rich. (S. Car.) 501; Hay v. Hay, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 378; Addison v. Addison, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 58; Basikin's Appeal, 3 Pa. St. 305; Guthrie's Appeal, 37 Pa. St. 9; Chew's Appeal, 37 Pa. St. 23; Porter's Appeal, 45 Pa. St. 201; Ingram v. Smith, 1 Head (Tenn.) 411; Ward v. Saunders, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 391.

c. GIFT TO A AND THE HEIRS OF HIS BODY.—Under such a limitation, A takes an absolute interest.¹

d. GIFT TO A AND HIS ISSUE.—See ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 879.

e. GIFT TO A FOR LIFE, AND AFTER HIS DECEASE TO HIS ISSUE.—See ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 890.

f. GIFT TO A AS TO A FOR LIFE, OR TO A FOR LIFE AND AFTER HIS DECEASE TO HIS ISSUE, WITH GIFT OVER IN DEFAULT OF ISSUE.—See ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 923.

g. GIFT TO A AND HIS CHILDREN—RULE IN WILD'S CASE.—It has been held that the rule in Wild's Case does not apply to bequests of personality to A and his children.²

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 371; 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *562 and cases cited; Leventhorpe v. Ashlie, Rolle's Ab. 831, pl. 1; Searle v. Searle, 1 P.Wms. 290; Wright v. Scott, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 16; Goldsby v. Goldsby, 38 Ala. 404; Smith's Appeal, 23 Pa. St. 9; Pott's Appeal, 30 Pa. St. 168.

2. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 335; Audsley v. Horn, 1 De G. F. & J. 226. In this case personality was bequeathed to the testator's daughter during her life, and at her death to her daughter and to the granddaughter's children, but if they should die without issue, then over. The granddaughter was unmarried at the dates of the will and of the testator's death, and had no child till after the death of the testator's daughter. It was held that the granddaughter took a life interest in the subject-matter of the bequest, with remainder to her children. Lord Campbell said: "The appellants mainly rely upon Wild's Case, 6 Rep. 17 (meaning the rule said to have been laid down in Wild's Case as the effect of particular words in a will applicable to real estate), and the general rule that words in a will, which would create an estate tail as to realty, will carry the absolute interest as to personality. This raises the vexed question, whether Wild's Case applies to personality. This question underwent much discussion in the case of Stokes v. Heron, 2 D. & W. 89, in which, when it came by appeal before the House of Lords, I took a part. As, in disposing of that case, there was no necessity for deciding that question, I forebore from giving any opinion upon it, and, along with Lord Cottenham, I wished the question still to be considered as open. Now I am prepared deliberately to say that, in my opinion, Wild's Case, 6 Rep. 17, does not apply to personal property. The general rule, that words in a will which create an estate tail in realty will give an absolute interest in personality, is founded upon the desire to give effect to the intention of the testator as far as the rules of law will permit. But the rule ought not to prevail where it would entirely defeat the intention of the testator, and where, without any violation of the rules of law, the intention of the testator may be carried into effect. The resolution in Wild's Case, 6 Rep. 17, as to realty, entirely depends upon the desire to benefit the children as the testator intended, because an estate tail in the parent is the only medium by which they can take; and were it not for the power of cutting off the entail (which, in construing wills, is disregarded), the children must take. But as to personality, for the purpose of benefiting the children, the application of the rule is wholly unnecessary, and the application of it would entirely defeat the intention of the testator, for it would deprive the children of all right to any benefit under the will. With respect to personality, there are no technical rules arising from the feudal law to prevent the intention of the testator being literally carried into effect. Here the testator could not mean that Amelia and her children should take jointly; and he no doubt did mean that she should take for her life, and that her children should take at her death. Therefore, the same reason which, with respect to realty, requires that, under such words as are supposed in Wild's Case, 6 Rep. 17, the parent should take an estate tail, requires that, when they are applied to personality, the parent should take only an estate for life. Where an estate tail is given by such words applied to realty, an exception arises to the rule that words which give

h. RULE THAT WORDS WHICH CREATE AN ESTATE TAIL IN REALTY, CREATE AN ABSOLUTE INTEREST IN PERSONALTY.—The general rule of construction that words which would create an estate tail in a devise of real estate, create an absolute interest in personalty, cannot be received without some qualification,¹ for the inclination to construe the words "issue," "child," "son," and other informal expressions as words of limitation, is much weaker in reference to personal than real estate;² while the application of the rule in *Wild's Case*³ is extremely questionable⁴ and the rule in Shelley's Case does not apply.⁵

i. SUBSEQUENT RESTRICTIONS—GIFTS FOR A PARTICULAR PURPOSE.—If a testator leaves a legacy absolutely as regards his estate, but restricts the mode of the legatee's enjoyment of it to secure certain objects for the benefit of the legatee, upon failure of such objects the absolute gift prevails. But if there be no absolute gift as between the legatee and the estate, but particular modes of enjoyment are prescribed, and those modes of enjoyment fail, the legacy forms part of the testator's estate, as not having in such event been given away from it. In the latter case, the gift is only for a particular purpose; in the former, the purpose is the benefit of the legatee as to the whole amount of the legacy, and the directions and restrictions are to be considered as applicable to a sum no longer part of the testator's estate, but already the property of the legatee.⁶

an estate tail in realty, will give an absolute interest when applied to personalty; and this may be considered an exception which proves the rule, as it is supported by the reason on which the rule rests."

The question, however, is by no means free from doubt, and where the gift is to A and his issue, the better opinion sustains the application of the rule. For authorities upon both sides of the controversy, see Issue, vol. 11, p. 880 et seq. See also Cape v. Cape, 2 Y. & C. 543; Beales v. Crisford, 13 Sim. 594; Shearman v. Angel, Bailey Eq. (S. Car.) 357.

1. For instances in which the will has been recognized, see Mengel's Appeal, 61 Pa. St. 248; Smith's Appeal, 23 Pa. St. 9; Eichelberger v. Barnetz, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 293; Deane v. Hansford, 9 Leigh (Va.) 253; Goodwyn v. Taylor, 4 Call (Va.) 305; Clark v. Clark, 2 Head (Tenn.) 336; Duncan v. Martin, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 519; King v. Beck, 12 Ohio 390; Patterson v. Ellis, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 259; Clusin v. Williams, 29 Mo. 288; Halton v. Weems, 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 83; Dashiell v. Dashiell, 2 Harr. & G. (Md.) 127;

Kent v. Armstrong, 6 N. J. Eq. 648; Albee v. Carpenter, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 382; Darden v. Burns, 6 Ala. 365; Henry v. Felder, 2 McCord Eq. (S. Car.) 323; McLure v. Young, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 559; Weeks v. Weeks, 5 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 111; Bowman v. Tucker, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 648.

2. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *572. See Issue, vol. 11, p. 868; Gawler v. Cadby, Jac. 346; Malcolm v. Taylor, 2 R. & M. 416; Stone v. Maule, 2 Sim. 490. Compare Scott v. Scott, 15 Sim. 47; Mix v. Ray, 5 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 423; Bridges v. Wilkins, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 342.

3. 6 Co. 16 b.

4. See supra, this title, Gift to A. and His Children—Rule in Wild's Case.

5. Jessell, M. R., in Smith v. Butcher, L. R., 10 Ch. Div. 116. See also Issue, vol. 11, p. 890, Shelley's Case, Vol. 22, p. 493. Compare Powell v. Boggis, 35 Beav. 535; Comfort v. Brown, L. R., 10 Ch. Div. 146.

6. Lord Cottenham in Lassence v. Tierney, 1 Mac. & G. 551.

"Thus, if there is an absolute gift by will, and restrictions are imposed upon

j. EFFECT OF A GENERAL POWER OF DISPOSITION AFTER A PRIOR GIFT TO A, OR TO A FOR LIFE.—See REMAINDERS, vol. 20, p. 955.

k. GIFT OF INCOME INDEFINITELY.—A gift of the income of personal property, without limit as to time, carries the capital, where no other disposition of the capital is made.¹

20. Vesting—Whether a Gift Is Vested or Contingent—a. OF CONSTRUING AN INTEREST TO BE VESTED RATHER THAN CONTINGENT.—It is a fundamental rule of construction that in doubtful cases an interest shall, if possible, be construed to be vested in the first instance, rather than contingent, but if it cannot be construed as vested in the first instance, that at least it shall be con-

the legatee's enjoyment by a codicil, the absolute gift remains so far as the restrictions do not extend. Norman v. Kynaston, 3 De G. F. & J. 29; Watkins v. Weston, 3 De G. J. & S. 434. So where there is a valid appointment to objects of a power with limitations or restrictions which are beyond the power, the invalid restrictions may be rejected. Stephens v. Gadsden, 20 Beav. 463; Gerrard v. Butler, 20 Beav. 541; Churchill v. Churchill, L. R., 5 Eq. 44; Webb v. Sadler, L. R., 14 Eq. 533; L. R., 8 Ch. 419. But where there is no absolute gift, the legatees can take no more than is given them. Savage v. Tyers, L. R., 7 Ch. 356. The difficulty in these cases lies in ascertaining whether there is an absolute gift in the first instance or not. The question is, whether the original gift is qualified by the words in which it is given, Scawin v. Watson, 10 Beav. 200; Gompertz v. Gompertz, 2 Ph. 107; Harris v. Newton, 25 W. R. 228; 46 L. J. Ch. Div. 268; or whether there is an independent gift with a direction as to its mode of enjoyment. Campbell v. Brownrigg, 1 Ph. 301; Whittell v. Dudin, 2 J. & W. 279; Winckworth v. Winckworth, 8 Beav. 576; Mayer v. Townsend, 3 Beav. 443; McTear v. McDowell, 11 Ir. Ch. 338; Welply v. Comick, 16 Ir. Ch. 74; Kellett v. Kellett, L. R., 3 H. L. 160. When an absolute interest is cut down to a life estate, with a power of appointment among children, this does not mean that the absolute interest is to be cut down, only if the donee appoints, but if there are children, the donee is bound to appoint to them. Butler v. Gray, L. R., 5 Ch. 26." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 377.

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 374. See Humphrey v. Humphrey, 1 Sim.

N. S. 536; Watkins v. Weston, 32 Beav. 238; Fox v. Carr, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 566; Gulick v. Gulick, 27 N. J. Eq. 498; McMichael v. Hunt, 83 N. Car. 344. In Adamson v. Armitage, 19 Ves. Jr. 418, Sir William Grant said: "Prima facie a gift of the produce of a fund is a gift of that produce in perpetuity; and is consequently a gift of the fund itself, unless there is something upon the face of the will to show that such was not the intention."

"This is the case, though the gift may be to the separate use, or through the medium of a trust. Elton v. Shepherd, 1 Bro. C. C. 532; Phillips v. Chamberlaine, 4 Ves. 51; Rawlings v. Jennings, 13 Ves. Jr. 39; Boosey v. Gardner, 18 Beav. 471; Haig v. Sueiney, 1 Sim. & Stu. 487; Humphrey v. Humphrey, 1 Sim. N. S. 536; Watkins v. Weston, 32 Beav. 238; 3 De G. J. & S. 434; Penny v. Pippin, 15 W. R. 306. A gift of income during widowhood is a gift for life or during widowhood; but a gift of income to a legatee, so long as she should continue single and unmarried, has been held to be an absolute interest if the legatee did not marry. Rishton v. Cobb, 5 Myl. & C. 145. In the same way, a gift of the income of property, with a power super-added of disposing of it by will, is an absolute interest. Southouse v. Bate, 16 Beav. 132; Weale v. Ollive, 32 Beav. 421. The fact that legacies are given at the decease of the person to whom the income is given indefinitely, will only cut down the absolute interest to the extent of the legacies. Jenings v. Bailly, 17 Beav. 118. Upon similar principles, a gift of income to A for life, and then to B indefinitely, gives B the absolute interest. Clough v. Wynne, 2 Mad. 188. But a gift of income to B and C and the survivor of them, gives strued to become vested as early as possible.¹ This is perfectly consistent with the equally well-settled rule that an interest shall them only life interests. Blann v. Bell, 2 De G. M. & G. 775." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 374.

1. Smith Ex. Int., §§ 200, 201; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 400. See Doe v. Considine, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 458; McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 340; Pike v. Stephenson, 99 Mass. 188; Olney v. Hull, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 311; Ferson v. Dodge, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 287; Bowers v. Porter, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 108; Dingley v. Dingley, 5 Mass. 535; Furness v. Fox, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 134; Eldridge v. Eldridge, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 516; Winslow v. Goodwin, 7 Met. (Mass.) 363; Knowlton v. Sanderson, 141 Mass. 323; Blanchard v. Blanchard, 1 Allen (Mass.) 223; Blanchard v. Brooks, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 63; Shattuck v. Stedman, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 468; Straus v. Rost, 67 Md. 465; Crisp v. Crisp, 61 Md. 149; Taylor v. Mosher, 29 Md. 450; Waters v. Waters, 24 Md. 430; Toms v. Williams, 41 Mich. 552; Den v. Demarest, 21 N. J. L. 525; Monarque v. Monarque, 80 N. J. L. 320; Newberry v. Hinman, 49 Conn. 132; Beckley v. Leffingwell, 57 Conn. 163; Farnam v. Farnam, 53 Conn. 280; Collier's Will, 40 Mo. 321; Chew v. Keller, 100 Mo. 362; Rogers v. Rogers, 11 R. I. 38; Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 352; Goebel v. Wolf, 113 N. Y. 405; Moore v. Lyons, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 119; Black v. Williams, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 280; Byrnes v. Stillwell, 103 N. Y. 453; Arcularius v. Geisenhainer, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 64; Tucker v. Ball, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 94; Nodine v. Greenfield, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 544; Scott v. West, 63 Wis. 529; Baker v. McLeod, 79 Wis. 541; Touer v. Collins, 67 Iowa 369; Bruce v. Bissell, 119 Ind. 529; Davidson v. Bates, 111 Ind. 391; Harris v. Carpenter, 109 Ind. 540; Miller v. Keegan, 14 Ind. 502; Griffin v. Lynch, 16 Ind. 396; Davidson v. Hutchins, 112 Ind. 322; Linton v. Laycock, 33 Ohio St. 128; Stokes v. Van Wyck, 83 Va. 734; Cooper v. Hepburn, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 551; Peterson's Appeal, 88 Pa. St. 402; Womrath v. McCormick, 51 Pa. St. 504; Fulton v. Fulton, 2 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 28; Stook's Appeal, 20 Pa. St. 349; Buzby's Appeal, 61 Pa. St. 114; McCall's Appeal, 86 Pa. St. 254; McClure's Appeal, 72 Pa. St. 414; Chew's Appeal, 37 Pa. St. 23; Lantz v. Trusler, 37 Pa. St.

482; Young v. Stoner, 37 Pa. St. 105; Letchworth's Appeal, 30 Pa. St. 175; Manderson v. Lukens, 23 Pa. St. 31; Smith's Appeal, 23 Pa. St. 9; Braden v. Cannon, 1 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 60; Weatherhead v. Stoddard, 58 Vt. 623; Guyther v. Taylor, 3 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 323; Brinson v. Wharton, 8 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 80; Hilliard v. Kearney, Busb. Eq. (N. Car.) 221; Clanton v. Estes, 77 Ga. 352; Hudgens v. Wilkins, 77 Ga. 555; Legwin v. McRee, 79 Ga. 430; Wiggins v. Blount, 33 Ga. 409; Young v. McKinnie, 5 Fla. 542; Savage v. Benham, 17 Ala. 119; Foster v. Holland, 56 Ala. 474; Farley v. Gilmer, 12 Ala. 141; Watkins v. Quarles, 23 Ark. 191; Williamson v. Williamson, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 329; Roberts v. Brinker, 4 Dana (Ky.) 570; Bowling v. Dobyns, 5 Dana (Ky.) 434; In re Miller's Will, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 64; Bridgewater v. Gordon, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 5; McCartney v. Osburn, 118 Ill. 403; Scofield v. Olcott, 120 Ill. 362; Bunting v. Speaks, 3 L. R. A. 690; Cal. Civ. Code, § 1341; Williams v. Williams, 73 Cal. 99; Doe v. Perryn, 3 T. R. 484; Scott v. James, 4 Miss. 307; Bankhead v. Carlisle, 1 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 357; Britton v. Johnson, 2 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 430; Rivers v. Fripp, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 276; Kersh v. Yongue, 7 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 100; Smith v. Hilliard, 3 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 211; Doe v. Considine, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 458.

"The following reasons may be assigned for this rule:

"1. A contingent interest is generally more liable to be destroyed than one that is vested; and it is to be presumed, that a testator intends that species of limitation which will be most likely to secure the accomplishment of his plans.

"2. 'Testators that create contingent estates,' observes Lord Chief Justice Best (in Duffield v. Duffield, 1 Dow. & Cl. 195), 'often forget to make any provision for the preservation of their estates, and for the disposition of the rents and profits of the intermediate period between their deaths and the vesting of their estates. In such cases the estates descend to the heirs, who, knowing that they are to enjoy them only for a short period, and that they have obtained the possession of them from the inattention of, and not from the bounty of, the testator, or from the mistake of the professional man who drew the will, will make the most they can of them, during the time that they remain heirs, regardless of any injury that the estates may suffer from their conduct.'

"3. 'The rights of the different members of families not being ascertained while estates remain contingent, such families continue in an unsettled state, which is often productive of inconvenience, and sometimes of injury to them.'

"4. 'If the parents' attaining a certain age, be a condition precedent to the vesting estates, by the provision for death of their parents, before they are of that age, children lose estates which were intended for them, and which their relation to the testators may give them the strongest claim to. 'But' (adds the learned judge, as to the last-mentioned reason for construing a devise contingent), 'is it wise to encourage the marriage of infants, by making a provision for the children, however improvident, and however much in opposition to the wishes of their guardians such marriages may be contracted? The uncertainty of a provision for a family may occasion a pause, before the most important step in life be taken, which cannot be attended with lasting inconvenience, and may prevent lasting misery. Children will seldom suffer from estates remaining contingent until their parents attain the age of twenty-one, as few to whom such estates are given will have legitimate children before they are of age.'

"5. In other cases, where the interest is contingent on account of the person, and where, as we shall see hereafter, the interest is consequently untransmissible to the representatives of the person, in the event of his death before the condition is fulfilled, the same reason applies, and with more force, because not counterbalanced by the objections urged by the learned judge against construing an interest to be vested, which is apparently made contingent upon the attainment of the age of twenty-one.

"6. Where the vesting is apparently suspended till the attainment of a certain age, and there is no disposition of the interim income, and no provision for the maintenance of the person interested, if the interest is held to be contingent, he may be entirely left without the means of being educated and maintained, or without the means of being educated and maintained in a manner suitable to the fortune which in all probability he will afterwards possess." Smith Ex. Int., §§ 202-209.

In Duffield v. Duffield, 1 Dow. & Cl. 195, Best, C. J., said: "In consideration of these circumstances, the judges, from the earliest times, were always inclined to decide that estates devised were vested; and it has long been an established rule for the guidance of the courts of Westminster, in construing devises, that all estates are to be holden to be vested, except estates in the devise of which a condition precedent to the vesting is so clearly expressed that the courts cannot construe them as vested without deciding in direct opposition to the terms of the will. If there be the least doubt, advantage is to be taken of the circumstances occasioning the doubt; and what seems to make a condition, is holden to have only the effect of postponing the right of possession."

Instances of Vested Interests.—B. devised all his property to his wife for life; and after her decease, the payment of his debts, and the schooling of his two children, the balance of the estate to be equally divided between them. It was held that the two children took a vested remainder, subject to be divested to the extent of the charges for payment of the debts and schooling. Bowling v. Dobyns, 5 Dana (Ky.) 434.

A testator devised property, real and personal, to his wife, for life, and after her decease to his son, for life; "and from and immediately after the death of my wife and son, unto the issue of my said son living at the time of his death, who shall live to attain the full age of twenty-one years, or who, dying before that time, shall leave issue to live until the time at which the parent or parents, if alive, would have reached the full age of twenty-one years;" and in default of such issue, then over. The son died two years after the death of the testator, leaving two sons, R. and M. The wife died in 1844. R. died in 1850, aged twenty years, leaving a son, who died before his father could have arrived at the age of twenty-one. M., the other grandson of the testator, was eighteen years and six months old in May, 1851. It was held that the will gave a vested but defeasible interest, with immediate right to the rents and profits, to R., although he died under twenty-one years of age, and left no issue which lived until the time when his father, if he had lived, would have been twenty-one years of age. Rivers v. Fripp, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 276.

The profits of real and personal estate were, by will, to be applied to the support of F. for life, and at her decease the absolute right and title to the property was to be "released and confirmed unto the four present children of F., or the survivor or survivors of them, in equal shares, as tenants in common." The four children all died during the lifetime of the tenant for life. It was held that each one of the four children took a vested, transmissible interest, divested if he or she died in the lifetime of F., and one or more survived F.; but as they all died in the lifetime of F., their rights were not defeated. Kersh v. Yongue, 7 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 100.

By a will, specific legacies were given by the testator to his children, by name, and having given to his wife the entire residue of his estate, during widowhood, he proceeded as follows, viz., "which property I wish and devise, at the marriage or death of my beloved wife, to be equally divided amongst my children, as above named." It was held that the children took vested remainders upon the decease of the testator. Bankhead v. Carlisle, 1 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 357.

B. devised and bequeathed to his wife all the rest of his estate, both real and personal, during her widowhood; and when she married, such residue was to be equally divided between his children and his wife, share and share alike. It was held that this was a vested remainder in the children, and that, upon the decease of the widow without having married, the representatives of the children, who had died in her lifetime, were entitled to share equally with the surviving children. Brinson v. Wharton, 8 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 80.

A testator, by his will, ordered that his estate should all be kept together in the hands of his executors until his only daughter should become of age or be married, and then be divided equally between his wife and daughter; but in case the daughter should die without issue, then the whole estate, real and personal, to be given to the wife. It was held that the wife and daughter took vested legacies, each in one half of the testator's property. Scott v. James, 3 How. (Miss.) 307.

A testator, after devising to his wife all the income of all his real and personal estate during her natural life, devised to five of his children as follows: "All the property, both real and personal, that may be left at the death of my wife to be divided equally between the last five named children. And made further provision that, if any of the last five named children die before my wife, then the property to be equally divided between the survivors." It was held that the children named took vested remainders. Blanchard v. Blanchard, 1 Allen (Mass.) 223.

A testator provided, by means of a trust, for the annual support of his widow during her life, and also during the life of his said widow for the support of his daughter M., and the support, maintenance, and education of his minor children, out of the rents, incomes, dividends, and profits of his estate, real and personal, which he devised to two of his sons and their heirs, etc., upon the trusts and for the uses and purposes limited in the will; and the surplus of the said rents, etc., he devised "in trust that the whole of said surplus be divided annually amongst all my children who may be of the age of twenty-one years, or who may be married," etc. The will was made in 1857; the testator died in 1858, leaving a widow and eight children, of whom two were under the age of twenty-one years when the will was executed; one of these became of age before the death of the testator, the other some time after. Four were married when the will was executed. In 1859 one of the sons died, leaving a widow and children; another, one of the trustees, A. G. W., died in 1863, leaving also a widow and children. The said widow of the deceased trustee, having been appointed his executrix, and having qualified as such, filed a bill for an injunction to prevent such a distribution of the surplus rents, etc., in the hands of the surviving trustee, as would exclude the estate of her husband from a participation therein. It was held that the children of the testator who were of the age of twenty-one years, or married, at the time of his death, took vested interests in their shares of the surplus income from his estates from that time; and that the shares of those who attained twenty-one years, or married after his death, became vested in the happening of either of those events, and the share of A. G. W., survived to be construed to be contingent, if clearly so expressed, however absurd and inconvenient may be the consequences to which such a construction may lead, and however inconsistent with what it may be conjectured would have been the testator's actual meaning, if his attention had been drawn to those consequences.¹ These principles apply to the construction of limitations of both his personal representatives. Waters v. Waters, 24 Md. 430.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *821. See Holmes v. Craddock, 3 Ves. 317; Denn v. Bagshaw, 6 T. R. 512; Vick v. Suetter, 3 El. & Bl. 219; 77 E. C. L. 218; Wingrave v. Palgrave, 1 P. Wms. 401; Richardson v. Wheatland, 7 Met. (Mass.) 171; Illinois Land, etc., Co. v. Bonner, 75 Ill. 316; Otterback v. Bohrer, 87 Va. 548; Bailey v. Love, 67 Md. 592; Spencer, Petitioner, 16 R. I. 25; Perronneau v. Perronneau, 1 Desaus. (S. Car.) 521; Taylor v. Gould, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 388; Striker v. Mott, 28 N. Y. 82; Jarvis v. Wyatt, 4 Hawks. (N. Car.) 227; Hayes v. Tabor, 41 N. H. 521.

Thus, in Denn v. Bagshaw, 6 T. R. 512, as stated 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 821 where the devise was to the testator's only daughter M. for life, and after her decease to the first son of her body, if living at the time of her death, and the heirs male of such first son, remainder to the other sons successively in tail, and in like manner remainder to the testator's nephew in tail. M. had issue, an only son, who died in her lifetime, leaving issue. Whether such issue was entitled, under the devise in tail to this first son, was the question. It was contended for him, that the testator must have intended that the nephew, who was otherwise amply provided for by him, should not take until failure of all the descendants of his daughter; and that to accomplish this intention, the court would either construe the estate of the daughter to be an estate tail, or hold that an estate tail vested in the son on his birth; and that the words, "if living at the time of her death," merely marked the period when the remainder should commence in possession, as in the cases before discussed. But the court (reluctantly, on account of the hardship of the case) decided that the son not having survived his mother, his estate never arose. Lord Kenyon observed that the cases cited for him proceeded on informal words; whereas here correct and technical expressions were used throughout.

A testator, by his will, executed since the revised statutes took effect, made the following devise: "Fourthly, I do give, devise, and bequeath, to my beloved daughter A, wife of B, and such her child or children as shall at her decease be living, and shall have attained, or shall thereafter attain, the age of twenty-one years, all and singular the rest and residue of my real and personal estate and property of every description, of which I may die seised and possessed, or entitled unto, and the reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders, rents, issues, and profits thereof, to and for her sole and separate use, to all intents and purposes as though she were a feme sole and unmarried." It was held that the remainder to the children was not vested, but contingent. Taylor v. Gould, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 388.

A testator made a devise in the following language: "The whole of my property, personal as well as real estate, stock, and everything else, I give to my wife during her lifetime. My estate, rights, and titles are to be in the occupancy of my daughter G., with the appurtenances thereof. In case she has no children, and should die before her husband, he is to have the benefit of it during his lifetime. At his death, it is to be divided equally among the rest of my children. In case R. has children, it is secured to her and them forever." It was held that the testator's children, other than G., took no vested interest in the farm while it remained uncertain whether she would have a child. Woodruff v. Cook, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 304.

Bequest Under Misconception of Power of Disposition.—The fact that the testator has disposed of the property upon a certain event, only under the erroneous impression that his power of disposition was confined to such contingency, does not affect the construction. Doe v. Wilkinson, 2 T. R. 209; 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 824.

Exception.—If to construe the devise to be contingent would render nugatory a purpose clearly expressed by the testator, the court will struggle to avoid real and personal property,¹ although the vesting of the former is governed by the common law, and that of the latter by the rules derived from the civil, which differ from the principles of the common law in many important particulars.²

such construction. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 825; Bradford v. Foley, Dougl. 63; Quick v. Leach, 13 M. & W. 218.

Suggestions to Persons Taking Instructions for Wills as to Suspending the Vesting.—"Persons taking instructions for wills, in which the vesting is to depend on the devisee or the legatee attaining a particular age or living to a given period, should carefully ascertain that the possibility of his dying in the meantime, leaving issue, is in the testator's contemplation. It is probable that in general this event is overlooked; and that, if the testator's attention were drawn to the circumstance, he would either make the interest vest in the legatee, in case of his dying leaving issue before the prescribed age or period, or else substitute the issue in such event." 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *821 (note u).

1. Smith Ex. Int., § 216. See 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *821 et seq.; Hawkins on Wills 226, note; Teale v. Hathaway, 129 Mass. 164; Furness v. Fox, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 135; Guyther v. Taylor, 3 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 327; Reed v. Buckley, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 517; Foster v. Holland, 56 Ala. 480; Dale v. White, 33 Conn. 295; Johnes v. Beers, 57 Conn. 295; Taylor v. Mosher, 29 Md. 443.

2. Hawkins on Wills *223.
Distinction in Theory of Vested Interests in Real and Personal Property.—"The term 'to vest' has several senses, which it is important to distinguish. Originally the word had reference only to real estate. As applied to estates in land 'to vest' signifies the acquisition of a portion of the actual ownership or feudal possession of the land ('vestire seisinam dare in feodare, Spelman); the acquisition not of an estate in possession, but of an actual estate. The fee simple being supposed to be carved out into parts or divisions by the creation of particular estates, a grant to any person of one of these portions of the fee vested him with, or vested in him, an estate in the land. Thus 'vested' is nearly equivalent to 'possessed.' In this, its original, sense, 'vested' has no reference to the absence of conditionality or contingency. If an estate tail be limited to A, with remainder to B, the estate of B is a 'vested' remainder, not because the failure of issue of A is considered an event certain at some time or other to happen, as has been alleged (Smith's View of Executory Interests, section 192)—failure of issue of a person is an event altogether contingent—but because such a remainder vests in B an actual portion of the fee, though the time of its falling into possession is wholly contingent and uncertain. B is invested with a portion of the ownership of the land.

"All remainders, not vested, are in fact contingent, not as being necessarily limited on an uncertain event, but because their taking effect depends on the contingency of their happening to vest during the continuance of the particular estate which supports them, and which may determine at any moment. Thus 'vested' comes to mean the opposite of 'contingent,' or conditional. But the word itself refers, as has been said, not to contingency, but to possession.

"It is obvious that this division into 'vested' and 'contingent' fails when applied to future executory interests in land not taking effect as remainders. An executory devise, after a fee simple, cannot be said to be 'vested' as an estate until it vests in possession; yet it may be limited on an event absolutely certain to happen, and is, therefore, not contingent. When, therefore, Fearne (C. R. Introduction, p. 1) divides 'vested estates' into (1) estates vested in possession, and (2) 'estates vested in interest, as reversions, vested remainders, such executory devises, future uses, conditional limitations, and other future interests as are not referred to or made to depend on a period or event that is uncertain,' he uses the expression 'vested interest' in a different sense from that which it bears applied to a remainder. Thus, the word is already losing its original meaning.

"The rules and expressions relative to the vesting of personal estate have been derived in great measure from the civil law. In that system (see Domat, L. iv., tit. 2, § 9) legacies not immediately payable are divided into two

b. VESTING OF REALTY—(1) General Principles.—In devises of real estate, the rule that an interest is construed to be vested rather than contingent is applied, by ascertaining the persons to take under a specified description or in a given character at the death of the testator and not at the time of taking possession,¹ by classes: (1) legacies payable at a future time certain to arrive (as to which, dies legati was said cessisse, though not venisse); and (2) conditional legacies, or legacies payable on an event which might never happen. The former class was transmissible to the representatives of the legatee, if he died before the time of payment; the latter were not.

"In speaking of the civil-law rules, it is natural to use the term 'vested' to denote the former class of legacies, and 'contingent' to denote the latter. In the civil law, therefore, 'vested' is equivalent to unconditional and to transmissible; 'contingent' is equivalent to conditional and non-transmissible. But it is obvious that this division is wholly inapplicable to the English law of legacies, which allows future conditional interests to be transmitted to the representatives of the legatee, and which considers some kinds of conditional gifts as 'vested subject to be divested, i. e., subject to a condition subsequent and not precedent. By English law, contingent legacies may be transmissible (as, a legacy to A, if B returns from Rome), and vested legacies may be conditional (as, a legacy to A, with a gift over on his death under twenty-one). To retain, therefore, the civil-law definitions of 'vested' and 'contingent,' as equivalent respectively to 'transmissible' and 'non-transmissible,' as is done by Roper (Rop. on Leg., 4th ed.), vol. 1, p. 500, appears to be fallacious.

"The only definition that can be given of the word 'vested' in English law, as applied to future interests, other than remainders, is, that it means 'not subject to a condition precedent; 'what amounts to a condition precedent, the cases only can determine. As applied to remainders in land, the word retains its original sense, denoting the actual possession of an estate in the land. The rules as to the visiting of gifts by will differ according as the subject-matter is personal estate, real estate, or a legacy charged on land." Hawkins on Wills *221.

1. Hoxie v. Hoxie, 7 Paige (N. Y.)

187; Converse v. Kellogg, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 590.

Thus, where a testator devised his residuary estate, to be equally divided among the children of his two brothers, and his sister, when they should severally become of age, it was held that the children of the brothers and sister in esse upon the decease of the testator took immediate vested estates in possession, as tenants in common, and that the vesting of the estate of each was not dependent upon the contingency of his or her reaching the age of twenty-one. Hoxie v. Hoxie, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 187.

A testator devised by will, after the payment of his debts and some other legacies, to his children and their heirs, and to the children of such as should have died, per stirpes, the residue of his property to be divided equally among them, but the division was postponed till ten years after the wife's death. It was held that the children of the testator, living at his death, and the descendants of those who had died, took by the will a vested interest in the residuary estate upon the decease of the testator. Converse v. Kellogg, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 590.

The will of the testator contained the following clause: "I will and desire that the clear income of my estate, if anything remain after the application annually or otherwise of the several sums of money hereinbefore charged thereon, shall be invested in such manner as my trustees, or the survivor of them, shall think proper, and so on, from time to time, until a final distribution of my estate be made as hereinafter directed. Upon the death of my son William, I will and desire that a distribution of my estate be made among all my grandchildren, to wit: the children of my late son, James Mosher, and the children of my aforesaid son, William, provided any child he shall leave. All my said grandchildren to take per capita; reserving, however, in the hands of said trustees, for future distribution, if necessary, so much of my estate as will be sufficient to countervail or pay the several annuities or sums of holding that words which apparently impart condition merely postpone the right of possession,¹ by construing conditions to be money hereinafter provided for, to the several annuitants or persons hereinbefore named, until the same shall have ceased, when a final distribution shall be made in a manner aforesaid," with powers to the trustees to make any sale, disposition, or deed, of his estate and property, that might be requisite and proper for making such final distribution, and otherwise carrying into full effect the provisions of his will. At the date of the will, and at the death of the testator, in March, 1845, he had and left three grandchildren, the children of his deceased son, James, viz.: Imogene, Eliza and Theodore, the first of whom married J. T., Sr., and died in August, 1846, leaving the complainant, her only child and heir-at-law, and her husband who survived her. The testator left one other son, William, who was still living and had never had issue. By the memorandum executed in 1842, and adopted as a codicil in 1843, the testator directed that if his estate should accumulate beyond the amount required to pay the legacies in the will, his executors and trustees in their discretion should appropriate "a part of the surplus to Mrs. Eliza M. Mosher (the widow of his deceased son, James, and the grandmother of the complainant), for the benefit of her children until the estate shall be finally settled." On a bill filed by the child of the testator's deceased grandchild Imogene, it was held, first, that the children of J. M., deceased, the grandchildren of the testator, took under this will vested interests in the corpus of the estate with its accumulations, liable to be divested to the extent of letting in any child or children William might have and leave surviving him. Taylor v. Mosher, 29 Md. 444.

1. Fay v. Sylvester, 2 Gray (Mass.) 171; Barton v. Bigelow, 4 Gray (Mass.) 353; Tatem v. Tatem, 1 Miles (Pa.) 309; Converse v. Kellogg, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 590; Collier's Will, 40 Mo. 287; Lowe v. Barnett, 38 Miss. 329; Hancock v. Titus, 39 Miss. 224; Chighizola v. Le Baron, 21 Ala. 406; Kelly v. Gonce, 49 Ill. App. 82.

After paying debts with his personal estate, the testator devised his real estate to his wife, to be undivided, and enjoyed by her and his children till the youngest arrived at maturity; and if she married, to have £30 per annum, etc.; and all the children to have an equal share of his real and personal property, etc. It was held that the real estate vested in the children on the decease of the testator, though they did not come into possession till the youngest reached twenty-one, or the widow married. Tatem v. Tatem, 1 Miles (Pa.) 309.

A will contained these two clauses: "It is my will and request, that all my property, both real and personal, be kept together for the purpose of raising my children; also, that my wife Jane keep all the property together until they become of age, or marry, and in that case the one becoming of age or marrying to have an equal share, according to the valuation of my estate so left." "It is further my will, that my wife retain all my property, both real and personal, for the purpose above named, until my children become of age or marry, or during her widowhood; but, in case of her intermarriage with another person, it is then my will that the property so left be equally divided between her and the children." It was held that the children took a vested estate in the property immediately upon the decease of testator, and that neither by the first nor second clause was the distributive share of the widow taken away, and that she had a vested interest in such share, whether she married or not. Hancock v. Titus, 39 Miss. 224.

A testator ordered all his property to be kept in the hands of his executors until his youngest child should attain full age or marry, but allowing each of his children to have his or her share upon his or her becoming of age; that his executors should cultivate his plantation and apply the net profits, after paying plantation expenses and the clothing and education of his children, in the purchase of such other property as the "wants of his plantation should require," and that when his youngest child should arrive at full age or marry, "an equal division of all his property, real and personal, should be given to each of his children and his wife, allowing her a child's part of everything he should then own." The widow married a second husband and had issue, one child, and died; and before the youngest child of the testator subsequent rather than precedent so that the interest vests subject to a divesting contingency.¹

(2) Devise to Testator's Heir.—In the absence of a contrary intent, a devise by way of remainder to the testator's right heirs or heir at law, vests in the persons who answer the description at his death, and not at the expiration of the particular estates, and it seems that the mere fact that the first life tenant is also testator's heir does not affect the construction.²

(3) Devise to Youngest or Only Surviving Child, or Persons Sustaining a Particular Character.—A devise to youngest or only surviving child, or other person sustaining a particular character, vests in favor of the person answering to the description at the testator's death.³

reached full age or married, her said child by the second marriage petitioned for distribution of her portion in the estate. It was held that vested estates were given to the widow and children of the testator, to be enjoyed in severalty when the youngest child arrived at maturity or married. Lowe v. Barnett, 38 Miss. 329.

A testator devised and bequeathed the principal part of his property to trustees and their survivor, in trust to invest the same and disburse the income thereof, according to their judgment, for the support and education of all his children, whom he enumerated, and in trust further, when a given child, G., should arrive at the age of twenty-one, then to settle up the testator's estate and divide it equally among his said children. Before G. came of age, two of the other children died, one a minor, the other an adult. Upon a bill praying for directions in the management of the trust, it was held:

1. That the children did not take by appointment under the power conferred upon the trustees, but that each child took a vested interest under the will.

2. That the shares of the two who had died would descend to their heirs at law.

3. That the intention of the testator was merely to postpone the enjoyment of the distributive shares, not their vesting.

4. That it was not material that the property was not to be divided until a future period. Collier's Will, 40 Mo. 287.

By a will, the testator gave property, real and personal, "to and among all his sons, born or to be born," by his then wife, "to be equally divided amongst them, their heirs," etc.; and in case either of the children should die before the testator, leaving issue, such issue were to take the share to which their deceased parent would be entitled, if living; and concluded as follows: "And it is my will that the division of the said plantations, etc., shall not take place until the youngest of my said sons shall attain the age of twenty-one years." It was held that the legacies vested upon the decease of the testator, the division only being postponed. Taveau v. Ball, 1 McCord Eq. (S. Car.) 7.

1. Hawkins on Wills *237; Smith Ex. Int., § 210. Compare Kilgore v. Kilgore, 127 Ind. 276; Neeley v. Boyce, 128 Ind. 1; Scott v. West, 63 Wis. 529; Duncan v. Prentice, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 216; Passmore's Appeal, 23 Pa. St. 381.

2. Smith Ex. Int., §§ 210, 212; O'Keefe v. Jones, 13 Ves. Jr. 413. See Stokes v. Van Wyck, 83 Va. 724; Whall v. Converse, 146 Mass. 345; Childs v. Russell, 11 Met. (Mass.) 16. See Chomondeley v. Clinton, 2 J. & W. 1, where there was a contrary intent.

The effect of a remainder to "heirs at law then surviving" will depend upon whether the word "surviving" is to be referred to the testator's death or to the death of the life tenant. See Wood v. Bullard, 151 Mass. 335. See infra, this title, Survivorship—Words of Survivorship—To What Period Referred.

In some cases it seems to have been held that a remainder to "right heirs" is subject to the rules peculiar to gifts to classes. Ballentine v. Wood, 42 N. J. Eq. 552. Compare Richardson v. Wheatland, 7 Met. (Mass.) 175.

3. Smith Ex. Int., § 214; Driver v. Frank, 3 M. S. S. 25; Stert v. Platel, 5 Bing. N. Cas. 434; 35 E. C. L. 165.

Thus in Stert v. Platel, 5 Bing. N.

(4) Devise to A At, When, If, or Provided, He Attains Twenty-One.—In regard to the construction of the words at, if, when, provided, the following distinctions are sustained by the weight of authority:

1. Where there is no intermediate disposition of the estate or of the rents and profits thereof, and no gift over, a devise to A, or to A and his heirs, if or when he attains twenty-one, is contingent.¹

2. Under a devise to A, at, when, or if he attain twenty-one, if there is an intermediate disposition during minority to some third person, A takes an indefeasibly vested interest subject to the term, the gift being read as a devise to the third person for the term with remainder to A.²

Cas. 434; 35 E. C. L. 165, stated in Smith Ex. Int., § 214, a testator devised to A. H., for life; remainder to trustees to preserve, etc.; remainder to R. H., son of A. H., for life; remainder to trustees to preserve, etc.; remainder to the first and other sons of R. H., in tail male; with similar remainders to A. D. H., another son of A. H., and to his first and other sons. The will then proceeded thus: "And, in default of such issue, I devise the same premises unto such person, bearing the surname of H., as shall be the male relation nearest in blood to the said R. H., and to his heirs forever." It was held that the interest under the ultimate limitation, vested, at the death of the testator, in the person then answering that description; no particular time was pointed out, and the general rule requiring that a remainder should be construed to be vested, rather than contingent.

1. Briscoe v. Wickliffe, 6 Dana (Ky.) 161; Bigelow v. Bigelow, 19 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 554; Illinois Land, etc., Co. v. Bonner, 75 Ill. 316; Colt v. Hubbard, 33 Conn. 281; Travis v. Morrison, 28 Ala. 494.

"Cases, however, where the condition as to attaining a certain age forms part of the original devise, must be distinguished from those cases where the condition is contained in a separate direction; thus, where there has been an immediate devise followed by a clause directing that the devisee 'is not to be of age to receive this' till he attains a certain age, or that it is to become his property on attaining twenty-five, the devisee has taken a vested interest subject to be divested. Snow v. Poulton, 1 Keen 186; Attwater v. Attwater, 18 Beav. 330. "So, too, a devise to A, provided she lives to attain twenty-one, has been held vested subject to be divested. Simmonds v. Cocks, 29 Beav. 455, where the devise was after a life estate. Of course, when there is an express direction as to the period of vesting, nothing can vest before the appointed time; though, on the other hand, the question of vesting is not affected by a direction merely referring to the period of possession. Russell v. Buchanan, 2 C. & M. 561; 7 Sim. 628; Montgomery v. Woodley, 5 Ves. Jr. 522; Shrimpton v. Shrimpton, 31 Beav. 425." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 402. See REMAINDERS, vol. 20, p. 850.

Where land is devised to executors until the children marry, and when they marry with consent, conveyance to be made to them, a child takes a vested interest which passes to its devisee on its death unmarried. Toner v. Collins, 67 Iowa 369. So where a gift over to children is to take effect twenty years from the testator's death, or when the youngest child attains a particular age, whichever happens first, all take vested interests. Meyer v. Eisler, 29 Md. 28. See Linton v. Laycock, 33 Ohio St. 128.

2. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 402; Hawkins on Wills *237; Boraston's Case, 3 Rep. 19a; Goodtitle v. Whitby, 1 Burr. 228; In re Moltram, 10 Jur. N. S. 915; Doe v. Ewart, 7 Ad. & El. 636; 34 E. C. L. 187; Manfield v. Dugard, 1 Eq. Ab. 195, pl. 4; Phipps v. Ackers, 9 Cl. & F. 591; Illinois Land, etc., Co. v. Bonner, 75 Ill. 316; Sammis v. Sammis, 14 R. I. 129; Roome v. Phillips, 24 N. Y. 465; Meyer v. Eisler, 29 Md. 28. Compare Deichman v. Arndt, 49 N. J. Eq. 106; Watkins v. Quarles, 23 Ark. 188; Scott v. Logan, 23 Ark. 351. See Lowe v. Barnett, 38

3. Under a devise to A, at, when, or if he attain twenty-one, with a limitation over in case of death under age, A takes a vested interest subject to be divested upon his death under age.¹

Miss. 329; Hancock v. Titus, 39 Miss. 224; Rivers v. Fripp, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 276; Johnson v. Valentine, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 36; Danforth v. Talbot, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 629; Grigsby v. Breckinridge, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 629.

Thus, a devise was made by the testator to his wife until the son became twenty-one years old, then to him absolutely or, in case the mother marry, then her interest to cease, without any devise over in case of the decease of the son, or the marriage of the mother before the son's attaining the age of twenty-one. It was held that the son took a vested interest. Grigsby v. Breckinridge, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 629. Simpson, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the court, in this case, said: "The doctrine is well settled, that when a devise is made in words that are apparently creative of a future estate, and that even import a contingency, such words, if a prior interest has been carved out of the estate, will be construed as referring merely to the futurity of possession occasioned by the carving out of a prior interest, and as pointing out the determination of that interest, and not as designed to protract the vesting."

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 403; Hawkins on Wills *240; Edwards v. Hammond, 3 Lev. 132; Brunfield v. Crowder, 1 Bos. & P. N. R. 313. See Doe v. Nowell, 1 M. & S. 327; Hunt v. Moore, 14 East 601; Whitter v. Bremridge, L. R., 2 Eq. 736; Ackers v. Phipps, 3 Cl. & F. 691; 9 Cl. & F. 583; Beeckman v. Schermerhorn, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 181; Roome v. Phillips, 24 N. Y. 465; Hughes v. Hughes, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 115; Packard v. Packard, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 191; Rivers v. Fripp, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 278; Richardson v. Penicks, 21 Wash. L. Rep. 707. But see Sager v. Galloway, 113 Pa. St. 500, where such devise was held contingent.

Instances Illustrating the Rule.—A person bequeathed his property, both real and personal, to the children of his brother M., "providing either of them shall live to the age of twenty-one," and "if neither of them live to be twenty-one, it is my desire that my sister L. and sister B.'s children to have it between them equally." It was held that the bequest to the children of M. vested at the death of the testator, subject to be divested by the death of all these first takers before the age of twenty-one. Raney v. Heath, 2 Patt. & H. (Va.) 206.

A testator, after directing that B. should have a decent support out of his estate, so long as she remained at the house where she lived, gave to his two sons his real and personal estate, to be divided equally between them, if they should arrive at the age of maturity; otherwise to go to one of them. It was held that the sons took a vested interest in fee, determinable, as to the one who might die first, upon his dying under twenty-one. Packard v. Packard, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 191.

L., after giving a life estate to her husband of all her real and personal estate, devised premises to the intestate, her son, "if he should live until he is twenty-one, or marry," "and my husband should have departed this life," and in case of his (the son's) death under twenty-one, unmarried, then to M. The intestate died under twenty-one unmarried, after his father's death. It was held that the fee had vested in the intestate, as a present gift subject to the life estate of his father. Kelso v. Cumming, 1 Redf. (N. Y.) 392. Compare Mackie v. Alston, 2 De-saus. (S. Car.) 362, where the testator devised all his residuary estate, real and personal, to his daughter forever, when she should attain the age of twenty-one years, or marry, whichever should happen first. If she died before, he then devised over. The contingency was annexed to the estate, and so not vested.

"The argument in favor of vesting is still stronger, if the gift over is upon death before the given time, without issue. Finch v. Lane, L. R., 10 Eq. 501. The attainment by the devisees of the given age, is a certainty, provided they live long enough; if, however, the contingency is some other event, as remainder to A, if he survives B, the estate is not vested till the event happens, notwithstanding the gift over. Doe v. Scudamore, 2 Bos. & P. 289; Price v. Hall, L. R., 5 Eq. 399.

4. The two preceding rules apply to devise by way of executory trust.¹

5. A devise to A for life, and from and after his decease, to his son, if he shall have attained twenty-one, or as soon as he shall arrive at that age, with a gift over in default of his having a son, has been held to give the son a vested remainder in fee, subject to be divested by his death under age.²

6. It seems also that a devise to A for life, and after his decease, to B, if or provided he attain twenty-one, gives B a vested remainder, subject to be divested in case of death under age.³

And of course the gift over can have no effect where there is an express direction as to the time of vesting. Russell v. Buchanan, 2 C. & M. 561; 7 Sim. 628." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 403.

1. Stanley v. Stanley, 16 Ves. Jr. 491; Phipps v. Ackers, 9 C. & F. 583; Bull v. Pritchard, 5 Hare 571.

2. Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Ch. Div. 417; Roome v. Phillips, 24 N. Y. 463. But see Alexander v. Alexander, 16 C. B. 59; 81 E. C. L. 58.

In Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Ch. Div. 417, James, L. J., said: "There is a long category of cases, from very early times down to a very recent decision of the Master of the Rolls, in which the words 'if,' 'when,' 'so soon as' have been held from the context not really to import contingency in the sense of a condition precedent to the vesting, but to mean a proviso or condition subsequent, operating as a defeasance of an estate vested. And we should be well warranted by the authorities in so dealing with this case, inasmuch as the limitations were plainly intended to make a complete settlement of the property to a man for life, then to that man's eldest son on his attaining the age of twenty-one, with a remainder over to the other descendants (which would necessarily take effect on that son's dying under the prescribed age), with an ultimate remainder over to another branch of the family. But all doubt and difficulty are in this case removed by the fact that the gift is actually expressed to be what, without the express words, we should have implied it to be, viz., that the gift is expressed to be 'from and after' the death of the tenant for life. A man cannot have an estate 'from the death' if he is not to have it for several years after the death, and possibly not at all; and to construe the words as contingent we should have to strike out the word 'from,' and that, in order to make for the testator a most unreasonable will. But, taking the word 'from' in its natural meaning, and taking the words apparently contingent to have the meaning which has been given to them in so many cases, the whole thing becomes sensible and intelligible. Arriving at the conclusion that the estate to the son is a vested estate, liable to be divested if he should die under the age of twenty-one, that conclusion will dispose of every question now before us; for an indefinite devise with a gift over in the event of the devisee dying under the age of twenty-one, must be, on principle and authority, a devise in fee. An estate for life would necessarily determine by death at any time, and it would be absurd to attach to such an estate a defeasance in the event of death under the age of twenty-one."

A testator bequeathed a life interest in real estate to one, and, after termination thereof, devised the estate to his son, when he should "become twenty-one years of age, and become married and have children; and in case of his decease before that period, and after my father's decease," then over to other persons. It was held that, on the death of the devisee for life, the son's estate vested, and that he had the right to absolute possession upon attaining the age of twenty-one; or, also, if, before reaching that age, he should marry and have children, though in this latter case the estate would be subject to be divested upon the son's decease before he arrived at the age of twenty-one. Roome v. Phillips, 24 N. Y. 463.

3. Simmonds v. Cock, 29 Beav. 455. See Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Ch. Div. 410; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 403. But compare Blagrove v. Hancock, 16 Sim. 371; Van Camp v. Fowler (Supreme Ct.), 13 N. Y. Supp. 1.

(5) Gifts to Classes—(See REMAINDERS, vol. 20, p. 854).—A remainder to a class of children, if they attain twenty-one, or equally at twenty-one, is contingent,¹ unless there is a gift over, in which case, in analogy to a similar gift to an individual, it is held to be vested subject to be divested in case of death under age.² A devise to children who shall attain twenty-one, or to such children as shall attain twenty-one, is contingent whether there be a gift or not.³

1. Stewart, C. C., in Browne v. Browne, 3 Sm. & Gif. 568; Alexander v. Alexander, 16 C. B. 59; 81 E. C. L. 58. So a direction that real estate be reserved to children, to be divided among them when the youngest shall attain twenty-one, has been held contingent. Kingman v. Harmon, 131 Ill. 171; McCarty v. Osburn, 118 Ill. 408; contra, where the devise is distinct from direction to divide. Scott v. Logan, 23 Ark. 357; Lowe v. Barnett, 38 Miss. 329.

2. Randall v. Doe, 5 Dow. 202. See Browne v. Browne, 3 Sm. & Gif. 568; Rivers v. Fripp, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 276; Meyer v. Eisler, 29 Md. 28.

In Randall v. Doe, 5 Dow. 202, the testator devised probate estates to J. R., and on his decease "to and amongst his children lawfully begotten, equally, at the age of twenty-one, and their heirs, as tenants in common; but if only one child shall live to attain such age, to him or her, and his or her heirs, at his or her age of twenty-one years; and in case my said nephew shall die without lawful issue, or such lawful issue shall die before twenty-one," then over. It was held that the children of J. R. took a vested remainder.

Pennsylvania.—The fact that there is a gift over does not affect the construction. Sager v. Galloway, 113 Pa. St. 500.

Effect of Intermediate Gift—Boraston's Case.—In Meyer v. Eisler, 29 Md. 28, it was held that a devise of residue, consisting of real and personal estate, to trustees to be held in trust until the end of twenty years from the death of the testator, or until the youngest child became of age, whichever happened first, then the whole to be divided among the testator's children, gave the children a vested remainder upon the principle of Boraston's Case, 3 Rep. 19, as in the case of a similar limitation to an individual. See also Collier's Will, 40 Mo. 287; Lowe v. Barnett, 38 Miss. 329; Han- cock v. Titus, 39 Miss. 224. But compare Kingman v. Harmon, 131 Ill. 171.

3. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 404; Duffield v. Duffield, 3 Bligh N. S. 260; Stephens v. Stephens, Cas. temp. Talb. 228; Festing v. Allen, 12 M. & W. 279; Holmes v. Prescott, 10 Jur. N. S. 507; Rhodes v. Whitehead, 2 D. & S. 532; Price v. Hall, L. R., 5 Eq. 399; In re Edde's Trusts, L. R., 11 Eq. 559; Patching v. Barnett, 28 W. R. 886; McBride v. Smyth, 54 Pa. St. 245. See Nash v. Nash, 12 Allen (Mass.) 347; Thomson v. Ludington, 104 Mass. 193; Olney v. Hull, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 311; Crook's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 247; Fairfax's Appeal, 103 Pa. St. 171; Campbell v. Robertson, 62 Ga. 709. But see Rivers v. Fripp, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 276.

Thus, a testator devised the residue of his property to trustees until his youngest child, who might then be living, should reach twenty-one years of age, and when his youngest child, who might be living, should attain that age, he gave it to such of his children as might then be living, and their heirs. A child who died before that time took nothing under the devise. No vested interest was given, the devisees were contingent, and became vested, when the youngest child living arrived at the age of twenty-one, in such children as were then living. McBride v. Smyth, 54 Pa. St. 245.

In Browne v. Browne, 3 Sm. & Gif. 568, Stuart, V. C., held that a gift to such children as should attain twenty-one, followed by a gift over, was vested subject to be divested in case of death under age. But this view is hardly consistent with the weight of authority.

The rule that any provision in regard to a particular member of a class, affecting the time of vesting, applies to all the members of the class, is discussed in Tayloe v. Mosher, 29 Md. 455.

(6) An Estate to Commence on Certain Specified Events, Fails Unless All the Events Happen.—An estate limited to commence in certain specified events, will fail altogether unless those exact events happen. Thus, a gift, "if A shall die, living my wife, without leaving a widow, or any children, after his death and my wife's," to B, will fail if A survives the testator's wife, though he may die without leaving a widow or child.¹

(7) Devise After Payment of Debts.—A devise after payment of debts is vested, the words of postponement being construed only as creating a charge.²

c. VESTING OF LEGACIES PAYABLE OUT OF PERSONALTY.—The rules in regard to the vesting of legacies payable out of personalty are derived from the civil law and may be stated as follows:

(1) When the Gift and Time of Payment Are Distinct.—Where there is a clear gift distinct from a direction to pay when the legatee attains a given age, the direction to pay will not postpone the vesting; the gift being considered debitum in presenti; solvendum in futuro. Thus, a gift to A, payable at twenty-one, or to be paid at twenty-one, is vested, and it makes no difference whether the gift precedes or follows the direction to pay, provided a clear, immediate gift can be found in the will.³ The difficulty

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 404; Holmes v. Cradock, 3 Ves. Jr. 317; Shulman v. Smith, 6 Dav. 22; Dicken v. Clarke, 2 Y. & C. Exch. 572. See Grimball v. Patton, 70 Ala. 626; Cheesman v. Wilt, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 411; Black v. McAulay, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 375; Jenkins v. Van Schaak, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 242; Den v. Jacocks, 3 Murph. (N. Car.) 558.

"So if a testator recites that he will be entitled to property in certain events, and disposes of it, if those events happen, the property passes only upon the occurrence of such events, though, in fact, he may be entitled to the property in other events as well. Archbold v. Austin Gourlay, L. R., 5 Ir. 214. But in the case of successive limitations, 'where there is a limitation over which, though expressed in the form of a contingent limitation, is in fact dependent on a condition essential to the determination of the interests previously limited, notwithstanding the words in form import contingency, they mean no more in fact than that the person to take under the limitation over is to take subject to the interests previously limited.' Maddison v. Chapman, 4 K. & J. 719; 3 De G. & J. 536; Webb v. Hearing, Cro. Jac. 415; Pearsall v.

Simpson, 15 Ves. Jr. 29; Franks v. Price, 3 Beav. 182; 5 Bing. N. Cas. 37; 6 Scott 710; Chellen v. Martin, 21 W. R. 671; Edgeworth v. Edgeworth, L. R., 4 H. L. 35. Thus, if the devise is to A for life, remainder to B for life, and on the decease of B, if A be dead, to C in fee, C takes a vested remainder whether B survives A or not. Cases supra; see too Key v. Key, 4 De G. M. & G. 73; In re Betty Smith's Trusts, L. R., 1 Eq. 79. So a devise in remainder to a person for his life, if he shall be living when the prior limitations determine, is not contingent, nor will subsequent remainders be contingent upon the survivorship of the tenant for life. Leadbeater v. Cross, 2 Q. B. Div. 18. But to admit this construction, the limitation over must involve no incident, but what is essential to the determination of the estates previously limited. Maddison v. Chapman, 4 K. & J. 709; 3 De G. & J. 536." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 405.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *820; Carter v. Bamardiston, 1 P. Wms. 509. See Bagshaw v. Spencer, 1 Ves. 142; Bowling v. Dobyn, 5 Dana (Ky.) 434; Neeley v. Boyce, 128 Ind. 1.

3. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 410; 1

Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) 837; Bartholomew's Trusts, 1 M. & G. 354; Shrimpton v. Shrimpton, 31 Beav. 425; Lister v. Bradley, 1 Hare 12; Maher v. Maher, L. R., 1 Ir. 22; Jones v. Habersham, 107 U. S. 177. See Higgins v. Waller, 57 Ala. 400; Young v. McKinnie, 5 Fla. 542; Wardwell v. Hale, 161 Mass. 396; Hathaway v. Leary, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 264; Snow v. Snow, 49 Me. 164; Verrill v. Weymouth, 68 Me. 318; Willis v. Roberts, 48 Me. 257; Matter of Mahan, 98 N. Y. 372; Bushnell v. Carpenter, 92 N. Y. 273; Loder v. Hatfield, 71 N. Y. 92; Rathbone v. Dyckman, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 10; Wood v. Cone, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 471; Bowman's Appeal, 34 Pa. St. 19; McClure's Appeal, 72 Pa. St. 414; Bayard v. Atkins, 10 Pa. St. 18; Schwartz's Appeal, 119 Pa. St. 337; Lightner v. Lightner, 127 Pa. St. 468; Magoffin v. Patton, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 113; Brown v. Brown, 44 N. H. 281; Nelson v. Pomeroy, 64 Conn. 257; Farnam v. Farnam, 53 Conn. 281; Colt v. Hubbard, 33 Conn. 285; Blackburn v. Hawkins, 6 Ark. 58; Shattuck v. Stedman, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 468; Furness v. Fox, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 134; Warren v. Hembree, 8 Oregon 123; Green v. Green, 86 N. Car. 546; Perry v. Rhodes, 2 Murph. (N. Car.) 140; Caldwell v. Kinkead, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 231; Scofield v. Olcott, 120 Ill. 363; Hancock v. Titus, 39 Miss. 224; Lowe v. Barnett, 38 Miss. 229; Tucker v. Ball, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 94; Kearney v. Kearney, 17 N. J. Eq. 59; Dyson v. Repp, 29 Ind. 482.

Instances Illustrating the Rule.—A testator devised $6,000 to each of his children, to be paid to them as they attained lawful age, or were married; the residuum to be divided among all his children (naming them) when the youngest should arrive at age, to them, their heirs, etc. If any of the children died under age, the shares of such were to be divided among the survivors and their representatives. One of the children died under age; unmarried and intestate. The personal estate was all needed to pay the testator's debts and legacies to his wife and children, and the residue of the estate was real property; no other provision was made for the support of the minors. It was held that the $6,000 vested in the deceased child immediately on the decease of the testator, and his administrator was entitled to it, with interest from that time. Magoffin v. Patton, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 113.

Where a testator directed by his will, "All the residue of my property of every description, to be sold, at such time as my executor shall think most advantageous, the whole to be equally divided among my eight grandchildren as they come to lawful age, to wit, G., M., etc.," it was held that the legacy vested in the grandchildren upon the decease of the testator, and became payable on their arriving at full age. Haywood v. Rogers, 8 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 278.

A testator, by his will, ordered as follows: "I give and bequeath to S. the sum of $10,000, to be paid her on her reaching the age of sixteen years." It was held that the legatee took a vested interest in the legacy, liable to be defeated by her death before reaching the age of sixteen years. Kearney v. Kearney, 17 N. J. Eq. 59.

A testator, after ordering his executors to sell all his property, real and personal, and put the proceeds at interest, and after providing for his wife, directed that, after the decease of his wife, the money remaining should continue at interest, and that the interest should be appropriated to the maintenance of his daughter, who was then married, in case she should be left a widow, during her widowhood, and if the interest should be insufficient for that purpose, then the principal was to be applied in the same manner, and that, on the death or marriage of his daughter, all the moneys then remaining should be equally distributed among the children or legal heirs of such daughter, when they should arrive at full age. It was held that the children of the testator's daughter who were in esse at the time of her decease, took vested interests in their several shares of the accumulated funds, although the payment of their several shares was postponed until they became of age. Wood v. Cone, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 471.

By a codicil in a will, it was provided that whatsoever might fall to the lot of the testator's son M., "it is not to be given up to him, but is to be held and kept by my executors, and equally divided between his children, and paid over when they severally arrive at lawful age to receive it." One of the children of M. having died under age, without issue and intestate, it was held that the child's share, being a vested estate, passed absolutely to the father upon its death. Wallingford v. DeBell, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 551.

in such cases is to determine whether there is a substantive gift, and a direction to pay, or whether the only gift is in the direction to pay.¹ Words directing distribution or division are governed by the same principles as a direction to pay, and if engrafted upon a gift which, without them, would confer an immediate vesting, do not postpone vesting.² But it seems that the principle does not apply where a payment is to be made upon any other event, than the attainment of a given age.³ Thus, a legacy to A,

In Snow v. Snow, 49 Me. 159, a legacy to A to come into possession when he should arrive at twenty-one years, or at the death or marriage of the testator's widow, was held contingent. It has been held that the distinction between time annexed to the gift and to the payment is inapplicable to devises of realty. McCartney v. Ashburn, 118 Ill. 422. But compare Kingman v. Harmon, 13 Ill. 176; Lowe v. Barnett, 38 Miss. 329; Hancock v. Titus, 39 Miss. 224.

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 410. See, upon this point, Shunn v. Hobbs, 3 Drew. 93; Chaffers v. Abell, 3 Jur. 577; Williams v. Clark, 4 De G. & S. 472; Merry v. Hill, L. R., 8 Eq. 619; Major v. Major, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 819; Atmore v. Walker, 46 Fed. Rep. 429; VanCamp v. Fowler (Supreme Ct.), 13 N. Y. Supp. 1; Mumford v. Rochester, 4 Redf. (N. Y.) 451; Bushnell v. Carpenter, 92 N. Y. 270; Goebel v. Wolf, 113 N. Y. 405; McClure's Appeal, 72 Pa. St. 414; Schwartz's Appeal, 119 Pa. St. 337; Foster v. Holland, 56 Ala. 474; Furness v. Fox, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 134; Warren v. Hembree, 8 Oregon 123; Scofield v. Olcott, 120 Ill. 363.

"Of course, when there is a clear gift, a direction to accumulate the interest and to pay the principal and accumulations at twenty-one will not effect the vesting. Stretch v. Watkins, 1 Madd. 143; Blease v. Burgh, 2 Beav. 226; Breedon v. Tugman, 3 Myl. & K. 289." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 410.

Construction by Reference to Other Limitations.—"In doubtful cases the construction may be assisted by reference to other limitations; thus, where there was a gift for the children of a tenant for life, to be paid upon their attaining twenty-five, and if but one child, the whole to become the property of such only child, upon his attaining twenty-five, and be transmissible to his heirs, executors, or administrators, none of the children took vested interests before twenty-five, the gift, in the event of there being an only child, being clearly contingent. Judd v. Judd, 3 Sim. 525. See Hunter v. Judd, 4 Sim. 455; Merry v. Hill, L. R., 8 Eq. 619. Similarly, if the interest of an only child is clearly vested, this may show that a gift to all the children at twenty-one was meant to be vested, too. King v. Isaacson, 2 S. & G. 371. And it may appear from the context that the words 'to be paid' were meant to refer to vesting and not to payment. Martineau v. Rogers, 8 De G. M. & G. 328." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 410.

2. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *838; May v. Wood, 3 Bro. C. C. 471; Dale v. White, 33 Conn. 295; Watkins v. Quarles, 23 Ark. 179.

3. Must Be Only a Question of Time.—"The time when the legacy is to be paid must, however, be certain; that is to say, it must be certain that the time will come if the legatee lives long enough. No doubt it is uncertain whether a legatee will ever attain a given age, but since he must attain it if he lives, this latter contingency is disregarded. 'When the time annexed to the payment is merely eventual, and may or may not come, and the person dies before the contingency happens, I find no instance in this court where it has been held that the legacy at all events should be paid.' It becomes, in fact, a legacy upon condition, for dies incertus conditionem in testamento facit." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 411. See Scott v. West, 63 Wis. 566; Carper v. Crowl, 149 Ill. 465; Hall v. Wiggin (N. H. 1892), 29 Atl. Rep. 671. But compare Jones v. Habersham, 107 U. S. 174 (where payment was postponed until the completion of a writing); Schwartz's Appeal (Pa. 1888), 13 Atl. Rep. 212 (where payment was to be delayed until the legatee was worth $8,000.00); Loder v. Hatfield, 71 N. Y. 92 (where payment was to be made one year after the legatees married or left a household). See also Willett v.

to be paid upon marriage, is contingent,¹ unless interest be given.²

(2) When the Only Gift Is Founded in the Direction to Pay—Gift to One At, If, On, Upon, When, and After, Twenty-one.—When the only gift is to be found in the direction to pay or divide,³ or is in the form of a bequest to the legatee, at or if, or as and when he shall attain twenty-one, or from and after attaining twenty-one, time is regarded as annexed to the substance of the gift as distinguished from the payment, and the gift will not vest until the given age is attained.⁴

Rutter, 84 Ky. 317; Pennock v. Eagles, 102 Pa. St. 294; Farnam v. Farnam, 53 Conn. 281; Snow v. Snow, 49 Me. 159.

1. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 411, citing Atkins v. Hiccocks, 1 Atk. 500; Ellis v. Ellis, 1 S. & L. 1; Morgan v. Morgan, 4 De G. & S. 164; Cantillon's Minors, 16 Ir. Ch. 301; Corr v. Corr, 1 R., 7 Eq. 397; Malcolm v. O'Callaghan, 2 Madd. 523; Taylor v. Lambert, 2 Ch. Div. 177. See also 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *839. But see Loder v. Hatfield, 71 N. Y. 92.

2. Vize v. Stoney, 1 D. & W. 337; Booth v. Booth, 4 Ves. Jr. 399. See Boone v. Sinkler, 1 Bay (S. Car.) 369; Loder v. Hatfield, 71 N. Y. 92.

3. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *840; Leake v. Robinson, 2 Meriv. 363. See Murray v. Tancred, 10 Sim. 465; Mair v. Quilter, 2 Y. & C. C. 465; Boughton v. James, 1 Colly. 26; Walker v. Mower, 16 Beav. 365; Gardiner v. Slater, 25 Beav. 509; In re Bartholomew's Estate, 155 Pa. St. 314; Seibert's Appeal, 13 Pa. St. 503; Bowman's Appeal, 34 Pa. St. 23; Burd v. Burd, 40 Pa. St. 185; McClure's Appeal, 72 Pa. St. 414; Pleasonton's Appeal, 99 Pa. St. 363; Moore v. Smith, 9 Watts (Pa.) 407; Gorgar's Appeal (Pa. 1888), 12 Atl. Rep. 418; Scofield v. Olcott, 120 Ill. 363; Fulkerson v. Bullard, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 260; Phelps v. Phelps, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 121; Green v. Green, 86 N. Car. 546. Compare Perkins v. Clack, 3 Head (Tenn.) 734. This rule may be controlled by the general intent. Goebel v. Wolf, 113 N. Y. 405.

4. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 412. See 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *837, *838; Hanson v. Graham, 6 Ves. Jr. 239; Locke v. Lamb, L. R., 4 Eq. 372. See Cruse v. Bailey, 3 P. Wms. 20; Wrangham's Trust, 1 D. & S. 358; Smell v. Dee, 2 Salk. 415; Bruce v. Charlton, 13 Sim. 65; Clayton v.

Somers, 27 N. J. Eq. 230; Delafield v. Shipman, 103 N. Y. 468; Green v. Green, 86 N. Car. 546; Snow v. Snow, 49 Me. 159.

Thus B., by his will, gave to his wife "for her life a tract of land called the Red House, and three slaves; and after her death the land to be sold by my executor and the negroes to be hired out, until my youngest grandchild arrives at lawful age, and then sold and divided equally among my grandchildren, B., M., J. and M. J.; the proceeds of the land to be divided equally among the above mentioned children, or as many as may be living, as they come of age." It was held that the gift of the proceeds of the "Red House" did not vest at that period, but was contingent, and would vest only in those of the four grandchildren who attained their full age, the expression, "or as many as may be living as they come of age," qualifying the previous absolute gift. Haywood v. Rogers, 8 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 278.

"Courts of equity, in the construction of wills relating to personal estate, follow the rules of the civil law. By that law, when a legacy is given absolutely, and the payment is postponed to a future definite period, the court considers the time as annexed to the payment, and not to the gift of the legacy, and treats the legacy as debitum in presenti, solvendum in futuro. This rule being established, a question was made, whether, in the simple case of a direction to pay a legacy at a future period, without any gift of the legacy independently of that direction, the legacy would be transmissible to the representatives of the legatee dying before the time of payment; and the court, in that simple case, has sometimes considered the time of payment as annexed to the legacy itself, and not merely to the payment of it. But the court, in so deciding, has not, I conceive, intended to decide that the gift of a legacy, under the form of a direction to pay at a future time, or upon a given event, was less favorable to vesting than a simple and direct bequest of a legacy at a like future time, or upon a like event; but, in fact, has intended only to assimilate those cases to each other, and to distinguish both from the class of cases to which I first referred, in which there has been a gift of the legacy, and also a direction to pay at a future definite time distinct from that gift." Wigram, V. C., in Leeming v. Sherratt, 2 Hare 17. The application of the principle may be controlled by the construction placed upon other parts of the will. Goebel v. Wolf, 113 N. Y. 405. A legacy to A, "if he shall arrive to the age of twenty-one years, then to be paid over to him by my executor," has been held vested. Furness v. Fox, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 134. See Eldridge v. Eldridge, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 516; Winslow v. Goodwin, 7 Met. (Mass.) 363.

(3) Payment Postponed for Convenience of Testator, or to Let In Some Other Interest.—If, upon the whole will, the payment or distribution appear to be postponed, on account of the position of the property, or for the convenience of the estate, or to let in some other interest, the vesting will not be deferred even though the only gift is to be found in the direction to pay at a future time.¹ Thus, under a gift to A for life, with a direction afterwards to pay and transfer to his children or the children of someone else, the interests of the children vest on the testator's death.² So if the direction be to distribute after payment of debts.³

(4) Effect of Severance.—If the subject-matter of the bequest is to be at once separated from the rest of the estate, and vested in trustees for the benefit of the legatee, in trust to accumulate until the time of payment for the benefit of the legatee, the gift vests at once.⁴

(5) Gift of Intermediate Interest.—A gift of the whole interim interest upon the legacy, or upon the legatee's presumptive share, vests the principal.⁵

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *841; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 412; Hawkins on Wills *232; Bennett's Trust, 3 K. & J. 280; Strother v. Dutton, 1 De G. & J. 675; Hallifax v. Wilson, 16 Ves. Jr. 171; Leeming v. Sherratt, 2 Hare 14; Packham v. Gregory, 4 Hare 396; McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 378; Loder v. Hatfield, 71 N. Y. 92; Harris v. Fly, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 421; Fuller v. Win- throp, 3 Allen (Mass.) 51; Collier v. Grimesey, 36 Ohio St. 22; Tayloe v. Mosher, 29 Md. 444; Scotfield v. Olcott, 120 Ill. 363; McCure's Appeal, 72 Pa. St. 414; Little's Appeal, 117 Pa. St. 27; Arnold v. Arnold, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 81; Baker v. McLeod, 79 Wis. 541; Scott v. West, 63 Wis. 565; Everett v. Mount, 22 Ga. 323; Collier's Will, 40 Mo. 325; Watkins v. Quarles, 23 Ark. 179; Scott v. Logan, 23 Ark. 351.

2. Selby v. Whittaker, 6 Ch. Div. 246; Hallifax v. Wilson, 16 Ves. Jr. 171; Leeming v. Sherratt, 2 Hare 14; King v. King, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 205. See Salmon v. Green, 11 Beav. 453; M'Lachlan v. Taitt, 28 Beav. 407; McClure's Appeal, 72 Pa. St. 415.

3. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 412; McClure's Appeal, 72 Pa. St. 415; Little's Appeal, 117 Pa. St. 27.

4. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 412; Love v. L'Estrange, 5 Bro. P. C. 59; Saunders v. Vantier, Cr. & Ph. 240; Greet v. Greet, 5 Beav. 123; Branstrom v. Wilkinson, 7 Ves. 420; Lister v. Bradley, 1 Hare 10; Ingram v. Suckling, 7 W. R. 386; Oddie v. Brown, 4 De G. & J. 179; Fisher v. Johnson, 38 N. J. Eq. 46.

5. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 412; 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *842; Hanson v. Graham, 6 Ves. Jr. 239; In re Hart's Trusts, 3 De G. & J. 195; Hardcastle v. Hardcastle, 1 H. & M. 405; Bill v. Cade, 2 J. & H. 122; Bolding v. Struggnell, 24 W. R. 339; Green v. Green, 86

N. Car. 549; Newberry v. Hinman, 49 Conn. 130. See Loder v. Hatfield, 71 N. Y. 92; Warner v. Durant, 15 Hun (N. Y.) 452; Gifford v. Thorn, 9 N. J. Eq. 702; Scott v. West, 63 Wis. 529; Peterson's Appeal, 88 Pa. St. 397; Pleasanton's Appeal, 99 Pa. St. 362; Foster v. Holland, 56 Ala. 474.

The rationale of the rule, that an intermediate gift of interest before the time of payment of the legacy is construed as an indication of intention that the legacy be vested, is thus explained in 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed) 844: "A gift of interest eo nomine," it is written, "obviously is difficult to be reconciled with the suspension of the vesting, because interest is a premium or compensation for the forbearance of the principal, to which it supposes a title."

In Young v. McKinnie, 5 Fla. 542, it was held that when a testator directs the whole of his property to be kept together for the use and benefit of his wife and children, until the happening of certain events, making no other provision for their support and maintenance, such circumstances are indicative of an intention on the part of the testator to give the principal, and will have the effect to vest the legacy.

The following somewhat refined distinctions have been adopted by the English authorities: "The rule applies, though the interest may be given subject to charges or annuities. Lane v. Goudge, 9 Ves. Jr. 225; Jones v. Mackilwain, 1 Russ. 220; Potts v. Atherton, 28 L. J. Ch. 486. Though the interest may be expressed to be given for maintenance. In re Hart's Trusts, 3 De G. & J. 195; In re Bunn, 16 Ch. Div. 47. It makes no difference whether the interest is first given up to a given time and then the principal, or vice versa, at any rate, if the age fixed is either twenty-one or some later age, but such as to indicate that the testator has fixed upon it only from the probable incapacity of the legatees to manage their property satisfactorily earlier. Wadley v. North, 3 Ves. Jr. 364; Westwood v. Southey, 2 Sim. N. S. 192; Bird v. Maybury, 33 Beav. 351; Pearman v. Pearman, 33 Beav. 394; Pearson v. Dolman, L. R., 3 Eq. 315. It seems doubtful whether Spencer v. Wilson, L. R., 16 Eq. 501, is in harmony with the general current of authority, or even with the views expressed in Re Peek's Trusts, L. R., 16 Eq. 225. On the other hand, if the interest is given up to a very advanced age, and the principal not till then, it is more doubtful whether the bequest would be vested. Batsford v. Kebbell, 3 Ves. Jr. 363. See In re Bunn, 16 Ch. Div. 47. It seems not to be quite clearly settled whether, where there is a discretion to trustees to apply the whole or part of the interest to the maintenance of the legatees, the bequest will be vested. The better opinion now seems to be that it will. Eccles v. Birkett, 4 De G. & S. 105; Rouse's Estate, 9 Hare 649; Fox v. Fox, L. R., 19 Eq. 286; Parrott v. Davis, 38 L. T. N. S. 52. See, however, Pulsford v. Hunter, 3 Bro. C. C. 416; In re Ashmore's Trusts, L. R., 9 Eq. 99; In re Grimshaw's Trusts, 11 Ch. Div. 406. It has been suggested that where the accumulated surplus would go to the same legatees as the interest and capital, the legacy is vested; but where the surplus income is either expressly given over, or would not follow the capital, it is not; so that a gift of residue in such a case would be vested, whereas a particular legacy would not. See Pearson v. Dolman, L. R., 3 Eq. 315. But quære whether this distinction reconciles the cases.

"But a discretion either to apply the interest to maintenance or to accumulate it will not vest the legacies, Vawdry v. Geddes, 1 R. & M. 203; nor, perhaps, will a discretion to apply a whole or part of the interest, not exceeding a fixed sum, to maintenance, Merry v. Hill, L. R., 8 Eq. 619; nor will the gift of a fixed sum for maintenance, though it may be equivalent to the interest of the legacy, Boughton v. Boughton, 1 H. L. Cas. 406; Watson v. Hayes, 5 Myl. & C. 125; Livesey v. Livesey, 3 Russ. 287. And the gift of a sum for maintenance out of the personal estate, not exceeding the income of the legacies will have no effect upon vesting. Wynch v. Wynch, 1 Cox 433; Rudge v. Winnall, 12 Beav. 357. A discretionary power given to trustees to apply the income for the benefit of the legatees, to the exclusion of any one or more of them, will not vest their shares. In re Barnshaw's Trust, 15 W. R. 378. Where interest is given only for a portion of the period before the time fixed for payment, if, for instance, legacies are given at twenty-six, with interest for maintenance during minority, it is doubtful whether the gift will be vested; probably it will not without more. See the remarks in Pearson v.

(6) Effect of Gift Over Upon Vesting.—The better opinion is that a gift over in case of the legatee's death before the period of distribution,¹ or without issue, will not affect the construction;² but a gift over upon death under twenty-one and without issue, will vest a prior gift at twenty-one.³

(7) Gifts to Classes.—Bequests to children as a class by way of remainder, vest in the mode peculiar to like remainders of realty.⁴

Dolman, L. R., 3 Eq. 315. In Davies v. Fisher, 5 Beav. 201; Harrison v. Grimwood, 12 Beav. 192; Tatham v. Vernon, 29 Beav. 604, there were other circumstances. And see In re Hunter's Trusts, L. R., 1 Eq. 295. It may be noticed that minority properly means the period before the attainment of twenty-one; though, if there is an intention expressed to that effect, it may mean the whole period during which the testator has kept the legatee out of the property. Milroy v. Milroy, 14 Sim. 48; Maddison v. Chapman, 3 De G. & J. 536; Fraser v. Fraser, 1 N. R. 430. Of course, where the interest is not given in the meantime, but is itself given at the same time as the principal, the gift does not vest. Knight v. Knight, 2 Sim. & Stu. 490; Locke v. Lamb, L. R., 4 Eq. 372. A distinction must be drawn between the gift of a sum to each member of a class at twenty-one, with a gift of the interest upon the several shares in the meantime, and the gift of an aggregate fund to a class as they respectively attain twenty-one, with a direction that the whole interest is to be applied for their maintenance in the meantime; in the latter case, as the fund is to be kept together, and the whole interest applied for maintenance, nothing will vest before twenty-one. Pulford v. Hunter, 3 Bro. C. C. 416; Barker v. Lea, T. & R. 413; In re Ashmore's Trusts, L. R., 9 Eq. 99; In re Parker, 16 Ch. Div. 44. Perhaps In re Grimshaw's Trusts, 11 Ch. Div. 406, may be supported on this ground." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 413.

Where Gift of Interest Is Distinct from Principal—Gift of Dividends or Annuity.—When the gift of interest or maintenance is distinct, and the direction is to transfer or pay the principal sum at the specified age, or upon the condition named, the construction remains unaffected thereby; hence a bequest of dividends, or an annuity for the life of the legatee, has been held an exception. Batsford v. Kebbell, 3 Ves. Jr. 363; King v. King, 1 W. & S. (Pa.)

207; Pleasanton's Appeal, 99 Pa. St. 362. Compare Spencer v. Wilson, L. R., 16 Eq. 512; Belding v. Sprugnell, 24 W. R. 339; Peterson's Appeal, 88 Pa. St. 402. A fortiori is this the case where the sum given by way of maintenance is less than the dividends on the stock. Colt v. Hubbard, 33 Conn. 286.

1. 1 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *841, *842; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 416; Shrimpton v. Shrimpton, 31 Beav. 425; In re Baxter's Trusts, 4 N. R. 131; Malcolm v. O'Callaghan, 2 Madd. 523; In re Payne, 25 Beav. 556. Compare Ridgway v. Ridgway, 4 De G. & S. 271; Bland v. Williams, 3 Myl. & K. 411; In re Edmondson's Estate, L. R., 5 Eq. 389.

2. Barker v. Lea, T. & R. 413; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 417.

3. "The testator seems to imply that the legacy is to go over, not upon failure to attain that age, but only in the events mentioned, and the attainment of the given age is, therefore, not a condition precedent to vesting. Harrison v. Grimwood, 12 Beav. 192; Bland v. Williams, 3 Myl. & K. 411; Murkin v. Phillipson, 3 Myl. & K. 257; In re Thomson's Trusts, L. R., 11 Eq. 146. But if the gift is to A for life, then to her children at twenty-one, and if A dies without issue, or without leaving issue, over, the gift over has no effect upon the vesting, since it may have been intended to provide for the death of all the children before the tenant for life. Walker v. Mower, 16 Beav. 365; Wrangham's Trusts, 1 D. & S. 358; Kidman v. Kidman, 40 L. J. Ch. 359. See Wetherell v. Wetherell, 1 De G. J. & S. 134. On the other hand, if the gift is to children living the death of the tenant for life, as they attain twenty-one, a gift over on the death of the tenant for life without leaving issue, will afford a strong argument in favor of vesting, since it is ineffectual, if the children survive the parent and die under twenty-one. Bree v. Perfect, 1 Colly. 128." Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 417.

4. 2 Jarm. on Wills (5th ed.) *156;

